

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE LAWYERS REPORTS ANNOTATED

NEW SERIES BOOK 1

BURDETT A. RICH, HENRY P. FARNHAM, EDITORS

1906

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

1906

122007

JUL 29 1942

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year nineteen hundred six, by THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

PREFACE.

The present volume begins a New Series of the Lawyers' Reports Annotated. All that has made the former series valuable will characterize the New Series. The only change is by addition. The exhaustive annotation which has been characteristic of these Reports, and which has won for them the extraordinary appreciation of the legal profession, will be equally conspicuous in the new Reports. No time or expense will be spared in the preparation of the monographic Subject Notes. In these all the authorities on the question will be analyzed, compared, and marshaled in the light of the principles which govern them. These exhaustive Subject Notes will be still the great feature of the annotation, and will be carried to an extent even greater than in the past.

Without in any way superseding any of the exhaustive Subject Notes which characterize these Reports, a new feature will be added in the annotation, by brief Case Notes, of all the remaining cases. These Case Notes are for those cases only that, except for this new feature, would be unannotated. Each of these Case Notes, without attempting the exhaustiveness of the monographic Subject Notes, may be relied upon to make a valuable addition to the case by showing its status with respect to the general principles on the subject, or by throwing upon it the light of other kindred decisions. Brief as they may be, they are made with a thoroughness of research that involves great expense.

The New Series will contain about 1,200 cases per year, in six volumes of not less than 1,250 pages each. This will very nearly double the number of cases that have hitherto been published in these Reports.

With this simple statement of the facts, this first volume is submitted to the profession, with full confidence that the great favor which has been given to the Lawyers' Reports Annotated will continue toward a new series which preserves every feature that has made those Reports valuable, and changes them only by signal enlargement and improvement.

TABLE

OF CASES REPORTED

A.

Abbot v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) ..	851
Abeel, People v. (N. Y.)	730
Abercrombie v. Simmons (Kan.)	806
Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Fitzgerald (Ind.) ..	422
American Book Co., State v. (Kan.) ..	1041
American Can Co., Hardwick v. (Tenn.)	1029
American West Indies Trading Co., Falk v. (N. Y.)	704
Anderson, Cameron Mill & Elevator Co. v. (Tex.)	198
Andrews, Thornely v. (Wash.)	1036
Appeal of Potter (Pa.)	400
Schudt (Pa.)	397
Archambault, Lowell v. (Mass.)	458
Armstrong, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. (Kan.)	113
Atchison & E. Bridge Co. v. Miller (Kan.)	682
Atchison, T. S. F. R. Co. v. Armstrong (Kan.)	113
Atlanta, Jones v. (Ga.)	382
Thrower v. (Ga.)	382
Augusta Brewing Co., Watson v. (Ga.)	1178

B.

Baird, Girard Trust Co. v. (Pa.)	405
Baker v. McDonald (Neb.)	474
Ball v. Holland (Mass.)	1005
Baltimore, Consolidated Gas Co. v. (Md.)	263
Baltimore & O. R. Co., Kenney v. (Md.)	205
Bangor R. & Electric Co., Robbins v. (Md.)	963
Bank, Capital City State, Elliott v. (Iowa)	1130
Citizens', Haas v. (Ala.)	242
First Nat., v. Dutcher (Iowa) ..	142

Bank, Jefferson County Sav., v. Hendrix (Ala.)	246
Northwestern Nat., Boyle v. (Wis.)	1110
Union, Slover v. (Tenn.)	528
Yakima Valley, v. McAllister (Wash.)	1075
Barker v. Barker (N. H.)	802
Barrett, State v. (N. C.)	626
Bartholomae, Schaeppi v. (Ill.)	1079
Beckwith, Brown v. (W. Va.)	778
Beliles, Carson v. (Ky.)	1007
Bell v. First Judicial District Court of Esmeralda County (Nev.)	843
Bennett, Central Foundry Co. v. (Ala.)	1150
Berry, Earle v. (R. I.)	867
Johnson v. (S. D.)	1159
Best v. Gunther (Wis.)	577
Big Horn Basin Colonization Co., Howell v. (Wyo.)	596
Big Six Development Co. v. Mitchell (C. C. A. 8th C.)	332
Boardman, Mark v. (Ky.)	819
Bonbright v. Schoettler (C. C. A. 3d C.)	1091
Boston, Dickinson v. (Mass.)	664
Boulden v. Stilwell (Md.)	258
Boyle v. Northwestern Nat. Bank (Wis.)	1110
Brady v. Gilman (Minn.)	835
Breen, Re (Mich.)	349
v. Kehoe (Mich.)	349
Brown, Ex parte (Wash.)	540
v. Beckwith (W. Va.)	778
Ford v. (Tenn.)	188
Indiana Springs Co. v. (Ind.) ..	238
Nutter v. (W. Va.)	1083
Burke, Wadman v. (Cal.)	1192
Burrill v. Whitcomb (Me.)	451
Burrow, Shelby v. (Ark.)	303
Byrnes, Gans Salvage Co. v. (Md.) ..	272

C.	E.
Calkins v. Calkins (Ill.)	393
Callahan, Condon v. (Tenn.)	643
Cameron Mill & Elevator Co. v. Anderson (Tex.)	198
Capital City State Bank, Elliott v. (Iowa)	1130
Carpenter, Cook v. (Pa.)	900
Carson v. Beliles (Ky.)	1007
Case, State ex rel. Nettleton v. (Wash.)	152
Catron, Joseph v. (N. M.)	1120
Central Foundry Co. v. Bennett (Ala.)	1150
Chicago v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Ill.)	770
Chicago & N. W. R. Co., Jordan v. (Wis.)	885
Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hamler (Ill.)	674
Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Sawusch (Ill.)	670
Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co., Rodgers v. (Ark.)	1145
Christy v. Elliott (Ill.)	215
Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. South Fork Coal Co. (C. C. A. 6th C.)	533
Citizens' Bank, Haas v. (Ala.)	242
Clark, Re (Cal.)	996
v. DuBois (Cal.)	996
Nash v. (Utah)	208
Cloutier, Desautels v. (Mass.)	669
Coley, Illinois C. R. Co. v. (Ky.)	370
Collister v. Hayman (N. Y.)	1188
Colman, Farnham v. (S. D.)	1135
Com., Russ v. (Pa.)	409
Sanders v. (Ky.)	932
v. Sisson (Mass.)	752
use of Vicars v. Wampler (Va.)	149
Condon v. Callahan (Tenn.)	643
Consolidated Gas Co. v. Baltimore (Md.)	263
Cook v. Carpenter (Pa.)	900
Cozad v. Kanawha Hardwood Co. (N. C.)	969
Crawford, State v. (Minn.)	839
D.	G.
Demaris, Harrington v. (Or.)	756
Desautels v. Cloutier (Mass.)	669
Dickinson v. Boston (Mass.)	664
District of Columbia, Palmer v. (D. C. App.)	878
Donovan v. Purtell (Ill.)	176
Double Shoals Cotton Mills, Ross v. (N. C.)	298
DuBois, Clark v. (Cal.)	996
Durham Traction Co., Hester v. (N. C.)	981
Durr, Theis v. (Wis.)	571
Dutcher, First Nat. Bank v. (Iowa)	142
Dwyer, Nolan v. (Wash.)	551
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)
Eady v. Newton Coal & Lumber Co. (Ga.)	650
Earle v. Berry (R. I.)	867
Edwards v. Hartshorn (Kan.)	1050
Elkhart v. Murray (Ind.)	940
Elliott v. Capital City State Bank (Iowa)	1130
Christy v. (Ill.)	215
Emerson v. Pacific Coast & N. Packing Co. (Minn.)	445
Esmeralda County First Judicial Dist. Ct., Bell v. (Nev.)	843
Estate of Vanuxen (Pa.)	400
Everett v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (N. C.)	985
Ex parte Brown (Wash.)	540
Hayden (Cal.)	184
F.	G.
Falk v. American West Indies Trading Co. (N. Y.)	704
Farnham v. Colman (S. D.)	1135
Ferguson v. Ray (Or.)	477
Fey, Forrest v. (Ill.)	740
First Judicial District Court of Esmeralda County, Bell v. (Nev.)	843
First Nat. Bank v. Dutcher (Iowa) ..	142
Fite v. State ex rel. Snider (Tenn.) ..	520
Fitzgerald, Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. (Ind.) ..	422
Ford v. Brown (Tenn.)	188
Forrest v. Fey (Ill.)	740
Fouts v. Hood River (Or.)	483
Friend v. Ward (Wis.)	891
Fulghum v. J. P. Williams Co. (Ga.) ..	1055
G.	G.
Gans Salvage Co. v. Byrnes (Md.)	272
Gibson, State ex rel., v. Superior Court (Wash.)	554
Gilman, Brady v. (Minn.)	835
Gipe v. State (Ind.)	419
Girard Trust Co. v. Baird (Pa.)	405
Gordon v. James (Miss.)	461
Gossett v. Southern R. Co. (Tenn.) ..	97
Grafeman Dairy Co., St. Louis v. (Mo.)	926, 936
Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Haddock (Kan.)	1064
Grant, State ex rel. Hamilton v. (Wyo.)	582
Gray, James v. (C. C. A. 1st C.)	321
Great Northern R. Co., Jemming v. (Minn.)	696
Green v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. (N. C.) ..	623
Greer, Western U. Teleg. Co. v. (Tenn.)	525
Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Larkin (Tex.)	944
Gunther, Best v. (Wis.)	577

H.

Haas v. Citizens' Bank (Ala.)	242
Haddock, Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. (Kan.)	1064
Hamilton, State ex rel., v. Grant (Wyo.)	588
Hamler, Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. (Ill.)	674
Hardwick v. American Can Co. (Tenn.)	1029
Harrell v. Speed (Tenn.)	639
Harrington v. Demaris (Or.)	756
Harris Bkg. Co. v. Miller (Mo.)	790
Hart v. Neillsville (Wis.)	952
Hartford L. Ins. Co., Green v. (N. C.)	623
Hartshorn, Edwards v. (Kan.)	1050
Hayden, Ex parte (Cal.)	184
Hayman, Collister v. (N. Y.)	1188
Hendrix, Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. (Ala.)	246
Henry, Montgomery v. (Ala.)	656
Hester v. Durham Traction Co. (N. C.)	981
Hetzer, Southern P. Co. v. (C. C. A. 8th C.)	288
Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. v. Strickley (Utah)	976
Hodges v. Waters (Ga.)	1181
Holland, Ball v. (Mass.)	1005
Hood River, Fouts v. (Or.)	483
Horney v. Nixon (Pa.)	1184
Horton v. Newport (R. I.)	512
State v. (N. C.)	991
Houchins, Illinois C. R. Co. v. (Ky.)	375
Howell v. Big Horn Basin Colonization Co. (Wyo.)	596
Hughes v. Peper Tobacco Warehouse Co. (N. C.)	305

I.

Igo, Soper v. (Ky.)	362
Illinois C. R. Co. v. Coley (Ky.)	370
v. Houchins (Ky.)	375
v. Stith (Ky.)	1014
Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown (Ind.)	238
Insurance Co., Aetna L., v. Fitzgerald (Ind.)	422
Hartford L., Green v. (N. C.)	623
National F., v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. (Ky.)	364
Northwestern Mut. L., Chicago v. (Ill.)	770
Pacific F., v. Louisville Lead & Color Co. (Ky.)	364
Rochester German, v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. (Ky.)	364
Security Mut. L., Prewitt v. (Ky.)	1019
Standard Marine, v. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co. (C. C. A. 9th C.)	1095
Travelers', v. Prewitt (Ky.)	1019

ILRA.(N.S.)

Italian Fruit & Importing Co. v. Pen- niman (Md.)	252
Itzkovitch v. Whitaker (La.)	1147

J.

Jack, State v. (Kan.)	167
Jackson, Shoemaker v. (Iowa)	137
James, Gordon v. (Miss.)	461
v. Gray (C. C. A. 1st C.)	321
Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. Hendrix (Ala.)	245
Jenning v. Great Northern R. Co. (Minn.)	696
Johnson v. Berry (S. D.)	1159
v. Southern P. R. Co. (Cal.)	307
Swift & Co. v. (C. C. A. 8th C.)	1161
v. Walker (Miss.)	470
Jones v. Atlanta (Ga.)	382
Winfree v. (Va.)	201
Jordan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.)	885
Joseph v. Catron (N. M.)	1120
J. P. Williams Co., Fulghum v. (Ga.)	1055

K.

Kanawha Hardwood Co., Cozad v. (N. C.)	969
Kehoe, Breen v. (Mich.)	349
Keller v. State (Tex. Crim. App.)	459
Kenney v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Md.)	205
Kent, State ex rel. Young v. (Minn.)	826
Kinthead v. Turgeon (Neb.)	762
Kneeland v. Korter (Wash.)	745
Knickerbocker Trust Co., Myers v. (C. C. A. 3d C.)	1171
Korter, Kneeland v. (Wash.)	745

L.

Landon v. Reese (Md.)	782
Larkin, Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. (Tex.)	944
Lee, State v. (Vt.)	1153
Lellyett, Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. (Tenn.)	49
Leonard v. Pierce (N. Y.)	161
Levy v. Louisville Gunning System (Ky.)	359
Lewis, Pritchard v. (Wis.)	565
Liessing, St. Louis v. (Mo.)	918
Loomis v. Loomis (Cal.)	312
Louisville v. Louisville Water Co. (Ky.)	766
v. McAteer (Ky.)	766
Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Lellyett (Tenn.)	49
Louisville Gunning System, Levy v. (Ky.)	359
Louisville Lead & Color Co., Pacific F. Ins. Co. v. (Ky.)	364

Louisville Water Co., Louisville v. (Ky.)	766
Lowell v. Archambault (Mass.)	458

M.

McAllister, Yakima Valley Bank v. (Wash.)	1075
McAteer, Louisville v. (Ky.)	730
McCrary, Martin v. (Tenn.)	530
McDonald, Baker v. (Neb.)	474
McGarrigle v. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum (Cal.)	315
McNeal v. Pierce (Ohio)	1117
Mark v. Boardman (Ky.)	810
Martin v. McCrary (Tenn.)	530
Meffert v. Packer (Kan.)	811
Miller, Atchison & E. Bridge Co. v. (Kan.)	682
Harris Bkg. Co. v. (Mo.)	790
v. Moran Bros. Co. (Wash.) ..	283
v. Pennington (Ill.)	773
Walker v. (N. C.)	157
Milwaukee, Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. (Wis.)	581
Mineral City Park Asso., Williams v. (Iowa)	427
Mitchell, Big Six Development Co. v. (C. C. A. 8th C.)	332
Mohr v. Williams (Minn.)	439
Montgomery v. Henry (Ala.)	656
Moran Bros. Co., Miller v. (Wash.) ..	283
Morse v. Reading Co. (C. C. A. 1st C.)	873
Morton v. Morton (Cal.)	660
Mulford, Re (Ill.)	341
Mundhenke v. Oregon City Mfg. Co. (Or.)	278
Munson, Western Travelers' Acci. Asso. v. (Neb.)	1068
Murray, Elkhart v. (Ind.)	940
Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., Stark v. (Mich.)	822
Myers v. Knickerbocker Trust Co. (C. C. A. 3d C.)	1171

N.

Nash v. Clark (Utah)	208
National F. Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. (Ky.)	304
National Tube Co. v. Smith (W. Va.)	195
Neillsville, Hart v. (Wis.)	952
Nettleton, State ex rel., v. Case (Wash.)	152
Newport, Horton v. (R. I.)	512
New Rochelle Water Co., Pond v. (N. Y.)	958
Newton Coal & Lumber Co., Eady v. (Ga.)	650
Nixon, Horney v. (Pa.)	1184
Nolan v. Dwyer (Wash.)	551
Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co., Standard Marine Ins. Co. v. (C. C. A. 9th C.)	1095

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Norfolk & S. R. Co., Everett v. (N. C.)	985
Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., Chicago v. (Ill.)	770
Northwestern Nat. Bank, Boyle v. (Wis.)	1110
Nutter v. Brown (W. Va.)	1083

O.

Oregon City Mfg. Co., Mundhenke v. (Or.)	278
Oregon R. & Nav. Co., Abbot v. (Or.)	851

P.

Pacific Coast & N. Packing Co., Emerson v. (Minn.)	445
Pacific F. Ins. Co. v. Louisville Lead & Color Co. (Ky.)	364
Packer, Meffert v. (Kan.)	911
Palmer v. District of Columbia (D. C. App.)	873
Peaslee-Gaulbert Co., National F. Ins. Co. v. (Ky.)	364
Rochester German Ins. Co. v. (Ky.)	364
Penniman, Italian Fruit & Importing Co. v. (Md.)	252
Pennington, Miller v. (Ill.)	773
People v. Abeel (N. Y.)	730
Peper Tobacco Warehouse Co., Hughes v. (N. C.)	305
Pere Marquette R. Co., Withey v. (Mich.)	352
Pierce, Leonard v. (N. Y.)	161
McNeal v. (Ohio)	1117
Pine Forest, The (C. C. A. 1st C.)	873
Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co. (N. Y.)	958
Potter's Appeal (Pa.)	400
Prewitt v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Ky.)	1019
Travelers' Ins. Co. v. (Ky.)	1019
Pritchard v. Lewis (Wis.)	565
Purtell, Donovan v. (Ill.)	176

R.

Railroad Co., Baltimore & O., Kenney v. (Md.)	205
Chicago & N. W., Jordan v. (Wis.)	885
Choctaw, O. & G., Rodgers v. (Ark.)	1145
Gulf, C. & S. F., v. Larkin (Tex.)	944
Illinois C., v. Coley (Ky.)	370
Illinois C., v. Houchins (Ky.) ..	375
Illinois C., v. Stith (Ky.)	1014
Norfolk & S., Everett v. (N. C.)	985
Pere Marquette, Withey v. (Mich.)	352
Southern P., Johnson v. (Cal.)	307

Railway Co., Atchison, T. & S. F., v. Armstrong (Kan.)	113	Simmons, Abercrombie v. (Kan.)	806
Chicago, R. I. & P., v. Hamler (Ill.)	674	Sisson, Com. v. (Mass.)	752
Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P., v. South Fork Coal Co. (C. C. A. 6th C.)	533	Slover v. Union Bank (Tenn.)	528
Great Northern, Jemming v. (Minn.)	696	Smith, National Tube Co. v. (W. Va.)	195
Seaboard Air Line, Spencer v. (N. C.)	604	Snider, State ex rel., Fite v. (Tenn.)	520
Southern, Gossett v. (Tenn.) ..	97	Snoqualmie Falls Power Co., Seattle Electric Co. v. (Wash.) ...	1032
Ray, Ferguson v. (Or.)	477	Soper v. Igo (Ky.)	362
Reading Co., Morse v. (C. C. A. 1st C.)	873	Southern P. Co. v. Hetzer (C. C. A. 8th C.)	288
Re Breen (Mich.)	349	Southern P. R. Co., Johnson v. (Cal.)	307
Clark (Cal.)	996	Southern R. Co., Gossett v. (Tenn.)	97
Mulford (Ill.)	341	South Fork Coal Co., Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. (C. C. A. 6th C.)	533
Sigel (Pa.)	397	Speed, Harrell v. (Tenn.)	639
Reese, Landon v. (Md.)	782	Spencer v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. C.)	604
Riley v. Yost (W. Va.)	777	Standard Marine Ins. Co. v. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co. (C. C. A. 9th C.)	1095
Robbins v. Bangor R. & Electric Co. (Me.)	963	Stanley, Timmerman v. (Ga.)	379
Roberson v. Wampler (Va.)	318	Stark v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. (Mich.)	822
Roberts v. Roberts (Md.)	782	State v. American Book Co. (Kan.) ..	1041
Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. (Ky.)	364	v. Barrett (N. C.)	626
Rodgers v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. (Ark.)	1145	v. Crawford (Minn.)	839
Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, McGarrigle v. (Cal.)	315	Gipe v. (Ind.)	419
Ross v. Double Shoals Cotton Mills (N. C.)	298	v. Horton (N. C.)	991
v. Wright County (Iowa)	431	v. Jack (Kan.)	167
Russ v. Com. (Pa.)	409	Keller v. (Tex. Crim. App.) ..	489
Ryan, State v. (Or.)	862	v. Lee (Vt.)	1153
S.		v. Ryan (Or.)	862
		v. St. Mary's Franco-American Petroleum Co. (W. Va.) ..	558
St. Louis v. Grafeman Dairy Co. (Mo.)	926, 936	v. Stimpson (Vt.)	1153
v. Liessing (Mo.)	918	Tones v. (Tex. Crim. App.) ...	1024
v. Schuler (Mo.)	928	v. Williams (Md.)	254
St. Mary's Franco-American Petroleum Co., State v. (W. Va.)	558	State ex rel. Nettleton v. Case (Wash.)	152
Sanders v. Com. (Ky.)	932	Snider, Fite v. (Tenn.)	520
v. Saxton (N. Y.)	727	Hamilton v. Grant (Wyo.)	588
Sawusch, Chicago Union Traction Co. v. (Ill.)	670	Young v. Kent (Minn.)	826
Saxton, Sanders v. (N. Y.)	727	Gibson v. Superior Court (Wash.)	554
Schaeppi v. Bartholomae (Ill.)	1079	Stilwell, Boulden v. (Md.)	258
Schoettler, Bonbright v. (C. C. A. 3d C.)	1091	Stimpson, State v. (Vt.)	1153
Schudt's Appeal (Pa.)	397	Stith, Illinois C. R. Co. v. (Ky.) ...	1014
Schuler, St. Louis v. (Mo.)	928	Strickley, Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. v. (Utah)	976
Seaboard Air Line R. Co., Spencer v. (N. C.)	604	Superior Court, State ex rel. Gibson v. (Wash.)	554
Seattle Electric Co. v. Snoqualmie Falls Power Co. (Wash.) ..	1032	Swift & Co. v. Johnson (C. C. A. 8th C.)	1161
Security Mut. L. Ins. Co., Prewitt v. (Ky.)	1019	T.
Shelby v. Burrow (Ark.)	303
Shoemaker v. Jackson (Iowa)	137	Territory ex rel. Thacker v. Woodring (Okla.)	848
Sigel, Re (Pa.)	397	Thacker, Territory ex rel., v. Woodring (Okla.)	848
Silvey v. Tift (Ga.)	386	Theis v. Durr (Wis.)	571
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)		The Pine Forest (C. C. A. 1st C.) ...	873
		Thornely v. Andrews (Wash.)	1036

Thrower v. Atlanta (Ga.)	382	Western Travelers' Acci. Asso. v. Mun-
Tift, Silvey v. (Ga.)	386	son (Neb.)	1068
Timmerman v. Stanley (Ga.)	379	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Greer
Tones v. State (Tex. Crim. App.)	1024	(Tenn.)	525
Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Prewitt (Ky.)	1019	Whitaker, Itzkovitch v. (La.)	1147
Turgeon, Kinkad v. (Neb.)	762	Whitcomb, Burrill v. (Me.)	451
U.		Williams v. Mineral City Park Asso.
Union Bank, Slover v. (Tenn.)	528	(Iowa)	427
V.		Mohr v. (Minn.)	439
Vanuxem's Estate (Pa.)	400	State v. (Md.)	254
Vicars, Com. use of, v. Wampler (Va.)	149	Winfree v. Jones (Va.)	201
W.		Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Milwaukee
Wadman v. Burke (Cal.)	1192	(Wis.)	581
Walker, Johnson v. (Miss.)	470	Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co.
v. Miller (N. C.)	157	(Mich.)	352
Wampler, Com. use of Vicars v. (Va.)	149	Woodring, Territory ex rel. Thacker v.
Roberson v. (Va.)	318	(Okla.)	848
Ward, Friend v. (Wis.)	891	Wright County, Ross v. (Iowa)	431
Waters, Hodges v. (Ga.)	1181	Y.
Watson v. Augusta Brewing Co. (Ga.)	1178	Yakima Valley Bank v. McAllister
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)		(Wash.)	1075
		Yost, Riley v. (W. Va.)	777
		Young, State ex rel., v. Kent (Minn.)	826

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.

Abbey v. Wheeler, 170 N. Y. 122, 62 N. E. 1074	167	Ambler v. Whipple, 139 Ill. 311, 32 Am. St. Rep. 202, 28 N. E. 841	744
Abbot of Strata Mercella, 5 Coke, 40	830	American Exp. Co. v. Iowa, 196 U. S. 133, 49 L. ed. 417, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182	494
Abbott v. Frost, 185 Mass. 398, 70 N. E. 478	460	American Fur Co. v. United States, 2 Pet. 358, 7 L. ed. 450	632
Abend v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 111 Ill. 202, 53 Am. Rep. 616	687	American Ins. Co. v. Insley, 7 Pa. 223, 47 Am. Dec. 509	1110
Adams v. Adams, 64 N. H. 224, 9 Atl. 100	805	v. Ogden, 20 Wend. 305	1108
v. Iron Cliffs Co. 78 Mich. 272, 18 Am. St. Rep. 441, 44 N. W. 270	695	v. 356 Bales Cotton, 1 Pet. 511, 7 L. ed. 243, Fed. Cas. No. 302a	747
v. Pease, 2 Conn. 481	764	American Nat. Bank v. Henderson, 123 Ala. 612, 82 Am. St. Rep. 147, 26 So. 408	244
v. Reeves, 68 N. C. 134, 12 Am. Rep. 627	871	Ames Brooks Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. 83 Minn. 346, 86 N. W. 344	448
v. Schiffer, 11 Colo. 15, 7 Am. St. Rep. 202, 17 Pac. 21	872	Anderson, Ex parte (Tex. Crim. App.) 10 Tex. Ct. Rep. 852, 81 S. W. 973	518
Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 166 U. S. 221, 41 L. ed. 977, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604	270	v. Great Northern R. Co. 74 Minn. 432, 77 N. W. 240	703
Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96	174	v. Inland Telegraph & Teleg. Co. 19 Wash. 575, 41 L. R. A. 410, 53 Pac. 657	287
Adreveno v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 34 Fed. 870	1073	Anderson Case. See ANDERSON v. GREAT NORTHERN R. Co.
Advance Thresher Co. v. Curd, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 492, 85 S. W. 690	146	Andress's Appeal, 99 Pa. 421	907
Arawan v. Hampden County, 130 Mass. 528	517	Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 47 Ed. 366, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 237	890, 1127
Abern v. Freeman, 46 Minn. 156, 24 Am. St. Rep. 206, 48 N. W. 677	897	v. Franklin, 1 Strange, 24	1086
Atrey v. Borham, 29 Beav. 620	648	Angell v. Davis, 4 Myl. & C. 360
A. J. Nelmever Lumber Co. v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 54 Neb. 321, 40 L. R. A. 534, 74 N. W. 670	507	Ankeney v. Hannon, 147 U. S. 118, 37 Ed. 105, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206	326
Akeson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 106 Iowa, 54, 75 N. W. 676	701	Ann Arbor R. Co. v. Fox, 34 C. C. A. 497, 92 Fed. 494	536
Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Garmany, 74 Ga. 51	382	Anonymous, 85 Me. 58	473
Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 84 Ala. 159, 5 Am. St. Rep. 354, 4 So. 359	856	Anson, Re, 35 Me. 79, 26 Atl. 996	805
v. Coggins, 32 C. C. A. 1, 60 U. S. App. 140, 88 Fed. 455	838	Antelope, The, 12 Wheat. 550, 6 L. ed. 725	258
Albers v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 98 Iowa, 51, 66 N. W. 1040	527	Anthony v. State, Meigs, 265, 33 Am. Dec. 143	421
Alberti v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 118 N. Y. 77, 6 L. R. A. 765, 23 N. E. 35	1073	Anvil Min. Co. v. Humble, 163 U. S. 540, 38 L. ed. 814, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876	450
Alexander v. Alderson, 7 Baxt. 403	193	Appeal Tax Court v. Union R. Co. 50 Md. 274	268
v. O'Donnell, 12 Kan. 608	1047, 1161	Arkansas Midland R. Co. v. Canman, 52 Ark. 517, 13 S. W. 280	1147
v. State, 12 Tex. 540	1026, 1027	Armentrout v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 1 Mo. App. 158	493
Alexander's Case. See ALEXANDER v. STATE		Armiger v. Reitz, 91 Md. 334, 46 Atl. 990	789
Alzer v. Anderson, 92 Fed. 696	328	Armour v. Golkowska, 202 Ill. 144, 66 N. E. 1037	673
Allegheny Oil Co. v. Snyder, 45 C. C. A. 604, 106 Fed. 704	339	v. Hahn, 111 U. S. 318, 23 L. ed. 440, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433	276
Allen v. Buchanan, 97 Ala. 396, 38 Am. St. Rep. 187, 11 So. 777	197	Armstrong v. Mudd, 10 B. Mon. 144, 50 Am. Dec. 545	809
v. Church, 101 Iowa, 123, 70 N. W. 127	149	v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468	1161
v. Hawks, 13 Pick. 79	1161	Arnold v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 100 Mo. App. 470, 74 S. W. 5	208
v. Massey, 17 Wall. 351, 21 L. ed. 542	331	v. Stevens, 2 Nev. 234	579, 581
v. Pioneer Press Co. 40 Minn. 120, 3 L. R. A. 532, 12 Am. St. Rep. 707, 41 N. W. 930	227	Arrington v. Dortch, 77 N. C. 307	465
v. Rnshfort (Neb.) 101 N. W. 1028	476	Ash v. People, 11 Mich. 347, 83 Am. Dec. 740	536
v. State, 91 Am. Dec. 477, n.	1026	Ashley v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 80 S. W. 1015	496, 497, 506
v. Stenger, 74 Ill. 119	183	Ashley Case. See ASHLEY v. STATE
Allerton v. Monona County, 111 Iowa, 560, 82 N. W. 922	438	Ashmole v. Wainwright, L. R. 2 Q. B. 837	871
Allibone v. Hager, 46 Pa. 48	914	Astley v. Reynolds, 2 Strange, 915	871
Alpha Mills v. Watertown Steam Engine Co. 116 N. C. 804, 21 S. E. 917	625	Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown, 26 Kan. 443	1168
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)		v. Moore, 29 Kan. 632	690
		v. Seeley, 54 Kan. 21, 37 Pac. 104	691

Atchison, T & S. F. R. Co. v. Weber, 33 Kan. 543, 52 Am. Rep. 543, 6 Pac. 877	1170	Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 438, 5 Atl. 338	292
Atkins v. Berry, 1 Lea. 91	654	Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Scholes, 14 Ind. App. 524, 56 Am. St. Rep. 307, 43 N. E. 156	1054
Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Lemar, 10 Paige. 505	149	Baltimore Steam Packet Co. v. Smith, 23 Md. 402, 87 Am. Dec. 575 ..	357
Atlantic Nat. Bank v. Taverner, 130 Mass. 407	325	Banchor v. Warren, 33 N. H. 183	494
Atlee v. Backhouse, 3 Mees. & W. 633 ..	872	Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438 ..	324
v. Bullard, 123 Iowa. 274, 98 N. W. 589	148	v. Dumas, 21 Vt. 456	485
Atty. Gen. v. Boston, 142 Mass. 200, 7 N. E. 722	985	Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa. 540	974
v. Drohan, 169 Mass. 534, 61 Am. St. Rep. 301, 48 N. E. 279 ..	885	Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274	1023
v. Erie & K. R. Co. 55 Mich. 15, 20 N. W. 696	832	Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 235, 4 L. ed. 559	1156
v. Moore [1893] 1 Ch. 676	480	Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 163 U. S. 416, 41 L. ed. 211, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1113	768
v. Revere Copper Co. 152 Mass. 605	755	Bank of Indiana v. Anderson, 14 Iowa. 544, 83 Am. Dec. 390	897
v. Sullivan, 163 Mass. 446, 28 L. R. A. 455, 40 N. E. 843	831	Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206 ..	251
Atty. Gen. ex rel. Rich v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358, 23 L. R. A. 699, 41 Am. St. Rep. 606, 58 N. W. 611	585	Bannatyne v. Florence Mill. & Min. Co. 77 Hun, 289, 28 N. Y. Supp. 334	450
Miner v. Lorman, 59 Mich. 157, 60 Am. Rep. 287, 26 N. W. 311	832	Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357 ..	226
Attrill v. Huntington, 70 Md. 197, 2 L. R. A. 779, 14 Am. St. Rep. 344, 16 Atl. 651	409	Barker v. Bucklin, 2 Denio, 45, 43 Am. Dec. 726	961
Atwater v. Underhill, 22 N. J. Eq. 599 ..	140	v. Davies, 47 Neb. 78, 66 N. W. 11 ..	476
Aultman-Taylor Machinery Co. v. Ride-nour, 96 Iowa, 638, 65 N. W. 980	1175	v. Wing, 58 Barb. 73	149
Austin v. Austin, 18 Neb. 306, 22 N. W. 116	805	Barkley v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 35 App. Div. 228, 54 N. Y. Supp. 766	292
v. Welch, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 526, 72 S. W. 881	504	Barnes v. Pike County, 51 Miss. 305 ..	658
Aycock v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 89 N. C. 323	302	Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224	751
Aycock Case. See AYCOCK v. RALEIGH & A. AIR LINE R. CO.		Barnum v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 30 Minn. 461, 16 N. W. 304 ..	1166
B.
Babcock v. Wyman, 10 How. 289, 15 L. ed. 644	328	Barrington v. Tristram, 6 Ves. Jr. 345 ..	467
Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. 581	1074	Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 180, 30 L. ed. 915, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 295, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931 ..	1023
Badgett v. Frick, 28 S. C. 176, 5 S. E. 355	146	Barrow v. Rhinelander, 3 Johns. Ch. 120 ..	149
Bailey v. Austrian, 19 Minn. 535, Gil. 465 ..	448	Barrs v. Jackson, 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 585, 1 Phill. Ch. 582	390
v. Carleton, 12 N. H. 9, 37 Am. Dec. 190	571	Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 21 L. ed. 929	641
v. Galpin, 40 Minn. 319, 41 N. W. 1054	579	Bartlett v. State, 13 Kan. 99	530
v. Hudson River R. Co. 49 N. Y. 70	493	Barto v. Hilmrod, 8 N. Y. 483, 59 Am. Dec. 506	489
v. People, 190 Ill. 28, 54 L. R. A. 838, 83 Am. St. Rep. 116, 60 N. E. 98	226	Barton v. Long, 45 N. J. Eq. 161, 16 Atl. 683	149
Baily v. Fayette Gas-Fuel Co. 193 Pa. 175, 44 Atl. 251	969	v. Mulvane, 59 Kan. 313, 52 Pac. 883	174
Bainbridge v. Sherlock, 29 Ind. 364, 95 Am. Dec. 644	764	v. Stillington, 128 Mo. 164, 30 S. W. 514	457
Baird v. Byrne, 3 Wall. Jr. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 757	967	v. Syracuse, 36 N. Y. 54	958
Baker v. Johnson, 41 Me. 15	493	Batchelder & L. Co. v. Whitmore, 58 C. C. A. 517, 122 Fed. 355	323
Ballinger Nat. Bank v. Bryan, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 674, 34 S. W. 451 ..	586	Bates v. New York Ins. Co. 3 Johns. Cas. 238	571
Baltimore v. Baltimore Trust & G. Co. 166 U. S. 673, 41 L. ed. 1160, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696	517	v. Old Colony R. Co. 147 Mass. 255, 17 N. E. 633	677
v. Bonaparte, 93 Md. 159, 48 Atl. 735	271	Bath Sav. Inst. v. Hathorn, 88 Me. 122, 32 L. R. A. 377, 51 Am. St. Rep. 382, 33 Atl. 836	801
v. Clunet, 23 Md. 449	485	Batson v. Findley, 52 W. Va. 343, 43 S. E. 142	1091
v. Horn, 26 Md. 194	498	Baulec v. New York & H. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 356, 17 Am. Rep. 325, 243 ..	292
v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239	517	Baxter v. Tripp, 12 R. I. 310	957
v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572	692	Beal v. South Devon R. Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 337	650
Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914	292	Beale, Re, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 249	330
v. Henthorne, 19 C. C. A. 623, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. 634 ..	293	Beall v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 86 S. W. 334	496
v. Stricker, 51 Md. 47, 34 Am. Rep. 291	277	Beatty v. Lyscoming County Mut. Ins. Co. 66 Pa. 9, 5 Am. Rep. 318 ..	426
Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719	131	Deaupre v. Brigham, 79 Wis. 436, 48 N. W. 596	891
Baltimore Consol. R. Co. v. State, 91 Md. 510, 46 Atl. 1000	276	Beck v. West, 87 Ala. 213, 6 So. 70 ..	449
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)		Beckwith v. Frisbie, 32 Vt. 559	871
		Beebe v. Guinault, 29 La. Ann. 795 ..	1150
		v. Magoun, 122 Iowa. 94, 101 Am. St. Rep. 259, 97 N. W. 988 434 ..	435
		Beeman v. Banta, 118 N. Y. 542, 16 Am. St. Rep. 779, 23 N. E. 887 ..	450
		Beers v. Hanlin, 90 Fed. 695	203
		v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292 163, 164 ..	106
		Beers Case. See BEERS v. SHANNON.
		Belcher v. Linn, 24 How. 508, 16 L. ed. 754	1094
		Belden v. Perkins, 78 Ill. 449	183

Bell v. Bell, 181 U. S. 175, 45 L. ed. 804, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 551	890	Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 31 Am. Dec. 313	975
v. Carstairs, 14 East, 374	521	Bloor v. Delafield, 69 Wis. 273, 34 N. W. 115	680
v. Farber, 1 Grant, Cas. 31	1109	Blue Jacket Consol. Copper Co. v. Scherr, 50 W. Va. 533, 40 S. E. 514	562
Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42	80	Blum v. The Caddo, 1 Woods, 64, Fed. Cas. No. 1,573	493
Bellows Falls Bank v. Rutland County Bank, 40 Vt. 377	1135	Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 532, 19 L. R. A. 40, 31 Pac. 915	770
Bemis v. Becker, 1 Kan. 227	1047	Board of Excise v. Merchant, 103 N. Y. 143, 57 Am. Rep. 705, 8 N. E. 484	635
Benbow v. Townsend, 1 Myl. & K. 506	799	Board of Health v. Van Hoesen, 87 Mich. 533, 14 L. R. A. 114, 49 N. W. 894	975
Bender v. Dietrick, 7 Watts & S. 284	400	Body v. Jewsen, 33 Wis. 402	900
Benefactor, The, 103 U. S. 239, 26 L. ed. 351	870	Boehm v. Hertz, 182 Ill. 154, 48 L. R. A. 375, 64 N. E. 973	230
Benefield v. Albert, 132 Ill. 665, 24 N. E. 634	744	Bogle v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 390, 55 S. W. 830	512
Benesch v. Clark, 49 Md. 497	786	Bogue v. Bennett, 156 Ind. 478, 83 Am. St. Rep. 212, 60 N. E. 143	241
Benjamin v. Holyoke Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 3, 39 Am. St. Rep. 446, 35 N. E. 95	242	Bohm v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 576, 14 L. R. A. 344, 29 N. E. 802	85
Benner v. Porter, 9 How. 235, 13 L. ed. 119	747	Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Erickson, 5 C. C. A. 341, 12 U. S. App. 260, 55 Fed. 943	282
Bennett v. Bailey, 150 Mass. 259, 22 N. E. 916	456	Bollinger v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 36 Minn. 418, 1 Am. St. Rep. 680, 31 N. W. 856	1170
Benson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 75 Minn. 163, 74 Am. St. Rep. 444, 77 N. W. 790	703	Bollo v. Marvin, 130 Mich. 82, 89 N. W. 563	570
Bentley v. Shrieve, 4 Md. Ch. 412	1063	Bonce v. Dubuque Street R. Co. 53 Iowa, 278, 36 Am. Rep. 221, 5 N. W. 177	538
Benton v. Starr, 68 Conn. 285, 20 Atl. 450	472	Bonfoy v. Goar, 140 Ind. 202, 39 N. E. 56	438
Berger v. State, 50 Ark. 20, 6 S. W. 15	495	Bonham's Case, 8 Coke, 114a	815
v. United States Steel Corp. 63 N. J. Eq. 506, 53 Atl. 14	575	Bonnet v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 89 Tex. 72, 33 S. W. 334	1152
Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co. 27 W. Va. 285, 55 Am. Rep. 304	295	Booth v. People, 186 Ill. 43, 50 L. R. A. 762, 78 Am. St. Rep. 229, 57 N. E. 798	226
Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Mon. 191, 54 Am. Dec. 517	352	v. Rome, W. & O. Terminal R. Co. 140 N. Y. 272, 24 L. R. A. 105, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552, 35 N. E. 593	86
v. Jones, 11 Helsk. 207, 27 Am. Rep. 742	648	Boothby v. Plaisted, 51 N. H. 436, 12 Am. Rep. 140	503
Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164	131	Borgerson v. Cook Stone Co. 91 Minn. 91, 97 N. W. 734	704
Bessones v. Indianapolis, 71 Ind. 189	943	Boston & A. R. Co. v. O'Reilly, 158 U. S. 334, 39 L. ed. 1006, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 830	1170
Beswick Case. See STARR v. BESWICK.		Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. 188 U. S. 632, 47 L. ed. 628, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434	340
Bierbower's Appeal, 107 Pa. 14	905	Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989	641
Bigelow v. Clap, 166 Mass. 88, 43 N. E. 1037	1007	Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9	305
v. Randolph, 14 Gray, 541	668	Boston Min. & Mill. Co. Re. 51 Cal. 624	1004
Bigley v. Souvey, 45 Mich. 370, 8 N. W. 98	318	Bosworth v. Stockbridge (Mass.) 75 N. E. 712	1007
Bilby v. Hartman, 29 Mo. App. 125	1062	Botts v. Simpsonville & B. C. Turnp. Road Co. 88 Ky. 54, 2 L. R. A. 594, 10 S. W. 134	620
Bills v. Goshen, 117 Ind. 221, 3 L. R. A. 261, 20 N. E. 115	943	Boustead v. Cuyler, 116 Pa. 551, 8 Atl. 848	907
v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 3 Tex. Ct. Rep. 227, 64 S. W. 1047	496	Bouvier v. Stricklett, 40 Neb. 793, 59 N. W. 550	765
Blins v. Dazey, 147 Ind. 536, 44 N. E. 644	776	Bovee v. Danville, 52 Vt. 183	290
Birch v. Cropper, 2 De G. & S. 255	805	Bowditch v. Banuelos, 1 Gray, 220	805
Birdsong v. Birdsong, 2 Head, 289	160	Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 16 L. R. A. 754, 33 Am. St. Rep. 491, 20 S. W. 101	660
Birmingham Union R. Co. v. Hale, 90 Ala. 8, 24 Am. St. Rep. 748, 8 So. 142	538	Bowersox v. Seneca County, 20 Ohio St. 496	439
Bisell v. Fletcher, 19 Neb. 726, 28 N. W. 303	764	Bowling Green Stone Co. v. Capshaw, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 945, 64 S. W. 507	1019
Bittinger's Estate, 129 Pa. 338, 18 Atl. 132	402	Bowman v. Bowman, 35 Or. 279, 57 Pac. 546	759
Bixby v. La Moille Valley R. Co. 57 Vt. 548	1086	v. Chicago & N. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689	643
Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 24 N. J. Eq. 469	621	v. Lewis. See MISSOURI v. LEWIS.
v. Good Intent Tow-Boat Co. 31 La. Ann. 497	1150	Boyd v. Bryant, 35 Ark. 69, 37 Am. Rep. 324, 10 S. E. 118	488
Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. ed. 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222	374
Blacklaws v. Milne, 82 Ill. 505, 15 Am. Rep. 339	775
Blacus v. Nichols & S. Co. 115 Iowa, 373, 88 N. W. 829	140
Blair v. Ladin, 127 Mass. 518	450
Blanchard v. Cooke, 144 Mass. 207, 11 N. E. 83	456
v. Floyd, 93 Ala. 53, 9 So. 418	180
v. Page, 8 Gray, 281	357
Bank v. Illinois C. R. Co. 162 Ill. 332, 55 N. E. 832	682
Blankinship v. Israel, 132 Ill. 514, 24 N. E. 615	650
Blazier v. Miller, 10 Hun. 435	923
Blerns v. State, 31 Ark. 53	850
Blodgett v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 58 C. C. A. 79, 120 Fed. 893	1046
Blomquist v. Great Northern R. Co. 65 Minn. 69, 67 N. W. 804	702
Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 5 L. R. A. 612, 20 Am. St. Rep. 324, 10 S. E. 118	1180

Boyd v. Mills, 53 Kan. 594, 25 L. R. A. 486, 42 Am. St. Rep. 306, 37 Pac. 16	660	Buckingham v. Walker, 48 Miss. 600	474
Boyden v. Brookline, 8 Vt. 284	1155	Bull v. Read, 13 Gratt. 78	485
Boyle v. North Western Nat. Bank (Wis.) 103 N. W. 1123	1116	Bullion, B. & C. Minn. Co. v. Eureka Hill Minn. Co. 5 Utah, 151, 13 Pac. 174	557
Bradley, R. 108 Iowa. 476, 79 N. W. 280	439	Bullock v. Wilson, 2 Port. (Ala.) 436	764
v. Clark, 133 Cal. 196, 65 Pac. 395	174	Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 431	984
Brahm v. Adkins, 77 Ill. 263	1135	v. Potts, 57 Ark. 257, 21 S. W. 437	495
Bramley v. Tyree, 1 Lea. 531	149	Burch v. Hardwicke, 30 Gratt. 32, 32 Am. Rep. 640	517
Branham v. Com. 2 Bush, 3	850	Burk v. Simonson, 104 Ind. 173, 54 Am. Rep. 304, 2 N. E. 309, 3 N. E. 826	760
Braswell v. American L. Ins. Co. 75 N. C. 8	625	Burke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 7 Helsk. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 618	556
Brawford v. Wolfe, 103 Mo. 391, 15 S. W. 420	890	v. Witherbee, 98 N. Y. 562	295
Braxton v. Bressler, 64 Ill. 488	764	Burket v. Bonds, 3 Dana. 213	1062
Bredlau v. York, 115 Wis. 554, 92 N. W. 261	1074	Burkett v. Burkett, 78 Cal. 310, 3 L. R. A. 781, 12 Am. St. Rep. 58	314
Brett v. Donaghe, 101 Va. 786, 45 S. E. 324	320	20 Pac. 715	314
Brick v. Brick, 98 U. S. 514, 25 L. ed. 256	328	Burkham v. Pinkhussohn, 58 S. C. 469, 36 S. E. 908	352
Brickett v. Downs, 163 Mass. 70, 39 N. E. 776	655	Burleigh v. Cough, 52 N. H. 267, 13 Am. Rep. 23	766
Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 36 Conn. 266, 4 Am. Rep. 63	286	Burnham v. Barth, 89 Wis. 362, 62 N. W. 96	1115
Briggs v. Lewiston, 29 Me. 472	871	Burns v. Rosenstein, 135 U. S. 449, 34 L. ed. 193, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 817	1085
v. Rumely Co. 96 Iowa, 202, 64 N. W. 784	146	v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. (Ark.) 88 S. W. 824	1146
Brigham v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 243, 56 Am. Rep. 28	449	Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327	961
Brill v. Wright, 112 N. Y. 129, 8 Am. St. Rep. 717, n., 19 N. E. 628	469	Burrus v. Life Ins. Co. 124 N. C. 9, 32 S. E. 323	625
Brink v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 108	426	Burtis, Ex parte, 103 U. S. 238, 26 L. ed. 392	1141
Brisco v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet. 318, 9 L. ed. 733	1155	Burton v. Scherpf, 1 Allen, 133, 70 Am. Dec. 717	1188
Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186	314	Buschman v. Codd, 52 Md. 202	260
Bristow v. Bristow, 5 Beav. 289	467	Bushnell v. Crooke Min. & Smelting Co. 148 U. S. 682, 37 L. ed. 610, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771	374
Britton's Appeal, 45 Pa. 172	408	Bussey v. State, 71 Ga. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 256	1028
Brock v. State, 85 Ind. 307	776	Butler v. Merritt, 113 Ga. 238, 38 S. E. 751	884
Broadbline v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607	775	v. Watkins, 13 Wall. 456, 20 L. ed. 629	1078
Brodeur v. Valley Falls Co. 16 R. I. 448, 17 Atl. 54	690	Butman v. Newton, 179 Mass. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 349, 60 N. E. 401	668
Bromley v. Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Wis. 562, 79 N. W. 741	1114	Butterfield v. Ashley, 6 Cush. 249	208
Bronson v. Kinsline, 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143	1176	Butts v. Monona County, 100 Iowa, 74, 69 N. W. 284	455
Brooks v. Geo. H. Field Paper Co. 94 Tenn. 701, 31 S. W. 160	493	Buttz v. Northern P. R. Co. 119 U. S. 55, 30 L. ed. 330, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100	748
v. Holden, 175 Mass. 137, 55 N. E. 802	667	Byers Case. See PITTSBURGH & C. R. Co. v. BYERS.
Brooks Waterfield Co. v. Carpenter, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 851, 53 S. W. 40	654	Byrd v. Rautman, 85 Md. 414, 36 Atl. 1099	262
Brown v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 656, 21 N. W. 195	1152	Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 722	538
v. De Tastet, Jacob. 284	647	C.
v. Levee Comrs. 50 Miss. 468	1157	Cady v. Cady, 67 Miss. 425, 7 So. 216	467
v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 97 Ky. 229, 30 S. W. 639	1018	Cæsar v. Capell, 83 Fed. 403	1048
v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 553, 18 N. W. 834	704	Cahen v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 9 Jones & S. 296	1073
v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 44 L. ed. 119, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77	511	Cahill v. Applegarth, 98 Md. 493, 56 Atl. 794	262
v. Walker, 101 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 309, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644	847	v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 92 Ky. 345, 18 S. W. 2	1018
Browning v. Lewis, 39 Or. 11, 64 Pac. 304	759	Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Peoples, 92 Ill. 97, 34 Am. Rep. 112	229
Bruce v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 53, 35 S. W. 383, 39 S. W. 683, 494, 496, 497, 499, 502, 503, 510	512	v. Warrington, 92 Ill. 157	229
v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 26, 44 S. W. 852	511	Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648	651
Bruce Case. See BRUCE v. STATE.		v. Kurby, 5 Gray, 597	459
Bruner v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 267, 28 Pac. 341	847	Caldwell v. Barrett, 73 Ga. 604	488
Brunswick v. King, 91 Ga. 522, 17 S. E. 940	833	Call v. Wilkesboro, 115 N. C. 337, 20 S. E. 468	976
Brunswick & T. Water District v. Maine Water Co. 90 Me. 371, 50 Atl. 537	907	Calumet Iron & Steel Co. v. Martin, 115 Ill. 358, 3 N. E. 456	679
Brush Electric Co.'s Appeal, 114 Pa. 574, 7 Atl. 704	905	Cambridge v. Munroe, 126 Mass. 406	460
Bryan v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 685, 34 L. ed. 312, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972	1176	Cameron v. Francisco, 26 Ohio St. 190	647
Brymer v. Southern P. Co. 90 Cal. 496, 27 Pac. 371	295	v. Romeo, 53 Tex. 238	1009
Buchanan v. Tilden, 158 N. Y. 109, 44 L. R. A. 170, 70 Am. St. Rep. 454, 52 N. E. 724	962	Campbell Printing Press & Mfg. Co. v. Powell, 78 Tex. 64, 14 S. W. 247	509
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)		Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128	1155
		Canfield, Re, 98 Mich. 644, 57 N. W. 807	524
		Cannon v. Lindsey, 85 Ala. 198, 7 Am. St. Rep. 38, 3 So. 676	654
		Cannon's Case. See PEOPLE v. CANNON.

Canter v. American Ins. Co. 3 Pet. 307, 7 L. ed. 688	1086	Chase v. Buhl Iron Works, 55 Mich. 139, 20 N. W. 827	654
Cantwell v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 85 S. W. 18	497	v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 76 Iowa, 675, 39 N. W. 196	1152
Cantwell Case. See CANTWELL v. STATE		v. Denny, 130 Mass. 568	455, 456
Capehart v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 81 N. C. 438, 31 Am. Rep. 505	988	v. Dwinall, 7 Me. 134, 20 Am. Dec. 352	871
Capital City Water Co. v. State, 105 Ala. 406, 29 L. R. A. 743, 18 So. 62	832	Cherokee & P. Coal & Min. Co. v. Lmbb, 47 Kan. 469, 28 Pac. 181	1170
Carbonero, The, 45 C. C. A. 314, 106 Fed. 320	576	Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 104 Ky. 608, 47 S. W. 615	377
Carlson v. Phoenix Bridge Co. 132 N. Y. 273, 30 N. E. 750	295	v. Gunter, 108 Ky. 362, 56 S. W. 527	372
Carolina C. R. Co. v. McCaskill, 94 N. C. 751	622	v. Smith, 101 Ky. 111, 39 S. W. 832	378
v. Wilmington Street R. Co. 120 N. C. 523, 26 S. E. 913	984	Cheshire v. Burlington, 31 Conn. 326	968
Carpenter v. Longan, 16 Wall. 271, 21 L. ed. 313	150	Chetwynd, Re. [1902] 1 Ch. 692	805
Carpue v. London & B. R. Co. 5 Q. B. 747	558	Chicago v. O'Brien, 111 Ill. 532, 53 Am. Rep. 640	985
Carr v. Allatt, 3 Hurlst. & N. 964	456	v. Trotter, 136 Ill. 430, 26 N. E. 359	943
v. Commercial Bank, 16 Wis. 52	890	Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnol, 144 Ill. 261, 19 L. R. A. 313, 33 N. E. 204	1147
v. State, 127 Ind. 204, 11 L. R. A. 370, 22 Am. St. Rep. 624, 26 N. E. 778	883	v. Hoyt, 122 Ill. 369, 12 N. E. 225	687
v. United States, 98 U. S. 433, 25 L. ed. 209	729	v. Maroney, 170 Ill. 520, 62 Am. St. Rep. 396, 48 N. E. 953	673
Carrington v. Mueller, 65 N. J. L. 244, 47 Atl. 564	283	v. Woolridge, 32 Ill. App. 237	859
v. St. Louis, 89 Mo. 208, 58 Am. Rep. 108, 1 S. W. 240	1073	Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 120 Ill. 667, 12 N. E. 207	229
Carroll v. Wisconsin Central Co. 40 Minn. 168, 41 N. W. 661	130	Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. DeClow, 61 C. C. A. 34, 124 Fed. 142	1170
Carson v. Blazer, 2 Blinn. 475, 4 Am. Dec. 463	764	v. Gillison, 173 Ill. 264, 64 Am. St. Rep. 117, 50 N. E. 657	673
v. Gentner, 33 Or. 512, 43 L. R. A. 130, 52 Pac. 506	759	Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581	172
Carter v. Marshall, 72 Ill. 609	1183	v. Hines, 45 Ill. App. 299	290
Carthage v. Duvall, 202 Ill. 234, 66 N. E. 1099	494	v. Johnson, 103 Ill. 512	678
v. Munsell, 203 Ill. 474, 67 N. E. 831	494	v. Moore, 31 Neb. 629, 28 Am. St. Rep. 534, 48 N. W. 475	197
Case v. Hoffman, 84 Wis. 438, 20 L. R. A. 40, 36 Am. St. Rep. 937, 34 N. W. 793	760	v. Oteo County, 16 Wall. 667, 21 L. ed. 375	517
Casper v. Klippen, 61 Minn. 353, 52 Am. St. Rep. 604, 63 N. W. 737	449	Chicago City R. Co. v. Bruley, 215 Ill. 464, 74 N. E. 441	700
Cassidy v. Harrelson, 1 Colo. App. 458, 29 Pac. 525	1089	Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 50 L. R. A. 488, 42 C. C. A. 178, 102 Fed. 85	84
Cattlett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 57 Ark. 461, 38 Am. St. Rep. 254, 21 S. W. 1062	1146	Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 418, 72 N. W. 1118	586
Caughy v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 240	208	v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184	992
Caulkins v. Memphis Gaslight Co. 85 Tenn. 684, 4 Am. St. Rep. 786, 4 S. W. 287	193	Chicago Mill & Lumber Co. v. Sims, 101 Mo. App. 569, 74 S. W. 128	1045
Central Bridge Corp. v. Lowell, 4 Gray, 481	621	Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 34 L. ed. 349, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 999	1127
Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Hartman, 49 C. C. A. 244, 111 Fed. 96	1170	Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Caulfield, 11 C. C. A. 552, 27 U. S. App. 358, 63 Fed. 396	290
Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 603	1115	v. Ellithorpe, 78 Iowa, 415, 43 N. W. 277	436
Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Ryles, 84 Ga. 430, 11 S. E. 499	296	v. Reidy, 66 Ill. 43	229
Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 269, 40 L. ed. 418, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269	693	Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co. v. Bellwith, 28 C. C. A. 358, 55 U. S. App. 113, 83 Fed. 437	1169
Central U. Teleph. Co. v. State, 110 Ind. 203, 10 N. E. 922, 12 N. E. 138	556	Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. v. Price, 138 U. S. 185, 34 L. ed. 917, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290	1054
Chambliss v. Johnson, 77 Iowa, 612, 42 N. W. 427	438	Childester v. Consolidated Ditch Co. 59 Cal. 197	602
Champion v. Crandon, 84 Wis. 405, 19 L. R. A. 856, 54 N. W. 775	955	Child v. Boston, 4 Allen, 41, 81 Am. Dec. 680	955
Champion Mach. Co. v. Mann, 42 Kan. 372, 22 Pac. 417	146	v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 359	352
Chandler v. Sanger, 114 Mass. 364, 19 Am. Rep. 367	871	Childs v. Hayman, 72 Ga. 791	389
v. Worcester Mut. F. Ins. Co. 3 Cush. 328	1108	Chilvers v. People, 11 Mich. 43	567
Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 29 L. ed. 83, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799	380	Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Holloway, 191 U. S. 334, 48 L. ed. 207, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102	296
v. Erie R. Co. 55 N. Y. 579	231	v. Mcbada, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24	295
Chappell v. Gregory, 2 De G. J. & S. 111	1087	Chouteau v. Missouri P. R. Co. 122 Mo. 375, 22 S. W. 458, 30 S. W. 299	810
Charles v. Jones, L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 80	1088	Christ v. Davidson, 116 Wis. 621, 93 N. W. 532	891
Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbes, 142 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1051, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255	562	Christ Church v. Philadelphia County, 24 How. 300, 16 L. ed. 602	1022
Charnock v. Texas & P. R. Co. 194 U. S. 432, 48 L. ed. 1057, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671	297	Church Case. See BALTIMORE & P. R. CO. V. FIFTH BAPTIST CHURCH.
Chase, Re, 59 C. C. A. 629, 124 Fed. 753	323
ILRA.(N.S.)

Churchill v. Gronewig, 81 Iowa, 449, 46 N. W. 1063	430	Cobb v. Knight, 74 Me., loc. cit. 257	799
Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S. v. United States, 136 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 478, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 792	747	Codman v. Rogers, 10 Pick. 112	908, 913
Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero, 176 Ill. 9, 42 L. R. A. 696, 68 Am. St. Rep. 155, 51 N. E. 758	943	Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Shanks, 69 Kan. 306, 76 Pac. 856	695
Cincinnati v. Newell, 7 Ohio St. 37	569	Cogswell v. Forrest, 14 Wash. 1, 43 Pac. 1098	748
v. Steinkamp, 54 Ohio St. 284, 43 N. E. 490	817	v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 103 N. Y. 10, 56 Am. Rep. 6, n., 8 N. E. 537	81, 85, 86, 1004
Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Giesel, 119 Ind. 77, 21 N. E. 470	809	Cohen v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 209	392
v. Long, 112 Ind. 166, 13 N. E. 659	242	v. Parish, 105 Ga. 339, 31 S. E. 205	729
Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Cook, 113 Ky. 161, 67 S. W. 383, 377, 118 Ky. 161, 67 S. W. 383, 377	378	v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257	194
Cincinnati Siemens-Lungren Gas Illuminating Co. v. Western Siemens-Lungren Co., 152 U. S. 200, 38 L. ed. 411, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523	449	Cohnfeld v. Tanenbaum, 176 N. Y. 126, 98 Am. St. Rep. 653, 68 N. E. 141	883, 884
Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County, 1 Ohio St. 77	488	Cole v. White County, 32 Ark. 45	1073, 1074
Circlack v. Merchants' Woolen Co., 146 Mass. 182, 4 Am. St. Rep. 307, 15 N. E. 579	283	Coleman, Re, 111 N. Y. 220, 19 N. E. 71	594
Citizens & M. Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Gillespie, 115 Pa. 564, 9 Atl. 73	903	v. Glenn, 103 Ga. 458, 68 Am. St. Rep. 108, 30 S. E. 297	594
Citizens' Bank v. Cannon, 164 U. S. 319, 41 L. ed. 451, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 89	1088	Coleman Case. See COLEMAN, RE.
v. Fromholz, 64 Neb. 284, 39 N. W. 775	1135	Collins v. Greenfield, 172 Mass. 78, 51 N. E. 454	668
Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Loomis, 100 Iowa, 266, 62 Am. St. Rep. 571, 69 N. W. 443	151	v. Hydorn, 135 N. Y. 320, 32 N. E. 69	163
Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 636, 43 L. ed. 840, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 571	565	v. Westbury, 2 Bay, 211, 1 Am. Dec. 643	871
Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Hamer, 29 Ind. App. 426, 62 N. E. 658, 63 N. E. 778	242	Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. Lamb, 6 Colo. App. 255, 40 Pac. 251	1152
v. Lowe, 12 Ind. App. 47, 39 N. E. 165	242	Colton v. Mayer, 90 Md. 717, 47 L. R. A. 617, 78 Am. St. Rep. 456, 45 Atl. 874	1175
City Nat. Bank v. Hunter, 152 U. S. 512, 38 L. ed. 534, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 675	1085	v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 58 Am. Rep. 556, 10 Pac. 395	106
City of Norwich, The, 118 U. S. 468, 30 L. ed. 134, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1150	876	Columbia Nat. Bank v. Rice, 48 Neb. 428, 67 N. W. 165	654
Clafin v. Boston & L. R. Co., 7 Allen, 341	493	Comfort v. Mather, 2 Watts & S. 450, 37 Am. Dec. 523	1119
Clara Clarita, The v. Cox. See CLARITA, THE, AND THE CLARA		Commercial Bank v. Hurt, 99 Ala. 130, 19 L. R. A. 701, 42 Am. St. Rep. 38, 12 So. 568	245
Clarita, The, and The Clara, 23 Wall. 1, 23 L. ed. 146	875	v. Pritchard, 126 Cal. 605, 59 Pac. 130	1199
Clark v. Cambridge & A. Irrig. & Improv. Co., 45 Neb. 798, 64 N. W. 239	765	Com. v. Adams, 114 Mass. 323, 19 Am. Rep. 362	993
v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 127 Mo. 107, 29 S. W. 1013	538	v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53	924
v. Louisville Water Co., 90 Ky. 522, 14 S. W. 502	768	v. Allen, 128 Mass. 308	831
v. Middleton, 10 Mo. 53	1045	v. Beck, 187 Mass. 15, 72 N. E. 357	460
v. Northern P. R. Co., 29 Wash. 139, 59 L. R. A. 508, 69 Pac. 639	1168	v. Bennett, 106 Mass. 27	488
v. Patterson, 158 Mass. 388, 35 Am. St. Rep. 498, 33 N. E. 589	330	v. Brennan, 103 Mass. 70	460
v. Rochester, 24 Barb. 446, 28 N. Y. 605	488	v. Canada, 13 Pick. 86	850
v. Thompson, 47 Ill. 25, 95 Am. Dec. 457	744	v. Carter, 132 Mass. 12	924
v. Ward, 12 Gratt. 440	781	v. Casey, 12 Allen, 214	667
Clayton v. O'Conner, 29 Ga. 687	592	v. Coleman, 52 Pa. 468	402
Clear Creek Land & Ditch Co. v. Killenny, 5 Wyo. 38, 36 Pac. 819	602	v. Dean, 110 Mass. 357	488
Clearwater v. Meredith, 1 Wall. 25, 17 L. ed. 604	619	v. Ducey, 126 Mass. 269	924
Cleve v. Mazzoni, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 2001, 45 S. W. 88	340	v. East Tennessee Coal Co., 97 Ky. 238, 30 S. W. 608	1024
Cleveland v. Union Ins. Co., 8 Mass. 308	1109	v. Fisher, 2 Duv. 376	850
v. Williams, 29 Tex. 204, 94 Am. Dec. 274	491	v. Fleming, 130 Pa. 138, 5 L. R. A. 470, 17 Am. St. Rep. 765, 18 Atl. 622	494, 495, 496, 503
Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Coburn, 91 Ind. 557	810	v. Fuqua, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 41	151
Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. Wms. 678	469	v. Gagne, 153 Mass. 205, 10 L. R. A. 442, 26 N. E. 449	175
Clinton v. Walliker, 98 Iowa, 655, 68 N. W. 431	435	v. Jacobson, 183 Mass. 242, 67 L. R. A. 935, 66 N. E. 719	756
Coan v. Marlborough, 164 Mass. 206, 41 N. E. 238	608	v. Kearns, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 332	495
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)		v. Kinsley, 133 Mass. 578	460
		v. Loveridge, 11 Mass. 337	850
		v. Moylan, 119 Mass. 109	460
		v. Otis, 16 Mass. 198	850
		v. Plaisted, 143 Mass. 375, 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566, 19 N. E. 224	400
		v. Proctor, 165 Mass. 38, 42 N. E. 335	923
		v. Roberts, 155 Mass. 281, 16 L. R. A. 400, 29 N. E. 522	756
		v. Roberts, 1 Duv. 199	850
		v. Russell, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 576	495
		v. Smith, 166 Mass. 370, 44 N. E. 503	629
		v. Snelling, 4 Binn. 379	1029
		v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 562, 48 Am. Dec. 679	460
		v. Walte, 11 Allen, 264, 87 Am. Dec. 711	931
		v. Wallace, 7 Gray, 222	653

Com. v. Weller, 14 Bush, 218, 29 Am. Rep. 407	488	Coveny v. McLaughlin, 148 Mass. 576, 2 L. R. A. 448, 20 N. E. 165	1007
v. Williams, 6 Gray, 1	629	Covington v. Anderson, 18 Lea, 310	103
Com. ex rel. Wolfe v. Butler, 99 Pa. 535	415	Cowles v. Whitman, 10 Conn. 121, 25 Am. Dec. 60	1085, 1086
McLaughlin v. Cluley, 56 Pa. 270, 94 Am. Dec. 75	835	Cowper v. Baker, 17 Ves. Jr. 128	339
Atty. Gen. v. Dillon, 81* Pa. 41	831	Cox v. Bernard, 39 Or. 53, 64 Pac. 860	760
Elkin v. Griest, 190 Pa. 396, 50 L. R. A. 568, 46 Atl. 505	413	v. Handy, 78 Md. 108, 27 Atl. 227	788
Johnson v. Halloway, 42 Pa. 446, 82 Am. Dec. 528	523	Crafts v. Hibbard, 4 Met. 438	809
Fisher v. Kistler, 140 Pa. 350, 24 Atl. 216	828	Cragg v. Arendale, 113 Ga. 181, 38 S. E. 399	303
Elkin v. Moir, 199 Pa. 534, 53 L. R. A. 837, 85 Am. St. Rep. 801, 49 Atl. 351	415	Cragin v. Powell, 128 U. S. 691, 32 L. ed. 566, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203	748, 749
McCormick v. Reeder, 171 Pa. 506, 33 L. R. A. 141, 33 Atl. 67	415	Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 232, 9 N. W. 712	443
Atty. Gen. v. Walter, 83 Pa. 105, 24 Am. Rep. 154	831	v. Hulschizer, 34 N. J. L. 363	654
Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338	832	Crandall v. State, 10 Conn. 339	498
Connell v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 93 Va. 57, 32 L. R. A. 792, 57 Am. St. Rep. 786, 24 S. E. 467	846	Crane v. Thayer, 18 Vt. 162, 46 Am. Dec. 142	1158
Connolly v. Minneapolis E. R. Co. 38 Minn. 80, 35 N. W. 582	700	Crawford v. Cato, 22 Ga. 594	871
Conner v. Long, 104 U. S. 228, 26 L. ed. 723	1064	v. Fickey, 41 W. Va. 544, 23 S. E. 862	1091
Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 558, 46 L. ed. 689, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 439	635	v. Smith, 7 Dana, 60	495
Connor v. People, 18 Colo. 373, 25 L. R. A. 341, 36 Am. St. Rep. 295, 33 Pac. 159	1026	Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 60 Neb. 754, 84 N. W. 271, 61 Neb. 317, 85 N. W. 303, 87 Neb. 325, 60 L. R. A. 889, 93 N. W. 781	765
Connors v. Morton, 160 Mass. 333, 85 N. E. 860	294	Creighton v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 446	517
Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389	305	Crook v. Cowan, 64 N. C. 743	495
Consolidated Coal Co. v. Seniger, 179 Ill. 370, 53 N. E. 732	292	Cross v. Harrison, 16 How. 164, 14 L. ed. 889	747
Contee v. Chew, 1 Harr. & J. 417	256	v. West Virginia C. & P. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 177, 12 S. E. 1071	562
Continental Casualty Co. v. Lloyd (Ind.) 73 N. E. 824	425	Crossman v. Lurman, 192 U. S. 189, 48 L. ed. 401, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 234	921
Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173	358	Crumlish v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co. 40 W. Va. 627, 22 S. E. 90	1088
Cook v. Corthell, 11 R. I. 483, 23 Am. Rep. 518	455	Cudahy Packing Co. v. Dorsey, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 484, 63 S. W. 549	507
v. Pinkerton, 81 Ga. 89, 12 Am. St. Rep. 297, 7 S. E. 171	392	v. Marcan, 54 L. R. A. 258, 45 C. C. A. 515, 106 Fed. 645	282
v. Winchester, 81 Mich. 581, 6 L. R. A. 822, 46 N. W. 106	397	Cully v. Northern P. R. Co. 35 Wash. 241, 77 Pac. 202	288
Coolidge v. Brookline, 114 Mass. 592	668	Cumberland v. Codrington, 8 Johns. Ch. 255, 8 Am. Dec. 492	961
Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co. 102 Mass. 572, 3 Am. Rep. 506	282	Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. 93 Tenn. 492, 27 L. R. A. 236, 29 S. W. 104	83, 104, 1084
Cooper v. Newell, 173 U. S. 555, 43 L. ed. 808, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506	890	Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356	637
v. State, 23 Ark. 278	891	Cunningham v. Cunningham, 80 Minn. 180, 51 L. R. A. 642, 81 Am. St. Rep. 256, 83 N. W. 58	397
Cooper's Estate, 206 Pa. 628, 98 Am. St. Rep. 799, 56 Atl. 67	850	v. Davis, 62 Miss. 366	318
Cork Distilleries Co. v. Great Southern & W. R. Co. L. R. 7 H. L. 269	405	Cunningham's Case. See STATE v. CUNNINGHAM.
Cosgrove v. Pittman, 103 Cal. 268, 37 Pac. 232	293	Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 49 L. ed. 1125, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721	889
Cosmos Exploration Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Co. 61 L. R. A. 230, 50 C. C. A. 79, 112 Fed. 4	294	Currier v. Lebanon Slate Co. 56 N. H. 262	576
Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 399	347	Cushing v. Seymour & S. Co. 30 Minn. 301, 15 N. W. 249	449
Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118, 19 Am. St. Rep. 475, 25 N. E. 259	961	Cushman v. Arnold, 185 Mass. 165, 70 N. E. 43	1006
Cottel v. Berry, 42 Or. 593, 72 Pac. 584	539	Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309	851
Cottrell v. Stratton, L. R. 8 Ch. 295	1087	Cutter v. Pollock, 4 N. D. 205, 25 L. R. A. 377, 50 Am. St. Rep. 644, 59 N. W. 1062	1089
Cottle v. Marine Bank, 166 N. Y. 53, 59 N. E. 736	1135	v. Pollock, 7 N. D. 631, 76 N. W. 235	1089
Cotton v. Gillard, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 90	712
Cotthausen v. Judd, 43 Wis. 213, 28 Am. Rep. 539	654	D.
Couch v. Watson Coal Co. 46 Iowa, 17	202	Dalbey v. Wolf, 14 Iowa, 228	488
Coughlin v. District of Columbia, 33 Wash. L. Rep. 376	884	Damon v. Leque, 17 Wash. 573, 61 Am. St. Rep. 927, 50 Pac. 485	1040
Coughnan v. Bigelow, 164 U. S. 301, 41 L. ed. 442, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 117	1169	Dance v. Magruder, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 220, 80 S. W. 1120	822
Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195	173	Dane v. Daniel, 23 Wash. 379, 63 Pac. 268	1040
Coup v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 56 Mich. 111, 56 Am. Rep. 374, 22 N. W. 215	174	Danielson v. Roberts, 44 Or. 108, 65 L. R. A. 526, 102 Am. St. Rep. 627, 74 Pac. 913	481
Courthope v. Mapplesden, 10 Ves. Jr. 200	339	Danser v. Warwick, 33 N. J. Eq. loc. cit. 135	709
Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 28 L. ed. 390, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355	1063	Danville v. Danville Water Co. 180 Ill. 235, 54 N. E. 224	773
ILRA. (N.S.)	2	Dart v. Laimbeer, 107 N. Y. 669, 14 N. E. 291	450
		Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629	767
		D'Arusment v. Jones, 4 Lea, 251, 40 Am. Rep. 12	889

Dashliell v. Atty. Gen. 5 Harr. & J. 392, 9 Am. Dec. 572	256	Dickinson v. Leominster Sav. Bank, 152 Mass. 49, 25 N. E. 12	1135
Daughters v. Lynch, 93 Md. 305, 48 Atl. 1055	787	v. Winchester, 4 Cush. 114, 50 Am. Dec. 760	141
Davidson v. Clayland, 1 Harr. & J. 546 v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616	257	Dickson v. Racine, 61 Wis. 545, 21 N. W. 820	438
v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 586, 73 S. W. 808	439	Dillon v. Crook, 11 Bush, 321	362
Davis v. Dale, 150 Ill. 239, 37 N. E. 215 v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 20 Mich. 105, 4 Am. Rep. 364	511	Dillon v. Allen, 46 Iowa, 299, 26 Am. Rep. 155	1161
v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. ed. 447	1082	Disbrow v. Disbrow, 46 App. Div. 111, 61 N. Y. Supp. 614	805
v. Hart, 123 Cal. 387, 55 Pac. 1060	203	Dixon v. New England R. Co. 179 Mass. 242, 60 N. E. 581	667
v. Morriss, 76 Va. 27	730	Dixon Crucible Co. v. Guggenheim, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 321	712
v. Ney, 125 Mass. 590, 28 Am. Rep. 272	1004	D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 375, 47 N. W. 70	146
Davis' Sons v. Buttrick, 68 Iowa, 98, 26 N. W. 27	108	Dob v. Halsey, 16 Johns. 34, 8 Am. Dec. 293	654
Dayton Gold & S. Mln. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394, 214, 979	146	Dodge v. Boston & P. R. Co. 154 Mass. 299, 13 L. R. A. 318, 28 N. E. 243	968
Dean v. Nichols & S. Co. 95 Iowa, 89, 63 N. W. 582	980	Dodge County v. Acom, 61 Neb. 376, 85 N. W. 292	438
v. Winton, 150 Pa. 227, 24 Atl. 664	146	Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 Pac. 879	663
Deane v. Randolph, 132 Mass. 475	402	Doherty v. Braintree, 148 Mass. 495, 20 N. E. 106	668
Dearborn Foundry Co. v. Augustine, 5 Wash. 67, 31 Pac. 327	608	Doll, Ex parte, 7 Phila. 595, Fed. Cas. No. 3,968	1143
De Bary v. Souer, 41 C. C. A. 417, 101 Fed. 425	1045	Donahue v. State, 74 N. E. 990	422
Decker v. McSorley, 116 Wis. 643, 93 N. W. 808	495	Donald v. Nesbit, 89 Ga. 290, 15 S. E. 367	318
v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 20, 44 S. W. 845	680	Donnelly v. Cudahy Packing Co. 68 Kan. 653, 75 Pac. 1017	695
v. Stimson Mill Co. 31 Wash. 522, 72 Pac. 98	503	v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463	421
Deems v. Baltimore, 40 Md. 164, 26 L. R. A. 541, 45 Am. St. Rep. 339, 30 Atl. 648	288	Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. 65 Conn. 201, 29 L. R. A. 297, 32 Atl. 350	538
Deering v. Cobb, 74 Me. 332, 43 Am. Rep. 596	923	v. Pennsylvania Co. 61 L. R. A. 140, 57 C. C. A. 362, 120 Fed. 215	677
De Graffenried v. Savage, 9 Colo. App. 131, 47 Pac. 902	456	Dorrah v. Illinois C. R. Co. 65 Miss. 14, 7 Am. St. Rep. 629, 3 So. 36	291
Deitch v. Staub, 53 C. C. A. 137, 115 Fed. 310	214	Doss v. People, 153 Ill. 660, 49 Am. St. Rep. 180, 41 N. E. 1093	866
Delaney v. Boston, 2 Harr. (Del.) 489	1031	Dow v. Kansas P. R. Co. 8 Kan. 642 687, Dow Case. See Dow v. KANSAS P. R. Co.	692
Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Westchester County Bank, 4 Denio, 97	764	Dowle v. Humphrey, 91 Wis. 98, 64 N. W. 315	1115
Demarest v. Hardham, 24 N. J. Eq. 469	961	Dowling v. Gerard B. Allen & Co. 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298	282
Demill v. Reid, 71 Md. 175, 17 Atl. 1014	91	Downey v. Taylor (Tex. Civ. App.) 48 S. W. 542	493
De Mora v. Concha, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 268, Affirmed in L. R. 11 App. Cas. 541	788	Dows v. National Exch. Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 214	507
Dennis v. Maxfield, 10 Allen, 138	889	Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co. 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148	1023
Denny v. Cole, 22 Wash. 372, 70 Am. St. Rep. 940, 61 Pac. 38	450	v. Doyle, 50 Ohio St. 330, 34 N. E. 166	464
v. Kettell, 135 Mass. 138	1040	Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 168, 13 Am. St. Rep. 382, 37 N. W. 70	197
Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231	1007	Drayton's Appeal, 61 Pa. 172	402
Denver, M. & A. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 54 Kan. 586, 38 Pac. 704	808	Dred Scott Case, 19 How. 393, 15 L. ed. 601	460
Dermont v. Detroit, 4 Mich. 435	957	Drew v. Peer, 93 Pa. 234	749
Deseret Salt Co. v. Tarpey, 142 U. S. 241, 35 L. ed. 990, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158	563	Drovers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Roller, 85 Md. 495, 36 L. R. A. 767, 60 Am. St. Rep. 344, 37 Atl. 30	254
Detroit v. Detroit & H. Pl. Road Co. 43 Mich. 140, 5 N. W. 275	1008	Drucker v. Manhattan R. Co. 106 N. Y. 157, 60 Am. Rep. 437, 12 N. E. 568	84
Deuble v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 68 App. Div. 323, 72 N. Y. Supp. 752, Affirmed in 172 N. Y. 665, 65 N. E. 1116	426	Drummond, Re, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 231 Fed. Cas. No. 4,093	391
Devens v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. 168	1040	Drury v. Connell, 177 Ill. 43, 62 N. E. 368	396
DeVoe v. Rundle, 33 Wash. 604, 74 Pac. 836	330	Dubiver v. City & Suburban R. Co. 44 Or. 227, 74 Pac. 915, 75 Pac. 693	282
Dewdney, Ex parte, 15 Ves. Jr. 479	557	DuBols v. Kirk, 158 U. S. 58, 39 L. ed. 895, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725	1085
Dewey v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. 64, 22 Pac. 333	455	Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. ed. 972	1022
Dexter v. Curtis, 91 Me. 505, 64 Am. St. Rep. 266, 40 Atl. 549	1177	Duchess of Kingston's Case, 2 Smith. Lead. Cas. 438	390
v. Edmonds, 89 Fed. 467	1000	Ducker v. Burnham, 146 Ill. 10, 37 Am. St. Rep. 135, 34 N. E. 560	766
Dial v. Gary, 14 S. C. 573, 37 Am. Dec. 737	861	Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. v. Barnes (Tenn. Ch. App.) 60 S. W. 600	77
Dibblee, Re, 3 Ben. 283, Fed. Cas. No. 3,884	851	Dugan v. Com. 6 Bush, 305	850
Dice v. Willamette Transp. & Locks Co. 8 Or. 60, 34 Am. Rep. 575 858,	184	Dulany v. Middleton, 72 Md. 67, 19 Atl. 146	766
Dickenson v. State, 20 Neb. 72, 29 N. W. 184	805	Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co. 98 Cal. 304, 33 Pac. 123	557
Dickey, Ex parte, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L. R. A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 Pac. 924
Dickinson, Re, 1 Jur. N. S. 724
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Dallam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 51 Am. Rep. 128, 19 N. W. 112	504	Elm City Club v. Howes, 92 Me. 211, 42 Atl. 392	965
Duncan v. Franklin Twp. 43 N. J. Eq. 143, 10 Atl. 546	1119	Elmer v. Fessenden, 151 Mass. 359, 5 L. R. A. 724, 22 N. E. 635, 24 N. E. 208	1074
v. Jandon, 15 Wall. 175, 21 L. ed. 145	192	Elwes v. Brill Gas Co. L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 562	482
v. Lewis, 1 Duv. 184	405	Embree-McLean Carriage Co. v. Lusk, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 493, 33 S. W. 154	493
v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570	635	Emerson v. Nash (Wis.) 70 L. R. A. 326, 102 N. W. 921	956
Dundalk, S. P. & N. P. R. Co. v. Smith, 97 Md. 181, 54 Atl. 628	267	v. Pacific Coast & N. Packing Co. 92 Minn. 523, 100 N. W. 365	448
Dunham v. Dunham, 162 Ill. 589, 95 L. R. A. 70, 44 N. E. 841	744	Emery v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 77 Minn. 465, 80 N. W. 627	802
Dunmore's Appeal, 52 Pa. 374	519	Emison v. Owyhee Ditch Co. 37 Or. 577, 62 Pac. 13	602
Dunn v. Brown County Agri. Soc. 46 Ohio St. 93, 1 L. R. A. 754, 15 Am. St. Rep. 556, 18 N. E. 496	431	Employer's Liability Assur. Corp. v. Roche, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 232, 35 S. W. 869	426
v. County Revenues Court, 85 Ala. 144, 4 So. 661	437	Emry v. Roanoke Nav. & Water Power Co. 111 N. C. 94, 17 L. R. A. 609, 18 S. E. 18	850
v. German-American Bank, 109 Mo. 90, 18 S. W. 1139	800	Engel v. State, 65 Md. 539, 5 Atl. 249	788
v. State, 82 Ga. 27, 3 L. R. A. 199, 8 S. E. 806	495	Englar v. Ogutt, 70 Md. 78, 14 Am. St. Rep. 332, 16 Atl. 497	254
v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 86 S. W. 326	508	English & S. Marine Ins. Co. Re, L. R. 5 Ch. 737	449
Dunn Case. See DUNN v. STATE.		Ennis v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 165 Ill. 161, 46 N. E. 439	872
Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co. 72 Iowa, 182, 33 N. W. 456	131	Enright v. Hartalg, 40 Mich. 469, 9 N. W. 496	358
Darfee v. Jones, 11 R. I. 588, 23 Am. Rep. 528	481	Epstein v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 104 N. W. 12	443
Durr v. Durr, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 855, 82 S. W. 581	822	Erhardt v. Boaro, 118 U. S. 537, 28 L. ed. 1116, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565	339
Dutton v. Pool, 1 Vent. 318	962	Erickson v. Cass County, 11 N. D. 494, 92 N. W. 841	438
Duval v. Malone, 14 Gratt. 24	777	Ernst v. Stockman, 74 Pa. 15, 15 Am. Rep. 542	1120
Duyckinck v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 710, 26 N. E. 755	85	Erwin v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 84 Mo. App. 289, 68 S. W. 88	1147
E.
Eames v. Eames, 41 N. H. 177	900	Estell v. State, 51 N. J. L. 182, 17 Atl. 118	993
Ean v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 95 Wis. 69, 69 N. W. 997	956	E. T. Kenney Co. v. Anderson, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 367, 81 S. W. 663	140
Eastman v. State, 109 Ind. 278, 58 Am. Rep. 400, 10 N. E. 97	815	Eittrick, The, L. R. 6 Prob. Div. 127	877
East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Grayson, 119 U. S. 240, 30 L. ed. 382, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190	374	Eufaula Grocery Co. v. Missouri Nat. Bank, 118 Ala. 408, 24 So. 389	246
v. Hayes, 83 Ga. 558, 10 S. E. 350	392	Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 27	358
v. Mitchell, 11 Heisk. 400	538	v. Price, 118 Ill. 593, 8 N. E. 854	345
Eddy v. Gray, 4 Allen, 435	472	v. Underwood, Wils. 262	1127
Edgerly v. Barker, 66 N. H. 434, 28 L. R. A. 328, 31 Atl. 900	805	Evansville v. Decker, 84 Ind. 325, 43 Am. Rep. 86	956
Edgerton v. Edgerton, 8 Conn. 6	1129	v. State, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93, 21 N. E. 267	518
Edison General Electric Co. v. Canadian Pacific Nav. Co. 8 Wash. 370, 24 L. R. A. 315, 40 Am. St. Rep. 910, 36 Pac. 260	1045	Everghim v. Ensworth, 7 Wend. 326	654
Edmonds v. Scott, 78 Va. 729	469	Ewing v. St. Louis, 5 Wall. 413, 18 L. ed. 657	332
Edwards v. Kearney, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793	1176	Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542	677
v. McKernan, 55 Mich. 520, 22 N. W. 20	579	F.
Ehrman v. Teutonia Ins. Co. 1 McCrary, 123, 1 Fed. 471	1045	Fahnestock v. Fahnestock, 152 Pa. 56, 34 Am. St. Rep. 623, 25 Atl. 313	402
Eckman v. Hersker, 170 Pa. 402, 33 Atl. 229	907	Fair, Re, 132 Cal. 523, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000	313
Ellenbecker v. District Court, 134 U. S. 31, 33 L. ed. 801, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424	641	v. Buas, 117 Iowa, 164, 90 N. W. 527	435
Eder v. Burrus, 6 Humph. 358	764	v. Jose Morales & Co. 82 Ill. App. 499	712
Eldred v. Mallory, 2 Colo. 320, 20 Am. Rep. 752	1129	Fairchild v. Rogers, 32 Minn. 269, 20 N. W. 191	450
Egin v. Joselyn, 136 Ill. 525, 26 N. E. 1090	183	Fallass v. Pierce, 30 Wis. 443	579
El Fork Oil & Gas Co. v. Foster, 39 C. A. 615, 99 Fed. 495	1091	Fallbrook Irrig. District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56	214
El v. Northern P. R. Co. 1 N. D. 336, 12 L. R. A. 97, 26 Am. St. Rep. 621, 48 N. W. 222	704	Falvey v. Richmond, 87 Ga. 99, 13 S. E. 261	493
Elerte v. Faust, 119 Mo. 653, 25 L. R. A. 140, 25 S. W. 390	1068	Farmers' Bank & T. Co. v. Newland, 97 Ky. 464, 31 S. W. 38	251
Ellicott v. Ellicott, 90 Md. 329, 48 L. R. A. 58, 45 Atl. 183	785	Farmers' Phosphate Co. v. Gill, 69 Md. 537, 1 L. R. A. 767, 9 Am. St. Rep. 443, 16 Atl. 214	494
Elmhous v. Taylor, 19 Mont. 462, 48 Pac. 757	215	Farquharson v. Eichelberger, 15 Md. 63	789
Elliot v. Small, 35 Minn. 396, 59 Am. Rep. 329, 29 N. W. 158	570	Farrell v. Farrell, 3 Houst. (Del.) 633	1168
Ellott v. Carter, 9 Gratt. 548	469	Farrow v. Austin, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 58	1087
Ellis v. Portsmouth & R. R. Co. 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 138	302	Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339	688
Ellis Case. See ELLIS v. PORTSMOUTH & R. R. Co.
ILLRA.(N.S.)

- Farwell v. Easton, 63 Mo. 446..... 340
 Fatjo v. Pfister, 117 Cal. 83, 48 Pac. 1012 156
 Favor v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 114 Mass. 351, 19 Am. Rep. 364..... 311
 Fay v. Green, 1 Alk. (Vt.) 71..... 654
 Feital v. Middlesex R. Co. 109 Mass. 398, 12 Am. Rep. 720..... 538
 Fell v. State, 42 Md. 71, 20 Am. Rep. 83..... 487
 Ferguson v. Crawford, 70 N. Y. 253, 26 Am. Rep. 589..... 800
 v. Meredith. See CLEARWATER V. MEREDITH.
 Fero v. Buffalo & State Line R. Co. 22 N. Y. 209, 78 Am. Dec. 178... 536
 Ferrenbach v. Turner, 86 Mo. 416, 56 Am. Rep. 437..... 921
 Ferry v. Campbell, 110 Iowa, 290, 50 L. R. A. 92, 81 N. W. 604..... 435
 Fetter v. Fidelity & C. Co. 174 Mo. 256, 61 L. R. A. 459, 97 Am. St. Rep. 560, 73 S. W. 592..... 1072
 Fidelity & C. Co. v. Sanders, 32 Ind. App. 448, 70 N. E. 167..... 426
 Fidelity Mut. L. Ins. Assn. v. Harris, 94 Tex. 25, 86 Am. St. Rep. 813, 57 S. W. 635..... 491
 Field v. Jones, 11 Ga. 413..... 1003
 v. New York C. R. Co. 32 N. Y. 339 540
 Fletsam v. Hay, 122 Ill. 293, 3 Am. St. Rep. 492, 13 N. E. 501..... 767
 Fifth Baptist Church Case. See BALTIMORE & P. R. CO. V. FIFTH BAPTIST CHURCH.
 Finch v. Gregg, 126 N. C. 176, 49 L. R. A. 679, 35 S. E. 251..... 246
 Finkbone's Appeal, 86 Pa. 368..... 913
 Finnie v. Clay, 2 Bibb, 351..... 368
 First Nat. Bank v. F. C. Trepehn (C. 59 Ohio St. 316, 52 N. E. 834..... 182
 v. Gatton, 172 Ill. 625, 50 N. E. 121..... 183
 v. Shuler, 153 N. Y. 163, 60 Am. St. Rep. 601, 47 N. E. 262 164, 166
 v. Watkins, 21 Mich. 483..... 871
 v. Yankton County, 101 U. S. 129, 25 L. ed. 1046..... 747 Fischer v. Laack, 76 Wis. 313, 45 N. W. 104..... 571
 v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 48 L. ed. 1018, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673 923
 v. Woodruff, 25 Wash. 67, 87 Am. St. Rep. 742, 64 Pac. 923..... 1040 Fisher v. Syfers, 109 Ind. 514, 10 N. E. 306..... 457
 v. Traders' Mut. L. Ins. Co. 136 N. C. 217, 48 S. E. 697..... 563
 Flisk v. Albany & S. R. Co. 41 How. Pr. 365..... 149
 Flitch v. Pacific R. Co. 45 Mo. 322..... 540
 Flitz Simons & C. Co. v. Braun, 199 Ill. 390, 59 L. R. A. 421, 65 N. E. 249..... 106
 Flanagan v. Sanders (Mich.) 101 N. W. 581..... 825
 Flatt v. D. M. Osborne & Co. 33 Minn. 98, 22 N. W. 440..... 146
 Fleitas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 550, 37 L. ed. 276, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495..... 329
 Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 128, 3 L. ed. 175..... 979
 Flint v. Christall. See IRRAWADDY, THE.
 Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111, 26 Am. Rep. 499..... 356
 Flower v. Williams, 1 La. 22..... 654
 Foley v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 64, 21 N. W. 124..... 702
 v. Royal Arcanum, 151 N. Y. 196, 56 Am. St. Rep. 621, 45 N. E. 456..... 1073
 Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 How. 369, 15 L. ed. 80..... 328
 Fontaine v. Baxley, 90 Ga. 416, 17 S. E. 1015..... 448
 Foos v. Scarf, 55 Md. 310..... 786
 Foot v. Great Northern R. Co. 81 Minn. 493, 52 L. R. A. 354, 83 Am. St. Rep. 395, 84 N. W. 342..... 1160
 Forbes v. Tuckerman, 115 Mass. 115..... 149
 Force v. Force (N. J. Eq.) 57 Atl. 973..... 805 Ford v. David, 3 Abb. Pr. 385..... 149
 v. Phillips, 1 Pick. 202..... 667
 v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 66 Ark. 363, 50 S. W. 864..... 1146
 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)
 Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, 54 W. Va. 210, 46 S. E. 238..... 198
 Forrester v. Leigh, 1 Ambl. 171..... 469
 Ft. Wayne v. Coombs, 107 Ind. 75, 57 Am. Rep. 82, 7 N. E. 743..... 957
 Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 201, 28 L. ed. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8..... 641
 v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 279, 47 Pac. 58..... 537
 Fountain County Coal & Min. Co. v. Beckelheimer, 102 Ind. 82, 52 Am. Rep. 645, 1 N. E. 202..... 321
 Fowle v. Torrey, 135 Mass. 87..... 330
 Fowler, Re, 53 N. Y. 60..... 438
 Fowlkes v. Southern R. Co. 96 Va. 742, 32 S. E. 464..... 204
 Fox v. Buffalo Park, 21 App. Div. 321, 47 N. Y. Supp. 788..... 431
 v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 35 L. R. A. 678, 37 S. W. 1102..... 193
 Fragano v. Long, 4 Barn. & C. 219..... 493
 Fralley v. Thompson, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1179, 49 S. W. 13..... 822
 Frame v. Thormann, 102 Wis. 653, 79 N. W. 39, Affirmed in 176 U. S. 350, 44 L. ed. 500, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446..... 889
 Francisco v. Ryan, 54 Ohio St. 307, 56 Am. St. Rep. 711, 43 N. E. 1045..... 457
 Frankel v. Frankel, 173 Mass. 214, 73 Am. St. Rep. 266, 53 N. E. 398..... 326
 Franklin v. Killilea (Wis.) 104 N. W. 993..... 897
 v. Merida, 35 Cal. 558, 95 Am. Dec. 129..... 1182
 Franklin Savings Bank use of Miller v. Bridges, 5 Sadler (Pa.) 238, 20 W. N. C. 43, 8 Atl. 611 907, 908 Frasier v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 38 Pa. 110, 80 Am. Dec. 467..... 294
 Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 187, 30 L. ed. 373, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165 389
 Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 37, 94 Am. St. Rep. 910, 43 S. E. 172..... 1091
 Freiermuth v. Stegleman, 130 Cal. 392, 80 Am. St. Rep. 138, 62 Pac. 615..... 315
 French v. Gifford, 31 Iowa, 428..... 1090
 Freshman v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 126, 38 S. W. 1007..... 496
 497, 503, 511
 Freshman Case. See FRESHMAN V. STATE.
 Frick Co. v. Morgan, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 836, 69 S. W. 1072..... 146
 Frick's Appeal, 114 Pa. 29, 6 Atl. 303 352
 Frink v. Potter, 17 Ill. 406..... 1187
 Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. ed. 317, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93..... 1045
 Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 30 L. ed. 1010, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1129 339
 Frutz v. Gardner, 25 Wash. 396, 65 Pac. 771..... 1040
 Fry v. Booth, 19 Ohio St. 25..... 653
 Fuller, Re, 34 Neb. 581, 52 N. W. 577..... 524
 v. Roosevelt, 4 Cow. 144..... 884
 v. Worth, 91 Wis. 406, 64 N. W. 995..... 571
 Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. 61 Minn. 435, 29 L. R. A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, 63 N. W. 1099... 701

G.

 Gaar, S. & Co. v. Stark (Tenn. Ch.) 36 S. W. 149..... 147
 Gall, Re, 182 N. Y. 270, 74 N. E. 875..... 166
 Gallatin v. Starwater, 143 Mo. 40, 44 S. W. 750..... 938
 Galloway v. Galloway, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 857, 70 S. W. 48..... 822
 Galusha v. Wendt, 114 Iowa, 597, 87 N. W. 512..... 433
 Garbracht v. Com. 96 Pa. 449, 42 Am. Rep. 550..... 503
 495, 496, 507
 Gardner v. Gardner, 87 N. Y. 18..... 1107
 v. Heartt, 3 Denio, 232..... 557
 v. Southern R. Co. 127 N. C. 293, 37 S. E. 328..... 989
 v. Webber, 17 Pick. 407..... 667
 Garland, Ex parte, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366..... 524
 Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh, 368..... 773

- Garrabad, Re. See STATE EX REL. GARRABAD V. DERING.
- Garrett v. Southern R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 645, 41 C. C. A. 237, 101 Fed. 102 540
- Garstide v. East St. Louis, 43 Ill. 47 227
- Garvey v. Long Island R. Co. 159 N. Y. 334, 70 Am. St. Rep. 550, 54 N. E. 57 102
- Gass v. State, 34 Ind. 425 658
- Gayle v. Owen County Court, 83 Ky. 61 488
- Gee v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 8 Q. B. 161 538
- Gebrick v. State, 5 Iowa, 491 485, 488
- Genet v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 113 N. Y. 475, 21 N. E. 390 557
- George v. Butler, 26 Wash. 456, 57 L. R. A. 396, 30 Am. St. Rep. 756, 67 Pac. 263 1040
- Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Keener, 92 Ga. 808, 44 Am. St. Rep. 187, 21 S. E. 287 990
- Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Curran, 8 Kan. 9 v. Pitcher, 160 Ind. 392, 64 N. E. 921, 66 N. E. 1003 1047
- Gerrish v. New Bedford Inst. for Savings, 128 Mass., loc. cit. 159, 35 Am. Rep. 365 426
- Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 108 Cal. 129, 41 Pac. 22 801
- Gilbert v. Jess, 31 Wis. 110 292
- Giles v. Grocer, 1 Clark & F. 72 203
- Gill v. Lydick, 40 Neb. 508, 59 N. W. 104 257
- Gilleland v. Schuyler, 9 Kan. 569 765
- Gilllett v. Chavez (N. M.) 78 Pac. 68 658
- v. McLaughlin, 69 Mich. 547, 37 N. W. 551 1130
- Gilluly v. Madison, 63 Wis. 518, 53 Am. Rep. 299, 24 N. W. 137 439
- Gilman v. McArdle, 90 N. Y., loc. cit. 456, 52 Am. Rep. 41, 2 N. E. 464 955
- Gilmore v. Ham, 40 Am. St. Rep. 570, n. 648
- Gilroy v. Com. 105 Pa. 484 709
- Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 662, 37 L. ed. 602, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721 828
- Girard Bank v. Bank of Penn. Twp. 39 Pa. 92, 80 Am. Dec. 507, 907, 912, 914, 910 520
- Girardin v. Lampe, 38 Wis. 267, 16 N. W. 614 1135
- Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 15 Am. St. Rep. 47, 22 Pac. 551 897
- Gleason v. Virginia Midland R. Co. 140 U. S. 435, 35 L. ed. 458, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859 315
- Glendale Elastic Fabrics Co. v. Smith, 100 U. S. 110, 25 L. ed. 547 537
- Glenfruin, The, L. R. 10 Prob. Div. 103 1085
- Gengaber, The, L. R. 3 Adm. & Eccl. 534 873
- Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826 874
- Goddard v. Smithett, 3 Gray, 116 640
- Godfrey v. Templeton, 86 Tenn. 161, 6 S. W. 47 831
- Goebel v. Hough, 26 Minn. 252, 2 N. W. 847, 92 Minn. 526, 100 N. W. 365 648
- Goldsby v. United States, 160 U. S. 70, 40 L. ed. 343, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216 450
- Goldtree v. McAlister, 86 Cal. 93, 24 Pac. 801, 1000, 1001, 1002, 1003, 1005
- Gooch v. Exeter, 70 N. H. 413, 85 Am. St. Rep. 637, 48 Atl. 1100 517
- Goode v. McCartney, 10 Tex. 193 655
- Goodtitle ex dem. Pollard v. Kibbe, 9 How. 471, 13 L. ed. 220 747
- Gordon, Re, 50 N. J. Eq. 397, 26 Atl. 268 v. Massachusetts F. & M. Ins. Co. 2 Pick. 249 999
- v. Tweedy, 74 Ala. 232, 49 Am. Rep. 813 1105
- Gorham v. Farson, 18 Ill. App. 520 378
- Gorman v. Woodbury, 172 Mass. 180, 53 N. E. 373 149
- Grady v. Hall, 30 Ill. 109 670
- Grain v. Wampanoag Mills, 172 Mass. 222, 51 N. E. 1078 745
- Gould v. Howe, 131 Ill. 490, 23 N. E. 602 670
- ILRA. (N.S.) 569
- Graham v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 45 W. Va. 702, 32 S. E. 245 1085
- v. Woodall, 86 Ala. 313, 5 So. 687 1054
- Grande Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. McKinstry, 67 Mo. App. 82 969
- Grand Rapids v. Braudy, 105 Mich. 670, 32 L. R. A. 116, 55 Am. St. Rep. 472, 64 N. W. 29 460
- v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 58 Mich. 641, 26 N. W. 159 358
- Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Martin, 41 Mich. 867, 3 N. W. 173 1073
- Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679 297
- v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. ed. 356 536
- Grant v. Los Angeles & P. R. Co. 116 Cal. 71, 47 Pac. 872 1087
- v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 324, 39 Pac. 604 1087
- Graves v. Baker, 08 Cal. 133, 8 Pac. 601 315
- v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641, 35 Am. St. Rep. 561, 54 N. W. 757 353
- v. Olean, 64 App. Div. 598, 72 N. Y. Supp. 799 957
- Gray v. Citizens' Gas Co. 206 Pa. 303, 55 Atl. 988 905
- v. State, 43 Ala. 41 850
- v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Ga. 350, 14 L. R. A. 95, 27 Am. St. Rep. 250, 13 S. E. 562 527
- Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 444 980
- Greeley v. Wyeth, 10 N. H. 15 654
- Green, Ex parte, 2 Deacon & C. 113 324
- v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587, 30 S. W. 135 450
- v. State, 154 Ind. 655, 57 N. E. 637 421
- Green's Estate, 4 Md. Ch. 549 257
- Greenberg v. Western Turf Assn. 140 Cal. 357, 73 Pac. 1050 1190
- Greer v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 94 Ky. 169, 42 Am. St. Rep. 345, 21 S. W. 649 378
- Gregory v. Patchett, 33 Beav. 595 623
- Greif v. Seligman (Tex. Civ. App.) 82 S. W. 534 492
- Griesley's Case, 8 Coke, 35 1144
- Griffin v. Lawrence, 135 Mass. 365 601
- v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 124 Ind. 326, 24 N. E. 885 267
- Griffith v. Douglass, 73 Me. 532, 40 Am. Rep. 395 454
- v. Frazier, 8 Cranch, 9, 3 L. ed. 471 889
- v. Ingledew, 6 Serg. & R. 429, 9 Am. Dec. 444 891
- v. Morrison, 58 Tex. 51 493
- v. Pence, 9 Kan. App. 253, 59 Pac. 377 509
- v. Wells, 3 Denio, 226 438
- Griggs v. Clark, 23 Cal. 427 1161
- Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co. L. R. 1 C. P. 600 648
- Grim v. Weissenberg School District, 57 Pa. 433, 98 Am. Dec. 237 680
- Grimes v. Pennsylvania Co. 36 Fed. 72 871
- Grist v. Williams, 111 N. C. 53, 32 Am. St. Rep. 782, 15 S. E. 889 861
- Griswold v. Illinois C. R. Co. 90 Iowa, 265, 24 L. R. A. 647, 57 N. W. 843 625
- v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 53 Conn. 371, 55 Am. Rep. 115, 4 Atl. 261 535
- Grizzard v. Roberts, 110 Ga. 41, 35 S. E. 291 677
- Groesch v. State, 42 Ind. 547 1182
- Gronan v. Kukkuck, 59 Iowa, 18, 12 N. W. 748 486
- Grove v. Brien, 8 How. 438, 12 L. ed. 1146 141
- Grube v. Missouri P. R. Co. 98 Mo. 330, 4 L. R. A. 778, 14 Am. St. Rep. 645, 11 S. W. 736 493
- Gulford v. Chenango County, 13 N. Y. 143 202
- Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Browne, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 437, 66 S. W. 341 517
- Gullat v. Tucker, 2 Cranch, C. C. 33, Fed. Cas. No. 5866 504
- Gunderman v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 370 654
- 861

- Gunderson v. Northwestern Elevator Co. 47 Minn. 161, 49 N. W. 694 1166 1189
- Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 44 L. ed. 725, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633 924
930
465
- Gupton v. Gupton, 3 Head, 490 465
- Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Guthrie, 173 U. S. 528, 43 L. ed. 706, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513 517
- Gutwillig v. Zuberbler, 41 Hun, 361 493
- H.
- Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569, 8 N. W. 511 871
v. Swigert, 5 B. Mon. 80, 41 Am. Dec. 256 1063
- Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 560, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663 439
v. Yolo County, 47 Cal. 232 1004
- Haigh v. Carroll, 209 Ill. 576, 71 N. E. 317 1082, 1083
- Haigh Case. See HAYIGH V. CARROLL.
- Hair v. Barnes, 26 Ill. App. 580 449
- Hale v. Hobson, 167 Mass. 397, 45 N. E. 913 1007 Hall v. Leonard, 1 Pick. 27 320
v. Marston, 17 Mass. 575 961
v. Shultz, 4 Johns. 240, 4 Am. Dec. 270 672
- Hallett, Re, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696 1115
- Hallgren v. Campbell, 82 Mich. 255, 9 L. R. A. 408, 21 Am. St. Rep. 557, 46 N. W. 381 595
- Hallowell Sav. Inst. v. Titcomb, 90 Me. 62, 51 Atl. 249 801
654
- Halls v. Coe, 4 M'Cord, L. 136 801
- Hamet v. Fletcher, 37 Ohio St. 356, 41 Am. Rep. 519 305
- Hamilton v. Du Pre, 103 Ga. 795, 30 S. E. 248 1088
- Hamilton v. Pittock, 158 Pa. 457, 27 Atl. 1079 1183
- Hammersmith & C. R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 171 127
- Hammond v. Straus, 53 Md. 10 1175
v. Winchester, 82 Ala. 470, 2 So. 892 339
- Hanawalt v. State, 64 Wis. 84, 54 Am. Rep. 589, 24 N. W. 489 471
- Handley, Re, 181 Pa. 339, 37 Atl. 587 403
- Hanna v. Kasson, 26 Wash. 568, 67 Pac. 271 1040
- Hanover Junction & S. R. Co. v. Grubb, 82 Pa. 30 910
- Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 180 U. S. 181, 46 L. ed. 1113, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857 389
- Harblson v. Knoxville Iron Co. 103 Tenn. 421, 56 L. R. A. 316, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, 53 S. W. 955, Affirmed in 183 U. S. 43, 46 L. ed. 55, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1 1137
- Harden v. Lang, 110 Ga. 392, 36 S. E. 100 381
- Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 428, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808 749
- Harding v. Harding, 174 Mass. 268, 54 N. E. 549 1007
- Hardwick v. American Can Co. 113 Tenn. 657, 88 S. W. 797 1030
- Hardy v. Tilton, 68 Me. 195, 28 Am. Rep. 34 1062
- Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 99, 62 Am. Dec. 142 871
- Harper v. Harper, 85 Ky. 101, 7 Am. St. Rep. 583, 3 S. W. 5 1011
v. Wrigley, 48 Ga. 495 655
- Harris v. Harris, 23 Gratt. 737 1010
v. Harrison, 93 Cal. 670, 29 Pac. 325 761
v. Runnels, 12 How. 79, 13 L. ed. 901 1045
v. Simpson, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 165, 14 Am. Dec. 101 850
- Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 471, 77 Am. St. Rep. 105, 58 Pac. 910, 59 Pac. 296 315
v. Fraternal Alliance, 108 Wis. 490, 84 N. W. 451 426
v. Washington Park Assn. 157 Ill. 9, 29 L. R. A. 492, 48 Am. St. Rep. 298, 41 N. E. 620 431
- Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 175 U. S. 99, 44 L. ed. 88, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33, 30 L. R. A. 193, 17 C. C. A. 62, 36 U. S. App. 152, 70 Fed. 201 535
Hartman's Estate, 153 Pa. 530, 34 Am. St. Rep. 717, 26 Atl. 104 913
Hartshorne v. Ross, 2 Disney (Ohio) 15 414
Hartwell v. Bissell, 17 Johns. 128 1062
- Harty v. Malloy, 67 Conn. 339, 35 Atl. 259 472
- Harvey v. Harvey, 4 Beav. 215 160
- Hasenfuss v. State, 156 Ind. 246, 59 N. E. 463 422
- Hastings v. Perry, 20 Vt. 272 1086
- Hatch v. Vermont C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49 131
- Hathaway v. Foy, 40 Mo. 540 797
- Hatt v. Nav. 144 Mass. 186, 10 N. E. 807 294
- Haug v. Gillett, 14 Kan. 140 494
- Haupt v. Rogers, 170 Mass. 71, 48 N. E. 1080 831
- Hauser v. Burbank, 117 Mich. 642, 76 N. W. 111 458
- Haven v. Hudson, 12 La. Ann. 600 450
- Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 180, 42 L. ed. 1002, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573 815
- Hawkins v. Berkley, 1 Wash. (Va.) 204 320
v. State, 126 Ind. 296, 26 N. E. 43 357
- Hawks v. Charlemont, 107 Mass. 414 668
- Hayes v. Seaver, 7 Me. 2 469
- Hayne v. Hermann, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171 314
- Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 780, 19 S. E. 344 302
- Hazeltine v. Keenan, 54 W. Va. 600, 102 Am. St. Rep. 953, 46 S. E. 609 194
455
- Head v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 181 425
- Healey v. Mutual Acct. Assn. 133 Ill. 556, 9 L. R. A. 371, 25 Am. St. Rep. 637, 25 N. E. 52 425
- Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L. R. A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964, 74 Pac. 681 975
- Heath v. Hewitt, 127 N. Y. 160, 13 L. R. A. 46, 24 Am. St. Rep. 438, 27 N. E. 959 320 468
- Heatherington v. Lewenberg, 61 Miss. 376 744
- Heddies v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 77 Wis. 228, 20 Am. St. Rep. 100, 40 N. W. 115 299
768
- Heilman v. Heilman, 120 Ind. 59, 28 N. E. 310 856
- Heinlein v. Boston & P. R. Co. 147 Mass. 139, 9 Am. St. Rep. 676, 16 N. E. 698 744
- Hemmer v. Wolfer, 124 Ill. 435, 16 N. E. 652 825
- Henderson v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 116 Mich. 368, 74 N. W. 525 640
v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543 540
v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 144 Pa. 461, 16 L. R. A. 290, 27 Am. St. Rep. 652, 22 Atl. 851 654
v. Wickham. See HENDERSON V. NEW YORK.
v. Wild, 2 Campb. 561 520
- Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson, 173 U. S. 592, 43 L. ed. 823, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553 382
Henderson Warehouse Co. v. Brand, 105 Ga. 217, 31 S. E. 551 764
Hendrick v. Cook, 4 Ga. 241 149
- Henry v. Henry, 4 Dem. 253 390
- Henry Ulfelder Clothing Co., Re, 98 Fed. 409 390
- Herrick v. Wixom, 121 Mich. 384, 80 N. W. 117, 81 N. W. 333 431
Hersey v. Benedict, 15 Hun, 282 393
- Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 8, 310, 48 L. ed. 195, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88 438
- Hilchhorn v. Bradley, 117 Iowa, 130, 90 N. W. 592 449
Hicks v. Stone, 13 Minn. 434, 611. 398 491
Higgins v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 252, 495, 500 500
- Highley v. Deane, 64 Ill. App. 389, Affirmed in 168 Ill. 266, 48 N. E. 50 1090
- Hilleman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 344, 53 Am. Dec. 478 320

Hill v. Com. 2 Gratt. 504	421	Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Watervliet
v. King, 48 Ohio St. 75, 26 N. E. 988	148	Turnp. & R. Co. 135 N. Y. 393, 17 L. R. A. 674, 31 Am. St. Rep. 838, 32 N. E. 148	85
v. Metropolitan Asylum District, L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 433, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 213	82	Huetteman v. Vlesselmann, 48 Mo. App. 582	799
v. Spurgeon, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 348	1087	Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 386, 15 Am. St. Rep. 613, 21 N. E. 864	539
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 85 Ga. 425, 21 Am. St. Rep. 106, 11 S. E. 874		v. Cook, 44 Iowa, 639	435
v. Western Vermont R. Co. 32 Vt. 74	527	Hughes's Election, 3 Lark. Jur. 313	659
III Case. See HILL v. METROPOLITAN ASYLUM DISTRICT	809	Hughes v. Olson, 74 Minn. 287, 73 Am. St. Rep. 343, 77 N. W. 42	838
Hills v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 55 Mich. 437, 21 N. W. 878	292	Hull v. Johnson, 22 R. I. 60, 46 Atl. 182	872
Hinton v. Dibbin, 2 Q. B. 847	979	Humphrey v. County Nat. Bank, 113 Pa. 417, 6 Atl. 155	913
Hirn v. State, 1 Ohio St. 20	460	v. Pegues, 16 Wall. 244, 21 L. ed. 326	1022
Hirschman, Re, 104 Fed. 69	203	Hunt, Re, 141 Mass. 515, 6 N. E. 554	1135
Hitchcock v. Nixon, 16 Wash. 281, 47 Pac. 412	1040	v. Hopley, 120 Iowa, 695, 95 N. W. 205	1135
Hodge v. Linn, 100 Ill. 397	659	Hunt's Appeal, 106 Pa. 128	402
Hodgman, Re, 140 N. Y. 428, 35 N. E. 660	467	Hunter v. State, 55 Ark. 357, 18 S. W. 374	495
Hodgson v. Vermont, 168 U. S. 262, 42 L. ed. 461, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80	1150	v. Wright, 12 Allen, 548	493
Hoes v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 173 N. Y. 435, 66 N. E. 119	891	Hurst v. Martinsburg, 80 Minn. 40, 82 N. W. 1099	436
v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 73 App. Div. 363, 77 N. Y. Supp. 117	890	Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111	172
Hoffman v. Dickinson, 31 W. Va. 142, 6 S. E. 53	295		1156
v. Reichert, 147 Ill. 274, 37 Am. St. Rep. 219, 35 N. E. 527	182	Hutchins v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 44 Minn. 5, 46 N. W. 79	1160
v. Tuolumne County Water Co. 10 Cal. 413	295	Hutchinson v. State, 19 Neb. 266, 27 N. W. 114	471
Hogan v. St. Louis, 176 Mo. 149, 75 S. W. 604	1049	Huthmacher v. Harris, 38 Pa. 491, 80 Am. Dec. 502	480
Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. (4 Dev. L.) 1, 25 Am. Dec. 688	1158	Hyde Park v. Spencer, 118 Ill. 446, 8 N. E. 846	487
Holbrook v. Utica & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 236, 64 Am. Dec. 502	538	Hyland v. Roe, 111 Wis. 361, 87 Am. St. Rep. 873, 87 N. W. 252	1114
Holden v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 268, 37 Am. Rep. 343	604	I.
v. Hardv, 169 U. S. 360, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383	185	Illinois & M. Canal v. Lynch, 10 Ill. 521	1054
Hollowell v. Life Ins. Co. 126 N. C. 398, 35 S. E. 616	625	Illinois C. R. Co. v. Coley, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 336, 89 S. W. 234	377
Holmes v. State, 44 Tex. 631	850	v. Coughlin, 65 C. C. A. 101, 132 Fed. 801	539
Holtz v. Great Northern R. Co. 69 Minn. 524, 72 N. W. 805	701	v. Mahan, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1200, 34 S. W. 16	1018
Home Ins. Co. v. Augusta, 50 Ga. 530	567	v. Winslow, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 329, 84 S. W. 1175	378
v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365	1024	Indianapolis v. St. L. R. Co. v. People, 91 Ill. 452	229
Homer v. Wood, 11 Cush. 62	654	v. Stables, 62 Ill. 313	201
Hood v. Von Glahn, 88 Ga. 405, 14 S. E. 564	385	Ingersoll v. Randall, 14 Minn. 400, Gil. 304	1161
Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 650, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207	1024	Inland & Seaboard Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 552, 35 L. ed. 270, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653	539
Hoople, Re, 179 N. Y. 308, 72 N. E. 229	729	Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Brim, 111 Ind. 281, 12 N. E. 315	426
Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393, 54 Atl. 102	788	Internal Improvement Fund v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. ed. 1157	1085
Hope v. Hayley, 5 El. & Bl. 830	455		1086, 1087
Hopkins v. Partridge, 71 Tex. 608, 10 S. W. 214	493	Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brim-son, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125	172
Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 262, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202	1155	Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 487, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344	172
Horne v. Smith, 159 U. S. 40, 40 L. ed. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988	749	Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Soper, 39 Iowa, 112	435
Horton v. Murden, 117 Ga. 72, 43 S. E. 786	609	Iowa Sav. & L. Asso. v. Heldt, 107 Iowa, 297, 43 L. R. A. 689, 70 Am. St. Rep. 197, 77 N. W. 1050	435
Hosmer v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 506, 31 N. E. 652	677	Ireland v. Elliott, 5 Iowa, 478, 68 Am. Dec. 715	141
Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612	298	Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Bingham, 87 Tenn. 522, 4 L. R. A. 622, 11 S. W. 705	110
Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cowser, 57 Tex. 293	200	Iron R. Co. v. Mowery, 36 Ohio St. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 597	538
Hovey v. McDonald, 109 U. S. 150, 27 L. ed. 888, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136	556	Irrawaddy, The, 171 U. S. 187, 43 L. ed. 130, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831	877
Howard v. Stillwell & B. Mfg. Co. 139 U. S. 199, 35 L. ed. 147, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501	448	Irvin v. Edwards, 92 Tex. 285, 47 S. W. 719	492
Howe v. Hutchinson, 105 Ill. 501	1086	Irving v. Patchen, 164 Pa. 51, 30 Atl. 436	402
Howell v. Stewart, 54 Mo. 400	1046	Irwin v. Scriber, 18 Cal. 500	1001
Howe Mach. Co. v. Bryson, 44 Iowa, 159, 24 Am. Rep. 735	449	Ives v. McNicoll, 59 Ohio St. 402, 43 L. R. A. 772, 69 Am. St. Rep. 780, 53 N. E. 60	775
Hrebrik v. Carr, 29 Fed. 298	858
Hudgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. 122 Ga. 695, 50 S. E. 974	1180
Hudnall v. Ham, 172 Ill. 76, 49 N. E. 985	230
Hudson v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. 104 N. C. 491, 10 S. E. 609	302
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

J.		K.
Jacksonville v. Ledwith, 26 Fla. 163, 9 L. R. A. 60, 23 Am. St. Rep. 558, 7 So. 885	943	Kalloch v. Superior Court, 56 Cal. 229	1157
Jacksonville, St. A. & H. River E. Co. v. Mitchell, 32 Fla. 77, 21 L. R. A. 487, 13 So. 673	357	Kane v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 186, 11 L. R. A. 640, 26 N. E. 278	84
Jacksonville S. E. R. Co. v. Southworth, 135 Ill. 250, 25 N. E. 1093	670	Kansas City v. Marsh Oil Co. 140 Mo. 458, 41 S. W. 943	921
Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 L. ed. 643, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358	750	Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Cunningham, 7 Kan. App. 47, 51 Pac. 972	197
Jacqueline v. State, 48 Miss. 280	850	Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. v. Canirell, 70 Miss. 329, 12 So. 344	474
James v. Com. 102 Ky. 108, 42 S. W. 1107	495	Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. McGinty (Ark.) 88 S. W. 1001	1147
v. Markham, 125 N. C. 145, 34 S. E. 241	557	Kansas P. R. Co. v. Little, 19 Kan. 267	690
v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 78 S. W. 951	496	v. Salmon, 14 Kan. 512	690
Janet v. Reynolds, 2 Tex. 250	1157	Kearney v. London B. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 759	558
Jacques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238	909	Kearney Canal & Water Supply Co. v. Akeley, 45 Neb. 635, 63 N. W. 921	602
Jarvis v. Satterwhite, 2 Ky. L. Rep. 436	362	Keating v. Hannenkamp, 100 Mo. 161, 13 S. W. 89	457
Jasper Trust Co. v. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. 99 Ala. 416, 42 Am. St. Rep. 75, 14 So. 546	245	Keeling v. Brown, 5 Ves. Jr. 359	469
Jefferson City Gaslight Co. v. Clark. See NEW ORLEANS v. CLARK.		Keely v. O'Conner, 106 Pa. 321	1094
Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story, 290, Fed. Cas. No. 7,267	1031	Kellar v. Craig, 61 C. C. A. 366, 126 Fed. 630	310
v. Hooper Irrig. Co. 13 Utah, 100, 44 Pac. 829	602	Keller v. Toume (Miss.) 7 So. 508	659
Jennings v. Rooney, 183 Mass. 577, 67 N. E. 665	660	Kellogg v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 223, 7 Am. Rep. 69	536
Jensen v. Waltham, 166 Mass. 344, 44 N. E. 339	668	v. Mallin, 50 Mo. 496, 11 Am. Rep. 426	810
Jenson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 589, 22 L. R. A. 680, 57 N. W. 350	311	Kelly v. Malott, 67 C. C. A. 548, 135 Fed. 74	681
Jerome v. Ross, 7 Johns. Ch. 315, 11 Am. Dec. 484	339	v. Minneapolis, 57 Minn. 294, 26 L. R. A. 92, 47 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. W. 304	438
v. Whitney, 7 Johns. 322	1120	v. Phelps, 57 Wis. 425, 15 N. W. 385	579
Jersey City Gas Co. v. Dwight, 29 N. J. Eq. 242	206	v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78, 26 L. ed. 658	517
Jessup, Re, 81 Cal. 408, 6 L. R. A. 594, 22 Pac. 742, 21 Pac. 976	776	Kelsea v. Ramsey & G. Mfg. Co. 55 N. J. L. 320, 22 L. R. A. 415, 26 Atl. 907	493
Joch v. Dankwardt, 85 Ill. 331	201	Kemp v. Porter, 7 Ala. 138	1062
John's Case, 1 East P. C. 357	421	Kendall v. Western U. Tele. Co. 56 Mo. App. 192	527
Johnson v. Johnson, 66 Mich. 525, 33 N. W. 413	890	Kennebec Water District v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185, 60 L. R. A. 536, 54 Atl. 6	967
v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 8 C. P. Div. 499	493	Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed. 110, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696	290
v. Rankin, 70 N. C. 555	976	Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159	623
v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 222, 8 L. R. A. 419, 45 N. W. 156	701	Kerr v. Hill, 27 W. Va. 576	1090
v. State, 3 Tex. App. 590	1026	Kerrigan, Re, 33 N. J. L. 344	1144
v. Stoddart, 100 Mass. 306	493	Keyser v. Rice, 47 Md. 203, 28 Am. Rep. 448	197
v. Thrower, 117 Ga. 1007, 44 S. E. 846	1154	Kidd v. Bates, 120 Ala. 79, 41 L. R. A. 151, 74 Am. St. Rep. 17, 23 So. 735	353
v. Turnell, 113 Wis. 468, 89 N. W. 515	590	v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617, 25 L. ed. 769	712
v. Wilkinson, 139 Mass. 3, 52 Am. Rep. 698, 29 N. E. 62	1188	v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6	817
v. Wells, F. & Co. 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245	291	Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 182, 26 L. ed. 384	1144
Johnson Harvester Co. v. McLean, 57 Wis. 258, 46 Am. Rep. 39, 15 N. W. 177	896	Killan, Re, 172 N. Y. 557, 63 L. R. A. 95, 65 N. E. 561	891
Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 19, 30 L. ed. 75, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 923	955	Kincaid v. Eaton, 98 Mass. 139, 93 Am. Dec. 142	481
v. Price, 172 Pa. 427, 33 Atl. 688	905	Kindel v. Beck & P. Lithographing Co. 19 Colo. 310, 24 L. R. A. 311, 35 Pac. 538	1045
Jones v. Conn. 39 Or. 30, 54 L. R. A. 630, 87 Am. St. Rep. 634, 64 Pac. 855, 65 Pac. 1068	368	King v. Brown, 4 T. R. 276	828
v. German Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 75, 46 L. R. A. 860, 81 N. W. 188	1063	v. Chase, 15 N. H. 9, 41 Am. Dec. 675	590
v. Gorham, 2 Mass. 375	799	v. Darlington, 4 T. R. 800	590
v. Lock, L. R. 1 Ch. 25	450	v. Gascoigne, 1 Leach. C. L. 280	1027
v. Richardson, 10 Met. 481	455	v. Miles City Irrig. Ditch Co. 16 Mont. 463, 50 Am. St. Rep. 506, 41 Pac. 431	602
v. Robbins, 8 Grav. 329	1158	v. National Min. & Exploring Co. 4 Mont. 1, 1 Pac. 727	1045
v. Tevis, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 25, 14 Am. Dec. 98	364	v. Nicholson, 2 Leach. C. L. 610	866
v. Van Bochove, 103 Mich. 98, 61 N. W. 342	809	v. Trevenen, 2 Barn. & Ald. 479	830
v. Yates, 9 Barn. & C. 532	654	v. Woodcock, 1 Leach. C. L. 503	421
Joplin Consol. Min. Co. v. Joplin, 124 Mo. 129, 27 S. W. 406	439	King ex rel. Braddock v. Watson, 3 Exch. 6	257
Joseph v. Cannon, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 295, 32 S. W. 241	505
Joseph B. Thomas, The, 81 Fed. 578	539
Joslyn v. Parlin, 54 Vt. 670	1086
Joslyn v. Wyman, 5 Allen, 62	408
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Kirby v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 120 U. S. 130, 30 L. R. A. 569, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 430	437	Langnecker v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. 111 Wis. 279, 55 L. R. A. 183, 87 Am. St. Rep. 860, 87 N. W. 293	1068
v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 80 S. W. 1007	328	Larimer County Ditch Co. v. Zimmerman, 4 Colo. App. 78, 34 Pac. 1111	602
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 7 S. D. 623, 30 L. R. A. 621, 65 N. W. 37	512	Larmour v. Rich, 178 Ill. 18, 41 702	788
Kirkpatrick v. McDonald, 11 Pa. 387	527	Lasher v. People, 183 Ill. 226, 47 L. R. A. 802, 75 Am. St. Rep. 103, 55 N. E. 663	228
Kistler v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. 88 Ind. 460	905	Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249, 41 N. W. 974	701
Kittredge v. Race, 92 U. S. 116, 23 L. ed. 488	1054	Lavallee Case. See Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co.
Klees v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. 68 Ill. App. 244	1086	Law, Re, 80 App. Div. 73, 80 N. Y. Supp. 410	1000
Klein v. Tuhey, 13 Ind. App. 74, 40 N. E. 144	687	Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268	961
Kline v. Minnesota Iron Co. 93 Minn. 63, 100 N. W. 681	438	v. Minton, 17 How. 107, 15 L. ed. 61	493
Knight, Re, L. E. 26 Ch. Div. 82	703	v. Schuyll Nav. Co. 4 Wash. C. 562 Fed. Cas. No. 8,143	872
v. Lanier, 69 App. Div. 454, 74 N. Y. Supp. 999	1087	v. State, 1 Humph. 228, 34 Am. Dec. 644	481
v. Thomas, 93 Me. 494, 45 Atl. 499	241	Leath v. Uttley, 66 Tex. 82, 17 S. W. 401	509
Knotts v. Bailey, 54 Miss. 238, 28 Am. Rep. 348	967	Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. 11 H. L. Cas. 523	712
Knox v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 58 Hun. 517, 12 N. Y. Supp. 848, Affirmed in 128 N. Y. 625, 28 N. E. 485	468	Leaver v. Gauss, 62 Iowa, 314, 17 N. W. 522	318
Knox County v. Harshman, 132 U. S. 14, 33 L. ed. 249, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8	166	Ledbetter v. Hall, 62 Mo. 422	659
Knoxville v. Kising, 111 Tenn. 134, 76 S. W. 814	556	Lee v. State, 49 Ala. 64	660
Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122, 41 L. R. A. 446, 47 N. E. 321	109	v. Uinta County, 3 Wyo. 52, 31 Pac. 1041	594
Koeb v. Knoxville, 111 Tenn. 311, 76 S. W. 823	345	Leeper v. Taylor, 111 Mo. loc cit. 324, 19 S. W. 953	800
Kreuzer v. Great Northern R. Co. 83 Minn. 385, 86 N. W. 413	109	v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 35 L. ed. 225, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577	172
Krulder v. Ellison, 47 N. Y. 36, 7 Am. Rep. 402	702	Leftwich v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 53 S. W. 571	503
Krumm v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 71 Ark. 590, 76 S. W. 1075	493	Leier v. Minnesota Belt-Line R. & Transfer Co. 63 Minn. 203, 65 N. W. 269	702
	1147	Lelsy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 30, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681	643
			817
		Lemery v. Great Northern R. Co. 83 Minn. 47, 85 N. W. 908	861
		Leonard v. Beaudry, 68 Mich. 312, 36 N. W. 88	450
		v. Ozark Land Co. 115 U. S. 465, 29 L. ed. 445, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127	556
		Lester v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 84 Tex. 313, 19 S. W. 256	527
		Letterstedt v. Broers, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 371	805
		Levy v. Superior Court, 105 Cal. 600, 29 L. R. A. 811, 38 Pac. 965	846
		Lewis v. Sloan, 68 N. C. 557	390
		v. United States, 92 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 613	883
		Lexington v. Thompson, 113 Ky. 540, 57 L. R. A. 775, 101 Am. St. Rep. 361, 68 S. W. 477	518
		License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256	64
		Lightcap v. Bradley, 186 Ill. 510, 58 N. E. 221	1082
		Lincoln v. Power, 151 U. S. 436, 38 L. ed. 224, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 387	378
		v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328	1155
		Lindgren v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 86 Minn. 152, 90 N. W. 381	703
		Lindsay v. United States Sav. & L. Asso. 120 Ala. 156, 42 L. R. A. 783, 24 So. 171	498
		Lindsey v. Eckels, 99 Va. 668, 40 S. E. 23	820
		Lindstrom v. Board of Canvassers, 94 Mich. 467, 19 L. R. A. 171, 54 N. W. 280	660
		Lindvall v. Woods, 41 Minn. 212, 4 L. R. A. 793, 42 N. W. 1020	704
		Lipscomb v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 95 Tex. 5, 55 L. R. A. 869, 93 Am. St. Rep. 804, 64 S. W. 923	201
		Lisonbee v. Monroe Irrig. Co. 18 Utah, 343, 72 Am. St. Rep. 784, 54 Pac. 1009	602
		Litchfield v. Flint, 104 N. Y. 543, 11 N. E. 58	166
		Little v. Giles, 118 U. S. 596, 30 L. ed. 269, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32	374
		Littlejohn v. Stells, 123 Ga. 427, 51 S. E. 390	383

- Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Cavenesse, 48 Ark. 106, 2 S. W. 505 ... 1147
 v. Pankhurst, 36 Ark. 371 ... 1147
 Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. Harrell, 58
 Ark. 454, 25 S. W. 117 ... 538
 Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v.
 Kimbro (Ark.) 87 S. W. 121 ... 1147
 Livermore v. Maxwell, 87 Iowa, 705, 55
 N. W. 37 ... 897
 v. White, 74 Me. 452, 43 Am. Rep.
 600 ... 480
 Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix
 Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L.
 ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469 ... 989
 Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep.
 716 ... 488
 Logan Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Great Southern Gas & Oil Co. 61 C.
 C. A. 359, 126 Fed. 623 ... 339
 Lombard v. Germer, 37 Tex. 578 ... 809
 Lombard v. Morse, 155 Mass. 136, 14 L.
 R. A. 273, 29 N. E. 205 ... 320
 London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman,
 L. R. 11 App. Cas. 50 ... 82
 Long v. Emsley, 57 Ia. 11, 10 N. W. 280 ... 1134
 v. Granberry, 2 Tenn. Ch. 85 ... 1031
 v. Perline, 41 W. Va. 314, 23 S. E.
 611 ... 1085
 v. State, 12 Ga. 293 ... 1027-
 v. Straus, 107 Ind. 94, 57 Am. Rep.
 87, 6 N. E. 123 ... 1029
 Long Island R. Co. v. Garvey, 159 N. Y.
 334, 54 N. E. 60 ... 87
 Longtin v. Persell, 30 Mont. 306, 65 L.
 R. A. 655, 104 Am. St. Rep.
 723, 76 Pac. 699 ... 106
 Loomis v. Deets (Md.) 30 Atl. 613 ... 208
 v. Little Falls, 176 N. Y. 31, 68
 N. E. 105 ... 730
 Lord Advocate v. Dunglas, 9 Clark & F.
 173 ... 1087
 Los Angeles County v. Spencer, 126 Cal.
 673, 77 Am. St. Rep. 217, 59
 Pac. 203 ... 186
 Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am.
 Rep. 623 ... 539
 Loud v. Campbell, 26 Mich. 239 ... 450
 Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 27
 L. ed. 448, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep.
 128 ... 730
 v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 26
 L. ed. 132 ... 1176
 Louisville v. Com. 1 Duv. 295, 85 Am.
 Dec. 624 ... 768
 v. Norris, 111 Ky. 903, 98 Am. St.
 Rep. 437, 64 S. W. 958 ... 956
 Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Adams, 106 Ky.
 850, 51 S. W. 577 ... 1018
 v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494 ... 296
 v. Coniff, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 298, 27
 S. W. 865 ... 1018
 v. Earl, 94 Ky. 368, 22 S. W. 607 ... 1018
 v. Fort, 112 Tenn. 432, 80 S. W.
 420 ... 532
 v. Gilliam, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1536,
 71 S. W. 863 ... 1017
 v. Gordon, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1819,
 72 S. W. 311 ... 378
 v. Hiltner, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1826,
 56 S. W. 654 ... 1018
 v. Howard, 82 Ky. 212 ... 1018
 v. Lowe, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2317,
 65 L. R. A. 122, 80 S. W.
 770 ... 1018
 v. McCoy, 81 Ky. 415 ... 1018
 v. Orr, 91 Ala. 548, 8 So. 300 ... 1151
 v. Scanlon, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1400,
 60 S. W. 643 ... 1018
 v. Wangellin, 132 U. S. 601, 33 L.
 ed. 475, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203 ... 374
 v. Wynn, 88 Tenn. 320, 14 S. W.
 311 ... 990
 Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 743, 61 L. R. A.
 188, 72 S. W. 957 ... 105
 v. Lellyett (Tenn.) 85 S. W.
 889 ... 109
 Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Meyer,
 30 L. ed. 689 ... 1051
 Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 38 L. R. A. 93,
 58 Am. St. Rep. 348, 44 N.
 E. 796 ... 677
 v. Lucas, 119 Ind. 583, 6 L. R. A.
 193, 21 N. E. 908 ... 850
 Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Treadway,
 142 Ind. 475, 143 Ind. 689, 40
 N. E. 807, 41 N. E. 794 ... 857
 Loverin v. Humboldt Safe Deposit & T.
 Co. 113 Pa. 6, 4 Atl. 191 ... 408
 Lovick v. Providence Life Assn. 110 N.
 C. 93, 14 S. E. 506 ... 625
 Lowe v. Carter, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 383 ... 161
 v. Webster, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1208,
 43 S. W. 217 ... 822
 Lowenstein v. Monroe, 55 Iowa, 82, 7
 N. W. 406 ... 443
 Lowry v. Polk County, 51 Ia. 50, 33 Am.
 Rep. 114, 49 N. W. 1049 ... 1154
 Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall. 436, 21 L. ed.
 779 ... 1183
 Lutz v. Thompson, 87 N. C. 334 ... 161
 Lynch v. Chase, 55 Kan. 367, 40 Pac. 666
 v. Murphy, 119 Mo. 163, 24 S. W.
 774 ... 816
 Lynip v. Buckner, 22 Nev. 426, 30 L. R.
 A. 354, 41 Pac. 762 ... 939
 Lyon v. Cambridge, 136 Mass. 419 ... 659
 v. Mells, 5 East, 428 ... 668
 v. Washburn, 3 Colo. 201 ... 1182
- M.
- McAdoo v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 105 N.
 C. 140, 11 S. E. 316 ... 681
 McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439 ... 269
 McAlexander v. Puryear, 48 Miss. 420 ... 474
 McAllister v. United States, 141 U. S.
 174, 35 L. ed. 693, 11 Sup.
 Ct. Rep. 949 ... 747
 McAvoy v. Medina, 11 Allen, 548, 87 Am.
 Dec. 733 ... 481
 McBride v. Whitaker, 65 Neb. 137, 90 N.
 W. 966 ... 765
 McCaffrey v. Woodin, 65 N. Y. 459, 22
 Am. Rep. 644 ... 457
 McCall v. Porter, 42 Or. 49, 70 Pac. 820,
 71 Pac. 976 ... 739
 McCarthy v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 148
 Mass. 550, 2 L. R. A. 608, 20
 N. E. 182 ... 1168
 v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Bliss. 362,
 Fed. Cas. No. 8,682 ... 425
 McCarty v. Boise City Canal Co. 2 Idaho.
 245, 10 Pac. 623 ... 602
 v. Selingsgrove & N. B. R. Co.
 87 Pa. 332 ... 912
 McClellan v. State, 66 Wis. 335, 28 N.
 W. 347 ... 472
 McComb v. Doe, 8 Smedes & M. 510 ... 505
 McCooley v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.
 182 Mass. 205, 65 N. E. 62 ... 880
 McCord v. McCord, 77 Mo. 166, 46 Am.
 Rep. 9 ... 798
 McCormick v. Russell, 86 Iowa, 566, 53
 N. W. 310 ... 146
 McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v.
 Brower, 88 Iowa. 613, 55 N.
 W. 537 ... 146
 v. Brower, 94 Iowa, 144, 62 N.
 W. 700 ... 146
 v. Machmuller, 1 Herdman (Neb.)
 80, 95 N. W. 507 ... 146
 v. Russell, 86 Iowa, 556, 53 N.
 W. 310 ... 147
 McCoy v. Able, 131 Ind. 417, 30 N. E.
 528, 31 N. E. 453 ... 1054
 McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, 11
 L. ed. 397 ... 1176
 McCray v. Junction R. Co. 9 Ind. 358 ... 620
 McCrear v. Marsh, 12 Gray, 211, 71 Am.
 Dec. 745 ... 1188
 McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 423,
 4 L. ed. 605 ... 1094
 McCully v. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. 32 Pa.
 25 ... 918
 McCully Case. See McCULLY v. PITTS-BURG & C. R. Co.
 M'Daniel's Case, 1 Fost. C. L. p. 129 ... 1027
 McDermon v. Southern P. Co. 122 Fed.
 669 ... 677
 McDonald v. Alcona County, 91 Mich.
 459, 51 N. W. 1114 ... 832
 v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26
 Iowa, 124, 96 Am. Dec. 114 ... 857
 McDonogh v. Calloway, 7 Rob. (La.) 442 ... 1150
 Mace v. Mace, 40 Or. 586, 67 Pac. 660, 68 Pac. 737 ... 766
- 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

McElroy v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 98 Ga. 257, 25 S. E. 439	312	Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 170, 2 L. ed. 71	934
McEntee v. Kingston Water Co. 165 N. Y. 27, 58 N. E. 785	987	Marion County v. Clark, 94 U. S. 278, 24 L. ed. 59	1109
McFadden v. Jenkins, 1 Hare, 458	801	Mark v. Superior Court, 129 Cal. 1, 61 Pac. 436	557
McGarr v. National & P. Worsted Mills, 24 R. I. 447, 60 L. R. A. 122, 96 Am. St. Rep. 749, 53 Atl. 320	1108	Marks v. Ryan, 63 Cal. 107	1198
McGee v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 68 S. W. 564	1028	Marmet v. State, 45 Ohio St. 63, 12 N. E. 405	586
McGough v. Jamison, 107 Pa. 336	1135	Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 390, 5 N. E. 56	948
McGregor v. McGregor, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 95	351	Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339, 20 Am. Rep. 394	539
McGuire v. Barker, 61 Ga. 339	1064	Marshfield v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 102 Wis. 604, 44 L. R. A. 565, 78 N. W. 735	587
McInerney v. Denver, 17 Colo. 302, 29 Pac. 516	846	Martin v. Central Vermont R. Co. 50 Hun. 347, 3 N. Y. Supp. 82	197
Mackalley's Case, 9 Coke, 67	422	v. Minnekahta State Bank, 7 S. D. 265, 64 N. W. 127	450
McKay v. Russell, 3 Wash. 378, 28 Am. St. Rep. 44, 28 Pac. 908	1077	Martinsburg & P. R. Co. v. March, 114 U. S. 549, 29 L. ed. 255, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1035	1054
McKee, Re. 19 Utah, 231, 57 Pac. 23	1158	Martyn v. Hind, 2 Cowp. 443, 1 Dougl. 142	962
McKee v. Stroup, Rice, L. 291	654	Mary, The, 1 Wheat. 25, 4 L. ed. 27	493
McKeever v. Jenks, 59 Iowa, 300, 13 N. W. 295	439	Mashburn v. Dannenberg Co. 117 Ga. 567, 44 S. E. 97	392
McKelvy's Appeal, 72 Pa. 409	908	Mason, Re. 43 Fed. 510	1144
McKenzie v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 112 Cal. 548, 44 Pac. 922	1107	v. West, 61 App. Div. 40, 70 N. Y. Supp. 478	241
McKinney v. Grand Street, P. P. & F. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 352, 10 N. E. 544	1074	Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Welch, 47 Minn. 183, 49 N. W. 740	140
McLaughlin v. White, 5 Wend. 405, 21 Am. Dec. 232	480	Massey v. Seller, 45 Or. 267, 77 Pac. 397	862
McLean v. Clark, 47 Ga. 24	392	Massillon Engine & Thresher Co. v. Shir- mer, 122 Iowa, 699, 98 N. W. 504	146
McLoud v. Wakefield, 70 Vt. 580, 43 Atl. 179	457	Mastad v. Swedish Brethern, 83 Minn. 40, 53 L. R. A. 803, 85 Am. St. Rep. 446, 85 N. W. 913	431
Macmahon Pharmacal Co. v. Denver Chemical Mfg. Co. 51 C. C. A. 302 113 Fed. 468	712	Matlock v. Smith, 98 Tex. 211, 71 S. W. 956	1141
McMahon v. Palmer, 102 N. Y. 176, 55 Am. Rep. 796, 6 N. E. 400	439	Matthews v. Albert, 24 Md. 535	1175
McManus v. Carmichael, 3 Iowa, 1	764	Maugham v. Sharpe, 17 C. B. N. S. 402	159
McMaster v. Illinois C. R. Co. 65 Miss. 264, 7 Am. St. Rep. 653, 4 So. 59	695	Maughlin v. Tyler, 47 Md. 545	758
McMillan v. Lovejoy, 115 Ill. 498, 4 N. E. 772	744	Maurin v. Carnes, 71 Minn. 308, 74 N. W. 139	838
McMillen v. County Judge & Treasurer, 6 Iowa, 391	435	May v. People, 1 Colo. App. 157, 27 Pac. 1010	943
McNair v. Platt, 46 Ill. 211	654	Mayflower, The v. The Sabine. See SA- BINE, THE.
Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 217, 22 Am. Rep. 522	241	Maynard v. Richards, 106 Ill. 466, 57 Am. St. Rep. 151, 46 N. E. 1138	648
McPherson v. Cunliff, 11 Serg. & R. 429, 14 Am. Dec. 842	1094	Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451, 26 Pac. 646	884
McPike v. Allman, 53 Mo. 551	809	Meade v. Deale, Taney, 339, Fed. Cas. No. 9,371	328
McQueen v. State Bank, 2 Ind. 413	183	Mee v. McNider, 39 Hun. 345	493
McVicker v. Ross, 55 Barb. 247	623	Meehan v. Bachelder, 73 N. H. 113, 59 Atl. 620	530
Madera Irrig. Dist. Bonds, Re. 92 Cal. 206, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106, 28 Pac. 272	439	Mella v. Simmons, 45 Wis. 334, 30 Am. Rep. 746	891
Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 331, 83 S. W. 658	109	Mellersh v. Keen, 27 Beav. 236	618
Magnus v. Ketcham, 50 C. C. A. 517, 112 Fed. 752	391	Mellon's Appeal, 32 Pa. 121	408
Mazoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594	155	Memphis v. American Exp. Co. 102 Tenn. 336, 52 S. W. 172	588
Mazruder v. Carroll, 4 Md. 351	469	Memphis Consol. Gas & Electric Co. v. Letson, 68 C. C. A. 453, 135 Fed. 969	540
v. Gage, 33 Md. 344, 3 Am. Rep. 177	493	Memphis Land & Timber Co. v. St. Francis Levee District, 70 Ark. 490, 68 S. W. 242	744
Malaska County State Bank v. Christ, 82 Iowa, 56, 47 N. W. 886, 87 Iowa, 415, 54 N. W. 450	148	Menage v. Burke, 43 Minn. 211, 19 Am. St. Rep. 235, 45 N. W. 155	160
Malze v. State, 4 Ind. 342	485	Mendall v. Dunbar, 169 Mass. 74, 61 Am. St. Rep. 277, 47 N. E. 402	397
Malay v. Mt. Morris Electric Light Co. 41 App. Div. 574, 58 N. Y. Supp. 659	292	Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130	557
Malone v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 61 Iowa, 326, 47 Am. Rep. 813, 16 N. W. 203, 65 Iowa, 417, 54 Am. Rep. 11, 21 N. W. 756	702	Merchant's Case. See BOARD OF EXCISE V. MERCHANT.
Minbattan L. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 61 C. C. A. 138, 126 Fed. 82	340	Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1008	1135
Manier v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 94 Tenn. 446, 29 S. W. 732	527	Mereness v. First Nat. Bank, 112 Iowa, 11, 51 L. R. A. 410, 84 Am. St. Rep. 318, 83 N. W. 711	1134
Mankin v. Chandler, 2 Brock. 125, Fed. Cas. No. 9,030	389	Merrick v. Intramontaine R. Co. 118 N. C. 1081, 24 S. E. 667	954
Mann v. Glauber, 96 Ga. 795, 22 S. E. 405 v. O'Sullivan, 126 Cal. 61, 77 Am. St. Rep. 149, 58 Pac. 375	493	Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 60	1198
v. Tacoma Land Co. 153 U. S. 273, 38 L. ed. 714, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820	694	Messer v. The Fadettes, 168 Mass. 140, 37 L. R. A. 721, 60 Am. St. Rep. 371, 46 N. E. 407	712
Manuel v. Manuel, 13 Ohio St. 459	751	Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 98 Mo. App. 248, 71 S. W. 696	339
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)	1000

Meyer v. Elslar, 29 Md. 28	787	Moran v. Eastern R. Co. 48 Minn. 46, 50 N. W. 930	703
v. Fidelity & C. Co. 96 Iowa 385, 59 Am. St. Rep. 374, 65 N. W. 328	148	v. Portland Steam Packet Co. 35 Me. 55	357
Michigan Teleph. Co. v. Benton Harbor, 121 Mich. 512, 47 L. R. A. 104, 80 N. W. 386	587	More v. Ellis, Bumb. 205	325
Mikkelsen v. Truesdale, 63 Minn. 137, 65 N. W. 260	702	Moreland v. Milen, 126 Mich. 381, 85 N. W. 882	518
Miller v. Bayer, 94 Wis. 123, 68 N. W. 889	956	Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114	939
v. Com. 111 Pa. 321, 2 Atl. 492 ..	403	Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, 18 So. 11	251
v. Erie R. Co. 21 App. Div. 45, 47 N. Y. Supp. 285	948	v. Mellin, 6 Barn. & C. 454	414
v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 10 L. R. A. 116, 23 Am. St. Rep. 850, 28 N. E. 100	750	Morrison v. Lawrence, 186 Mass. 456, 72 N. E. 91	666
v. Miller, 17 Or. 423, 21 Pac. 938 ..	571	v. Mullin, 34 Pa. 12	912
v. Post, 1 Allen, 434	1161	Morrow v. St. Paul City R. Co. 65 Minn. 382, 67 N. W. 1002	700
v. Western Nat. Bank, 172 Pa. 197, 33 Atl. 684	1135	v. State, 5 Kan. 563	851
Millington, Re, 24 Kan. 214	172	Morse v. Carpenter, 19 Vt. 614	160
Milne's Appeal, 99 Pa. 483	907	Morse v. Pineo, 4 Vt. 281	1158
Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264 ..	801	Morse Case. See HOME INS. CO. v. MORSE.
Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. ed. 374	681	Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 50 Pac. 644	592
Miners' & M. Bank v. Snyder (Md.) 68 L. R. A. 312, 50 Atl. 707	1175	Moss v. Pacific R. Co. 49 Mo. 167, 8 Am. Rep. 126	292
Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 29, 32 L. ed. 586, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208	228	Moulton v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 31 Minn. 89, 47 Am. Rep. 781, 16 N. W. 497	990
Minor v. Gaw, 11 Smedes & M. 322 ..	654	Moultrie v. Hunt, 23 N. Y. 394	1000
Minot v. West Roxbury, 112 Mass. 1, 17 Am. Rep. 52	668	Mt. Calvary Church v. Albers, 174 Mo. 331, 73 S. W. 508	800
Mirehouse v. Scalfie, 2 Myl. & C. 695 ..	409	Moyer v. Kootz, 103 Wis. 22, 74 Am. St. Rep. 837, 79 N. W. 50	890
Mississippi C. R. Co. v. Mason, 51 Miss. 234	474	Mueller v. Bethesda Mineral Spring Co. 88 Mich. 390, 60 N. W. 319	450
Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 31, 25 L. ed. 989	635	Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273	633
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hanning, 91 Tex. 347, 43 S. W. 508	201	638, 639, 641, 817,	934
v. Kansas P. R. Co. 97 U. S. 491, 24 L. ed. 1095	748	Mugler Case. See MUGLER v. KANSAS.
v. Thomas, 87 Tex. 282, 28 S. W. 343	312	Mumper v. Willson, 72 Iowa, 163, 2 Am. St. Rep. 238, 33 N. W. 449	197
v. Turley, 29 C. C. A. 196, 56 U. S. App. 1, 85 Fed. 369	862	Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77	979
Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 69 Tex. 79, 6 S. W. 549	535	Munroe v. Douglas, 5 Madd. 405	781
v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161	701	Munson v. Atchafalaya, Basin Levee District, 43 La. Ann. 15, 8 So. 906	439
v. Maltby, 34 Kan. 125, 8 Pac. 235 ..	107	Murphy v. Bush, 122 Ga. 715, 50 S. E. 1004	653
v. Nelswanger, 41 Kan. 621, 13 Am. St. Rep. 304, 21 Pac. 582	857	Murphy v. Indianapolis, 158 Ind. 238, 63 N. E. 469	958
v. Perego, 36 Kan. 424, 14 Pac. 7 ..	691	v. Pacific Bank, 130 Cal. 542, 62 Pac. 1059	1135
v. Texas & P. R. Co. 41 Fed. 917 ..	540	v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 15, 29 L. ed. 47, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747	747
Mitchell v. Carolina C. R. Co. 124 N. C. 236, 44 L. R. A. 515, 32 S. E. 671	988	v. Wilmington, 6 Houst. (Del.) 108, 22 Am. St. Rep. 345	198
v. Coombs, 96 Pa. 430	408	v. Blackledge, 71 N. C. 492 ..	160
v. Lippincott, 2 Woods, 467, Fed. Cas. No. 9,665	331	v. Ridley, 3 Harr. & M'H. 171 ..	256
v. Winslow, 2 Story, 630, Fed. Cas. No. 9,673	454	Mussel Slough Case, 6 Sawy. 612, 5 Fed. 680	863
Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238	520	Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Winne, 20 Mont. 42, 40 Pac. 1118	1045
Modern Woodman Acad. Assn. v. Shryock, 54 Neb. 250, 39 L. R. A. 826, 74 N. W. 607	1072	Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877	1078
Moers v. Reading, 21 Pa. 188	415	v. Brune, 96 U. S. 588, 24 L. ed. 737	198
Moffit v. Brainard, 92 Iowa, 122, 26 L. R. A. 821, 60 N. W. 226	430	v. Harris. See MUTUAL L. INS. CO. v. BRUNE.
Monahan v. Worcester, 150 Mass. 439, 15 Am. St. Rep. 226, 23 N. E. 228	203	Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Phinney, 178 U. S. 327, 44 L. ed. 1088, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906	625
Monroe v. British & F. Marine Ins. Co. 3 C. C. A. 280, 5 U. S. App. 179, 52 Fed. 787	1106	v. Sears, 178 U. S. 345, 44 L. ed. 1096, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 912	625
Montgomery v. Palmer, 100 Mich. 436, 59 N. W. 148	1141	Mutual Loan & Bkg. Co. v. Haas, 100 Ga. 111, 62 Am. St. Rep. 317, 27 S. E. 980	1060
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 50 Mo. App. 501	527
Moody v. Wright, 13 Met. 17, 46 Am. Dec. 706	455-457	N.
Mooney v. People, 96 Ill. App. 622 ..	471	Nash v. Clark, 27 Utah, 158, 101 Am. St. Rep. 953, 75 Pac. 371	941
Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 289	781	v. Douglass, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 190 ..	208
v. Lawrence, 16 Fed. 87	450	v. Tousley, 28 Minn. 5, 8 N. W. 875	1165
v. Moore, 211 Ill. 208, 71 N. E. 988 ..	396	Nashville v. Cooper, 6 Wall. 247, 18 L. ed. 851	1088
v. Shileids, 121 Ind. 268, 23 N. E. 89	163	National Bank v. Whitney, 193 U. S. 99, 26 L. ed. 443	1046
Moose v. Carson, 104 N. C. 431, 7 L. R. A. 548, 17 Am. St. Rep. 681, 10 S. E. 689	985	National Ben. Assn. v. Grauman, 107 Ind. 288, 7 N. E. 233	425
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

National Docks & N. J. Junction Connecting R. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 54 N. J. Eq. 107, 33 Atl. 936		Nill v. Comparet, 18 Ind. 107, 79 Am. Dec. 411	536
National Granite Bank v. Tyndale, 176 Mass. 547, 51 L. R. A. 447, 57 N. E. 1022	556	Njus v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 47 Minn. 92, 49 N. W. 527	701
National Valley Bank v. Hancock, 100 Va. 101, 57 L. R. A. 728, 93 Am. St. Rep. 933, 40 S. E. 611	330	Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 587, 52 L. R. A. 287, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238, 58 N. E. 616	943
Nau v. Brunette, 79 Wis. 664, 48 N. W. 649	152	Nokes, Ex parte, 6 Utah, 106, 21 Pac. 458	524
Neal v. Marion, 129 N. C. 345, 40 S. E. 116	571	Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237, 58 N. W. 383	1115
v. Nelson, 117 N. C. 393, 53 Am. St. Rep. 590, 23 S. E. 428	984	Norfolk v. Flynn, 101 Va. 473, 62 L. R. A. 771, 99 Am. St. Rep. 918, 44 S. E. 717	930
Negley v. Henderson, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1394, 55 S. W. 554, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 912, 59 S. W. 19	160	Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 47 Am. Rep. 302, 29 Atl. 995 292, 293	204
Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 576, 35 N. W. 611	768	v. Mills, 91 Va. 613, 22 S. E. 556	1054
v. McDonald, 80 Wis. 605, 27 Am. St. Rep. 71, 50 N. W. 893	702	v. Sims, 191 U. S. 441, 48 L. ed. 254, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151	494
v. State, 61 Miss. 212	896		495, 503
v. State Bd. of Health, 186 Mass. 330, 71 N. E. 693	474	Norment v. Johnston, 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 89	655
v. Suddarth, 1 Hen. & M. 350	756	Norris v. Clymer, 2 Pa. St. 277	414
v. West Duluth, 55 Minn. 497, 57 N. W. 149	871	v. Wrenschall, 34 Md. 501	1175
Neuman v. State, 76 Wis. 112, 45 N. W. 30	442	North Beach & M. R. Co.'s Appeal, 32 Cal. 499	267
Neustadter v. Chicago Dry-Goods Co. 96 Fed. 830	587	North Carolina Institute v. Norwood, 45 N. C. (Busbee Eq.) 65	160
Neves v. Scott, 13 How. 268, 14 L. ed. 140	390	North Carolina R. Co. v. Carolina C. R. Co. 83 N. C. 489	622
New, Re [1901] 2 Ch. 534	331	North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Cotton, 140 Ill. 486, 29 N. E. 899	538
Newell v. Humphrey, 37 Vt. 265	805	Northcutt Case, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 584, 34 S. W. 946	499
v. People, 7 N. Y. 9	648	North Powder Mill Co. v. Coughanour, 34 Or. 9, 54 Pac. 223	759
New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 44 L. ed. 181, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85	498	Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978	296
New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. v. Pollard, 22 Wall. 341, 22 L. ed. 877	692	v. Hamblly, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. ed. 1009, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 983	693
New Lamp Chimney Co. v. Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. 91 U. S. 856, 23 L. ed. 336	537	v. Herbert, 110 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590	296
Newman v. H. B. Claflin Co. 107 Ga. 89, 32 S. E. 943	389	v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843	693
v. State, 88 Ala. 115, 6 So. 762	392	Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336	127
New Mexico v. United States Trust Co. 172 U. S. 171, 43 L. ed. 407, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128	495	Norton v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 623	809
New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, 24 L. ed. 521	810	Norway Sav. Bank v. Merriam, 88 Me. 146, 33 Atl. 840	800
v. Great Southern Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 37 La. Ann. 571	517	Norwich v. Hampshire County, 13 Pick. 60	631
Newport v. Horton, 22 R. I. 196, 50 L. R. A. 330, 47 Atl. 312	1150	Noyes v. State, 46 Wis. 250, 32 Am. Rep. 710, 1 N. W. 1	258
Newport News & M. Valley R. Co. v. Deuser, 97 Ky. 92, 29 S. W. 973	519	Nugent v. Powell, 4 Wyo. 173, 20 L. R. A. 199, 62 Am. St. Rep. 17, 33 Pac. 23	1168
Newton v. Begler, 143 Mass. 598, 10 N. E. 464	1018	Nutter v. Brown, 51 W. Va. 598, 42 S. E. 661, 54 W. Va. 82, 46 S. E. 375	1085
v. Joyce, 166 Mass. 83, 55 Am. St. Rep. 385, 44 N. E. 116	943	Nye v. Lovitt, 92 Va. 710, 24 S. E. 345	320
New World, The v. King, 16 How. 469, 41 L. ed. 1019	756
New York v. Bailey, 2 Denio. 433	080	O.
v. Second Ave. R. Co. 32 N. Y. 261	295
v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 111 N. Y. 447, 18 N. E. 618	587	Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 547	499
v. Third Ave. R. Co. 33 N. Y. 42	517	Ober v. Smith, 78 N. C. 313	493
v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 529, 25 L. ed. 705	460	O'Brien v. American Dredging Co. 53 N. J. L. 297, 21 Atl. 324	693
New York ex rel. New York Electric Lines Co. v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 36 L. ed. 666, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 880	271	v. New York, 139 N. Y. 548, 35 N. E. 323	736
New York & W. S. S. Co. v. Mount. See BENEFACTOR, THE.	562	O'Connor v. Huggins, 113 N. Y. 511, 21 N. E. 184	891
New York C. & H. R. R. Co., Re, 77 N. Y. 248		Odell v. Atlanta, 97 Ga. 670, 25 S. E. 173	385
v. Aldridge, 135 N. Y. 95, 17 L. R. A. 516, 32 N. E. 50	747	v. Boston & M. R. Co. 109 Mass. 50	493
v. Dfendaffer, 62 C. C. A. 1, 125 Fed. 893	810	O'Donoghue v. Boles, 159 N. Y. 87, 53 N. E. 537	891
New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627	677	Officer v. Officer, 120 Iowa. 389, 98 Am. St. Rep. 365, 94 N. W. 947	1134
Niagara Shoe Co. v. Tobey, 71 Ill. App. 250	681	Ogle v. Koerner, 140 Ill. 170, 29 N. E. 563	1082
Nice's Appeal, 54 Pa. 200	576	v. Turpin, 102 Ill. 148	897
Nichols v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 60 Minn. 319, 62 N. W. 386	408	Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Stansberry, 132 Ind. 533, 32 N. E. 218	856
Niemeyer v. Wright, 75 Va. 239, 40 Am. Rep. 720	576	Ohio Turnp. Co. v. Vaechter, 25 Ohio C. C. 605	835
Nightingale v. Withington, 15 Mass. 272, 8 Am. Dec. 101	702	O. J. Gude Co. v. Farley, 28 Misc. 184, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1036	362
ILLRA.(N.S.)	1045	Olds v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 172 Mass. 73, 51 N. E. 450	1147
	1168	Oliver v. Monona County, 117 Iowa, 43, 90 N. W. 510	438

- Olney v. Hull, 21 Pick. 311 1007
 Omaha F. Ins. Co. v. Dierks, 43 Neb. 482, 61 N. W. 740 146
 O'Neill v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 345, 36 L. ed. 460, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 701 493
 O'Neille v. Ternes, 32 Wash. 528, 73 Pac. 692 1039
 O'Neil v. Great Northern R. Co. 80 Minn. 27, 51 L. R. A. 532, 82 N. W. 1086 701
 Oolagah Coal Co. v. McCaleb, 15 C. C. A. 270, 32 U. S. App. 330, 68 Fed. 87 339
 Opinion of Justices, 13 Gray, 618 524
 Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 67, 31 L. ed. 63, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68 1100
 Orton v. Smith, 18 How. 263, 15 L. ed. 393 339
 Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204 730
 v. United States, 91 U. S. 474, 23 L. ed. 388 524 Osburn v. Sims, 62 Miss. 429 463
 Ottawa v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 217 985
 Ottumwa, C. F. & St. P. R. Co. v. McWilliams, 71 Iowa, 164, 32 N. W. 315 810
 Oudin v. Crossman, 15 Wash. 519, 46 Pac. 1047 1077
 Oury v. Goodwin, 3 Ariz. 255, 26 Pac. 376 214
 Overby v. Gordon, 177 U. S. 214, 44 L. ed. 741, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 603 891
 Owen v. Griffith, 1 Ves. 8. 249 1087
 Owens v. Clark, 78 Tex. 550, 15 S. W. 101 493
 v. State, 64 Tex. 500 657
 Oxford v. White, 95 N. C. 525 503
 Oystead v. Shedd, 13 Mass. 520, 7 Am. Dec. 172 968
- P.
- Pacific Iron Works v. Long Island R. Co. 62 N. Y. 272 493
 Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S. 661, 34 L. ed. 819, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 210 764
 v. Bird, 71 Cal. 134, 11 Pac. 873 764
 Page v. District of Columbia, 20 App. D. C. 469 883
 Palmer v. Marshall, 60 Ill. 289 183
 Paper-Bag Cases, 105 U. S. 766, 26 L. ed. 959 1085
 Parker v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 133 N. C. 335, 63 L. R. A. 827, 45 S. E. 658 988
 v. Com. 6 Pa. 507, 47 Am. Dec. 480 519
 v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802, 19 S. W. 1119 096
 v. Phetteplace, 2 Cliff. 70, Fed. Cas. No. 10,746 331
 Parmelee v. Smith, 21 Ill. 620 141
 Parrot v. Cincinnati H. & D. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 624 130
 Parsons Band Cutter & Self-Feeder Co. v. Gadeke 1 Herdman (Neb.) 605, 95 N. W. 850 148
 Parvin v. Wimberg, 130 Ind. 561, 15 L. R. A. 715, 30 Am. St. Rep. 254, 30 N. E. 690 058
 Patent Floor Cloth Co., Re, 41 L. J. Ch. N. 8. 476 443
 Patillo v. Allen-West Commission Co. 65 C. C. A. 508, 131 Fed. 680 1166
 Patrick v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 43 N. H. 621, 80 Am. Dec. 197 426
 v. Young Men's Christian Assoc. 120 Mich. 185, 79 N. W. 208 570
 Patterson v. Mills, 69 Iowa, 758, 28 N. W. 53 793
 Patton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 179 U. S. 658, 45 L. ed. 361, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275 1166
 Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 31 L. R. A. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758, 20 N. E. 347 427
 Paulsen v. Portland, 140 U. S. 30, 37 L. ed. 637, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 750 438
 Pearce v. Spalding, 12 Mo. App. 141 1188
 Pearson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 47 Minn. 9, 49 N. W. 302 701
- Pearson v. Miller, 71 Miss. 379, 42 Am. St. Rep. 470, 14 So. 731 968
 v. Zehr, 125 Ill. 573, 18 N. E. 204 224
 Peck v. Ayers & L. Tie Co. 53 C. C. A. 551, 116 Fed. 273 339
 Peele v. Provident Fund Soc. 147 Ind. 543, 44 N. E. 661, 46 N. E. 990 426
 Peirce v. Black, 105 Pa. 342 409
 Pellet v. Manufacturers' & M. Ins. Co. 43 C. C. A. 669, 104 Fed. 502 448
 Pells v. Snell, 130 Ill. 379, 23 N. E. 117 348
 Pender v. Pittman, 84 N. C. 372 622
 Penn v. Bornman, 102 Ill. 523 1161
 Penniston v. Newnan, 117 Ga. 700, 45 S. E. 65 385
 Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565 890
 Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141 1167 Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 250, 98 Am. Dec. 346 311
 v. Books, 57 Pa. 339, 98 Am. Dec. 229 201
 v. MacKinney, 124 Pa. 462, 2 L. R. A. 820, 10 Am. St. Rep. 601, 17 Atl. 14 538
 v. Montgomery County Pass. R. Co. 167 Pa. 70, 27 L. R. A. 766, 46 Am. St. Rep. 659, 31 Atl. 468 984
 v. Pearson, 173 Pa. 496, 34 Atl. 226 809
 v. Riblet, 66 Pa. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 360 415
 v. Wachter, 60 Md. 395 271
 People v. Arensburg, 105 N. Y. 123, 59 Am. Rep. 483, 11 N. E. 277 930
 v. Bleasner, 169 N. Y. 53, 57 L. R. A. 178, 88 Am. St. Rep. 534, 61 N. E. 990 931
 v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 36 Am. St. Rep. 668, 34 N. E. 759 629
 v. Clipperty, 101 N. Y. 634, 4 N. E. 107 635
 v. Clipperty, 37 Hun. 324 922
 v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343 922
 v. Cook, 14 Barb. 259 481
 v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 67, 59 Am. Dec. 451 636
 v. Corey, 148 N. Y. 476, 42 N. E. 1066 841
 v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 14 L. R. A. 285, 50 N. W. 310 523
 v. Detroit United R. Co. 134 Mich. 682, 63 L. R. A. 746, 104 Am. St. Rep. 626, 94 N. W. 36 942
 v. Gilbert, 18 Johns. 227 883
 v. Girard, 145 N. Y. 105, 45 Am. St. Rep. 595, 39 N. E. 823 920
 v. Gonzalez, 35 N. Y. 49 843
 v. Greenwall, 108 N. Y. 296, 2 Am. St. Rep. 415, 15 N. E. 404 841
 v. Hagar, 68 Cal. 59, 4 Pac. 951 439
 v. Hamilton, 24 Ill. App. 609 828
 v. Hasbrouck, 11 Utah, 291, 39 Pac. 918 815
 v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 1, 42 L. R. A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257 187
 v. Horrigan, 68 Mich. 491, 36 N. W. 236 968
 v. Kibler, 106 N. Y. 321, 12 N. E. 795 930
 v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 1 L. R. A. 293, 6 Am. St. Rep. 389, 18 N. E. 245 817
 v. Lyon, 27 Hun. 180 1192
 v. McGarren, 17 Wend. 460 481
 v. McKinney, 9 Mich. 444 850
 v. New York C. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 78, 25 Barb. 199 310
 v. New York Gaslight Co. 64 Barb. 69 884
 v. Shaughnessy, 110 Cal. 598, 43 Pac. 2 866
 v. Shaw, 57 Mich. 403, 58 Am. Rep. 372, 24 N. W. 121 867
 v. Tomlinson, 102 Cal. 19, 36 Pac. 506 866
 v. Townbee, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 490 637
 v. Van Blaricum, 2 Johns. 105 968
 v. White, 11 Barb. 26 810
 v. Wild Cat Special Drainage District, 31 Ill. App. 223 828
- 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 249, 27 N. E. 362	841	Phillips v. Phillips, 3 Hare, 281	1119
People ex rel. Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 366	1004	Platt v. People, 29 Ill. 54	658
Bank of Watertown v. Assessors, 1 Hill, 616	767	Pick v. Strong, 26 Minn. 303, 3 N. W. 697	800
Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266	438	Pickel v. Phenix Ins. Co. 119 Ind. 201, 21 N. E. 898	426
Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 353	517	Pierce v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 283	197
Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349	174	v. New Orleans, 18 La. Ann. 242	1150
Dunkirk & F. R. Co. v. Cassity, 46 N. Y. 49	267	v. Pass, 1 Port. (Ala.) 232	655
Swigert v. Golden Rule, 114 Ill. 34, 28 N. E. 383	828	Pierston v. People, 79 N. Y. 433, 35 Am. Rep. 524	736
Speed v. Hartwell, 12 Mich. 522, 86 Am. Dec. 70	832	Pigg v. State, 43 Tex. 108	1026
Port Huron & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 33 Mich. 303	1087	Pilgreen v. State, 71 Ala. 308, 405, 496, Pillsbury v. Brown, 82 Me. 450, 9 L. R. A. 94, 19 Atl. 858	503
Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 585, 51 N. E. 180	347	Pinkham v. Pinkham, 55 Neb. 729, 76 N. W. 411	905
Harrison v. Mineral Marsh Drainage District, 193 Ill. 428, 62 N. E. 225	835	Pinney v. First Nat. Bank, 68 Kan. 223, 75 Pac. 110	318
Longenecker v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 565, 27 N. E. 217	230	v. Providence Loan & Invest. Co. 106 Wis. 396, 50 L. R. A. 577, 80 Am. St. Rep. 41, 82 N. W. 308	1047
Woodward v. Paisley, 81 Ill. App. 32	828	Piper v. Smith, 1 Head, 94	564
Payson v. Pavey, 151 Ill. 101, 37 N. E. 691	1024	Pipon v. Cope, 1 Camb. 434	648
Moses v. Pease, 30 Barb. 588	833	Pitsnowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9 146, Pitsnowsky Case. See PITSNOWSKY v. BEARDSLEY.	1108
Springfield v. Power, 25 Ill. 187	517	Pittsburg Gauge Co. v. Ashton Valve Co. 184 Pa. 36, 39 Atl. 223	147
Cunningham v. Roper, 35 N. Y. 629	1022	Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Byers, 32 Pa. 22, 72 Am. Dec. 770	450
Butler v. Saginaw County, 26 Mich. 22	498	909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, v. Graham, 36 Pa. 77	908
Yearlan v. Spiers, 4 Utah, 395, 10 Pac. 609, 11 Pac. 509	847	914, 918	911
New York Electric Lines Co. v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593, 1 Am. St. Rep. 893, 14 N. E. 820	586	Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 148 Ind. 196, 40 L. R. A. 101, 62 Am. St. Rep. 503, 46 N. E. 917, 47 N. E. 464	677
Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 174 N. Y. 441, 63 L. R. A. 892, 105 Am. St. Rep. 686, 67 N. E. 74	267	Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby, 38 Ind. 294, 10 Am. Rep. 111	292
Jerome v. State University, 24 Colo. 175, 49 Pac. 286	828	Pittsburg Min. Co. v. Spooner, 17 Am. St. Rep. 161	966
Clay v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 411, 16 Am. St. Rep. 644, 41 N. W. 1091	595	Pittsburg, W. & K. R. Co. v. Benwood Iron-Works, 31 W. Va. 710, 2 L. R. A. 680, 8 S. E. 453	976
Warfield v. Sutter Street R. Co. 117 Cal. 604, 49 Pac. 736	832	Place v. People, 83 Ill. App. 84	828
Davies v. Tax & A. Comrs. 47 N. Y. 501	1022	Plumley v. Birge, 124 Mass. 57, 26 Am. Rep. 645	282
Tyroler v. Warden, 157 N. Y. 116, 43 L. R. A. 264, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763, 51 N. E. 1006	1192	Plymouth v. Schultheis, 135 Ind. 330, 35 N. E. 12	943
Gere v. Whitlock, 92 N. Y. 191	595	Plymouth Consol. Gold Min. Co. v. Amador & S. Canal Co. 118 U. S. 270, 30 L. ed. 233, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1034	374
Scannell v. Whitney, 47 Cal. 584	149	Pollinsky v. People, 73 N. Y. 65	939
People's Sav. Bank v. Smith, 114 Ga. 185, 39 S. E. 920	656	Polk v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. 137 Fed. 273	625
Perkins, Ex parte, 29 Fed. 900	1143	Pollard v. Wegener, 13 Wis. 569	890
v. Fairfield, 11 Mass. 227	1094	Ponting v. Isaman, 7 Idaho, 283, 62 Pac. 680	848
v. New York C. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 196, 82 Am. Dec. 281	680	Poor v. Hudson Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 432	968
v. Rice, 187 Mass. 28, 72 N. E. 323	686	Portz v. Schantz, 70 Wis. 497, 36 N. W. 249	890
v. Slack, 86 Pa. 270	517	Post v. Buffalo, P. & W. R. Co. 108 Pa. 585	535
Perras v. A. Booth & Co. 82 Minn. 191, 84 N. W. 739, 85 N. W. 179	704	Postal Teleph. Cable Co. v. Taylor, 192 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 342, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208	567
Perry v. Butt, 14 Ga. 669	653	Potomac, The v. Cannon. See POTOMAC, THE.
v. Worcester, 6 Gray, 544, 66 Am. Dec. 431	608	Potomac, The, 105 U. S. 630, 26 L. ed. 1194	1100
Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 119 Wis. 197, 100 Am. St. Rep. 879, 96 N. W. 532	677	Pound v. Atty. Gen. 119 Mich. 528, 78 N. W. 541	834
v. Hall (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 603	1090	Poundstone v. Baldwin, 145 Ind. 139, 44 N. E. 191	430
v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. Rep. 399, 66 N. W. 96	146	Powell v. Com. 114 Pa. 265, 60 Am. Rep. 350, 7 Atl. 913, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992	921
Perry v. Skinner, 116 Mass. 129	582	v. Patison, 100 Cal. 236, 34 Pac. 677	815
Pryor v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 13 Daly, 122	85	v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, Affirming 114 Pa. 265, 60 Am. Rep. 350, 7 Atl. 913	934
Payton, Re, 12 Kan. 405	819	v. State, 15 Ohio, 579	850
Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 134 Ind. 215, 20 L. R. A. 405, 33 N. E. 970	1045	v. State, 17 Tex. App. 345	497
Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320	517	Pratt v. Davis, 37 Chicago Legal News, 213	443
v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169	519	v. Pioneer Press So. 32 Minn. 217, 18 N. W. 836, 20 N. W. 87	443
v. Western U. Teleph. Co. 11 Phila. 327	586	Prentice v. Decker, 49 Barb. 21	356
Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Wireman, 88 Pa. 264	493	Preston v. Boston, 12 Pick. 14	871
Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Appeal Tax Court, 50 Md. 409	268
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

- Price v. Price, 101 Ky. 28, 30 S. W. 429
 Prichard v. Evans, 31 W. Va. 137, 5 S. E. 461
 Prince v. Crocker, 166 Mass. 347, 32 L. R. A. 610, 44 N. E. 446
 Pringle v. Dunn, 37 Wis. 449, 19 Am. Rep. 772
 Prints v. People, 42 Mich. 144, 36 Am. Rep. 437, 3 N. W. 306
 Probst v. Delamater, 100 N. Y. 266, 3 N. E. 184
 Prosser v. Northern P. R. Co. 152 U. S. 59, 38 L. ed. 352, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 528
 Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 563, 7 L. ed. 956
 Providence Gas Co. v. Thurber, 2 B. I. 21, 55 Am. Dec. 821
 Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 48 L. ed. 1092, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 789
 Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215, 32 N. E. 285
 Purcell v. Daly, 19 Abb. N. C. 301
 Purdy v. Powers, 6 Pa. 494
 Purple v. Union P. R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 700, 51 C. C. A. 564, 114 Fed. 123
 Putnam v. Pitney, 45 Minn. 242, 11 L. R. A. 41, 47 N. W. 790
 v. Tillotson, 13 Met. 517
 Pye, Ex parte, 18 Ves. Jr. 140
- Q.
- Quantz v. Southern R. Co. 137 N. C. 136, 49 S. E. 79
 Queen v. Boyes, 1 Best & S. 311
 v. Thomas, 33 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 22
 Quirlique v. Dennis, 24 Cal. 154
- R.
- R. v. O'Connell, 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1079
 Rabe v. Dunlap, 51 N. J. Eq. 48, 25 Atl. 959
 Race v. Oldridge, 90 Ill. 250, 32 Am. Rep. 27
 Radford v. Folsom, 55 Iowa, 276, 7 N. W. 604
 v. Radford, 5 Dana, 156
 Rahrer, Re, 140 U. S. 561, 35 L. ed. 676, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865
 Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 456
 Raleigh Hosiery Co. v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 131 N. C. 238, 42 S. E. 602
 Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1003, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322
 v. Eastern R. Co. 106 Mass. 276, 8 Am. Rep. 327
 Ranney v. Higby, 4 Wis. 154, 5 Wis. 62
 Rape v. Heaton, 9 Wis. 328, 76 Am. Dec. 209
 Rathbone v. Hooney, 58 N. Y. 403
 Rauch's Estate, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 60
 Ray v. Home & F. Invest. & Agency Co. 98 Ga. 122, 26 S. E. 50
 Reals v. Smith, 8 Wyo. 159, 56 Pac. 690
 Reddington v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 108 Iowa, 90, 78 N. W. 800, Reversing 75 N. W. 679
 Redmond v. Staton, 116 N. C. 140, 21 S. E. 186
 Reed v. Haskins, 116 Mass. 199
 v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321, 15 Pac. 177
 v. Peterson, 91 Ill. 288
 v. State, 108 N. Y. 407, 15 N. E. 755
 Reeves v. Grottendick, 131 Ind. 107, 30 N. E. 889
 Reggel, Ex parte, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148
 Reg. v. Pitts, Car. & M. 284
 v. Rowe, Bell, C. C. 93
 Remington v. Walker, 21 Hun, 322
 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)
- Renier v. Hurlbut, 81 Wis. 24, 14 L. R. A. 562, 29 Am. St. Rep. 850, 50 N. W. 783
 Rex v. Hertford, 1 Salk. 376
 v. Phillips, 3 Burr. 1565
 v. Phillips, 4 Burr. 2090
 v. Staverton, Yelv. 190, Bulstr. 54
 v. Trelawney, 3 Burr. 1616
 v. Waters, 7 Car. & P. 250
 v. William, 1 Burr. 408
 Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213
 v. Gaertner, 117 Mich. 532, 76 N. W. 3
 v. Reynolds, 92 Ky. 556, 18 S. W. 517
 Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664 642
 Ricard v. Sanderson, 41 N. Y. 179
 Rice v. Foster, 4 Harr. (Del.) 479
 Rich v. Zellsdorf, 22 Wis. 544, 99 Am. Dec. 81
 Richardson, Re, 120 Cal. 344, 52 Pac. 832
 Richmond v. Dudley, 129 Ind. 112, 13 L. R. A. 587, 28 Am. St. Rep. 180, 28 N. E. 312
 Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Elliott, 149 U. S. 266, 37 L. ed. 728, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837
 Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore, 94 Va. 493, 37 L. R. A. 258, 27 S. E. 70
 Richmond Natural Gas Co. v. Clawson, 155 Ind. 659, 51 L. R. A. 744, 58 N. E. 1049
 Ridesout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 308, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560, 19 N. E. 390
 v. Winnebago Traction Co. 123 Wis. 297, 99 L. R. A. 601, 101 N. W. 672
 Ridgely v. Ridgely, 59 Atl. 731
 Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 479
 Rills v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 3 Tex. Ct. Rep. 227, 64 S. W. 1047
 Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454
 Rives v. Wilborne, 6 Ala. 45
 Roach v. Carafa, 85 Cal. loc. cit. 445, 25 Pac. 22
 Robbins v. Smith, 47 Conn. 182
 Robel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 35 Minn. 89, 27 N. W. 305 1166
 Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co. 171 N. Y. 538, 59 L. R. A. 478, 80 Am. St. Rep. 828, 64 N. E. 442
 Robertson v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 526, 32 Am. St. Rep. 482, 31 N. E. 650
 v. Parks, 76 Md. 135, 24 Atl. 411
 Robinson, Re, 37 N. Y. 261
 v. Ruprecht, 191 Ill. 424, 61 N. E. 631
 v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 307, 1 N. E. 698
 v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 71, 53 Am. St. Rep. 701, 29 S. W. 40
 v. Towns, 30 Ga. 818
 Robotham v. Prudential Ins. Co. 64 N. J. Eq. 673, 53 Atl. 842
 Rochester v. Lee, 2 De G. M. & G. 427
 Roderigas v. East River Sav. Inst. 63 N. Y. 460, 20 Am. Rep. 555
 Roe v. Winston, 86 Minn. 77, 90 N. W. 122 Rogers, Re, 97 Md. 674, 55 Atl. 679
 v. Bradshaw, 20 Johns. 739
 v. King, 22 Cal. 72
 v. Ramey, 137 Mo. 598, 39 S. W. 66
 v. Rogers, 111 N. Y. 228, 18 N. E. 636
 v. Rogers, 1 Paige 188
 v. St. Paul, 22 Minn. 494
 v. State, 101 Tenn. 425, 47 S. W. 697
 Rohrbacher v. Jackson, 51 Miss. 733
 Roll v. Indianapolis, 52 Ind. 547

Ediston v. Crittenden. See ROLSTON v. MISSOURI FUND COMRS.
v. Missouri Fund Comrs. 120 U. S. 390, 30 L. ed. 721, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 599	730
Eise v. Elmsly, 4 Cranch, 241, 2 L. ed. 608	801
v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co. 20 Blatchf. 411, 11 Fed. 438	540
Roemuller v. Lampe, 89 Ill. 212, 31 Am. Rep. 74	872
Esseau v. Bleau, 131 N. Y. 177, 27 Am. St. Rep. 578, 30 N. E. 52	1073
Roth v. District of Columbia, 16 App. D. C. 323	881
Roundtree, Ex parte, 51 Ala. 42	846
Rowan v. Sharps' Rifle Mfg. Co. 29 Conn. 283	457
v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559	1157
R. T. v. Mairs, 33 W. Va. 655, 11 S. E. 5	1001
Rubstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 49 L. R. A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, 57 N. E. 41	226
Rummel v. Dilworth, P. & Co. 131 Pa. 509, 17 Am. St. Rep. 827, 19 Atl. 345	282
Rupard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 88 Ky. 284, 7 L. R. A. 316, 11 S. W. 70	311
Rush v. Buckley, 100 Me. 322, 61 Atl. 774	365
Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 433, 26 L. ed. 1060	1085
v. Horn, B. & F. Mfg. Co. 41 Neb. 567, 59 N. W. 901	450
v. Maxwell Land Grant Co. 158 U. S. 253, 39 L. ed. 971, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 827	749
v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 726, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823, 21 S. E. 550	984
v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 157 Ind. 305, 55 L. R. A. 253, 87 Am. St. Rep. 214, 61 N. E. 678	678
v. Southard, 12 How. 139, 13 L. ed. 927	327
v. Wernitz, 88 Md. 214, 44 Atl. 219	786
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 57 Kan. 230, 45 Pac. 598	527
Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 78, 23 L. ed. 807	749
v. Martin, 91 N. C. 464	161
v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 65 Tex. 16, 57 Am. Rep. 589	401
v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 96 Fed. 796	625
S.
Sabine, The, 101 U. S. 388, 25 L. ed. 984	389
Sachs v. Garner, 111 Iowa, 424, 82 N. W. 1007	405
Saillen v. Bank of Lenoque, 90 Tenn. 227, 16 S. W. 373	251
St. Clair County v. Livingston, 23 Wall. 46, 23 L. ed. 59	765
St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 103 U. S. 426, 26 L. ed. 578	748
St. Louis v. Fischer, 167 Mo. 654, 84 L. R. A. 679, 99 Am. St. Rep. 614, 67 S. W. 872, Affirmed in 194 U. S. 382, 48 L. ed. 1018, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673	959
v. Galt, 179 Mo. 8, 63 L. R. A. 778, 77 S. W. 876	921
v. Liessing (Mo.) 80 S. W. 611, 929, 930	927
v. Roche, 128 Mo., loc. cit. 544, 31 S. W. 915	940
v. St. Louis R. & S. Mo. 44, 58 Am. Rep. 82, 1 S. W. 305	925
v. Wetsel, 130 Mo. 600, 31 S. W. 1045	939
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 149 U. S. 465, 37 L. ed. 810, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990	925
v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 11 Wall. 423, 20 L. ed. 192	587
St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Coulson, 8 Kan. App. 4, 54 Pac. 2	640
v. Farr, 6 C. C. 211, 15 U. S. App. 520, 56 Fed. 994	859
L.R.A.(N.S.)	1167
St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243	536
v. Townsend, 69 Ark. 380, 63 S. W. 994	1147
v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 412, 57 Am. Rep. 176, 11 Pac. 408	692
St. Louis Brewing Assn. v. St. Louis, 140 Mo. 419, 37 S. W. 525, 41 S. W. 911	772
St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Evans (Ark.) 86 S. W. 426	1147
v. Needham, 3 C. C. A. 129, 10 U. S. App. 339, 52 Fed. 371	1165
v. Ramsey, 53 Ark. 314, 8 L. R. A. 559, 22 Am. St. Rep. 195, 13 S. W. 931	764
St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Griffith, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 35 S. W. 741	856
St. Sure v. Lindsfelt, 82 Wis. 346, 19 L. R. A. 515, 33 Am. St. Rep. 50, 52 N. W. 308	891
Salem v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650	754, 755
Salina v. Trosper, 27 Kan. 544	290
Sanborn v. Kittredge, 20 Vt. 632, 50 Am. Dec. 58	1085
Sandberg v. State, 113 Wis. 589, 89 N. W. 504	258
Sanders v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 49 C. C. A. 565, 111 Fed. 708	1163
Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Feary, 40 Neb. 226, 58 N. W. 713	146
Sandys v. Williams, 80 Pac. 642	488
San Francisco Breweries v. Schurtz, 104 Cal. 427, 38 Pac. 92	1199
Sanger v. Kennebec County, 25 Me. 291	967
Sanitary District v. Bernstein, 175 Ill. 215, 51 N. E. 720	228
San Mateo v. Southern P. R. Co. 8 Sawy. 238, 13 Fed. 722	637
Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 165, 63 Am. Dec. 487	485, 488, 629, 632
Santo's Case. See SANTO v. STATE.
Sappenfield v. Main Street and Agrl. Park R. Co. 91 Cal. 48, 27 Pac. 590	295
Sarbecker v. State, 65 Wis. 171, 56 Am. Rep. 624, 26 N. W. 541	495
Sargent's Estate, 62 Wis. 130, 22 N. W. 131	352
Sarkle's Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 157	352
Sasportas v. Jennings, 1 Ray. 470	871
Satterlee v. Mathewson, 2 Pet. 412, 7 L. ed. 469	1094
Sauerbler's Estate, 202 Pa. 167, 51 Atl. 751	402, 405
Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ga. 742, 21 S. E. 157	1168
Sawyer v. Long, 86 Me. 542, 30 Atl. 111	456
S. Blaldisell, Jr. Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank 96 Tex. 626, 62 L. R. A. 968, 97 Am. St. Rep. 944, 75 S. W. 292	245
Scarver v. State, 53 Miss. 406	474
Scheffler v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 520, 21 N. W. 711	1165
Schenkl v. Dana, 118 Mass. 236	648
Schick, Re, 2 Ben. 5, Fed. Cas. No. 12,455	391
Schilling v. Romlinger, 4 Colo. 100	214
Schintz v. McManamy, 33 Wis. 299	896
Schlichting v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 121 Iowa, 502, 96 N. W. 959	245
Schmertz v. Dwyer, 53 Pa. 335	493
Schneider v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 42 Minn. 68, 43 N. W. 783	703
v. Com. 3 Met. (Ky.) 409	850
Schofield v. Wood, 170 Mass. 415, 49 N. E. 636	431
Scholey v. Mumford, 60 N. Y. 498	871
School District v. Sheldley, 138 Mo. 672, 37 L. R. A. 408, 60 Am. St. Rep. 576, 40 S. W. 656	798
v. Stocking. See SCHOOL DISTRICT v. SHEIDLEY.
School Dist. No. 23 v. McCoy, 30 Kan. 268, 46 Am. Rep. 92, 1 Pac. 97	810
Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222, 51 Am. Rep. 201	1094
v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurst. & C. 601	302
Schroeder v. Baraboo, 93 Wis. 95, 67 N. W. 27	955

Schulherr v. Bordeaux, 64 Miss. 59, 8 So. 201	488	Sherwood v. Alvis, 83 Ala. 115, 3 Am. St. Rep. 695, 3 So. 307	1045
Schumaker v. Heinemann, 99 Wis. 251, 74 N. W. 785	450	v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 82 Mich. 374, 46 N. W. 773	290
Schurmeler v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 10 Minn. 82, 88 Am. Dec. 59, 611, 59, Affirmed in 7 Wall. 272, 19 L. ed. 704	764	Shields v. Bogliolo, 7 Mo. 136	1085
Schus v. Powers-Simpson Co. 85 Minn. 447, 69 L. R. A. 887, 89 N. W. 68	703	v. Orr Extension Ditch Co. 23 Nev. 349, 47 Pac. 194, 602, 603, 604
Schuykill & D. Improv. & R. Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall. 442, 20 L. ed. 807	1169	v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 119 N. C. 380, 25 S. E. 951	999
Schwarz v. Judd, 28 Minn. 371, 10 N. W. 208	1166	Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249, 77 S. W. 196	241
v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 580	557	Shively v. Bowby, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 331, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548 746,	747
Schwuchow v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 444	460	Shoemaker v. Hatch, 13 Nev. 201	764
Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 362, 11 N. E. 351	786	Short v. Bullion-Beck & C. Min. Co. 20 Utah, 20, 45 L. R. A. 603, 57 Pac. 720	1161
Scott v. Bay, 3 Md. 431	107	Shreve v. Shreve, 10 N. J. Eq. 385	469
v. Childers, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 349, 60 S. W. 776	309	Shuenfeldt v. Junkermann, 20 Fed. 357	495
v. Donovan, 153 Mass. 378, 26 N. E. 871	472	Shuman v. Ft. Wayne, 127 Ind. 109, 11 L. R. A. 378, 26 N. E. 560	460
v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 596	539	Sieber v. Great Northern R. Co. 76 Minn. 269, 79 N. W. 95	1170
v. Longwell (Mich.) 102 N. W. 230	604	Silliman v. United States, 101 U. S. 465, 25 L. ed. 987	872
v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108	889	Simmer v. St. Paul, 23 Minn. 408	449
v. Scott, 1 Eden. 458	891	Simmons v. Allison, 118 N. C. 776, 24 S. E. 716	161
Scully v. Rose, 61 Md. 408	330	v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. 128 N. C. 469, 39 S. E. 966	826
Scurry v. Jones, 4 Wash. 468, 30 Pac. 726	748	v. Winters, 21 Or. 35, 28 Am. St. Rep. 727, 27 Pac. 7	759
Searles Bros. v. Smith Grain Co. 80 Miss. 688, 32 So. 287	246	Simpson v. Hopkins, 82 Md. 489, 33 Atl. 714	268
Seaton v. Hixon, 35 Kan. 683, 12 Pac. 22	809	v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 422	450
Sebeck v. Plattdeutsche Volkfest Verein, 64 N. J. L. 624, 50 L. R. A. 199, 81 Am. St. Rep. 512, 46 Atl. 631	431	Sinclair v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 77 S. W. 621	512
Secor v. Lord, *3 Keyes, 525	901	Sinclair Case. See SINCLAIR v. STATE.
Seddon v. Connell, 10 Sim. 86	183	Singleton v. Felton, 42 C. C. A. 57, 101 Fed. 528	287
Sedgwick v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 12 Tex. Ct. Rep. 455, 85 S. W. 818	496	Sinker v. Compere, 62 Tex. 470	509
Seeberger v. McCormick, 178 Ill. 404, 53 N. E. 340	183	Sinkler v. Indiana & C. Turnp. Road Co. 3 Penn. & W. 149	911
Seiberling v. Newlon, 16 Ind. App. 374, 43 N. E. 151	140	Sitwell v. Heron, 14 Jur. 848	803
Selbert v. Lewis, 122 U. S. 284, 30 L. ed. 1161, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1190	1176	Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Gilbert Elev. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 430	357
v. United States. See SEIBERT v. LEWIS.		Skates v. State, 64 Miss. 644, 80 Am. Rep. 70, 1 So. 843	474
Selfert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321	956	Skeate v. Beale, 11 Ad. & El. 983	871
Sellgman v. Laubheimer, 58 Ill. 124	1082	Skinner v. Oakes, 10 Mo. App. 45	712
Semple v. Vicksburg, 62 Miss. 63, 52 Am. Rep. 181	958	Slaughterhouse Cases, 10 Wall. 273, 19 L. ed. 915	555
Serio v. Murphy, 99 Md. 556, 105 Am. St. Rep. 316, 58 Atl. 435	276	Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394	934
Seton v. Hoy, 84 Or. 266, 43 L. R. A. 934, 75 Am. St. Rep. 641, 55 Pac. 967	884	Sleeper v. Davis, 64 N. H. 59, 10 Am. St. Rep. 377, 6 Atl. 201	393
Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 562, 47 Am. Rep. 75	538	Sloan v. Sloan, 184 Ill. 579, 56 N. E. 952	396
Seymour v. Bowles, 172 Ill. 521, 50 N. E. 122	320	Small v. Small, 90 Md. 550, 45 Atl. 190	787
Shaber v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 28 Minn. 103, 6 N. W. 575	1106	v. Sumner, 6 Gray, 239	872
Sharp v. Farmer, 20 N. C. (4 Dev. & B. L.) 255	995	Smiley v. Fry, 100 N. Y. 262, 3 N. E. 186	1135
v. Johnson, 44 Neb. 165, 62 N. W. 466	476	Smith v. Abair, 87 Mich. 62, 49 N. W. 509	356
Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759	632	v. Bell, 107 Pa. 352	907, 912, 915
Shaw v. McBride, 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 173	460	v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 33 L. ed. 279, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39	263
v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115	105	v. Bromley, 2 Doug. K. B. 696	871
v. Woodcock, 7 Barn. & C. 73	871	v. Dorchester County, 81 Md. 316, 32 Atl. 193	268
Shawhan v. Wherritt, 7 How. 627, 12 L. ed. 847	389	v. Goldsboro, 121 N. C. 350, 28 S. E. 479	944
Sheaffer's Appeal, 100 Pa. 379	149	v. New York C. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 222	681
Sheetz's Appeal, 82 Pa. 213	399	v. New York Elev. R. Co. 44 N. Y. S. R. 875, 18 N. Y. Supp. 132	85
Shelton v. Bruce, 9 Yerg. 24	1129	v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. 46 N. J. L. 7	538
Shepherd v. Sullivan, 166 Ill. 78, 46 N. E. 720	224	v. Peterson, 123 Iowa, 672, 99 N. W. 552	432
Sherriff v. Oskaloosa, 120 Iowa, 442, 94 N. W. 904	957	v. Rice, 130 Mass. 441	1007
Sherrill v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 89 Ky. 302, 12 S. W. 465	1017	v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 44 Minn. 17, 46 N. W. 149	702
1 L.R.A.(N.S.)		v. Shaffer, 50 Md. 132	1085
		v. Sheeley, 12 Wall. 358, 20 L. ed. 430	1045
		v. Shriver, 3 Wall. Jr. 219, Fed. Cas. No. 13,108	331
		v. State (Ark.) 16 S. W. 2	494
		v. Whitfield, 67 Tex. 126, 2 S. W. 822	493

Smith's Appeal, 61 Conn. 420, 16 L. R. A. 539, 24 Atl. 273	351	State v. Ashley, 1 Ark. 304	829
Smith-Frazier Boot & Shoe Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 49 Mo. App. 99	527	v. Austin, 113 Mo. 538, 21 S. W. 31	524
Smoot v. Mobile & M. R. Co. 67 Ala. 13	297	v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 230, 26 Am. Dec. 561	258
Snyder v. Hopkins, 31 Kan. 557, 3 Pac. 367	389	v. Beach (Ind.) 43 N. E. 951	638
Soeld v. Guggenheim Smelting Co. 50 L. R. A. 417	694	v. Belding, 43 Or. 95, 71 Pac. 330	1142
Solemon v. Dreschler, 4 Minn. 278, Gil. 197	1161	v. Berry, 8 Me. 179	550
Sommers v. Mississippi & T. R. Co. 7 Lea, 201	538	v. Beswick, 13 R. I. 218, 43 Am. Rep. 26	631, 632, 636
Soulard, Re, 141 Mo. 650, 48 S. W. 617	798	v. Bixman, 162 Mo. 1, 62 S. W. 828	940
800, 801, 802	802	v. Bockstruck, 136 Mo. 335, 38 S. W. 317	921, 925, 931, 939
Soulard's Case. See SOULARD, RE.		v. Borowsky, 11 Nev. 119	848
Southard v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 34 Conn. 574, Fed. Cas. No. 13, 182	425	v. Boswell, 104 Ind. 541, 4 N. E. 675	1158
South Baltimore Car Works v. Schaefer, 96 Md. 105, 94 Am. St. Rep. 560, 53 Atl. 665	276	v. Bosworth, 13 Vt. 402	1155
Southern P. Co. v. Huntsman, 55 C. C. A. 366, 118 Fed. 412	293	v. Broadbelt, 89 Md. 565, 45 L. R. A. 485, 73 Am. St. Rep. 201, 43 Atl. 771	935
v. Pool, 160 U. S. 428, 40 L. ed. 485 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 338	1169	v. Brown, 5 R. I. 1	828
Southern R. Co. v. Born Steel Range Co. 122 Ga. 658, 50 S. E. 489	303	v. Buchanan, 5 Harr. & J. 317, 9 Am. Dec. 534	254
Southport, W. & D. R. Co. v. Platt Land, 133 N. C. 266, 45 S. E. 589	976	v. Buflum, 22 N. H. 267	850
South Staffordshire Waterworks v. Sharman, 65 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 400	482	v. Cairns, 64 Kan. 782, 58 L. R. A. 55, 68 Pac. 621	495
Sovern v. Yoran, 16 Or. 269, 8 Am. St. Rep. 293, 20 Pac. 100	481	v. Caldwell, 124 Mo. 509, 28 S. W. 4	850
Spalds v. Barrett, 57 Ill. 289, 11 Am. Rep. 10	571	v. Call, 121 N. C. 643, 28 S. E. 517	815
Spang v. Hill, 2 Woodw. Dec. 45	393	v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 402, 10 Am. St. Rep. 419, 13 Atl. 585	922
Sparhawk v. Salem, 1 Allen, 30, 79 Am. Dec. 700	668	v. Carl, 43 Ark. 353, 51 Am. Rep. 565	494, 498, 503
Spars v. Forrest, 15 Vt. 435	1158	v. Clark, 15 Ohio, 595	550
Spauding v. Peabody, 153 Mass. 129, 10 L. R. A. 397, 26 N. E. 421	668	v. Clark, 30 Wash. 439, 71 Pac. 20	155
Specialty Furniture Co. v. Kingsbury (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 1030	492	v. Clarke, 54 Mo. 17, 14 Am. Rep. 471	939
Speiden v. State, 3 Tex. App. 162, 30 Am. Rep. 126	1026	v. Colby, 92 Iowa, 463, 61 N. W. 187	495
Spencer v. Merchant, 100 N. Y. 585, 3 N. E. 682	436	v. Connor, 86 Tex. 133, 23 S. W. 1103	659
v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921	436	v. Cooke, 24 Minn. 247, 31 Am. Rep. 344	488
v. Vance, 57 Mo. 429	438	v. Cunningham, 25 Conn. 195, 629, 631, 635	631, 635
Sperber v. Balster, 66 Ga. 317	318	v. Dalton, 109 Tenn. 544, 72 S. W. 456	523
Spokane v. Fitchburg, 177 Mass. 87, 83 Am. St. Rep. 262, 58 N. E. 176	668	v. Dame, 11 N. H. 271, 35 Am. Dec. 495	422
Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322	1161	v. Dellesselline, 1 McCord L. 52	852
Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Kennedy, 7 Ind. App. 502, 34 N. E. 856	146	v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778, 4 S. E. 477	633, 637
Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Payne, 57 Kan. 201, 46 Pac. 315	1054	v. Dorsey, 118 Ind. 187, 10 Am. St. Rep. 111, 20 N. E. 777	995
Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 28 L. ed. 173, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48	438	v. Dupauler, 46 La. Ann. 577, 26 L. R. A. 162, 49 Am. St. Rep. 334, 15 So. 502	923, 924
Stace v. Bumgardner, 89 Va. 420, 16 S. E. 252	320	v. Dyer, 67 Vt. 690, 32 Atl. 814	1155
Stackpole v. Hallahan, 16 Mont. 40, 28 L. R. A. 502, 40 Pac. 80	658	v. Falkenham, 73 Md. 467, 21 Atl. 370	268
Stafford v. Walter, 67 Ill. 83	493	v. Ferguson, 50 Mo. 409	561
Standard Oil Co. v. Murray, 57 C. C. A. 1, 119 Fed. 557	535	v. First Dist. Ct. Judge, 17 La. 511	149
v. Wakefield, 102 Va. 824, 66 L. R. A. 792, 47 S. E. 830	204	v. Flanagan, 38 W. Va. 53, 22 L. R. A. 430, 45 Am. St. Rep. 836, 17 S. E. 792	494, 498, 503
Standill v. County Revenue Court, 80 Ala. 287	437	v. Fourcade, 45 La. Ann. 717, 40 Am. St. Rep. 249, 13 So. 187	923
Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508, 37 L. ed. 259, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418	883	v. Fournier, 68 Vt. 202, 35 Atl. 178	1158
v. Schwalby, 162 U. S. 272, 40 L. ed. 966, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754	258	v. Fox, 25 N. J. L. 566	422
Stanton v. Eager, 16 Pick. 467	493	v. Frappart, 31 La. Ann. 340	643
v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 883	198	v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932, 43 S. E. 153	197
Starbeck v. Murray, 5 Wend. 148, 21 Am. Dec. 172	800	v. Garland, 29 N. C. (7 Ired. L.) 48	883
Start v. Parker, 56 N. H. 481	1000	v. Gilbert, 87 N. C. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 518	629
v. Starr, 6 Wall. 418, 18 L. ed. 930	751	v. Haley, 52 Vt. 476	1153
Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 17	421	v. Hathaway, 115 Mo. 36, 21 S. W. 1081	815
State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110	921	v. Hayes, 105 Mo. 76, 24 Am. St. Rep. 360, 16 S. W. 514	1026
v. American Exp. Co. 118 Iowa, 447, 92 N. W. 66	495	v. Hays, 4 La. Ann. 59	850
1 L.R.A. (N.E.)		v. Herod, 20 Iowa, 123	586
		v. Higgs, 126 N. C. 1014, 48 L. R. A. 446, 35 S. E. 473	365
		v. Hodgson, 66 Vt. 134, 28 Atl. 1089	1156
		v. Hollenbeck, 67 Vt. 34, 30 Atl. 696	1158
		v. House, 65 N. C. 315, 6 Am. Rep. 744	395

State v. Hoyt, 13 Minn. 132, Gil. 125 ..	422	State v. Wingfield, 115 Mo. 428, 37 Am.
v. Hughes, 22 W. Va. 743 ..	495	St. Rep. 406, 22 S. W. 363	5
v. Hull, 72 Am. St. Rep. 705, n. 1026	635	v. Winninger, 81 Ind. 51 ..	2
v. Hurley, 54 Me. 562 ..	493	v. Yewell, 63 Md. 121 ..	8
v. Intoxicating Liquors, 73 Me. 278	493	State ex rel. Warner v. Agee, 105 Tenn.	8
v. Jenkins, 14 Rich. L. 215, 94	422	588, 59 S. W. 340 ..	8
Am. Dec. 132 ..	850	Shawnee County v. American Book	10
v. Jones, 3 La. Ann. 10 ..	633	Co. 65 Kan. 847, 69 Pac. 563	8
v. Joyner, 81 N. C. 537 ..	437	Atty. Gen. v. Balcom, 71 Mo. App.	5
v. King, 37 Iowa, 482 ..	935	27 ..	5
v. Layton, 160 Mo. 498, 62 L. R. A.	1155	White v. Barker, 116 Iowa, 96, 57	8
163, 83 Am. St. Rep. 487, 61	867	L. R. A. 244, 93 Am. St.	5
S. W. 171 ..	882	Rep. 222, 89 N. W. 204 ..	8
v. Leach, 77 Vt. 166, 59 Atl. 168	867	Dearing v. Berkeley, 140 Mo. 184,	8
v. Leatherman, 38 Ark. 81 ..	481	41 S. W. 732 ..	8
v. Lee, 17 Or. 488, 21 Pac. 455 ..	850	Circuit Atty. v. Bernoudy, 36 Mo.	8
v. McCann, 19 Mo. 249 ..	1028	279 ..	8
v. McCoy, 1 Baxt. 111 ..	866	Atty. Gen. v. Bishop, 44 Mo. 229	8
v. McCune, 70 Am. Dec. 182 ..	340	Crow v. Bland, 144 Mo. 534, 41 L.	8
v. McGee, 81 Iowa, 17, 46 N. W.	1154	R. A. 297, 46 S. W. 440 ..	8
764 ..	1155	McReavy v. Burke, 8 Wash. 412,	3
v. McKinney, 29 Mont. 375, 74 Pac.	943	36 Pac. 281 ..	5
1095 ..	258	Howlett v. Cheetham, 19 Wash.	5
v. Magoon, 61 Vt. 47, 17 Atl. 729	632	330, 53 Pac. 349 ..	8
480 ..	852	Atty. Gen. v. Cincinnati Gaslight	2
v. Maryland Agrl. & Mechanical	884	& Coke Co. 18 Ohio St. 262 ..	8
Asso. 98 Md. 223, 56 Atl. 484	806	Atty. Gen. v. Claggett, 73 Mo. 388	4
v. Mellor, 13 R. I. 666 ..	635	Sandford v. Common Pleas Court,	31
v. Merry, 3 Mo. 278 ..	653	36 N. J. L. 72, 13 Am. Rep.	51
v. Milburn, 9 Gill, 105 ..	842	422 ..	51
v. Moore, 32 Or. 65, 48 Pac. 468	851	Police Com'rs v. County Court, 34	51
v. Morgan, 40 Conn. 44 ..	268	Mo. 546 ..	51
v. Muse, 20 N. C. (4 Dev. & B. L.)	488	Atty. Gen. v. Covington, 29 Ohio	5
403 ..	500	St. 102 ..	5
v. Nelson, 91 Minn. 143, 97 N. W.	485	Hays v. Cummins, 99 Tenn. 682, 42	5
652 ..	831	S. W. 880 ..	5
v. Nelson, 28 Mo. 13 ..	564	Dowdall v. Dahl, 60 Minn. 108,	5
v. Northern C. R. Co. 90 Md. 473,	495	71 N. W. 910 ..	5
45 Atl. 465 ..	851	Holt v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 4	51
v. Noyes, 30 N. H. 279 ..	488	L. R. A. 65, 21 N. E. 274 ..	51
v. O'Neill, 58 Vt. 140, 56 Am. Rep.	500	Garrabad v. Dering, 84 Wis. 585,	94
558, 2 Atl. 586 ..	485	19 L. R. A. 858, 36 Am. St.	83
v. Parker, 26 Vt. 357 ..	831	Rep. 948, 54 N. W. 1104 ..	83
v. Paterson & H. Turnp. Co. 21 N.	504	West v. Des Moines, 96 Iowa, 521,	5
J. L. 9 ..	495	31 L. R. A. 186, 59 Am. St.	5
v. Peel Spilit Coal Co. 36 W. Va.	851	Rep. 381, 65 N. W. 818 ..	5
856, 17 L. R. A. 385, 15 S. E.	256	Busch v. Dillon, 96 Mo. 56, 8 S.	5
1018 ..	850	W. 781 ..	5
v. Peters, 91 Me. 31, 39 Atl. 342 ..	930	Hughes v. District Court (Minn.)	4
v. Randolph, 26 Mo. 213 ..	630	103 N. W. 744 ..	4
v. Rogers, 2 Harr. & M'H. 198 ..	155	Simpson v. Dowdall, 33 Minn. 536,	8
v. Russell, 24 Tex. 505 ..	443	24 N. W. 188 ..	8
v. Schlenker, 112 Iowa, 642, 51	495	Yale v. Duffel, 41 La. Ann. 518, 6	11
L. R. A. 347, 84 Am. St.	495	So. 512 ..	17
Rep. 360, 84 N. W. 098 ..	930	Curtis v. Durein, 46 Kan. 695, 27	11
v. Shank, 74 Iowa, 652, 38 N. W.	630	Pac. 148 ..	11
525 ..	155	Jacobs v. Eleventh Dist. Judge, 40	11
v. Sharpless, 31 Wash. 191, 96	443	La. Ann. 206, 3 So. 561 ..	8
Am. St. Rep. 893, 71 Pac. 737	495	Lloyd v. Elliott, 13 Utah, 200, 44	8
v. Shevlin-Carpenter Co. 66 Minn.	1050	Pac. 248 ..	8
217, 68 N. W. 973 ..	422	Walker v. Equitable Loan & Invest.	8
v. Shields, 110 La. 547, 34 So. 673	1158	Asso. 142 Mo. 325, 41 S. W.	8
v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 67 L. R. A.	923	916 ..	8
903, 69 Pac. 199 ..	1026	Witter v. Forkner, 94 Iowa, 1, 28	4
v. Smith, 32 Me. 369, 54 Am.	435	L. R. A. 206, 62 N. W. 772 ..	4
Dec. 578 ..	923	Geake v. Fox, 158 Ind. 126, 56 L.	5
v. Smith, 7 Vt. 141 ..	1026	R. A. 893, 63 N. E. 19 ..	5
v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am.	435	Diepenbrock v. Gates, 35 Minn.	5
Rep. 344 ..	923	385, 28 N. W. 927 ..	5
v. Sney, 22 Neb. 481, 35 N. W.	1026	Atty. Gen. v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 190	5
219 ..	435	Davidson v. Gorman, 40 Minn.	5
v. Squires, 26 Iowa, 340 ..	923	232, 2 L. R. A. 701, 41 N.	5
v. Stone, 46 La. Ann. 147, 15 So.	633	W. 948 ..	5
11 ..	943	Rife v. Hawes, 177 Mo. 380, 76	5
v. Stovall, 103 N. C. 416, 8 S. E.	430	S. W. 653 ..	5
900 ..	995	Atty. Gen. v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio	5
v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 609, 15 L. R.	850	St. 98, 5 N. E. 228 ..	5
A. 423, 28 Am. St. Rep. 715,	851	Atty. Gen. v. Hays, 44 Mo. 230	5
14 S. E. 287 ..	853	Hitchcock v. Hewitt, 3 S. D. 187,	5
v. Viers, 82 Iowa, 397, 48 N. W.	930	16 L. R. A. 413, 44 Am. St.	5
732 ..	815	Rep. 788, 52 N. W. 875 ..	5
v. Vines, 93 N. C. 493, 53 Am.	488	Ekhart v. Hoff, 88 Tex. 297, 31	5
Rep. 466 ..		S. W. 290 ..	5
v. Vion, 12 La. Ann. 688 ..		Atwood v. Hunter, 38 Kan. 578,	5
v. Watson, 54 Mo. App. 416 ..		17 Pac. 177 ..	5
v. West Wisconsin R. Co. 34 Wis.		Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. James-	5
197 ..		ville Street R. Co. 87 Wis. 72,	5
v. Whitaker, 160 Mo. 59, 60 S. W.		22 L. R. A. 759, 41 Am. St.	5
1068 ..		Rep. 23, 57 N. W. 970 ..	5
v. Wilcox, 64 Kan. 789, 68 Pac.		Breeden v. Lewis, 26 Utah, 120,	5
634 ..		72 Pac. 388 ..	5
v. Wilcox, 42 Conn. 364, 19 Am.		Crow v. Lindell R. Co. 151 Mo.	5
Rep. 536 ..		102, 52 S. W. 248 ..	5

- State ex rel. Whitcomb v. Lockerby, 57 Minn. 411, 59 N. W. 495 827, 834
 Atty. Gen. v. McAdoo, 38 Mo. 452 831
 Johnson v. McClellan, 87 Tenn. 522, 9 S. W. 233 525
 Kennedy v. McGarry, 21 Wis. 496 593
 Kichey v. McGrath, 95 Mo. 193, 8 S. W. 425 498
 Walker v. McLean County, 11 N. D. 356, 92 N. W. 385 832, 835
 Brown v. McMillan, 108 Mo. 153, 18 S. W. 784 831
 Ing v. McSpaden, 137 Mo. 628, 39 S. W. 81 882
 Jackson v. Mansfield, 99 Mo. App. 146, 72 S. W. 471 832
 Clapp v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. 40 Minn. 213, 3 L. R. A. 510, 41 N. W. 1020 834, 835
 Bell v. Moriarty, 82 Minn. 68, 84 N. W. 493 834
 Nelson v. Mott, 111 Wis. 19, 86 N. W. 569 835
 DuBerrv v. Nicholson, 102 N. C. 465, 11 Am. St. Rep. 767, 9 S. E. 545 835
 Atty. Gen. v. O'Neill, 24 Wis. 149 488
 Whitcomb v. Otis, 58 Minn. 275, 59 N. W. 1015 827, 828, 834
 Lindholm v. Parker, 25 Minn. 215 883
 Filer v. Patterson (N. J. L.) 22 Atl. 802 524
 Atty. Gen. v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629, 4 N. E. 81 524
 Maggard v. Pond, 93 Mo. 606, 6 S. W. 469 488
 Krey v. Probate Court 51 Minn. 241, 53 N. W. 463 1166
 Boyd v. Rose, 84 Mo. 198 831
 Waggoner v. Russell, 34 Neb. 116, 15 L. R. A. 740, 33 Am. St. Rep. 625, 51 N. W. 465 658
 Hahn v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 35 Minn. 222, 28 N. W. 245 659
 Law v. Saxon, 30 Fla. 668, 18 L. R. A. 721, 32 Am. St. Rep. 46, 12 So. 218 834
 Atty. Gen. v. Seattle Gas & Electric Co. 28 Wash. 488, 68 Pac. 946, 70 Pac. 114 837
 Miller v. Seymour, 67 N. J. L. 482, 51 Atl. 719 832
 Heatherly v. Shank, 36 W. Va. 230, 14 S. E. 1001 831
 Probstfield v. Sharp, 27 Minn. 38, 6 N. W. 408 828, 833
 Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Sheboygan, 111 Wis. 23, 86 N. W. 857 587
 Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Sheboygan, 114 Wis. 505, 90 N. W. 441 587
 Behan v. Sixth Dist. Judge, 82 La. Ann. 1276 587
 Tilley v. Slover, 113 Mo. 208, 20 S. W. 788 1150
 Smith v. Smith, 69 Ohio St. 196, 68 N. E. 1044 595
 Stearns v. Smith, 6 Wash. 496, 33 Pac. 974 923
 Gibbs v. Somers Point, 49 N. J. L. 517, 10 Atl. 377 594
 Kenner v. Spears (Tenn. Ch. App.) 53 S. W. 247 831
 Commercial Electric Light & P. Co. v. Stallcup, 15 Wash. 263, 46 Pac. 251 498
 Watson v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 15 L. R. A. 145, 34 Am. St. Rep. 541, 30 N. E. 279 537
 Bishop v. State Bd. of Corrections, 16 Utah. 478, 52 Pac. 1090 767
 Chapman v. State Medical Examiners, 34 Minn. 387, 26 N. W. 123 524
 Powell v. State Medical Examining Board, 32 Minn. 324, 50 Am. Rep. 575, 20 N. W. 238 817
 Atty. Gen. v. Steers, 44 Mo. 223 815
 Baltzell v. Stewart, 74 Wis. 620, 6 L. R. A. 394, 43 N. W. 947 831
 Dunlap v. Stewart, 6 Houst. (Del.) 359 438, 839, 833
- State ex rel. Wilson v. Stone, 24 Nev. 310, 53 Pac. 497 847
 Byers v. Superior Court, 28 Wash. 408, 68 Pac. 865 557
 Flaherty v. Superior Court, 35 Wash. 200, 77 Pac. 33 557
 Wells v. Tingey, 24 Utah, 225, 67 Pac. 33 979
 Ewing v. Townsley, 56 Mo. 107 851
 Wetzel v. Tracy, 48 Minn. 497, 51 N. W. 613 834
 Atty. Gen. v. Vall, 53 Mo. 97 831
 Burroughs v. Webster, 150 Ind. 607, 41 L. R. A. 212, 50 N. E. 750 815
 Brown v. Westport, 116 Mo. 605, 22 S. W. 888 831
 Dome v. Wilcox, 45 Mo. 458 487, 488
 Bulkeley v. Williams, 68 Conn. 131, 48 L. R. A. 465, 35 Atl. 24 517, 520
 Gaynor v. Young, 38 La. Ann. 923 1150
 State, Britton, Prosecutor, v. Blake, 35 N. J. L. 208, 36 N. J. L. 442 439
 State, Paul, Prosecutor, v. Circuit Judge, 50 N. J. L. 585, 1 L. R. A. 86, 15 Atl. 272 487
 State, Lantz, Prosecutor, v. Hightstown, 46 N. J. L. 102 460
 State, Kennelly, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 57 N. J. L. 293, 26 L. R. A. 281, 30 Atl. 531 984
 State, Shivers, Prosecutor, v. Newton, 45 N. J. L. loc. cit. 475 924
 State use of Burt v. Allen, 48 W. Va. 154, 50 L. R. A. 284, 86 Am. St. Rep. 29, 35 S. E. 900 781
 State use of Charlotte Hall School v. Greenwell, 4 Gill & J. 407 258
 State use of Eckhardt v. Lazaretto Guano Co. 90 Md. 192, 44 Atl. 1017 276
 State Bd. of Health v. Roy, 22 E. I. 538, 48 Atl. 802 815
 State Center v. Barenstein, 66 Iowa, 249, 23 N. W. 852 943
 State Ins. Co. v. School Dist. No. 19, 66 Kan. 77, 71 Pac. 272 426
 State Mut. E. Ins. Assn. v. Brinkley State Heading Co. 61 Ark. 1, 20 L. R. A. 712, 54 Am. St. Rep. 191, 31 S. W. 157 1045
 Staten Island Rapid Transit Co. Re, 103 N. Y. 251, 8 N. E. 548 747
 State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 610, 23 L. ed. 672 271
 Steam Nav. Co. v. Weed, 17 Barb. 378 1045
 Steeples v. Panel & Folding Box Co. 33 Wash. 359, 74 Pac. 475 286
 Steffenson v. Chicago, M. & St. F. R. Co. 45 Minn. 355, 11 L. R. A. 271, 47 N. W. 1068 703
 Steinert v. United Brotherhood C. & J. 91 Minn. 189, 97 N. W. 668 1067
 Stensgaard v. Smith, 43 Minn. 11, 19 Am. St. Rep. 205, 44 N. W. 669 448
 Stephens v. Adair, 82 Tex. 222, 18 S. W. 102 493
 Stern v. Rosenheim, 67 Md. 503, 10 Atl. 221 449
 Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450 196, 197
 v. Metropolitan District R. Co. L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 60 1087
 v. New York Elev. R. Co. 25 Jones & S. 416, 8 N. Y. Supp. 313 84
 Stevenson v. Morris Mach. Works, 69 Miss. 232, 13 So. 834 450
 Stewart v. Harris, 9 Humph. 714 371
 v. Polk County, 30 Iowa, 1 1 Am. Rep. 238 979
 v. Thomson, 97 Ky. 575, 36 L. R. A. 582, 53 Am. St. Rep. 431, 31 S. W. 133 197
 v. VanDeventer Carpet Co. 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562 301, 302
 Stewart's Case. See STEWART v. VAN DEVENTER CARPET CO.
 Stillwell v. Carpenter, 62 N. Y. 639 163, 164, 166
 Stinson v. People, 43 Ill. 397 866
 Stokes v. O'Fallon, 2 Mo. 32 465
 v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492 841
 v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115 537

Stone v. Clark, 1 Met. 378, 35 Am. Dec. 370	371	Taylor v. Dowlen, L. R. 4 Ch. 697	1086
v. Hackett, 12 Gray, 227	801	v. Newberne, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 141, 84 Am. Dec. 506	631
v. Lane, 10 Allen, 74	408	v. Pickett, 52 Iowa, 467, 3 N. W. 514	493
v. Wisconsin, 94 U. S. 181, 24 L. ed. 102	331	v. Rasch, 5 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 399, Fed. Cas. No. 13,801	654
Stoneroad v. Stoneroad, 158 U. S. 240, 39 L. ed. 966, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822	749	v. Southgate, 4 Myl. & C. 203	1086
Stott v. Lord, 31 L. J. Ch. N. S. 391	805	v. State, 130 Ind. 66, 29 N. E. 415	422
Stoughton v. State, 5 Wis. 291	883	v. Victoria Co-Op. Store Co. 26 N. S. 223	493
Stowel v. Zouch, 1 Plowd. 356	414	v. Witman, 3 Grant, Cas. 138, 907, Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Hatcher, 3 L. R. A. 587, 39 Fed. 440	450
Strauss v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 126 N. C. 971, 54 L. R. A. 605, 83 Am. St. Rep. 699, 86 S. E. 352	624	Tebbs v. Duval, 17 Gratt. 349	320
Stringer v. Alabama Mineral R. Co. 99 Ala. 397, 13 So. 75	681	Teegarden v. Racine, 56 Wis. 545, 14 N. W. 614	459
Strong v. Preserved Fish, 13 Vt. 277	654	Tegler v. Shipman, 33 Iowa, 194, 11 Am. Rep. 118	495
Stroupp v. McCauley, 45 Ga. 74	389	Temple v. Lawson, 19 Ark. 148	1085
Stuart v. Boulware, 138 U. S. 78, 33 L. ed. 668, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242	1087	v. Wright, 94 Va. 338, 26 S. E. 844	320
v. Laird, 1 Cranch, 299, 2 L. ed. 115	1153	Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 129, 29 L. ed. 830, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645	768
v. Noble Ditch Co. (Idaho) 76 Pac. 255	602	Tennis v. Midkiff, 55 Ill. App. 642	457
v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289	436	Terre Haute v. Hudnut, 112 Ind. 542, 13 N. E. 886	956
v. Simpson, 1 Wend. 379	208	Territory v. Delinquent Tax. List (N. M.) 76 Pac. 316	1128
Sturdivant v. Neill, 27 Miss. 157	1000	Territory ex rel. Wade v. Ashenfelter, 4 N. M. 93, 12 Pac. 879	833
Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529	498	Gramburg v. Nowlin, 3 Dak. 349, 20 N. W. 430	1141
Suksdorf v. Humphrey, 36 Wash. 1, 77 Pac. 1071	1039	Parker v. Smith, 3 Minn. 240, 74 Am. Dec. 749, Gil. 164	830
Sullivan v. Holyoke, 135 Mass. 278	668		833
Sully v. Kuehl, 30 Iowa, 275	435	Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 41 L. ed. 1136, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707	539
Summeril v. Elder, 1 Blinn. 106	493	v. Behymer, 189 U. S. 468, 47 L. ed. 905, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622	296
Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Jordan, 117 Ga. 808, 45 S. E. 33, 381, 298, 3 N. E. 818	425	Texas C. R. Co. v. Dorsey, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 377, 70 S. W. 575, 506	507
Sutton v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 50 N. Y. S. B. 514, 21 N. Y. Supp. 312	292	Thacher v. Churchill, 118 Mass., loc. cit. 110	790
Swain v. Tennessee Copper Co. 111 Tenn. 437, 78 S. W. 93	109	Tham v. J. T. Steeb Shipping Co. 39 Wash. —, 81 Pac. 711	287
Swale v. Swale, 22 Beav. 584	505	Thayer v. Stearns, 1 Pick. 482	271
Swan v. Kemp, 97 Md. 692, 55 Atl. 441	267	Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 304	193
v. Norvell, 107 Wis. 625, 83 N. W. 934	890	Thomas v. Arthur, 7 Bush, 245	822
Swanke v. McCarty, 81 Wis. 109, 51 N. W. 92	493	v. Ludington, 104 Mass. 193	1006
Swearengen v. Gulick, 67 Ill. 208	744	v. Pennrich, 28 Ohio St. 55	654
Swearengen v. Sewickley Dairy Co. 198 Pa. 68, 53 L. R. A. 471, 47 Atl. 941	906, 915	v. People, 107 Ill. 517, 47 Am. Rep. 458	589
Sweeney v. Owsley, 14 B. Mon. 413	495	v. Scotland County, 3 Dill. 7, Fed. Cas. No. 13,909	351
Sweet v. Hulbert, 51 Barb. 312	846	v. Stetson, 62 Iowa, 537, 49 Am. Rep. 148, 17 N. W. 751	654
Swift v. Smith, 102 U. S. 442, 26 L. ed. 193	104	Thompson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 104 Fed. 845	1166
Swisher v. Com. 26 Gratt. 963, 21 Am. Rep. 330	421	v. Hazen, 25 Me. 104	815
Swope v. Leffingwell, 105 U. S. 3, 26 L. ed. 939	1046	v. Hopper, 6 El. & Bl. 944	1108
Sykes v. Chadwick, 18 Wall. 141, 21 L. ed. 824	326	v. Lowell, L. & H. Street R. Co. 170 Mass. 577, 40 L. R. A. 345, 64 Am. St. Rep. 323, 49 N. E. 913	431
Sykora v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 59 Minn. 130, 60 N. W. 1008	1166	v. Motor Road Co. 82 Cal. 497, 23 Pac. 130	809
T.
Talbot, Re, 110 Fed. 924	323	v. Peru, 29 Ind. 305	498
Tallman v. McCarty, 11 Wis. 401	890	v. State, 18 Ind. 386, 81 Am. Dec. 364	1026
Taney v. Woodmansee, 23 W. Va. 709	1085	v. Tolmie, 2 Pet. 167, 7 L. ed. 385	1094
Tanner v. Merrill, 108 Mich. 58, 31 L. R. A. 171, 62 Am. St. Rep. 687, 65 N. W. 664	872	v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. ed. 897	891
Tantum v. Miller, 11 N. J. Eq. 551	1007	Thrall v. Knapp, 17 Iowa, 468	141
Tarbox v. Gotzian, 20 Minn. 139, Gil. 122	448	Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 663, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 474	1167
v. Sughrue, 36 Kan. 225, 12 Pac. 935	658	Thrower v. State, 117 Ga. 756, 45 S. E. 126	553
Tarkio v. Cook, 120 Mo. 1, 41 Am. St. Rep. 678, 25 S. W. 202	939	Thurston v. Clark, 107 Cal. 288, 40 Pac. 435	848
Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392, 24 L. R. A. 671, 19 S. E. 767	984	Tiffin v. McCormack, 84 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408	107
v. St. Paul, 56 Minn. 527, 45 Am. St. Rep. 501, 58 N. W. 158	956	Tilton v. Swift, 40 Iowa, 78	435
Taylor v. Mosher, 29 Md. 451	785, 786	Timberlake v. Powell, 99 N. C. 235, 5 S. R. 410	151
Taylor, Re, 55 Ill. 252	465	Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289	668
v. Bradley, 39 N. Y. 129, 100 Am. Dec. 415	450
1 I. R. A. (N. S.)

Tobin v. McKinney, 15 S. D. 257, 91 Am. St. Rep. 694, 88 N. W. 572	1135	Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 633	350
Toepfer v. Lampert, 102 Wis. 463, 78 N. W. 779	801	Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. McMillen, 24 Ohio St. 67	1043
Toledo Tie & Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 33 W. Va. 566, 25 Am. St. Rep. 925, 11 S. E. 37	1045	Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188	1045
Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Chew, 67 Ill. 378	183	Union News Co. v. Morrow, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 302, 46 S. W. 6	364
Toierton & S. Co. v. Anglo-California Bank, 112 Iowa, 706, 50 L. R. A. 777, 84 N. W. 930	245	Union P. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 161 U. S. 91, 40 L. ed. 628, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493	298
v. Barch, 84 Minn. 497, 88 N. W. 19	1045	v. Daniels, 152 U. S. 684, 38 L. ed. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756	295
Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall. 454, 21 L. ed. 204	1022	v. Kansas City Elevator Co. 3 McCrary, 463, 17 Fed. 200	339
v. Ellison, 104 Mo. 105, 16 S. W. 201	798	v. Snyder. See UNION P. R. Co. v. DANIELS.	449
Topeka v. Huntton, 46 Kan. 634, 26 Pac. 488	437	Union Ref. Co. v. Barton, 77 Ala. 148	450
Torrey v. Corliss, 33 Me. 333	493	Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank v. Gillespie, 137 U. S. 411, 34 L. ed. 724, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118	1115
Towne v. Salentine, 92 Wis. 404, 66 N. W. 395	570	United R. & Electric Co. v. Baltimore, 93 Md. 633, 52 L. R. A. 772, 49 Atl. 655	268
Townsend v. Todd, 91 U. S. 452, 23 L. ed. 413	331	United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 691, 8 L. ed. 547	1094
Traders' Ins. Co. v. Mann, 118 Ga. 381, 45 S. E. 426	390	v. Barker, 2 Wheat. 395, 4 L. ed. 271	258
Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Looney, 99 Tenn. 278, 38 L. R. A. 837, 63 Am. St. Rep. 830, 42 S. W. 149	194	v. Child, 12 Wall. 232, 20 L. ed. 360	872
Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co. 144 Mass. 531, 59 Am. Rep. 113, 11 N. E. 929	756	v. Dewitt, 9 Wall. 41, 19 L. ed. 593	934
Trainor v. Board of Auditors, 89 Mich. 162, 15 L. R. A. 95, 50 N. W. 809	595	v. Freeman, 3 How. 556, 11 L. ed. 724	414
Treadaway v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 466, 62 S. W. 574	503	v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 608, 40 L. ed. 578, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427	979
504, 511	512	v. Goldstein, 1 Dill. 413, Fed. Cas. No. 15,226	550
Treadaway's Case. See TREADAWAY V. STATE.		v. Hand, 6 McLean, 274, Fed. Cas. No. 15,296	850
Treat v. Hiles, 81 Wis. 280, 50 N. W. 896	450	v. Herron, 20 Wall. 251, 22 L. ed. 275	883
Treich v. Kamke, 63 Md. 278	276	v. Horton, 2 Dill. 94, Fed. Cas. No. 15,393	850
Trew v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 6 Hurist. & N. 844	425	v. Hudson, 65 Fed. 68	850
Triette v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 Miss. 182, 19 L. R. A. 660, 35 Am. St. Rep. 642, 12 So. 32	198	v. Insley, 130 U. S. 263, 32 L. ed. 968, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485	883
Trimble v. People, 19 Colo. 197, 41 Am. St. Rep. 236, 34 Pac. 981	595	v. Knight, 14 Pet. 301, 10 L. ed. 465	883
v. Spiller, 7 T. B. Mon. 394, 18 Am. Dec. 189	364	v. Lackey, 120 Fed. 577	495
Tripp v. Spring, 5 Sawy. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 14,180	749	v. Lee, 106 U. S. 106, 27 L. ed. 171, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240	729
Triton, The, 64 C. C. A. 226, 129 Fed. 698	874	v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 96, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747	865
Truax v. Miller, 48 Minn. 62, 50 N. W. 935	672	v. Morrison, 4 Pet. 124, 7 L. ed. 804	331
Trudell v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 126 Mich. 73, 53 L. R. A. 271, 85 N. W. 250	823	v. Orene Parker Co. 121 Fed. 506	495
Truman Case. See LONDON B. & S. C. R. Co. v. TRUMAN.		v. Sacia, 2 Fed. 754	565
Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe & J. River R. Co. 11 Leigh, 78, 36 Am. Dec. 374	266	v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 150, 8 L. ed. 640	524
Tucker v. Allen, 16 Kan. 312	809	United States ex rel. Von Hoffman v. Quincy. See VON HOFFMAN V. QUINCY.
v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 13 N. E. 809	745	United States Exp. Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 156	900
Turner v. Detroit, 104 Mich. 326, 62 N. W. 405	437	United States Mut. Acc. Assn. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755	1072
v. Fendall, 1 Cranch, 117, 2 L. ed. 53	1062	United States, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Sims, 191 U. S. 446, 48 L. ed. 256, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151	512
v. Hancock, L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 303	1087	United States Pipe Line Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 62 N. J. L. 254, 42 L. R. A. 572, 41 Atl. 759	810
v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 110 Ky. 879, 62 S. W. 1025	1017	Upton v. National Bank, 120 Mass. 133	408
v. Martin, 7 De G. M. & G. 429	1119
v. Moberly, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 623	822	V.
Tarpen v. Turlock Irrig. District, 141 Cal. 1, 74 Pac. 295	604	Vanatta v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 38 N. J. L. 282	830
Tatle v. Moore, 3 Ind. Terr. 712, 64 S. W. 585	979	Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co. 170 U. S. 468, 42 L. ed. 1111, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674	043
Tison v. Reynolds, 52 Iowa. 431, 3 N. W. 469	908	Van Etta v. Evenson, 28 Wis. 33, 9 Am. Rep. 486	896
		Vannice v. Bergen, 16 Iowa, 555, 85 Am. Dec. 531	897
U.		Van Schalck v. Third Ave. R. Co. 38 N. Y. 84	961
Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co. 51 W. Va. 106, 41 S. E. 840	810	Vernon v. Keys, 12 East. 632	262
Uiborn, Re, 12 Ohio C. C. 766	352	Verplanck v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 2 Paige, 438	1089
Unaka Nat. Bank v. Butler, 113 Tenn. 574, 83 S. W. 655	193
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

- Vider v. Chicago, 164 Ill. 354, 45 N. E. 720
- Vincent v. Norton & T. Street R. Co. 180 Mass. 104, 61 N. E. 822
- Villet v. Camp, 13 Wis. 198
- Voelcker v. McKay (Tex. Civ. App.) 61 S. W. 424
- Voght v. State, 124 Ind. 358, 24 N. E. 680
- Volght v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 79 Fed. 561, Reversed in 178 U. S. 498, 44 L. ed. 560, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385
- Volgt v. Detroit, 184 U. S. 115, 46 L. ed. 459, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337
- v. Detroit, 123 Mich. 547, 82 N. W. 253
- Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 535, 18 L. ed. 403
- Vosburg v. Putney, 80 Wis. 523, 14 L. R. A. 226, 27 Am. St. Rep. 47, 50 N. W. 403
- Vrooman v. Michle, 69 Mich. 42, 36 N. W. 749
- v. Turner, 69 N. Y. 280, 25 Am. Rep. 195
- Vyne v. Glenn, 41 Mich. 112, 1 N. W. 997
- W.
- Wabash R. Co. v. Dougan, 142 Ill. 248, 34 Am. St. Rep. 74, 31 N. E. 594
- v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 459, 27 L. ed. 607, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932
- Wachsmuth v. Shaw Electric Crane Co. 118 Mich. 275, 76 N. W. 497, 197
- Waddell's Appeal, 84 Pa. 90
- Wadleigh, Ex parte, 82 Cal. 518, 23 Pac. 190
- Waggoner v. State, 155 Ind. 341, 80 Am. St. Rep. 237, 58 N. E. 190
- Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L. R. A. 519, 34 N. E. 545
- Wakefield v. Brown, 38 Minn. 361, 8 Am. St. Rep. 671, 37 N. W. 788
- Wakeman v. Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. 101 N. Y. 205, 54 Am. Rep. 676, 4 N. E. 264
- Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen, 101
- v. Wells, 21 Nev. 51, 9 L. R. A. 59, 37 Am. St. Rep. 478, 24 Pac. 367
- Waldron v. Haverhill, 143 Mass. 582, 10 N. E. 481
- v. Romaine, 22 N. Y. 368
- v. Waldron, 156 U. S. 361, 39 L. ed. 453, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383
- Walker v. Bell. See WALKER v. WALKER.
- v. Cheever, 35 N. H. 339
- v. Denison, 86 Ill. 142
- v. French, 21 Week. Rep. 493
- v. Gillett, 59 Kan. 214, 52 Pac. 442
- v. Vaughn, 33 Conn. 577
- v. Walker, 9 Wall. 743, 19 L. ed. 814
- Walker Case. See WALKER v. GILLET.
- Walkowski v. Penokee & G. Consol. Mines, 115 Mich. 629, 41 L. R. A. 33, 73 N. W. 895
- Wall, Ex parte, 48 Cal. 279, 17 Am. Rep. 425
- Wallace v. Wallace, 3 N. J. Eq. 616
- Wallenweber v. Com. 3 Bush, 68
- Wallingsford v. Alien, 10 Pet. 583, 9 L. ed. 542
- Walter v. Ford, 74 Mo. 195, 41 Am. Rep. 312
- Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Caldwell, 54 Ind. 279, 23 Am. Rep. 641
- v. Calvert, 89 Wis. 640, 62 N. W. 532
- Walton v. Hall, 66 Vt. 455, 29 Atl. 803
- Wanser v. Hoos, 80 N. J. L. 482, 64 Am. St. Rep. 600, 38 Atl. 449
- Waples v. Overaker, 77 Tex. 7, 19 Am. St. Rep. 727, 13 S. W. 527
- Waples-Platter Co. v. Turner, 27 C. C. A. 430, 49 U. S. App. 592, 83 Fed. 64
- Ward v. Bush, 59 N. J. Eq. 144, 45 Atl. 534
- v. White, 86 Va. 212, 19 Am. St. Rep. 883, 9 S. E. 1021
- Warder v. Newdigate, 11 B. Mon. 177, 52 Am. Dec. 567
- v. Robertson, 75 Iowa, 585, 39 N. W. 905
- Warder B. & G. Co. v. Horne Bros. 110 Iowa, 285, 81 N. W. 591
- Wares, Re, 161 Mass. 70, 36 N. E. 586
- Waring v. Waring, 96 Va. 641, 35 S. E. 150
- Warren Chemical & Mfg. Co. v. Holbrook, 118 N. Y. 594, 16 Am. St. Rep. 788, 23 N. E. 908
- Washburn v. Hubbard, 6 Lans. 11
- Washburn Mill Co. v. Barlett, 3 N. D. 138, 54 N. W. 544
- Washburn's Estate. See PUTNAM v. PITNEY.
- Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall. 401, 21 L. ed. 114
- v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 34 L. ed. 235, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1044
- Washington Gaslight Co. v. Lansden, 172 U. S. 534, 43 L. ed. 543, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296
- Watriss v. First Nat. Bank, 124 Mass. 571, 26 Am. Rep. 694
- Watson v. Richardson, 110 Iowa, 673, 80 N. W. 407
- Watt v. Gans, 114 Ala. 264, 62 Am. St. Rep. 99, 21 So. 1011
- Watts v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Tele. Co. 100 Va. 45, 40 S. E. 107
- Watts's Appeal, 78 Pa. 370
- Wayman v. Wayman, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 374, 22 S. W. 557
- Weathered v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 1 Tex. Ct. Rep. 655, 60 S. W. 876
- Weathered Case. See WEATHERED v. STATE.
- Weatherford v. Weatherford, 20 Ala. 548, 56 Am. Dec. 221, n. 471
- Weaver v. Templin, 113 Ind. 298, 14 N. E. 600
- Weaver Case. See ST. LOUIS & S. F. R. CO. v. WEAVER.
- Webbe v. Western U. Tele. Co. 64 Ill. App. 331
- Weeks v. Scharer, 49 C. C. A. 372, 111 Fed. 330
- v. Smith, 81 Me. 538, 18 Atl. 325
- Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 8 L. R. A. 640, 25 N. E. 46
- Weideman v. Tacoma R. & Motor Co. 7 Wash. 517, 35 Pac. 414
- Weidler v. Kaufman, 14 Ohio, 456
- Weigand v. District of Columbia, 22 App. D. C. 559
- Weimer v. Lunbury, 30 Mich. 201
- Weinstock, L. & Co. v. Marks, 109 Cal. 529, 30 L. R. A. 182, 50 Am. St. Rep. 57, 42 Pac. 142
- Weir v. Cram, 37 Iowa, 649
- Weisel v. Eastern R. Co. 79 Minn. 245, 82 N. W. 576
- Weldon v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 34, 35 S. W. 176
- Wellman v. Churchill, 92 Me. 193, 42 Atl. 352
- Wells, Ex parte, 2 Mont. D. & De G. 504
- v. Littlefield, 59 Tex. 556
- v. National Life Assn. 53 L. R. A. 33, 39 C. C. A. 476, 99 Fed. 222
- v. Pierce, 27 N. H. 503
- Welsh v. Manwaring, 120 Wis. 377, 98 N. W. 214
- v. People, 17 Ill. 339
- Wesley Church v. Moore, 10 Pa. 273
- West v. Ross, 53 Mo. 350
- Western v. Ketcham, 51 How. Pr. 455
- Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244, 38 N. E. 241
- Western Travelers' Acci. Assn. v. Holbrook, 65 Neb. 474, 91 N. W. 276, 94 N. W. 816
- Western U. Tele. Co. v. Courtney, 113 Tenn. 482, 82 S. W. 484

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Dougherty, 54 Ark. 221, 11 L. R. A. 102, 26 Am. St. Rep. 33, 15 S. W. 468		Willard v. Eastham, 15 Gray, 328, 79 Am. Dec. 368	326
v. Ferguson (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 1048	527	William Branfoot, The, 3 C. C. A. 158, 9 U. S. App. 129, 52 Fed. 390	539
v. Jones, 95 Ind. 228, 48 Am. Rep. 713	527	Williams v. Birbeck, 1 Hoffm. Ch. 360	581
v. Karr, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 24 S. W. 302	527	v. Briggs, 11 R. I. 476, 23 Am. Rep. 518	457
v. McGill, 21 L. R. A. 818, 6 C. C. A. 521, 12 U. S. App. 651, 57 Fed. 699	527	v. Cammack, 27 Miss. 209, 61 Am. Dec. 508	517
v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511, 14 N. E. 894	1163	v. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. 112 Mo. 463, 34 Am. St. Rep. 403, 20 S. W. 631	1054
v. Mellon, 96 Tenn. 66, 33 S. W. 725	527	v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617	517
v. Meredith, 95 Ind. 93	527	v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 14 L. R. A. 161, 50 N. W. 446	712
v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 195 U. S. 540, 49 L. ed. 312, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133	527	v. Feinman, 14 Kan. 288	494
v. Philadelphia, 9 Sadler (Pa.) 300, 22 W. N. C. 39, 12 Atl. 144	510	v. Iron Belt Bldg. & L. Asso. 131 N. C. 270, 42 S. E. 608	625
v. Phillips, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 608, 21 S. W. 638	586	v. New England Mut. M. Ins. Co. 3 Chf. 244, Fed. Cas. No. 17,731	1108
v. Trumbull, 1 Ind. App. 121, 27 N. E. 313	527	v. Shelby, 2 Or. 144	850
v. Waxelbaum, 113 Ga. 1017, 56 L. R. A. 741, 39 S. E. 443	527	v. State, 51 Neb. 711, 71 N. W. 729	1027
v. Yopst, 118 Ind. 248, 3 L. R. A. 224, 20 N. E. 222	527	v. Wood, 55 Minn. 323, 56 N. W. 1066	1029
Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160	527	William's Case. See Com. v. WILLIAMS.	449
v. Gregg, 1 Barb. Ch. 469	527	Williamson v. Naylor, 3 Younge & C. Exch. 208	1119
West Hartford v. Water Comrs. 68 Conn. 323, 36 Atl. 786	638	Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. 906, 45 S. E. 794	1184
Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Helmholtz, 62 C. C. A. 92, 127 Fed. 92	165	Wilcock v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 166 Pa. 184, 27 L. R. A. 228, 45 Am. St. Rep. 674, 30 Atl. 948	990
Westlake v. St. Louis, 77 Mo. 47, 46 Am. Rep. 4	968	Wilson v. Brett, 11 Mees. & W. 113	680
Weston v. Watts, 45 Hun, 219	295	v. Cochran, 31 Tex. 677, 98 Am. Dec. 553	969
West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 703	772	v. Eureka City, 173 U. S. 32, 43 L. ed. 608, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 317	923
West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 531, 12 L. ed. 544	1039	v. May Pants Co. (Miss.) 37 So. 813	471
Weyerhaeuser v. Minnesota, 176 U. S. 550, 44 L. ed. 583, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485	620	v. Murphy, 1 Phila. 203	408
Wheatley v. Purr, 1 Keen, 551	434	v. Northern P. R. Co. 31 Wash. 67, 71 Pac. 713	287
Wheeler v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 85 Iowa, 167, 52 N. W. 119	501	v. Turner, 164 Ill. 398, 45 N. E. 820	183
Wheeler v. Chicago, 24 Ill. 105, 76 Am. Dec. 736	430	v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 490, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477, 14 N. E. 521	805
v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co. 31 Kan. 640, 3 Pac. 297	658	Wimblish v. Tallbols, 1 Plowd. 57	414
Wheelhouse v. Parr, 141 Mass. 593, 6 N. E. 787	356	Wimer v. Allbaugh, 78 Iowa, 79, 16 Am. St. Rep. 422, 42 N. W. 587	430
Wheeling, P. & C. Transp. Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 273, 25 L. ed. 412	492	Windram v. French, 151 Mass. 549, 8 L. R. A. 750, 24 N. E. 914	183
Wheelchel v. State, 76 Ga. 647	640	Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 176, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476	435
Whitaker v. McBride, 197 U. S. 510, 49 L. ed. 857, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530	830	Wing v. Clark, 24 Me. 366	493
White v. Heylman, 34 Pa. 142	749	Winona & St. P. Land Co. v. Minnesota, 150 U. S. 526, 40 L. ed. 247, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83	434
v. Northwestern North Carolina R. Co. 113 N. C. 610, 22 L. R. A. 627, 37 Am. St. Rep. 639, 18 S. E. 370	871	Winslow v. State, 92 Ala. 78, 9 So. 728	1168
v. Sayers, 101 Va. 821, 45 S. E. 747	985	v. Winslow, 52 Ind. 8	320
v. Tennant, 31 W. Va. 790, 13 Am. St. Rep. 896, 8 S. E. 596	320	Winston v. Johnson, 42 Minn. 398, 45 N. W. 958	570
v. Toles, 7 Ala. 569	781	Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32, 21 N. W. 828	583
Whiting v. Farrand, 1 Conn. 60	654	Wisconsin Trust Co. v. Wisconsin Marine & F. Ins. Co. Bank, 105 Wis. 464, 81 N. W. 642	891
Whitman Agri. Co. v. Straud, 8 Wash. 647, 36 Pac. 682	493	Wise v. Copley, 36 Ga. 508	855
Whitney v. Morrow, 112 U. S. 693, 28 L. ed. 871, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333	493	Wiser v. Blachly, 1 Johns. Ch. 438	166
v. Porter, 23 Ill. 445	749	Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. 52, 14 L. ed. 322	1062
Whitwell, Ex parte, 98 Cal. 73, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152, 32 Pac. 870	744	Witt v. Corcoran, L. R. 2 Ch. Div. 69	1087
Wiggenhorn v. Kountz, 23 Neb. 690, 8 Am. St. Rep. 150, 37 N. W. 603	183	v. Gardiner, 158 Ill. 176, 49 Am. St. Rep. 150, 41 N. E. 781	396
Wilcox v. Howland, 23 Pick. 167	765	Witthaus v. Braun, 44 Md. 303, 22 Am. Rep. 44	712
Wild v. Delg, 43 Ind. 455, 13 Am. Rep. 339	871	Wodell v. Coggeshall, 2 Met. 89, 35 Am. Dec. 391	1108
Wilder v. Bailey, 3 Mass. 289	973	Wolfe v. Pearson, 114 N. C. 621, 19 S. E. 264	984
Wiles v. Rural Homestead Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 425, 32 Atl. 676	1063	Wolpert v. Newcomb, 106 Mich. 357, 64 N. W. 326	436
Wiley v. Brainerd, 11 Vt. 112	575	Womble v. Merchants' Grocery Co. 135 N. C. 474, 47 S. E. 493	633
v. California Hosiery Co. (Cal.) 32 Pac. 522	352	Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L. R. A. 376, 32 Atl. 906	967
Wilkinson v. Bahrer. See RAHNER, Rm.	450	v. Brown, 34 N. Y. 337	165
Wilkins v. State, 113 Ind. 514, 16 N. E. 192	815	v. Fowler, 26 Kan. 682, 40 Am. Rep. 330	764
1 L.R.A.(N.S.)		v. Helges, 83 Md. 269, 34 Atl. 872	276

Wood v. Lambert, L. R. 32 Ch. Div. 247	712	Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19	345
v. Leadbitter, 13 Mees. & W. 838	1188	L. R. A. 84, 33 N. E. 195	637
v. New Bedford Coal Co. 121 Mass.	1190	Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 446
252	704
v. Welmar, 104 U. S. 786, 26 L. ed.	1085	Y.
779	799	Yarnell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R.
Woodford v. Stephens, 51 Mo. 448		Co. 113 Mo. 570, 18 L. R. A.
Woodman v. Woodman, 89 Me. 128, 35 Atl.	786	599, 21 S. W. 1	538
1037		Yates v. McCullough Iron Co. 69 Md. 370,
Woodruff v. Kellyville Coal Co. 182 Ill.	224	16 Atl. 280	277
480, 55 N. E. 550	392	Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Williams, 67
v. Saul, 70 Ga. 271	389	Miss. 18, 7 So. 279	474
v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65		Yeaton v. Bank of Old Dominion, 21 Gratt.
Woods v. Armstrong, 54 Ala. 150, 25 Am.	1161	593	562
Rep. 671	492	Yeomans v. Kiddle, 84 Iowa, 147, 50 N.
v. Half, 44 Tex. 633		W. 886	439
v. Montevallo Coal & Transp. Co.	571	Yerkes v. Yerkes, 200 Pa. 419, 50 Atl.
84 Ala. 560, 5 Am. St. Rep.	403	186	405
393, 3 So. 475		Yoe v. Hoffman, 61 Kan. 265, 59 Pac.
Wood's Estate, 13 Pa. Dist. R. 195	806	351	595
Woodward v. James, 115 N. Y. 346, 22		Young v. Blaisdell, 138 Mass. 344	459,
N. E. 150	1180	v. Bransford, 12 Lea, 232	540
v. Miller, 119 Ga. 618, 64 L. R. A.		v. Com. 101 Va. 853, 45 S. E.	185
932, 100 Am. St. Rep. 188, 46	524	327
S. E. 847		v. Kansas City, 152 Mo. 661, 54	517
v. Murdock, 124 Ind. 439, 24 N.	524	S. W. 535
E. 1047	330	v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 4 Tex.	497
v. Spurr, 141 Mass. 283, 6 N. E.	324	Ct. Rep. 90, 66 S. W. 567 496, 521	825	v. Young, 80 N. Y. 437, 36 Am.	800
324	320	Rep. 634
v. Woodward, 3 De G. J. & S. 671		Yount v. Denning, 52 Kan. 629, 35 Pac.	1047
Wooton v. Redd, 12 Gratt. 196		207
Wright v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 19 Neb.	197	Yunker v. Nichols, 1 Colo. 551	214
175, 56 Am. Rep. 747, 27	1045
N. W. 90		Z.
v. Lee, 2 S. D. 596, 51 N. W. 706		Zinn v. Zinn, 54 W. Va. 483, 46 S. E.	1090
v. Minnesota Mut. L. Ins. Co. 193		202
U. S. 657, 48 L. ed. 832, 24	625
Sup. Ct. Rep. 549	439
Wulzen v. San Francisco, 101 Cal. 15, 40
Am. St. Rep. 17, 35 Pac. 353

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.		1890, Aug. 8, chap. 728. Wilson bill	642
Statutes.		1891, March 3, chap. 539. Confirmation
13 Rich. II. chap. 13. Destruction of		of private land claims.	1128 game		1898, July 1, chap. 541. Bankruptcy act.	324.
33 Hen. VIII. chap. 6. Keeping or using			389
gun prohibited		1899, Feb. 2. Smoke law	880
29 Car. II. §§ 7, 9. Statute of frauds.		Statutes at Large.
4 & 5 Wm. & Mary, chap. 18. Permis-		Vol. 12, p. 71. Confirmation of private sion of court to file in-		land claims	1128 formation		Vol. 13, p. 125. Confirmation of private
6 Anne, chap. 31. Liability for fire		land claim	1128
9 Anne, chap. 20. Quo warranto		Vol. 26, p. 313. Wilson bill	642
1873, § 49. Judicature act.		Vol. 26, p. 854. Confirmation of private
47 & 48 Vict. chap. 61, p. 15. Quo war-		land claims	1123
ranto proceeding.		Vol. 26, p. 859, § 12. Abandonment of imperfect grant	1129
		Vol. 30, p. 544. Bankruptcy act	203
		Vol. 30, p. 551. Bankruptcy law.	330,
		Vol. 30, p. 562. Preference of bankrupt.	391
		Vol. 30, p. 562, § 63. Provable debts.	203
			324
		Vol. 30, p. 812, chap. 79. Smoke law...	980
United States.		Revised Statutes.
Constitutions.		§ 2339. Right to use of water.	759
Art. 1, § 10. Impairing obligations of con-		§ 4283. Liability for salvage	874
tracts		§ 5136. National banks	1045
Art. 4, § 1. Full faith and credit of state.		§ 5543. Credits on sentences of
Art. 4, § 2. Privileges and immunities		Federal convicts	524 of citizens		Compiled Statutes, 1901.
Amend. 14. Equal protection of the laws.		P. 765. Confirmation of private land
184, 227, 269, 546, 562,		claims	1128
Amend. 14, § 1. Due process of law.		P. 772. Abandonment of imperfect
816, 920, 933.		grant.	1128
Amend. 14, § 2. Representation		P. 1437. Right to use of water.	759
		P. 2943. Liability for salvage	874
		P. 3177. Wilson bill	642
		P. 3418. Bankruptcy act	203
		P. 3429. Bankruptcy law	389
Statutes.
1860, June 21, chap. 167. Confirmation of private land claims.
1864, June 11, chap. 123. Confirmation of private land claim.
1864, July 2. Public lands
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

P. 3431. Bankruptcy law	330
P. 3445. Preference of bankrupt	391
P. 3447. Provable debts	203, 324
PP. 3455-3460. National banks.	1045
P. 3721. Credits on sentences of Federal convicts	524
Federal Statutes Annotated.
Vol. 1, p. 583. Bankruptcy law	389
Alabama.
General Acts.
1903, p. 438. Elections in Alabama	657
Code, 1896.
§ 1751. Action for injuries resulting in death	1151
Arkansas.
Kirby's Digest.
§ 6002. Suit on contract by agent	305
California.
Constitution.
Art. 1, § 1. Personal rights	184
Art. 4, § 24. Act to embrace but one subject	157
Art. 13, § 1. Taxes	157
Art. 19, § 1. Police power of legislature	186
Statutes.
1850, chap. 129, p. 377. Probate act ..	1002
1903, chap. 251, p. 338. Marking fruit ..	184
Civil Code.
§ 486. Signals at railroad crossing ..	310
§ 658, 660. Real property; fixtures ..	1199
§ 1242, 1243. Homestead law	314
§ 2222. Voluntary trust	315
§ 2224. Constructive trust	314
§ 2629. Loss from wilful act of insured ..	1107
§ 2705. Constructive total loss	1105
§ 2717. Abandonment by insured	1105
§ 2736. Valuation in marine policy ..	1106
Code of Civil Procedure.
§ 527. Issuance of injunction	663
§ 532. Modification of injunction	663
§ 1294, 1299. Probate of wills	993
§ 1322-1324. Probate of foreign wills ..	998
§ 1913. Effect of record of another state	1000
Tit. 11, art. 3, chap. 2. Probate of foreign wills	998
Colorado.
General Statutes, 1883.
Chap. 19, §§ 260, 261. Foreign corporations	1045
Georgia.
Civil Code.
§ 3712. Rescission of contract	381
§ 5176. Admission of original evidence ..	392
§ 5179. Admission of declarations	392
Penal Code.
§ 398. Prohibiting gaming house	385
§ 422. Sunday law	385
Illinois.
Constitution.
Art. 2, § 2. Due process of law	226, 344
Art. 4, § 13. Act to embrace but one subject	229
Statutes.
1893, p. 90. Anti-trust law	176
1897, p. 1. Administration	344
1903, pp. 301, 302, § 2. Speed of automobiles	224

Hurd's Revised Statutes, 1874.
P. 367. Forgery	740
Hurd's Revised Statutes, 1899.
Chap. 17, p. 205. Bastardy act	775
Chap. 39, p. 653. Statute of descent ..	775
Starr & Curtis's Annotated Statutes, 1896.
Vol. 1, chap. 3, pp. 283, 284. Administration act	346
Vol. 3, p. 3604, chap. 121. Speed of persons on public highways	228
Vol. 3, p. 3604, § 153. Keeping to the right on highway	229
Vol. 3, p. 3605, § 157. Tying horses in street	228
Vol. 3, p. 3628, § 272. Steam engines on highway	229
Starr & Curtis's Annotated Statutes, 1902.
Vol. 4, chap. 3, p. 32. Administration. Criminal Code.	844
§ 105. Forgery	740
Indiana.
Bill of Rights.
§ 23. Privileges and immunities of citizens	943
Burns's Annotated Statutes, 1901.
§ 4923. Foreign insurance companies ..	426
Iowa.
Statutes.
27th Gen. Assem. chap. 37, p. 27. Amendment act; notice to parties	435
30th Gen. Assem. chap. 67, p. 59. Construction of ditch.	434
Code, 1897.
§ 794. Division of city into sewer districts	437
§ 1940. Notice to property owners	434
§ 1946. Assessment of costs and damages	434
§ 1947. Appeal from assessment	438
Tit. 10, chap. 2. Construction of ditch ..	434
Kansas.
Bill of Rights.
§ 10. Rights of person accused of crime ..	171
Constitution.
Art. 3, § 6. Jurisdiction of district courts	171
Art. 3, § 16. Jurisdiction at chambers ..	171
Art. 6, § 2. Uniformity of text-books in common schools ..	1040
Art. 12, § 4. Compensation for right of way	128
Statutes.
1855, chap. 156, p. 735. Filling of town-site plats	1047
1870, chap. 68. Regulation of practice of medicine	814
1889, chap. 239, p. 361. Investigation of state institutions ..	816
1889, chap. 257. Anti-trust law	174
1897, chap. 265. Anti-trust law	170
1898, chap. 10, p. 27. Foreign corporations	1042
1901, chap. 125. Foreign corporations ..	1041
1901, chap. 254, p. 445. Regulation of practice of medicine ..	814
General Statutes, 1901.
§ 92. Privilege of witness	171
§ 393. Disbarment of attorney	819
§ 1259 et seq. Foreign corporations ..	1041
§ 1316. Grant of real estate for railway	809
§ 1318. Notice to occupants of land on railway route	809

§§ 1359-1365. Compulsory proceedings for right of way	809
§ 1360. Railway route	128
§ 1923. Jurisdiction of district courts	172
§ 1924. Power of district judges	172
§§ 6669-6677. Regulation of practice of medicine	814
§§ 7864-7874. Anti-trust law	171
§ 7873. Anti-trust law	170

Civil Code.

§ 87. Contents of petition	1053
----------------------------------	------

Kentucky.

Constitution.

§ 170. Exemptions from taxation	763
§ 171. Taxation of property	768

Statutes.

1853-54, chap. 507, p. 121. Water company	767
---	-----

Statutes, 1899.

§ 1274. Sale of impure milk	933
-----------------------------------	-----

Statutes, 1903.

§ 6. Actions for negligent injuries	1016
§ 631. Foreign insurance company	1021
§ 633. License to agents of foreign insurance company	1021
§ 634. Foreign company to furnish charter	1021
§ 657. Foreign company to file statement	1021
§ 694. Authority to transact insurance business	1021
§ 761. Collection of fees by commissioner	1021
§ 2178. Recovery for board	822
§ 2980. Levy and collection of tax by city	768
§ 4020. Property subject to taxation ..	768

Civil Code.

§ 73. Action for negligent injuries	1016
---	------

Maine.

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 83, § 45. Written notice to defendant	453
Chap. 91, § 1. Validity of mortgage	457

Maryland.

Bill of Rights.

Art. 3. Adoption of common law	256
Art. 15. Uniform taxation	269

Statutes.

1856, chap. 154, p. 255. Simplification of rules and forms of conveyances	769
1892, chap. 109, p. 156. Liability of stockholder	1173
1904, March 25, chap. 101, p. 179. Liability of stockholder	1173
1904, chap. 337, p. 597. Liability of stockholder	1174

Code of Public General Laws, 1888.

Art. 81, § 4. Exemption from taxation ..	269
Art. 81, § 88. Taxation of corporate bonds	269

Code of Public General Laws 1904.

Art. 21, § 9. Description of real estate	788
Art. 23, § 851. Liability of stockholders	1174
Art. 23, § 382. Appointment of receivers ..	258
Art. 81, § 2. Taxation of corporate bonds	269
Art. 81, § 92. Assessments and taxation	269
Art. 81, § 210. Assessments and taxation	269

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Massachusetts.

Provincial Laws.

1745-46, chap. 20, p. 287. Fishways ..	755
1773-74, chap. 12, p. 301. Street lamps in town	668

Statutes.

1796, chap. 69. Lamps in street of town	668
1825, chap. 3, p. 313. Lamps in city streets	668
1866, chap. 238, pp. 231, 232. Fishways	755
1867, chap. 344, p. 741. Fishways	755
1890, chap. 129, p. 106. Discharging sawdust in stream	755
1895, chap. 213, p. 219. Licensing stables in cities	459
1898, chap. 535. Declarations of deceased persons	666

Public Statutes.

Chap. 80, § 10. Power of boards of health	460
Chap. 91, § 4. Fishways	755
Chap. 203, § 76. Street lamps	668

Revised Laws.

Chap. 51, § 1. Defective highways	668
Chap. 51, § 18. Action for injuries on highway	664
Chap. 51, § 20. Notice of accident to city	666
Chap. 75, § 113. Forbidding privies near water supply	756
Chap. 75, § 118. Investigation by board of health	756
Chap. 75, § 119. Appeal to jury	756
Chap. 91, § 8. Prohibiting discharge of sawdust in stream	753
Chap. 100, §§ 15, 47, 89. Licenses	460
Chap. 102, §§ 9, 28, 29, 33, 58, 72. Licenses	460
Chap. 102, §§ 69, 71. Licensing stables in cities	459
Chap. 153, §§ 1, 2. Contracts by married women	323
Chap. 175, § 66. Declarations of deceased persons	666

Michigan.

Howell's Statutes.

Vol. 2, § 9704. Credit for good behavior ..	524
---	-----

Compiled Laws, 1897.

§ 50, subdv. 1. Construction of words	352
§ 9310. Appointment of executor	351
§ 9317. Competency of nonresident executor	351
Chap. 194. Powers of magistrate	1144

Minnesota.

Constitution.

Art. 3, § 1. Division of powers of government	828
Art. 6, § 2. Jurisdiction of supreme court	833

Statutes.

1887, chap. 13, p. 69. Liability of railroad for injuries to employees	700
--	-----

Revised Statutes, 1851.

Chap. 80, § 1. Abolishment of quo warranto	827
--	-----

General Statutes, 1866.

Chap. 122. Quo warranto	827
-------------------------------	-----

General Statutes, 1878.

Chap. 63, § 1. Issuance of quo warranto ..	828
Chap. 79. Actions to vacate charters	833

General Statutes, 1894.

§ 861. Entry on docket	838
§§ 1951, 1952. Obligation of children to support parents	1170

§ 2701. Liability of railroad for injuries to employees	700
§ 4471, cl. 3. Descent of estate to father	1166
§ 4477, cl. 6. Distribution of personal estate	1166
§ 4823. Issuance of quo warranto	828
§ 5398, subdiv. 4. Motion for new trial; excessive damages	443
§ 5425. Docketing judgments	838
§ 5913. Action for injury resulting in death	1163
§ 5961-5973. Actions to vacate charters	833
§ 6044. Redemption from foreclosure	838
§ 7391. Execution of sentence by trial court	843

Mississippi.Revised Code, 1880.

§ 137. Ballots	659
Chap. 15. Bastardy	470
§ 249. Proceedings before justice	470
§ 252. Proceedings in circuit court	471
§ 257. Dying declarations of mother	471
§ 258. Assessment of damages	473
§ 334. Before whom affidavits may be taken	471
§ 1881. Assets of decedent	466
§ 1882. Disposition of crops	468
§ 1892. Crops as assets	468
§ 1893. Sale of lands for payment of debts	466
§ 1900. Sale of land in preference to personality	467
§ 2395. Suits before justice of the peace	471
§ 4497. Rights of survivor; will	464
§ 4499. Renunciation; right of widow	464

Missouri.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 4. Object of government	919
Art. 2, § 30. Due process of law	919
Art. 4, § 28. Bills to embrace but one subject	919

Statutes.

1899, March 11. Use of chemicals in food products	931
1901, p. 80. License collector	939
Revised Statutes, 1899.
§ 3416. Creation of express trust	799

Nebraska.Code.

§ 332. Testimony of wife	1074
§ 333. Confidential communications	1073
§ 334. Waiver of protection of statute	1073

Nevada.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 3. Right of trial by jury	847
Art. 1, § 8. Trial for crime	847
Art. 4, § 17. Laws to embrace but one subject	847
Art. 6, § 13. Style of process	847
Art. 7, § 4. Removal of officers for malfeasance	848

Statutes.

1873, chap. 121, p. 209. Elections	844
Compiled Laws.
§ 1642-1645. Elections	844
§ 3968. Criminal practice act	848
§ 4038-4051. Criminal practice act	848

New Hampshire.Public Statutes, 1901.

Chap. 198, § 8. Power of probate court to remove trustees	805
§ 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Chap. 205, § 1. Power of superior court in trust cases	805
--	-----

New Jersey.General Statutes.

P. 2632. Quo warranto; leave of court	831
---	-----

New Mexico.Compiled Laws.

§ 3021. Corroboration of evidence	1130
---	------

New York.Statutes.

1874, chap. 53, p. 75. Forging letter of recommendation	739
1881, chap. 676, p. 130. Amending Penal Code	739
1884, chap. 378, p. 462. Amending Penal Code	739
1892, chap. 692, p. 1417. Amending Penal Code	739
1895, chap. 1042, p. 974. Protection of rights of citizens	1192
1897, chap. 378, pp. 21, 519. New York city charter	1190

Birdseye's Revised Statutes.

Vol. 3, p. 3763, § 81 (3d ed.). Transportation corporations law	960
---	-----

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 416, 417. Commencement of action; summons	163
§ 488. Demur by defendant	163
§ 723. Amendment by court	166

Penal Code.

§ 3. Defining "crime"	738
§ 7. Objects of the Penal Code	738
§ 11. General rules of construction	734
§ 509. Forgery in first degree	738
§ 510. Forgery; falsely certifying	738
§ 511. Forgery in second degree	739
§ 514, 515. Forgery in third degree	738
§ 516. Forging passage tickets	738
§ 517. Forging government stamps	738

Criminal Code.

§ 331, 467. Motion in arrest of judgment	737
--	-----

North Carolina.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 24. Right to bear arms	630
--	-----

Statutes.

1798, chap. 508. Opening of cartways	973
1887, chap. 46, p. 97. Cartways	972
1899, chap. 34, p. 127. Consolidation of railroad	619
1899, chap. 54, p. 175. Insurance companies	625
1901, chap. 5, p. 68. Insurance companies	625
1901, chap. 168, p. 463. Consolidation of railroad	619
1903, chap. 434, p. 749. Sale of intoxicating liquor	628
1905, chap. 210, p. 222. Highway commission of Valletown township	972

Code.

§ 162. Limitation of actions; nonresidents	625
§ 983. Illegal sale of liquor	629
§ 1005. Carrying concealed weapons	629
§ 1077. Selling liquor to minor	630
§ 1089. Selling mortgaged property	630
§ 1109. Secreting deserting seamen	630
§ 2033. Supervisor of roads	972
§ 2056, 2057. Cartways	972
§ 2062, 2063. Cartways	972
§ 3803. Liability for failure to repair sidewalks	984

Clark's Code.
§ 177. Recovery in ejectment upon equitable title	161
Ohio.
Revised Statutes, 1892.
§ 5971. Lapse of devise or bequest	1119
Oklahoma.
Code of Criminal Procedure.
§ 683. Authority to take bail bond	850
Wilson's Revised & Annotated Statutes.
§ 5769. Authority to take bail bond ..	850
Oregon.
Constitution.
Art. 1, § 21. Taking effect of law	483
Art. 4, § 23. Prohibiting special legislation	486
Statutes.
1905, p. 41. Local option law	485
Pennsylvania.
Constitution, 1874.
Art. 2, § 8. Compensation of members of assembly	416
Art. 3, § 7. Special laws	416
Art. 3, § 11. Authority of law to pass bill	414
Art. 3, § 26. Executive approval of resolutions	413
Statutes.
1849, April 7 (P. L. 563). Suit on stock subscription	914
1879, June 11 (P. L. 128). Fire escapes	1062
1883, June 1 (P. L. 50). Fire escapes	1093
1885, June 3 (P. L. 68). Fire escapes	1093
1887, May 6 (P. L. 79). Tax on real estate	402
1899 (P. L. 48). Appropriation for expense of inauguration	411
1899 (P. L. 407). Arrangements for inauguration of governor	411
1903, April 25 (P. L. 315). Action to recover money	410
1903, May 15 (P. L. 406). Expenses for dedication of Grant's monument	411
1903 (P. L. 534). Appropriation for expense of inauguration	411
1903 (P. L. 547). Arrangements for inauguration of governor	411
Rhode Island.
Constitution.
Art. 1, § 2. Object of government	516
Art. 1, § 23. Rule of construction	516
Art. 4, § 10. Exercise of powers	516
Public Laws.
1767, p. 210. Erection of stocks for punishment	519
1853, pp. 21, 22. Charter of Newport ..	519
1905, chap. 804, § 9. Salaries of police commissioners	515
General Laws, 1896
Chap. 202, § 12. Seal on release	872
South Dakota.
Revised Political Code.
§ 3145. Steam threshers; exaction of bond	1160
Revised Code Civil Procedure.
§ 495. Disobedient witness; punishment	1144
Revised Code Criminal Procedure.
§ 140. Issuance of subpoena	1144
L.R.A.(N.S.)
§ 141. Examination of witnesses	1141
§ 512. Subpoena duces tecum	1144
§ 518. Disobedience to subpoena	1144
Tennessee.
Constitution.
Art. 3, § 6. Pardonng power of governor	521
Art. 6, § 1. Judicial power of state	522
Statutes.
1885, chap. 15, p. 87. Credits to convicts	523
1891, chap. 123, p. 271. Workhouse law	522
1890, chap. 64, p. 160. Negotiable instrument law	193
1903, April 15. Action for usury	529
1903, chap. 257, p. 615. Tax for bar privileges	639
Shannon's Code.
§ 7226. Remission of sentence by court	523
§ 7423. Credit for good behavior	521
Shannon's Code Supplement.
P. 692. Action for usury; limitation ..	529
Texas.
Constitution.
Art. 3, § 56. Prohibiting special legislation	519
Art. 16, § 20. Sale of intoxicating liquor	498
Statutes.
1901, p. 262, art. 402a. Sale of intoxicating liquor	497
Utah.
Constitution.
Art. 1, § 22. Compensation for property taken	979
Statutes.
1901, chap. 25, p. 19. Right of eminent domain	979
Revised Statutes, 1898.
§ 3588. Right of eminent domain	979
Vermont.
Statutes.
1787, Feb. 27, p. 82. Prosecution for capital offense	1154
1818, chap. 1, p. 19 & 37. Prosecution by indictment	1154
1819, chap. 9, p. 19. State's attorneys	1154
1828, No. 23, p. 4. Filing information in county court	1154
1898, No. 46, p. 34. Prosecution of crimes	1153
1904, No. 64. Prosecution of crimes ..	1153
Revision, 1797.
Chap. 3, § 65, p. 106. Prosecution for capital offense	1154
Chap. 9, § 36, p. 173. Punishment for capital crimes	1154
Chap. 10, p. 175. Punishment of inferior crimes	1154
Chap. 64, § 1. Duty of state's attorneys	1154
Revised Statutes, 1839.
Chap. 93, § 1. Prosecution of crimes	1153
Chap. 102, § 1. Prosecution by information	1153
Statutes.
§ 1867. Prosecution of crimes	1153
§ 1895. Filing information in supreme court	1154
§ 1897. Filing information in county court	1154
Washington.
Constitution.
Art. 1, § 3. Due process of law	546

Art. 1, § 14.	Excessive bail or fines ..	546
Art. 1, § 21.	Right of trial by jury ..	546
Art. 1, § 22.	Right of accused in criminal prosecutions ..	546
Art. 2, § 19.	Bills to embrace but one subject ..	157
Art. 7, § 1.	Taxation of property ..	155
Art. 7, § 2.	Tax to be uniform ..	155
Art. 7, § 9.	Taxation for corporate purposes ..	155
Art. 17, § 1.	Ownership of tide lands ..	750
Art. 17, § 2.	Disclaiming title to tide land ..	746
Statutes.
1893, chap. 130, p. 421.	Fees of state and county officers ..	157
1903, chap. 151, p. 290.	Fees of officers, witnesses, and jurors ..	154
Pierce's Code.
§ 362.	Right of party to action ..	554
Code, 1881.
§ 2086.	Fees of state and county officers ..	157
Ballinger's Annotated Codes & Statutes.
Vol. 2, § 4798.	Limitation of actions ..	1040
§ 4523.	Party to foreclosure of mortgage ..	1040
§ 4884a.	Right of party to action ..	554
§ 5039.	Incorporation of exhibits in statement ..	1039
§ 5516.	Ejectment under mortgage ..	1040
§ 6959.	Imprisonment of insane person ..	545

West Virginia.

Constitution.

Art. 8, § 3.	Jurisdiction of court of appeals ..	1085
--------------	-------------------------------------	------

Statutes.

1905, chap. 39, p. 401.	Appointment of agent by corporation ..	560
Code, 1899.
Chap. 41, §§ 23, 24.	Exempt personal property ..	779
Chap. 41, § 25.	Order of attachment ..	782
Chap. 33, § 8.	Right of legislature to alter charter of incorporation ..	561
Chap. 34, § 24.	Appointment of agent to accept service ..	562
Chap. 133, § 1.	Injunction against injury of property ..	1091
Chap. 133, § 28.	Appointment of receiver ..	1091
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Wisconsin.

Constitution, 1848.

Art. 1, § 8.	Indictment by grand jury ..	1157
--------------	-----------------------------	------

Statutes.

1870, chap. 118, p. 180.	Due process of law ..	1157
1871, chap. 137, p. 202.	Prosecution of crimes ..	1157

Revised Statutes, 1898.

Chap. 100.	Alienation by deed and proof of instruments ..	580
§ 2216.	Execution by corporations ..	580
§ 2221.	Conveyance by married woman ..	580
§ 2223.	Conveyance by attorney ..	580
§ 2224.	Acknowledgment of conveyance ..	580
§ 2237.	Letters of attorney ..	579
§ 2241.	Effect of recording conveyance ..	580
§ 2242.	Defining "conveyance" ..	579
§ 2246.	Revocation of recorded power ..	579
§ 3466.	Actions and writs of quo warranto ..	833
§ 3807.	Application for administrator ..	889
§ 3808.	Notice ..	888
§ 3819.	Administration of estate ..	889
§ 4210.	Presumption from legal title ..	571

Wyoming.

Constitution.

Art. 3, § 18.	Officers liable to impeachment ..	593
Art. 3, § 19.	Removal from office ..	593
Art. 4, § 4.	Duties of governor ..	595
Art. 4, § 11.	State officers ..	593

Session Laws.

1890, 91, chap. 8, p. 91.	Water divisions and division superintendents ..	593
1905, chap. 59, p. 101.	Power of governor to remove officer ..	592

Revised Statutes, 1899.

§§ 848-850.	Water divisions and division superintendents ..	593
§ 901.	Repair of ditches ..	602
§ 932.	Inspection by engineers ..	602
§ 933.	Request for inspection ..	602
§ 974.	Liability of reservoir owners ..	598
§ 3069.	Duty of company to keep ditch in repair ..	602

LA WYERS' REPORTS

ANNOTATED.

NEW SERIES.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE TERMINAL COMPANY et al., Appts.,

v.

JOHN T. LELLYETT, Trustee, etc.

(.... Tenn.)

1. Nuisance—injury to health.

Allegations of injury to health may be inserted in a complaint for injuries to real estate by the maintenance of a nuisance, as specifications of damage done to the property as a place of residence.

2. Same—legislative authority.

The legislature cannot authorize railroad and terminal companies, in locating station houses, roundhouses, and terminal facilities, seriously to impair or destroy property not taken, but which becomes impaired or is destroyed by the use of that which is taken.

3. Same—location of railroad terminal.

A terminal company, in exercising the discretion conferred by the legislature to locate its yards and terminal facilities, acts at its peril not to create a nuisance to neighboring property.

4. Same—growth of traffic.

Discomfort to the owner of a residence located near a railroad track, which is caused solely by the growth and increase of travel and traffic, gives him no right of action against the company.

5. Same—destruction of property value.

A property owner is not entitled to damages for every inconvenience or discomfort caused by the operation of a railroad near his property, even though it may be material or considerable; but he can recover only where the usable and rental or permanent value of his property is injured.

6. Same—damages—rental value.

The measure of damages in case of injury to neighboring property by the careless operation of a railroad, so that the presumption is that the evil will be remedied and recurring damages for injuries to the use and enjoyment of the property may be recovered, is to be governed to a large

Subject Note.—Effect of legislative authority upon liability for private nuisance.

I. Introductory; general principles, 49.

II. Damnum absque injuria, 52.

III. The English rule, 59.

IV. Charter confers no immunity.

a. In general, 60.

b. Railroad charters.

1. In general, 62.

2. Injuries from location and construction of road, 65.

3. Yards and terminals, 71.

4. Use of street as yard, 78.

5. Ordinary operation of road, 79.

6. Cases absolving company, 83.

7. The New Jersey decisions, 100.

c. Other charters, 108.

II.R.A.(N.S.)

V. Effect of direct grant of power.

a. In general, 110.

b. Constitutionality of statutes, 115.

VI. The Elevated Railroad Cases, 117.

VII. Grant to municipal corporation.

a. General rule, 120.

b. Pollution of waters; sewers, 124.

c. Obstruction of street or highway, 127.

d. Nuisance caused by change of highway grade, 129.

VIII. Remedies.

a. By action for damages, 131.

b. By injunction, 134.

IX. Conclusion, 135.

I. Introductory; general principles.

The legislature will never be presumed to have intended to authorize a private nuisance.

extent by the rental value of the property, and to what extent that value is diminished.

7. Same—injury to fee.

The injury to the fee or permanent value of the property is the proper measure of damages where neighboring property is injured by the location and operation of railroad terminals which are intended to be permanent, and, notwithstanding their careful and proper operation, constitute a nuisance diminishing the value of the property.

8. Same—excessive damages.

The allowance of $4,000 as damages for injury to the rental value of a $7,000 house for thirty-two months by the maintenance of a nuisance in the vicinity is excessive.

9. Same—evidence—other causes.

Upon the question of injury to property by the maintenance of a nuisance upon it, evidence is admissible to show that it is injuriously or prejudicially affected by similar causes from other sources, but not the effect thereof on other property near or contiguous to it.

10. Same—effect on neighboring property.

How other neighboring property was affected by the maintenance of a nuisance cannot be shown in an action to recover for injury to a particular tract.

11. Same—comparison with other localities.

Upon the question of nuisance to adjoining property in the maintenance and operation of a railroad terminal, no comparison is proper between the noise in its vicinity and in other portions of the city; nor is evidence admissible that the city is generally a dirty, smoky, and noisy place.

(March 25, 1905.)

sance. So far as possible, all statutes which may be claimed to have done so will be construed against such contention. The question rarely arises in cases of individuals, but it does quite frequently arise under corporate charters; and, as has been seen in a note to Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Mott, 70 L. R. A. 579, before the question can arise as to whether or not the nuisance has been legalized, the charter must in terms authorize the precise act which is alleged to constitute the nuisance.

This note will be limited to a discussion of the particular subject stated. What constitutes a nuisance will not be considered; nor will any of the questions arising under the constitutional and statutory provisions in regard to the taking of private property for public use under the exercise of the right of eminent domain, except so far as they are alluded to incidentally in order to preserve the sense of the decision; nor will public nuisances be considered, except in those instances where they have peculiarly affected a private individual, which, so far as this discussion is concerned, makes such a case, so far as that individual is concerned, a private nuisance, under the well-known rule that a private action is maintainable for a public nuisance by one who suffers therefrom some particular loss or damage beyond that suffered by him in common with others affected by the nuisance. Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 708; Clark v. Peckham, 9 R. I. 455; Wylie v. Elwood, 134 Ill. 281, 9 L. R. A. 726, 23 Am. St. Rep. 673, 25 N. E. 570; Milhau v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. 625, 84 Am. Dec. 314; Porth v. Manhattan R. Co. 26 Jones & S. 366, 11 N. Y. Supp. 633; Brakken v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 29 Minn. 41, 11 N. W. 124; Kaje v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 57 Minn. 422, 47 Am. St. Rep. 627, 59 N. W. 493; Edmondson v. Moberly, 98 Mo. 526, 11 S. W. 991; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713, 18 L. ed. 96; Platte & D. Ditch Co. v. Anderson, 8 Colo. 131, 6 Pac. 515.

The discussion of the question will necessitate an exhaustive examination of the application, by the cases in the note, of certain well-known and well-established doctrines which have repeatedly been stated in many cases. One of these is that the act of a legislature may authorize, which, without such authorization, would constitute nuisances, are those which affect public highways or public streams, or matters in which the public have an interest and over which the public have control. The legislative authorization exempts only from liability to suits, civil or criminal, at the instance of the state; it does not affect a claim of a private citizen for damages from any special inconvenience and discomfort not experienced by the public at large. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Nichols v. Pixley, 1 Root, 129; Churchill v. Burlington Water Co. 94 Iowa. 462 N. W. 646; Robinson v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Barb. 512; Fletcher v. Auburn, 8 S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462; Brown v. Cayuga & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 487; Trenton Water Power Co. v. Raff, 36 N. J. L. 335; Sadler v. New York, 40 Misc. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 30.

The correct doctrine is best stated in the opinion of the court in Blanc v. Murray, 1 La. Ann. 165, 51 Am. Rep. 9, as follows: "That which is authorized by the legislature, within the strict scope of its constitutional power, cannot be a public nuisance, but it may be a private nuisance; but the legislative grant is no protection against a private action for damages resulting therefrom." After approving this doctrine the court further said, and "the doctrine sometimes stated in the elementary works, in which has been held by some courts, that whatever is authorized by a legislature cannot be a nuisance of any kind, is exploded."

Another doctrine relating wholly to corporations is that a corporation is liable in a civil action, for erecting and maintaining a nuisance, the same as an individual; and that powers granted to corporations are to be construed as privileges conferred, but upon the understanding that they shall be exercised in strict conformity to private rights, and under the same responsibility as though the acts done in execution of APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged maintenance of a nuisance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion. Messrs. John B. Keeble, Claude Waller, Hemons & Barthell, Baxter Smith, Percy D. Maddin, and James C. Bradford, for appellants:

There is a variance between the proof as to title and the allegation in the declaration. and, therefore, there is no evidence to support the verdict.

East Tennessee Iron Mfg. Co. v. Gaskell, 1 Lea. 742; Boyd v. Johnston, 89 Tenn. 284, 15 S. W. 904; 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 480; Henshall v. Roberts, 5 East, 150; Bragdon v.

Harmon, 69 Me. 29; Blackstone Nat. Bank v. Lane, 80 Me. 165, 13 Atl. 683; Barnum v. Stone, 27 Mich. 332; Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292; Rich v. Sowles, 64 Vt. 408, 15 L. R. A. 850, 23 Atl. 723; Willingham v. King, 23 Fla. 478, 2 So. 851; Sutton v. Mansfield, 47 Conn. 388; Swift v. Yanaway, 153 Ill. 197, 38 N. E. 589; Sillings v. Bumgardner, 9 Gratt. 273; Morgan v. Potter, 157 U. S. 195, 39 L. ed. 670, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; M'Leod v. Mason, 5 Port. (Ala.) 223; Sutherland v. Goff, 5 Port. (Ala.) 508; Gregg v. Bethea, 6 Port. (Ala.) 9; Sanderson v. Sanderson, 17 Fla. 820; Hoare v. Harris, 11 Ill. 24; Bradley v. Amidon, 10 Paige, 235; Bowles v. McAllen, 16 Ill. 30; Longstreet v. Tilton, 1 N. J. L. 38; Burdett v. Cain, 8 W. Va. 282; such powers were done by an individual. The authorities on this subject, so far as the application of the doctrine to municipal corporations is concerned, are: Haag v. Vanderburgh County, 60 Ind. 511, 28 Am. Rep. 654; Stein v. Lafayette, 6 Ind. App. 114, 33 N. E. 912; Valparaiso v. Moffitt, 12 Ind. App. 250, 54 Am. St. Rep. 522, 39 N. E. 909; Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 539, 38 Am. Dec. 669; Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 170, 35 Am. Rep. 540; Harper v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 365; Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis. 340, 41 N. W. 407; Winchell v. Waukegan, 110 Wis. 101, 84 Am. St. Rep. 902, 45 N. W. 668; Mootry v. Danbury, 45 Conn. 50, 29 Am. Rep. 703; Brower v. New York, 3 Barb. 254; Nevins v. Peoria, 41 Ill. 502, 10 Am. Dec. 392;—and, so far as they have been applied to railroad corporations, they are: Booth v. Rome, W. & O. Terminal R. Co. 140 N. Y. 272, 24 L. R. A. 105, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552, 35 N. E. 592; Mundy v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 75 Hun. 479, 27 N. Y. Supp. 469; Jenkins v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 110 N. C. 438, 15 S. E. 193; Staton v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. 111 N. C. 278, 17 L. R. A. 438, 16 S. E. 181; Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Dick, 9 Ind. 433; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 50 L. R. A. 488, 42 C. C. A. 178, 102 Fed. 85; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432; Tinsman v. Belvidere D. R. Co. 26 N. J. L. 148, 69 Am. Dec. 565; Borden-town & S. A. Turnp. Road v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 17 N. J. L. 314.

That the legislature may authorize small nuisances without compensation, but not great ones, is stated as a general rule in Barnes v. Boston, 154 Mass. 100, 23 N. E. 9.

The trouble in these cases, however, often lies in the definition of terms. In order to constitute a nuisance there must be an injury to health or property values, and many of the cases have been decided in favor of defendant because no nuisance was shown, not because the nuisance was small. The absence of nuisance in fact will require the omission from this note of many cases which might otherwise be regarded as authorities in favor of legislative sanction of nuisances. Of this class is the recent case of Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. South Fork Coal Co. 139 Fed. 537, in which it was held that, the use of locomotive engines being sanctioned by statute, there is no liability for fire started from sparks unless they are negligently suffered to escape. This, however, is not solely because of the legislative sanction, but because the use of locomotives is not generally a nuisance, and therefore, to create a liability in a particular instance, a nuisance or a negligent act must be shown.

So, not a little trouble experienced in the endeavor to arrive at what are the true principles governing this subject is due to the careless manner in which many of the courts confuse and confound the words "damage" and "injure," and "damaged" and "injured."

As was very appropriately said in Sadlier v. New York, 40 Misc. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 308, in considering the question it "is necessary to keep in mind carefully . . . that the phrases 'direct injury' and 'consequential injury' are not the same or of the same meaning as the phrases 'direct damages' and 'consequential damages.' The latter phrases are of the terminology of damages and the measure of damages, while the former are not, but are of the terminology of injuries. To illustrate: A direct injury may, in addition to direct 'damages,' do indirect, or, as it is often more loosely phrased, consequential, 'damages,' and the latter are recoverable as well as the former, unless they be not proximate, but remote, to use two other words which belong to the terminology of damages. In the case of a direct injury, the measure of damages includes both direct and indirect (or consequential) damages; but in the case of a consequential injury, there are no recoverable damages at all. Consequential (i. e., indirect) damages can only result from a direct injury; while no actionable damages of any kind or degree result from a consequential injury. Enough has been said to show the confusion which arises from the use of the words 'injuries' and 'damages'

Simpson v. King, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 11; Lemon v. Hansbarger, 6 Gratt. 301.

No two persons sustaining separate and distinct injuries from a single act can join as plaintiffs in the same suit.

Shipman, Common Law Pleading, 138; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 601; Sandes v. Wildsmith [1893] 1 Q. B. 771; McKenzie v. Hatton, 9 Misc. 18, 29 N. Y. Supp. 18; Russell v. Corne, 1 Salk. 119; Brown v. Tripe, 2 Keble, 230; Andrews' Stephen, Pl. pp. 60, 62; Chitty, Pl. 16th ed. p. 75; 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 581; McMillan v. Baxley, 112 N. C. 578, 16 S. E. 845; Fatman v. Leet, 41 Ind. 133; Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 347; Tenant v. Pfister, 45 Cal. 270.

Plaintiff, having sought to have the permanent impairment of the value of his property by these terminal facilities determined, cannot recover in this suit any other class of damages.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Fredericks (Tex.) 19 S. W. 125; Denison, B. & N. O. Co. v. Barry (Tex.) 83 S. W. 5.

The improvements in this case are permanent, and the doctrine of successive suits in cases of this kind can have no application.

Harmon v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. Tenn. 614, 11 S. W. 703; Sutherland, Damages, 1042; Elizabethtown, L. & B. S. R. Co. v. Combs, 10 Bush, 382. 19 Am. Rep. 6; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Esterle, Bush, 667; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Schaffer, 26 Ill. App. 280; Louisville, N. A. & R. Co. v. Sparks, 12 Ind. App. 410, 40 N. E. 546; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Eberle, 1 interchangeably. The phrases 'remote and consequential,' and 'remote or consequential,' in respect of injuries, are sometimes used, but are obviously tautological and lacking in scientific accuracy. It is enough to say injuries are consequential, for then they are nonactionable. In a loose sense they are remote, but that word belongs to such damages from a direct injury as are too remote to be allowed in a recovery."

While the facts of many cases which have gone off on the theory of consequential injuries are similar to those in which a liability for nuisance is considered, they are, as a rule, not considered in this note, because if the court, rightly or wrongly, holds that in a particular case nothing but a consequential injury exists, it has by that very holding eliminated the case from the subject under consideration, because if no legal injury has been done no nuisance exists.

There are very few cases in which the legislature has deliberately authorized the commission of a private nuisance. The claim that it has done so most frequently arises where it has granted a corporate charter authorizing the transaction of a certain business, and the corporation, in the exercise of its franchise, has created the nuisance. The question then arises. Does the charter merely permit the corporation to engage in the business specified, and thereby place it on the same footing as an individual, or does it, in addition, absolve it from all liability for the injurious consequences of its acts? There would seem to be no ground for contention in favor of the latter claim, and, if the contention was made, it would immediately raise the question of the constitutional power of the legislature to authorize a private nuisance. The better reasoned cases have adopted a construction of the legislative authority which nearly places the corporation on the same footing as an individual; but there are decisions in which the courts, without considering the question of the legislative power to do so, have held that the charter absolved the corporation from the consequences of its acts.

II. Damnum absque injuria.

Of course, if a person is not injured in legal right he cannot be heard to complain that another person is committing a nuisance, whether it is under legislative sanction or not. Therefore cases which hold the plaintiff has established no legal right as of little value upon the question of the effect of legislative authorization of a nuisance, and are mentioned here merely to call attention to the distinction, that they must not confuse the subsequent discussion.

But the decisions disclose such a tendency on the part of the courts to dispose of cases erroneously on the principle damnum absque injuria, or its English equivalent, "consequential injury," that an examination of the doctrine may point the way to an avoidance of this error. The Latin phrase means simply loss or diminution in value without wrongdoing, i. e., a legal wrong. For there can be no recovery. The injury in the phrase "consequential injury" has the force of damnum, and not of injuria. A consequential legal wrong is not thinkable. Therefore the phrase means a loss or diminution in value without legal wrong or infringement of legal right. A nuisance is always an infringement of a legal right, and therefore there can be no consequential injury from a nuisance, and the principle is not applicable to the solution of the cases under consideration. The principle is applicable only when no nuisance exists. A lot owner in a residence neighborhood has no legal right to have it remain free from factories and therefore he has no right of action although the value of the lot is greatly diminished by the establishment of a factory next door. This is a consequential injury. But if that factory is operated in such a way that it creates a nuisance, the injury is no longer consequential, but direct, and a right of action at once arises, which even the legislature cannot take away.

There are expressions in some of the cases to the effect that what is authorized by the Ind. 542, 59 Am. Rep. 225, 11 N. E. 467; Idle v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 96, 32 L. R. A. 708, 24 S. E. 730; Troy v.eshire R. Co. 23 N. H. 83, 55 Am. Dec. 177.

No person is liable for damages incidentally occasioned to another by the necessary and beneficial use of his own property, or of a franchise granted to him by the state.

Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns. 92, 8 Am. Dec. 369; Thurston v. Hancock, 12 Mass. 20, 7 Am. Dec. 57; Clark v. Foot, 8 Johns. 21; Platt v. Johnson, 15 Johns. 213, 8 Am. Dec. 233; Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 148, 4 Fend. 9, 21 Am. Dec. 89; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713, 18 L. ed. 96; Snow v. Parsons, 28 Vt. 459, 67 Am. Dec. 723; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 5 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453; Smith v. Wash- ington, 20 How. 135, 15 L. ed. 853; North-ern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635 25 L. ed. 336; Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357; West Cumberland Iron & Steel Co. v. Kenyon, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 773; Att. Gen. v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 146; Rockwood v. Wilson, 11 Cush. 226; Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 169.

A nuisance in legal phraseology is that class of wrongs that arise from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use, by a person, of his own property, real or personal.

Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. 1; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 684.

Erections, businesses, and avocations, legislature cannot be a legal wrong. This idea has frequently resulted in erroneous decisions. Particular conduct must be judged in its relation not only to the public, but also to the individual. It may be right as to the former and wrongful to the latter. It is wrongful to the latter if it infringes his legal or property rights. A right to compensation at once arises, and upon this the legislative permission has no effect. The legislature represents the public, and its grants deal with the public, and not with private rights. Its permission to establish a business, therefore, merely prevents its being a public nuisance, and as to the public it cannot be a legal wrong. But the constitutional restrictions prevent the legislature from surrendering or giving away the property rights of private citizens. Its power of eminent domain may, in case of public necessity, compel the citizen to submit to the continuance of the business and to exchange his property for money; but the legislature cannot deprive him of that. In every case the inquiry primarily is, Has a legal right which forms part of the value of the injured property been infringed? If it has, legislative permission to commit the act will not deprive the property owner of the right to money compensation.

The position of the property holder with respect to the authority of the legislature and the rights of its grantee is stated in Rainey v. Red River Texas & S. R. Co. 89 S. W. 768 (Rehearing denied Feb. 19, 1906), as follows: "A railroad company is organized for the performance of duties to the public, as well as for private emolument; and when such is the case the legislature may legalize the nuisance, provided always that damages be fully compensated by the payment of money."

The Texas Constitution provides that private property shall not be damaged for public use without compensation, but the legislative power to authorize a nuisance is not under such a Constitution than under one without such provision.

The three following cases are good illustrations of what is termed by Gaynor, J., L.R.A. (N.S.)

in Sadlier v. New York, 40 Misc. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 308, "indirect" or "consequential" injuries, for which no damages can be recovered. And it is only in such cases that the injuries inflicted upon one party by the act of another can be considered damnum absque injuria. And the reason is plainly this, that in the first case the bridge company had no absolute right to a monopoly of tolls for the crossing of the river by its bridge, and therefore the building of the railroad bridge whereby a portion of the traffic which might otherwise have crossed the bridge of the bridge company was deflected therefrom and its income from tolls thereby lessened, gave it no right to an action for what it had lost against the railroad company. And so in the second case, simply because the turnpike company had first built its road, from which it was receiving benefits by reason of the tolls that it was authorized to charge for persons traveling thereon, it had no exclusive right to have all the travel go over its road, and therefore the taking away of a portion of such travel by the duly incorporated railroad company, thereby lessening the amount of its tolls, and to that extent injuring its revenue, was also what is usually termed damnum absque injuria. And in the third case the construction of the pier outside of and around the plaintiff's wharves, which reduced his income therefrom, did not give him a right of action against the commissioners for the loss of his income from wharfage uses. It may be said, however, that the real foundation of this is that the plaintiff in each case had no right which could be injured. It is very much like the case of a merchant in a town who is engaged in selling goods to the people of the place, whereby large profits inure to his benefit. Another comes in and locates a similar store, and thereby takes from the former a considerable portion of the trade, and of course the profits that resulted therefrom. The merchant first mentioned has lost, but he has no claim, either to enjoin the newcomer from prosecuting his legitimate business, or to recover from him lawful in themselves, are not nuisances per se.

People v. Sands, 1 Johns. 78, 3 Am. Dec. 296; Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118, 19 Am. St. Rep. 475, 25 N. E. 259; Walker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 658, 33 N. W. 224; Kinney v. Koopman, 116 Ala. 310, 37 L. R. A. 497, 67 Am. St. Rep. 119, 22 So. 593; McCutchen v. Blanton, 59 Miss. 116; Windfall Mfg. Co. v. Patterson, 148 Ind. 414, 37 L. R. A. 381, 62 Am. St. Rep. 532, 47 N. E. 2; Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 727, 61 L. R. A. 188, 72 S. W. 954.

The public, or quasi-public, character of railroad and terminal companies, and their duties, obligations, and relations to the public, are such that any other rule than that the amount of profits that the latter has taken away.

The language of an act of the legislature incorporating a railroad was that the corporation should have power to construct a railroad or way commencing at or near a city, and running thence, on the north side of a river a certain distance. In order to reach the city it was essential that the railroad should cross the river from the north to the south side, the city lying on the south side of the river; and it was held that the language of the statute authorized the railroad to build a bridge that would sustain its road across the river as it was clearly the intent that the railroad should have authority to reach the city; and that, therefore, a bridge company duly incorporated by law, whose bridge crossed the river above, a projected bridge of the railroad company, could not maintain an action to restrain the latter from building its bridge, on account of damage that would ensue to the complainant by reason of loss of tolls, etc. Mohawk Bridge Co. v. Utica & S. R. Co. 6 Paige, 554.

So, where a railroad company duly authorized to construct its road between two certain points frequently crossed, and in its whole route ran near the road of a previously duly incorporated turnpike company, and the effect of the proper exercise and running of the railroad trains was to frighten horses and create an apprehension on the part of people likely to travel upon such turnpike that to do so was dangerous, whereby the turnpike company claimed to have lost money in tolls, and been injured and damaged in consequence thereof, no action against the railroad company by the turnpike company could be maintained. Bordentown & S. A. Turnp. Road v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 17 N. J. L. 314.

Where an act of the legislature authorized certain state officers having ex officio control of the public lands to grant the land under the waters of a navigable river in their discretion, with a prohibition against granting to any others than the owners of the adjacent land; and thereafter 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which relieves them from liability, except for an abuse of their franchises, or failure to observe proper care and prudence in the conduct and operations, would work great injustice to them, and detriment to the general public.

Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Frazier v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 138, 12 S. W. 537; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Atty. Gen. 2 Cent. L. J. 335, Fed. Cas. No. 2,606; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa (Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts), 94 U. S. 155, 2 L. ed. 94; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Tpeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 111, 24 L. ed. 77; Lawrence v. Chicago & N. W.

such officers granted to one the land under a portion of said river, describing it as adjacent to his lot; and he built thereon a wharf, from the use of which he received valuable rents and wharfage; and then after the legislature by an act appointed certain commissioners, and authorized them to construct a pier outside of and around the said wharf,—it was held that the owner thereof could not maintain an action against such commissioners for interfering with his wharfage profits and reducing his income therefrom, the court holding that the object of the act authorizing the state officers to make the grants in certain cases was to prevent the necessity of frequent applications to the legislature for that purpose; and that the prohibition against granting to any others than the owners of the adjacent land was a salutary limitation of the power so given; but that it never could have been intended as a restriction upon the power of the legislature, and that therefore, the owner of the wharf was not entitled to maintain his action against the commissioners for the damage he sustained by reason of the construction of the pier. Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. 9, 21 Am. Dec. 89, Affirming 8 Cow. 146. In that case the access from the wharf to deep water was not cut off, but merely rendered less easy, and therefore there was no legal injury.

A few additional cases which are not strictly in point upon the question of the power of the legislature to authorize a nuisance, since they turn upon the question of fact whether or not a nuisance existed, are mentioned here in order to emphasize the distinction between the two classes of cases. If an act is held not to be a nuisance, because it causes no injury to adjoining property, and therefore does not require legislative sanction, except so far as may be necessary to prevent its being a public nuisance because of its being committed on public land, quite a different question is presented than would be the case if the act wherever done, would be a nuisance unless legislative authority intervened to rescind it from its illegality. Moreover, if a de

1 Co. 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. ed. 97; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 60; 2 Elliott, Railroads, §§ 641, 720.

No liability for damages incidental to the operations of the railroads and the terminal yards exists.

Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co. 42 Tenn. 111, 45 L. R. A. 303, 50 S. W. 44; Tennessee C. R. Co. v. Campbell, 100 Tenn. 655, 73 S. W. 112; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64, 42 S. E. 316.

As to what is a reasonable use of one's property must necessarily depend upon the circumstances of each case; for a use for a particular purpose in a particular way in one locality would be lawful and reasonable, and might be unlawful and a nuisance in another.

Decision is rested on a ruling that no nuisance exists, because of a legislative sanction, without considering the constitutional authority to grant such immunity, the decision stops at the point where the fundamental rights of the citizen begin.

An act of the legislature of Missouri which granted a charter to a railroad company authorized it to build the road "along or across any state or county road, or street or wharves of any town or city; but said road shall not be so constructed as to prevent the public from using any road, street, or highway along or across which it may pass." And in Porter v. North Missouri R. Co. 33 Mo. 128, it was held that the use of the street for the ordinary purposes of a road as a means of travel and transportation is not a perversion of the highway from the original purpose, and that it was authorized by the general assembly in the charter of the defendant, and that the damage to the property of an adjoining owner, resulting from such construction, was damnum absque injuria. The court distinguished Lackland v. North Missouri R. Co. 31 Mo. 180, saying that that case was decided upon the ground that the city did not and could not authorize the entire conversion of the street, by permanent structures of various kinds, to such uses as virtually block it up for all the purposes of a street, but that here the obstruction did not prevent the public from using the street, except that part of it on which the track was laid, when in actual use by the defendants, and that the plaintiff's access to his lot was not affected.

Where an act of the legislature authorized a railroad company to extend its road through a certain street in a city, and through such other streets of the city as the corporation should from time to time permit, subject to such prudential rules as might be prescribed by the corporation, in addition to those directed by the act itself, it was held that such act contemplated the extension of the road from time to time, and when the corporation should give permission, leaving it to that body to regulate 1 L.R.A.(N.S.)

1 Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 2, p. 3; Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. 157; Peck v. Elder, 3 Sandf. 126; Walter v. Selfe, 4 DeG. & S. 323; Bamford v. Turnley, 3 Best & S. 62; Tipping v. St. Helen's Smelting Co. 4 Best & S. 62; Barnes v. Hathorn, 54 Me. 124; Addison, Torts, 74; Dargan v. Waddill, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 244, 49 Am. Dec. 421; Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa. 274, 98 Am. Dec. 221; Wier's Appeal, 74 Pa. 230.

All that can be required of the railroads is to use ordinary care and judgment in selecting the place for terminal yards, having regard to the comfort of adjoining proprietors, and the convenience of the public, and its own convenience.

Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co.

the time when the extension should commence and be completed in any particular street, without reference to the time allowed for completing the original road; and if by the consent of the corporation the railroad company constructs its road through a street, with a proper rail laid upon the level of the surface of the pavement, leaving the whole street perfectly free for the passage of carts and carriages of every kind for the whole of the width thereof, except at the moment when the railroad cars are passing upon the track in the center of the street, such construction and operation of the road in the street will not be enjoined at the suit of one claiming to have been injured. Hamilton v. New York & H. R. Co. 9 Paige, 171.

A railroad company, having obtained full legislative authority, proposed to lay two tracks in the bed of a city avenue, with poles, and wires to supply electricity to operate the road. The avenue was 40 feet wide, and in places there would not be room enough for vehicles to pass or stand in the space between the tracks and the line of the street; but the street would not thereby be destroyed or seriously impaired for the ordinary use of the public as carriages and other vehicles could always pass unless the railway company blocked the street by permitting two of its cars, on different tracks, to remain stationary and side by side, which would not be permitted for an unreasonable length of time. It was held that such an occupancy of the street would give no right of action to an abutting landowner. Poole v. Falls Road Electric R. Co. 88 Md. 533, 41 Atl. 1069.

Where a grant of power by the legislature to the mayor and city council was ample to justify an ordinance designating the route of the railroad, and also to prescribe the mode, terms, and conditions of its construction, this certainly embraced the power to authorize by ordinance the making of any part of the road (which was to be constructed by tunneling under the city) by open cuts, if found to be proper and necessary in the construction of the road on the route

v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64, 42 S. E. 318; London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 45; Hill v. Metropolitan Asylum District, L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 433; Dolan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 118 Wis. 362, 95 N. W. 385; Anderson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 85 Minn. 337, 88 N. W. 1001; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 435; Huckenstine's Appeal, 70 Pa. 102, 10 Am. Rep. 669; Robb v. Carnegie Bros. 145 Pa. 324, 14 L. R. A. 329, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694, 22 Atl. 649; Heerman v. Beef Slough Mfg. Boom. L. D. & Transp. Co. 8 Biss. 334, 1 Fed. 145; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27; Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co. 72 Iowa, 182, 33 N. W. 456; Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164, 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. 541, 4 Am. St. Rep. 659, 13 Atl. 690; Romer v. St. Paul City R. Co. 75 Minn. 211, 74 Am. St. Rep. 455, 77 N. W. 825; Bordentown & S. A. Turnp. Road v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 17 N. J. L. 314; Carroll v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. 40 Minn. 168, 41 N. W. 661; Austin v. Augusta Terminal R. Co. 108 Ga. 671, 47 L. R. A. 755, 34 S. E. 852; Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Bingham, 87 Tenn. 522, 4 L. R. A. 622, 11 S. W. 705.

Mr. Walter Stokes, for appellee:

In actions for nuisance, the owner, or tenant, must be the plaintiff. John T. Lelleytt owns the property as trustee. was in possession and using the same as a home for himself and family.

designated. And where such open cut on one side of a street was constructed as authorized by the mayor and city council, as provided in the act, an abutting owner on the opposite side of the street cannot complain that he will be deprived of the full use of the street as it existed before the open cut, and that his property will be depreciated in value by the construction of the road, as, if it be so, it is but an injury to whatever extent it may be suffered, of an incidental or consequential nature, and, the construction of the railroad being authorized by competent authority, it would seem to be clear, both upon principle and authority, that there is no such taking of private property for public use as is contemplated by the Constitution of the state. O'Brien v. Baltimore Belt R. Co. 74 Md. 369, 13 L. R. A. 126, 22 Atl. 141.

Where a street surface railway owning the fee of its roadbed, lying between the two sections of one of the principal avenues of a large city, erected upon its own land a structure in the nature of an incline commencing at grade and rising gradually to a point where there was a curve in the track passing over said avenue, and there connecting with the tracks of an elevated railroad; and thereafter operated passenger trains over the structure in connection with the elevated railroad; the height of such structure where it passed the plaintiff's premises being from 9 to 10 feet; and the running of cars on the incline and the curve was at times accompanied with unusual and disturbing noises, and by unusual smoke and casting of soot and cinders over and beyond that before caused by operating the surface road,—it was held that this did not constitute such a nuisance that the court would enjoin the maintaining of it. Bennett v. Long Island R. Co. 89 App. Div. 379, 85 N. Y. Supp. 938, Affirmed in 181 N. Y. 431, 74 N. E. 418.

Both the appellate division of the supreme court and the court of appeals seem to lay stress upon the fact that when the avenue was laid out a railroad was in actual operation upon the land acquired for that purpose. L.R.A. (N.S.)

pose, and of which it was the owner in fee, and which railroad led to the laying out of a double street, one section on either side of the railroad strip; and the appellate division particularly distinguished its decision in the Eldert Case, because in the latter the incline was designed to connect a street surface railroad with the elevated road, and it was built upon a public highway, and such a structure imposed an additional burden upon the highway, not contemplated by the original consent of the property owners to the construction of the street surface railroad, and the highway commissioners had no power to authorize its erection; but in the present case the structure was upon the defendant's own property, and, being made solely for the purposes of its corporate existence, could not be regarded in itself as an invasion of any of the plaintiff's property rights, independently of the question of the legality of the union between the two roads: and the character of the defendant's road was not changed at all by the erection of the incline complained of in the action: and it was still a steam surface railroad, with the grade changed to the maximum height of 10 feet in front of the plaintiff's property, and whatever injury resulted from the change was to be regarded, under the authorities, as damnum absque injuria.

In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lippincott, 116 Pa. 472, 2 Am. St. Rep. 618, 9 Atl. 871, it appeared that the railroad company had used and operated a viaduct, in connection with its other tracks, as a continuous line of railroad for the transportation of passengers and freight to and from its terminal passenger and freight station, and as a yard for shifting and making up trains; and that in consequence of the noise, disturbance, smoke, sparks, and noisome and unhealthy vapors occasioned and emitted by the defendant's cars and locomotives, great injury had been done to the plaintiff's property. It was not alleged that any injury had resulted from the erection of this elevated roadway, and the court said that it could not be truthfully so alleged, for the erection was on the company's own ground,

2 Wood, Nuisances, 1256; Kavanagh v. Barber, 131 N. Y. 211, 15 L. R. A. 689, 30 N. E. 235; 14 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 1107; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 721, 722; 1 Perry, Tr. § 328; 1 Wood, Nuisances, 33; Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. 93 Tenn. 521, 27 L. R. A. 236, 29 S. W. 104; Pierce v. Wagner, 29 Minn. 355, 13 N. W. 170; Story v. Hammond, 4 Ohio, 376; Kearney v. Farrell, 28 Conn. 317, 73 Am. Dec. 677; Ellis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 63 Mo. 131, 21 Am. Rep. 436; Brown v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 80 Mo. 457; Downs v. High Point, 115 N. C. 182, 20 S. E. 385; Lockett v. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. 78 Tex. 211, 14 S. W. 564.

The law does not allow anyone, whatever his circumstances or condition may be, to be driven from his home, or to be compelled to live in it in positive discomfort, although caused by a lawful and useful business carried on in his vicinity.

Reichert v. Geers, 98 Ind. 73, 49 Am. Rep. 736; Keiser v. Lovett, 85 Ind. 240, 44 Am. Rep. 10; Rounsaville v. Kohlheim, 68 Ga. 668, 45 Am. Rep. 505; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27; Rouse v. Martin, 75 Ala. 510, 51 Am. Rep. 463; Dicktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. v. Barnes (Tenn.) 60 S. W. 603; Ross v. Butler, 19 N. J. Eq. 294, 97 Am. Dec. 654; Pennsylvania Lead Co.'s Appeal, 96 Pa. 116, 42 Am. Rep. 534; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 56 Am. Rep. 6, or on the other side of the street from the plaintiff's property, the street being 51 feet wide, so that no part of the plaintiff's property, or any right of way or other appurtenances belonging to it, had been taken or used in the erection or construction of the viaduct. The court, after deciding to reverse a judgment for the plaintiff, for the reason that an improper rule of damages had been submitted by the trial court to the jury, said, further, that if the defendant had been guilty of a nuisance, if in the use of its road it made more smoke and dust than was lawfully allowable in the working of its machinery, and the plaintiffs were thereby injured, they had their remedy, but not for anything short of this, as any other rule would lead to this remarkable result, that the plaintiffs would be entitled to damages without having suffered any injury,—that is, for anticipated damages,—and for which a natural person could not be held liable. The case really hinged upon a provision of article 16, § 8, of the Constitution of 1874, which provides that "municipal and other corporations and individuals invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by the construction or enlargement of their works, highways, or improvements, which compensation shall be paid or secured before such taking, injury, or destruction." Two of the justices dissented without opinion.

Thereafter the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. 541, 4 Am. St. Rep. 659, 13 Atl. 690, arose, in which the rule laid down in the Lippincott Case was followed; and it was held that the railroad company was not liable to the plaintiff for constructing an elevated railroad in front of his premises, the passing of the cars on which created noise and burning cinders, smoke, dust, dirt, and jarring incident to the operation and use of the road so constructed, which injured him in the possession, use, and enjoyment of his premises and property, and rendered the same inconvenient, unfit, and of little or no use and value to him, and deprived him of the enjoyment of his business as a painter, and depreciated the value of the premises, and deprived him of the free use of the street as a highway, as the same was damnum absque injuria; and in doing so the majority of the court, through the judge delivering the opinion, said: "The language of the Constitution is not equivocal, and is entirely free from ambiguity. The framers of that instrument understood the meaning of words, and many of them were among the ablest lawyers of the state. Two of them occupy seats upon this bench. Hence, when they extended the protection of the Constitution to persons whose property should be injured or destroyed by corporations in the construction or enlargement of their works, we must presume they meant just what they said; that they intended to give a remedy merely for legal wrongs, and not for such injuries as were damnum absque injuria. Among the latter class of injuries are those which result from the use and enjoyment of a man's own property in a lawful manner and without negligence and without malice. Such injuries have never been actionable since the foundation of the world." One of the judges who had dissented in the Lippincott Case wrote an elaborate opinion in favor of the maintenance of the action, and in doing so used this language: "The injury to private property, no part of which is actually taken, resulting from carrying out, with reasonable and proper care, the public purposes for which a corporation is created and invested with the right of eminent domain, is regarded in the nature of a servitude fastened on the injured property by the locum tenens of the commonwealth for the public benefit, for which compensation is to be made in advance and once for all. The Constitution places such claims for compensation on precisely the same footing as claims for damages resulting to private property from an actual taking of a part thereof for public use." And he closed his exhaustive opinion by saying that the departure in the Lippincott Case and others was a mistake that ought to be promptly corrected. If he note, 8 N. E. 537; Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 741, 61 L. R. A. 188, 72 S. W. 954; 2 Wood, Nuisances, 1003.

The nuisance produced by the roundhouse was a recurrent one, which could be abated; and, therefore, no damage to the fee could be recovered.

Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 739, 61 L. R. A. 188, 72 S. W. 954.

It is no defense to this action to say that the terminal yard and the appurtenances are located in a convenient place, or that the same were operated with due care and caution.

1 Wood, Nuisances, 4-6; 2 Jaggard, Torts, 744; Dolan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co.

118 Wis. 362, 95 N. W. 385; Austin v. Augusta Terminal R. Co. 108 Ga. 671, 47 L. R. A. 755, 34 S. E. 852; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64, 42 S. E. 315; London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 50; Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 331, 83 S. W. 658; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Chicago, G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 50 L. R. A. 488, 42 C. C. A. 178, 102 Fed. 85.

No man's property shall be taken or applied to public use without consent of his representatives, or without just compensation being made therefor.

Tenn. Const. art. 1, § 21; Naashville v. Nichol, 3 Baxt. 340; Gray v. Knox was right, and his argument would seem to have been a good one, as a reading of the opinion will exhibit, it would seem that, while the people by the provisions of their Constitution may perhaps control their general assembly, they cannot always control their courts, to whom is given, or who assume, the right to construe what they have said, in a manner different from the plain, express words of the organic law.

Where in an action against a railroad company the complaint alleged damages from the smoke of the locomotive, on the ground that it was prejudicial to the health and comfort of the plaintiff and his family, and alleged that the establishment as conducted was a "nuisance of the most flagrant character," and that the lives of the plaintiff's family, tenants, and inmates were endangered, it was held that the general charge that it was a flagrant nuisance could not be taken into consideration any further than it might be supported by the facts; that the smoke must undoubtedly be annoying to some extent, but was not more disagreeable or prejudicial than what might proceed from many lawful establishments in the place where the plaintiff's premises were situate; and that the evil of which the plaintiff complained was by no means peculiar to himself, but was the necessary concomitant of this species of locomotion, whether in the city or the country, which could not be prevented without an entire suspension of one of the greatest improvements of modern times. Hentz v. Long Island R. Co. 13 Barb. 646.

The result of the decisions of the Elevated Railroad Cases is such as completely to refute what was proclaimed in Hentz v. Long Island R. Co. 13 Barb. 646; and the circumstance that those roads, after settling with and paying the owners of property in a closely built city—the metropolis of the Continent—throughout their whole extent are to-day in the most prosperous condition and their stock prized highly by the best financiers, is proof of the fact. But this is not the only case in which the judge delivering the opinion has, without reference to the point under consideration, talked grandiloquently about the sad times into which the country would fall if railroads and other corporations clothed partially with public authority were made to pay for the direct results of their injurious acts performed in their private capacity. Such instances frequently occur among the decisions.

A railroad company whose tracks are along one side of a river is not liable to the owner of land on the opposite side of the river for raising its tracks by an embankment to avoid high waters in times of freshet, where there is no allegation or proof that it was unskillfully or improperly done, and it does not appear how much damage to the plaintiff's land was caused thereby. Moyer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 351.

Where by an act of the legislature the right is conceded to domestic corporations, legally created, to erect poles, abutments, and other works necessary for the operating and maintaining of their lines for the purpose of transmitting intelligence by magnetic telegraph or telephone, or other system, along all state, parish, or public roads and waters, and also along the streets of any city, with the consent of the council or trustees thereof; and the erection of a pole by a telephone company is accomplished with anterior proper authority, after compliance with all conditions precedent imposed by the state and city, and with as little inconvenience as possible to the owner and occupant of property in front of which the pole is erected and to the public,—it was held in Irwin v. Great Southern Teleph. Co. 37 La. Ann. 63, that, if such construction and use of the pole were an actual nuisance at all, it was such as did not materially interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of the plaintiff's property, had caused little or no harm or injury to anyone, was easily bearable and must be endured in view of the great public service which the use of it rendered, and that there was nothing to show that the defendant had transgressed the authority granted, or ill-used, or misused, or ville, 85 Tenn. 99, 1 S. W. 622; Tuttle v. Knox County, 89 Tenn. 157, 14 S. W. 486.

The nuisance produced by the yard and its appurtenances amounts to a taking of the plaintiff's property.

Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. 93 Tenn. 492, 27 L. R. A. 236, 29 S. W. 104; Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. 135 N. Y. 393, 17 L. R. A. 674, 31 Am. St. Rep. 838, 32 N. E. 148; Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 727, 61 L. R. A. 188, 72 S. W. 954.

The Fifth Baptist Church Case has been followed and cited in—

Methodist Episcopal Church v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. J. Eq. 455, 22 Atl. 184; Willis v. Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. 104 Ky. 186, 46 S. W. 489; Adams v. Chicago, B. &

N. R. Co. 39 Minn. 291, 1 L. R. A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644, 39 N. W. 632; Root v. Butte, A. & P. R. Co. 20 Mont. 358, 51 Pac. 156; Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 295, 10 N. E. 535; Smith v. East End Street R. Co. 87 Tenn. 636, 11 S. W. 712; Gainsville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 173, 9 L. R. A. 300, 22 Am. St. Rep. 45, 14 S. W. 260; Stanford v. San Francisco, 111 Cal. 204, 43 Pac. 607; Bacon v. Boston, 154 Mass. 102, 28 N. E. 10; Edmonds v. Mob-erly, 98 Mo. 526, 11 S. W. 991; Snell v. Buresh, 123 Ill. 157, 13 N. E. 857; Haggart v. Stehlin, 137 Ind. 55, 22 L. R. A. 586, 35 N. E. 1001; Churchill v. Burlington Water Co. 94 Iowa, 92, 62 N. W. 647; Blanc v. Murray, 36 La. Ann. 165, 51 Am. Rep. 9; Larson v. Ring, 43 Minn. 90, 44 N.

abused the same so as to justify any plausible complaint; and a judgment dismissing the action brought for the removal of the poles was affirmed.

III. The English rule.

Not infrequently American courts have cited English cases as authority for the position, not only that the legislature has authorized a nuisance, but also that it has the power to do so. But when it is considered that the power of Parliament is absolute, and that it is in no way trammelled or restrained by inhibitions such as are contained in both Federal and state Constitutions in this country, the English decisions which hold that, because of the authority of the act of Parliament, the injuries which one sustains by reason of the carrying out of the provisions of the act with due care and without negligence or want of skill are damnum absque injuria, are not applicable in this country, where constitutional provisions prevail prohibiting the taking or (as provided in the Constitution of some of the states) injuring, causing damage to or destroying, private property rights, as well as the granting of special privileges and immunities. This truth is well stated by Smith J., in Goodall v. Milwaukee, 5 Wis. 38, as follows: "There is no doubt that the constitutional inhibitions upon the legislative power in this country, in favor of the protection and security of the individual citizen or person in his rights of property, however consonant with natural justice, constitute a peculiar feature of American legislation and jurisprudence. In England, the Parliament is said to be supreme, omnipotent, and to its mandates the highest, as well as the lowest, in all their rights and acquisitions, must yield. Not so here, all departments of government derive their powers from the prescribed consent of the people who are governed. In all of the states of the Union, as well as in the fundamental Federal compact, limits are fixed to each department of the government, and especial (L.R.A. (N.S.)) care is taken to protect and secure the individual citizen against the rapacity, corruption, or heedlessness of public functionaries, in all of the spheres wherein they may be called to act. Here, in this country, the legislature is not omnipotent, but is hedged about by those constitutional inhibitions which the executive and judiciary are bound to regard and enforce should the former become unmindful of their operative power upon the contemplated enactment. In this country we are not compelled to look to the purview of a statute to ascertain whether or not provision is made for compensation for private property taken or authorized to be taken for public use, but every citizen is assured by the fundamental law that his property is safe from aggression unless compensation is provided for in the act which authorizes its seizure, or that the act in that respect is null and void. Therefore, the question here is not whether an act of the legislature which authorizes the taking of private property for public use has provided compensation for the property so taken, in order to determine the right of the person whose property is taken, to compensation, because the fundamental law secures him against all such enactments, and renders them void or inoperative unless compensation be provided for, and can afford no immunity to the person or persons, artificial or natural, municipal or private, acting in conformity therewith."

And in Sadler v. New York, 40 Misc. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 308, the court said that the misunderstanding which had caused the diversity of decision upon the subject under consideration arose from the inadvertent citation of certain English decisions, which, by reason of the superior and unrestrained power of Parliament, could really have no application with us, and then proceeded to say: "The law in England undoubtedly is that if Parliament authorizes the actual taking of private property, or the construction and use by an individual or corporation of anything which is necessarily a private nuisance, or injures the property of individ-

W. 1079; Costigan v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 54 N. J. L. 240, 23 Atl. 812; Ridge v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 58 N. J. Eq. 172, 43 Atl. 276; Evans v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 605, 39 Am. St. Rep. 911, 57 N. W. 356; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 25, 56 Am. Rep. 6, note, 8 N. E. 543; Garvey v. Long Island R. Co. 159 N. Y. 331, 70 Am. St. Rep. 554, 54 N. E. 59; Frost v. Berkeley Phosphate Co. 42 S. C. 413, 26 L. R. A. 697, 46 Am. St. Rep. 741, 20 S. E. 284; Mathews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 121 Mo. 319, 25 L. R. A. 169, 24 S. W. 597.

The law will not, as a general rule, either in civil or criminal suits for nuisances, balance conveniences; and, when the violation of the public or private right is clear, it will be no defense to show that the thing occasioning the nuisance may be of benefit to the public.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 689, 690; Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 167; Chicago, G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 50 L. R. A. 492, 42 C. C. A. 178, 102 Fed. 85; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Grabill, 50 Ill. 244; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Darke, 148 Ill. 232, 35 N. E. 750; Booth v. Rome, W. & O. Terminal R. Co. 140 N. Y. 272, 24 L. R. A. 105, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552, 35 N. E. 292; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 318, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432; Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. 93 Tenn. 518, 27 L. R. A. 236, 29 S. W. 104.

Mr. George A. Frazer also for appellee.

uals, and provides no compensation therefor, the courts can give no redress for the injury."

But there is still another reason why English decisions to the effect that an act of Parliament is a complete justification for what would otherwise be held to be the commission of a nuisance are inapplicable in this country; and that is, that so far as corporations, municipal and otherwise, are concerned, they are interpretations of the special act or charter of the corporation whose rights and liabilities are being considered, and generally, in connection therewith, of one of the acts there termed the "clauses acts," and more particularly what is known as the "land clauses consolidation act," "the railway clauses consolidation act," the "waterworks clauses act," and the "gas works clauses act." And therefore the cases of British Cast Plate Mfrs. v. Meredith, 4 T. T. 794; Sutton v. Clarke, 6 Taunt. 29; Biddulph v. Parish of St. George, 3 De. G. J. & S. 493; King v. Pease, 4 Barn. & Ad. 30 (which was a case of a public nuisance, but which has been frequently cited for the proposition that what Parliament has authorized cannot be an actionable wrong); Vaughan v. Taff Vale R. Co. 5 Hurlst. & N. 679; Hammersmith & City R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 171; Lea Conservancy Board v. Hertford, 1 Cab. & El. 299; London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 45; National Teleph. Co. v. Baker [1893] 2 Ch. 186; Abraham v. Great Northern R. Co. 16 Q. B. 586; Boulton v. Crowther, 2 Barn. & C. 703; Cracknell v. Thetford, L. R. 4 C. P. 629; Stainton v. Woolrych, 23 Beav. 225; Harrison v. Southwark & V. Water Co. [1891] 2 Ch. 409; and Canadian P. R. Co. v. Roy [1902] 12 A. C. 220,—all of which hold that the defendant in each was protected from liability by the act of Parliament, are of no practical value, because of the absolute power of Parliament to authorize the taking of private property, even to the extent of confiscation.

But even in England, while it is not in every case of nuisance that a court of equity will interfere by injunction,—as, where the 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

injury is merely temporary and trifling,—it ought to do so in cases in which the injury is permanent and serious; and wherever the effect of a nuisance upon the value of the estate and the prospect of dealing with it to advantage will be affected by the continuance of a nuisance, the injunction should be granted. Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improv. Comrs. L. R., 1 Ch. 349.

The decisions of the Canada courts upon the question being considered are subject to the same qualification as the English decisions, except that perhaps it may be said that, where an act of the English Parliament enters into the discussion there, it operates in a somewhat similar manner, as a provision of organic law, as would a constitutional provision, so far as the Canadian Dominion Parliament, or any provincial parliaments, or the courts, are concerned.

In Bennett v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 2 Ont. L. Rep. 425, it was held that a railroad company, being authorized to carry goods, was not liable to the owner of a house because the air was polluted with a noxious smell from the animals loaded into cars near such house.

IV. Charter confers no immunity.

a. In general.

The question as to the effect of a legislative charter has arisen most frequently in cases of railroads, and therefore, to get the problem well in mind, the situation with respect to them will be examined. An individual may run a railroad on his own property without being liable for a nuisance to his neighbors, so long as, under all the circumstances, it constitutes a reasonable use of the property and comes within the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. If, however, the enterprise is too large for him to handle alone, and he decides to organize a corporation for that purpose, it is necessary for him to receive the sanction of the state by means of a charter, in order to secure the advantages which incorporation confers. But so far as

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal in the nature of a writ of error from a judgment against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, the Nashville, Chattanooga, & St. Louis Railway, and the Louisville & Nashville Terminal Company for $4,000 for alleged injuries from smoke, soot, dust, and noise claimed to be due to the operation of the railroad and terminal yards, roundhouses, etc., at Nashville, Tennessee.

The cause was tried before the Honorable J. A. Cartwright, circuit judge, and a jury. A motion for a new trial was duly made and overruled. A motion in arrest of judgment was then made and overruled. Due and proper exception was taken to the action of the court, and an appeal was prayed to this court.

The writ was issued on August 25, 1902, and required the defendants "to answer John T. Lellyett, trustee, and next friend of Mary R., Mary Frances, and Catherine Lellyett in an action for damages in the sum of $10,000."

The declaration contains six counts.

The first count alleges that, when "he [the plaintiff] became the owner of said property, and up to the time of the location of the terminal station and occupation thereof by defendants, said property was exceedingly valuable; the neighborhood was quiet, free from noise, smoke, and soot, and unpleasant gases, and in every way a desirable place to reside; that, owing to its locathe running of the railroad is concerned he is in precisely the same situation that he was in before. He now has authority to become an artificial being, and that being has authority to run a railroad, but it must still do it with full regard to the rights of other property holders. If, in addition, he desires to extend his road onto another's property or along a public street, he can secure the right of eminent domain by undertaking to become a public servant; but the authority so given him does not change his relations to his fellow citizens, except so far as he can compel them to surrender their property to him for due compensation, and to submit to whatever nuisance he chooses to create, also for due compensation. In other words, his charter and right of eminent domain have merely guaranteed the right to prosecute the enterprise, but have not relieved him of the duties as to making compensation which would rest upon him in their absence.

Interference with public rights without proper authority would make the enterprise a public nuisance.

Thus, where the charter of a railroad company gave them a right to construct their railroad across a watercourse, only on condition that the same should be restored to its former state, or in such manner as not to impair its usefulness, which condition was not fulfilled in building the bridge, the latter is both a public and a private nuisance, as much as though it had been erected without original license or authority, as the charter is a sufficient warrant for the erection and maintenance of a bridge, only when the bridge is erected in accordance with its terms and conditions. Healy v. Joliet & C. R. Co. 2 Ill. App. 435.

So, the erection and maintenance, by a street surface railway, of a wall of masonry and an iron structure to connect its railway track with an elevated railroad, extending 200 feet in a public highway or avenue, by a gradual slope, to a maximum height of about 10 feet above the grade of the avenue, in front of the property of an abutting owner on the avenue, without the consent of the necessary number of abutting owners, as required by its charter, is a public nuisance; and where one of such abutting owners suffers special damage on account of the same, the maintaining of such nuisance will be enjoined at his suit. Eldert v. Long Island Electric R. Co. 28 App. Div. 451, 51 N. Y. Supp. 186, Affirmed in 165 N. Y. 651, 59 N. E. 1122.

So, a territorial legislature forbidden by an act of Congress to grant private charters or special privileges cannot confer the right to do so upon a city council, as such council could not, after the passage of the congressional act, exercise a greater power in this respect than the legislature which created it; and so acts of a railroad company under an ordinance of the city council, which if authorized by law might have been justified, no matter how much inconvenience to the public they might have occasioned, being without right, no matter how little inconvenience the permanent appropriation of a part of the street may occasion, cannot be defended from the charge of nuisance. Denver & S. R. Co. v. Denver City R. Co. 2 Colo. 673.

The charter authority prevents the enterprise from being a public nuisance, but has no hearing on the question of presence or absence of nuisance which is strictly private.

Thus, when a railroad company obtains its charter from the legislature, there is an implied duty imposed that the company shall not in its exercise deprive others of their rights, or even incommode them, without becoming liable to respond in damages. Ottawa Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Graham, 28 Ill. 73, 81 Am. Dec. 263.

So, where a legislative grant authorized a railroad company to enter upon, take, and appropriate to their own use, on making a just compensation therefor, such lands as they might require for the use of their said railroads, and to cross all intervening waters and streams, this was as far as the legislative grant could go, so far as it affected private rights. The effect of the grant was to exempt the railroad company tion aforesaid, and its freedom at the time from noise, dust, soot, smoke, and noxious gases, plaintiff had beautified said place with shrubbery, trees grass and flowers, which would enhance the value of aforesaid property intended for residence purposes."

The declaration then proceeds to state that the terminal company was chartered and authorized to erect a terminal station in Nashville, and did erect the same; that afterwards, under some arrangement with the defendant companies, they have been in the use, operation, and occupation of the same; that the terminal yards or grounds lie in close proximity to the plaintiff's property, and defendants have constructed large numbers of tracks thereon, and operate a large number of engines and cars over them; that the noise from the engines and cars is unreasonable and constant day and night; that the defendant companies use a cheap and low grade of soft coal in their engines which emit volumes of black, dirty smoke, defiling everything with which it comes in contact, which is due to the negligence of defendants in the operation of their engines; that the engines emit poisonous and noxious gases, which often lie over plaintiff's property like a pall; that defendant's negligently erected, in close proximity to plaintiff's property, large coal bins or chutes, upon which thousands of cars of coal are dumped from a high elevation, causing dust and dirt to arise therefrom, which pass over and settle on plaintiff's property; that defendants have erected from all liability as respects the public, to indictment for nuisance, or otherwise; but it left all rights of property unaffected. It gave merely a franchise and the title and rights of a private corporation. It conferred, and could confer, no exemption upon the defendants for wrongs to the rights of private property. Robinson v. New York & E. R. Co. 27 Barb. 512.

And so, where the railroad company had, in the construction of its road, crossed a stream, and, in doing so, had excavated and removed the banks of the stream in such a way as to alter and change the same to the injury of the plaintiff's lot, it was liable for the damages sustained by him, and was not protected by the act of the legislature constituting its charter. Ibid.

And this, notwithstanding it appeared, and was not controverted, that the means provided by the railroad company for disposing of the water of the stream were sufficient to pass all the water in the highest flood that had ever been known; and that the flood which did the damage to the plaintiff's premises was much the highest flood that had ever been known in the stream. Speaking of the effect of the legislative act under which the railroad company was incorporated, the judge writing the opinion of the general term of the supreme court said: "But I do not see that this act relieves the defendants from their liability in this action. The right of the defendants to construct their railroad across this creek is not denied, and is undeniable. But this act of the legislature merely gave authority to the defendants to cross this creek. It did not, and could not, give any authority to them to invade any private right without just compensation. The force of a legislative grant of this kind is well declared in the case of Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462, recently reaffirmed in Brown v. Cayuga & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 487."

This would seem to be a succinct but comprehensive statement of the doctrine of the courts and judges who hold that a legislative act which confers upon a corporation the right to exercise eminent domain does not, of necessity, justify it in committing a private nuisance, or a public nuisance from which a private individual specially suffers, with impunity, and without compensation.

So, a charter of a street railway company authorized it to lay down and maintain its railway in the streets of a city, subject to such restrictions as might be imposed by the common council. The city authorities afterwards adopted an ordinance authorizing the company to lay a single track with turnouts, which was done under the personal direction of the city engineer. In doing so the track of the railroad was so built as to cause a permanent obstruction to the passage of water in a gutter which had theretofore existed in the street, and in consequence the water was cast back upon the plaintiff's premises, and caused damage to his garden, vegetables, flowers, and shrubbery. The court, in Alton & U. A. Horse R. & Carrying Co. v. Deitz, 50 Ill. 210, 99 Am. Dec. 509, said that, where an incorporated company of this character accept their charter and construct a railway, it is an implied condition that they will not injure others by its construction or maintenance, and that when they adopted the conditions imposed by the city and the plans prescribed by its engineer they made them their own, and having accepted them they were responsible for the damages resulting to others by the construction of the road, to the same extent and precisely as though the plan had been suggested and carried out by an engineer of their own; and it appearing that a culvert constructed under such plans and directions was not sufficient to discharge the water as it had formerly run through the gutter, but threw it over upon the plaintiff's land, garden, etc., to his damage, the defendants were liable therefor.

b. Railroad charters.

1. In general.

In any consideration of this question, the fact must be kept constantly in mind that a railroad as it is ordinarily operated is not a nuisance, and if it has proper legislative a large roundhouse, with a number of pipes or smokestacks, where they fire up and cool off engines, some of which are permitted to remain in said house an unreasonable length of time, and from the smokestacks of which roundhouse the smoke passes over to and settles on the plaintiff's property; that plaintiff's property is not worth near as much as it was before the erection of said depot and terminal station, and said decrease has been owing to the wrongful acts of defendants; that said smoke, soot, creosote, cinders, dust, and gases have permanently reduced and injured the value of plaintiff's realty, and have destroyed plaintiff's shrubbery, trees, grass, and flowers; and that plaintiff has been damaged the sum of $10,000.

authority it cannot be treated as a public nuisance, even if it is located in a public street. In order to give a private right of action, therefore, the fact that a nuisance has been created in the particular instance must be shown.

Thus, in Hayes v. Waverly & P. R. Co. 51 N. J. Eq. 345, 27 Atl. 648, in considering another question the chancellor said that a railroad existing under authority of law was not a nuisance.

So, in considering another question, in Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Loeb, 118 Ill. 203, 59 Am. Rep. 341, 8 N. E. 460, the court said, among other things, that a railroad track laid upon a street of a city by authority of law, properly constructed and operated in a skilful and careful manner, is not, in law, a nuisance.

So, in Baxter v. Spuyten D. & P. M. R. Co. 61 Barb. 433, it was held that it was lawful for a railroad company to cross a highway at grade, and that doing so was not a nuisance or a trespass which a court of equity had power to restrain, when done in the ordinary construction of the railway under an act of the legislature authorizing its construction.

So, where the fee in the streets of a city is in the public, or in the municipality in trust for the public use, the doctrine is settled that the legislature may authorize such streets to be used by a railroad company without compensation to adjoining owners or to the municipality, and without the consent and even against the wishes of either. And where a railroad company has been so authorized to construct and operate its road in a public street, although there may at times be a temporary obstruction and delay and inconvenience to vehicles other than the railway carriages, these are inconveniences to which individuals may be temporarily subjected, and to which the public interests are entitled; and where a street was, after the construction of a railroad, sufficiently wide for its use, and while the trains were passing or stopping along the street ordinary vehicles were somewhat restricted in their movements and passage, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The second count is substantially the same as the first, except that it alleges damage to "his household furniture, ornaments, silver, and such articles," and that the smoke settles upon plaintiff's house and injures his personal property.

The third count alleges the same as the first count, but the damage claimed is for injury to the health of his family.

The fourth count alleges the same facts, and the damages claimed are for permanent injury to the property.

The fifth count alleges the same facts, and avers damage as follows: "Thereby damaging and injuring the furniture, hangings, fixtures, carpets, and property of the plaintiff and his family, ruining and dethis was not such unreasonable delay and obstruction as would justify a court in enjoining the railway company from the enjoyment of the right which had been granted. Harrison v. New Orleans P. R. Co. 34 La. Ann. 462, 44 Am. Rep. 438, Approved and followed in Tilton v. New Orleans City R. Co. 35 La. Ann. 1062.

So, in an action brought by the owner of a lot upon a street in a city, upon which was a church, a schoolhouse, and a dwelling house, all of which had been erected long before the existence of any railway, and the church had been used continuously for public worship and religious ceremonies, and many children had continuously attended the school, and the dwelling house had been continuously occupied, the plaintiff sought to recover damages for the occupation of the street by the defendant railway company. The answer alleged that the railroad company, duly authorized by statute, had placed their track in such street as authorized by an ordinance of the city; and alleged that the only obstruction to the entrance upon and exit from the plaintiff's property was temporarily by passing trains operated in the usual, ordinary, systematic, and necessary conduct of the business of the company; and denied that the plaintiff had any easement in that part of the street occupied by the track, or, if he had any special easement, that any damage had been done thereto. A demurrer to the answer was overruled, and such judgment was approved on appeal, the court holding that the laying out and operating of a railway upon a street is not necessarily an unreasonable obstruction of its free use, but rather a new and improved method of using the same, germane to its principal object, and that for such consequences thereof as appear in this case there is no remedy, public or private. Dwenger v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Ind. 153.

So, in Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Applegate, 8 Dana, 289, 33 Am. Dec. 497, it is said that neither the constituted authorities of a city nor the legislature of the state could either license a private nuisance, or take or stroying its use by the plaintiff and his family to his damage $10,000."

The sixth count alleges similar facts, and claims damages as follows: "And that their result is to destroy the health, peace, comfort, and happiness of his family, and that their peace, health, comfort, and happiness have been injured and destroyed by said reckless, careless, negligent, and wilful conduct, to the extent of $10,000."

The defendants demurred on three grounds:

First. Because of misjoinder of parties and misjoinder of causes of action, in that the suit was for damages for permanent reduction of the value of the property and for damage to the household furniture, and that the smoke and soot had been carried into the systems of the plaintiff and his family, whereby their health was greatly injured; that the plaintiff, as trustee and next friend, cannot sue for injury to the real estate in the same action in which he sues for injury to the health of the parties for whom he is trustee and next friend; that the plaintiff's ownership of the property is joint, and the injury to the health of the plaintiffs is several.

Second. That the declaration is insufficient in law, because it is uncertain, indefinite, and ambiguous.

Third. For misjoinder in causes of action in suing for permanent decrease in the value of real estate, and also for injury to personal property, household furniture, and for loss of personal comfort and health.

encroach on private property without the owner's consent or the payment to him of adequate damages, or appropriate any street in the city to any use to which it was not originally dedicated, unless the consent of all those immediately interested in such street should be given, or just compensation should be first made to them. But, even though some persons owning property on the railroad street may be subjected to some inconvenience, and even loss, by the construction and use of the road, yet, if the use made of the road be consistent with the purpose for which the street was established, and also consistent with the just rights of all, such persons have no right either to damages or to an injunction, because they purchased their property and must hold it—as all others purchase and must hold town lots—subject to any consequences that may result, whether advantageously or disadvantageously, from any public and authorized use of the street, in any mode promotive of, and consistent with, the purpose of establishing them as common highways in town, and compatible with the reasonable enjoyment of them by all others entitled thereto. As the legislature and the local authorities of the city authorized the construction of the railroad through the city, and also authorized the company to employ upon it cars and steam power,—and the more especially as such improvements in the means of transportation must be useful to the traveling and commercial public, and, in many respects, obviously advantageous to the local public of the city itself,—prima facie, the ordinary and careful use of the road, as thus authorized and prescribed, should not be deemed a nuisance, public or private.

Parts of the foregoing have been cited in support of both the affirmative and the negative of the question under consideration, but in reality the effect of the long-drawn-out opinion in this case was to simply decide that a decree of the chancellor and his opinion upon which it was founded, that a railroad should be enjoined from running through the streets of a city, notwithstanding it had the authority of the legislature and the license of the municipal government, because thereafter it might absorb the whole street, should be reversed.

So, it has been held that an adjoining proprietor can never be entitled to recover from a railroad company organized under the general railroad law of the state for the depreciation in the rental or sale value of the premises because of the location of the track in the street, except upon the assumption that the location is of itself unlawful. Such location is unlawful as to him if he owns the soil in the street; but if he does not, and the placing of the track there is permitted by competent authority, the incidental injuries he may suffer from the location of the track and from the proper and reasonable conduct of the business of the railroad company upon it can afford no ground of action unless the statute gives one, as in that particular he is on the same footing with all the rest of the community. He may have the incidental benefits without compensation, and he must submit to the incidental losses without redress. A railroad is not a public nuisance, and no right of action can arise against the company until, by negligence or improper management, it does or suffers to be done something injurious to the abutting proprietor which the permission to occupy the street did not justify. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62, 31 Am. Rep. 306.

And so, a railroad constructed on the streets of a city, under the authority of the general statute permitting the same, and with the license or consent of the city authorities, if it be constructed and operated in a lawful and proper manner is not a nuisance of which an abutting owner may complain. Milburn v. Cedar Rapids, 12 Iowa, 246.

So, it has been said that where a railroad company had authority to make their road where it was, with its terminus at a particular street, they were entitled to the ordinary and necessary uses and advantages of their position, and would not be responsible for any unavoidable annoyance or Identical demurrers were filed by all the defendants. The court sustained the demurrers as to the claim for damages to the plaintiff, John T. Lellyett, individually. In all other respects the demurrers were overruled, to which due exception was taken.

The defendants filed pleas raising the same questions. The defendants' first plea was the general issue,—not guilty.

The second plea was a special plea in which the defendant companies' charters were averred. The plea then further alleged that when the company's road was first built, Nashville was a village with few inhabitants; that the property on which plaintiff's residence is now situated was vacant; that defendants' shops and terminal facilities were located at the extreme western edge of the town, and that the only feasible location for them was there; that they continued to operate said shops and terminal facilities at such point until the town increased in size, and there was an absolute necessity for larger shops, depots, bigger grounds and terminal facilities, and for new depots for passengers and freight; that, pursuant to this demand, the city of Nashville, a number of years ago, authorized the closing up of certain streets and alleys, and later on the raising of certain streets and the building of certain overhead bridges; that the city itself spent large sums of money in making these improvements; that, in order to furnish a suitable depot and terminal facilities, the railroads entering Nashville co-operated; that the disturbance such uses might cause, where it did not appear that they created any more noise and confusion than was usual or customary under similar circumstances, and that to permit and encourage them to construct their road at a heavy expense, and then to deny them the privilege of using it for the ordinary and necessary purposes of such a work, would be inconsistent with every principle of justice and common sense. Bell v. Ohio & P. R. Co. 25 Pa. 161, 64 Am. Dec. 687.

Where, in an action against a railroad company, the petition proceeded upon the theory that the defendant had constructed its track on the street of a city without any lawful authority, and the action was for a nuisance created by malfeasance, and not for a nuisance resulting from misfeasance, and it was stated by the plaintiff's counsel at the argument of the cause that for the purposes of the appeal the right of the defendant to construct and operate its road on the street might be assumed by the court, it was held that this admission disposed of the case; that, it being conceded that the defendant had authority to construct and operate its road on a street, it could not be chargeable with thereby levying a nuisance, unless it had either constructed or operated its road in an unlawful manner, as a railroad track laid upon the street of a city by authority of law, properly constructed and operated in a skilful and careful manner, is not, in law, a nuisance. Randle v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 325.

So, where a railroad company duly incorporated by an act of the legislature has been granted the privilege of constructing a tunnel through a public street in a city, by the corporation, a court of equity has no jurisdiction to restrain the construction of the work, or the use of it when completed. Hodgkinson v. Long Island R. Co. 4 Edw. Ch. 411.

So, where an act of the legislature authorizes the construction of an elevated railway in a particular manner, and the railway company is proceeding to construct it in the manner directed in the act, a court cannot by injunction interfere with such construction on the ground that it is a nuisance. Currier v. West Side Elev. Patent R. Co. 6 Blatchf. 487, Fed. Cas. No. 3,493.

Therefore the question whether the owner of a lot abutting upon a street may maintain a common-law action, where the structure in the street imposes no new burden on the soil owned by him, depends upon whether or not the occupation of the street with such structure results in damage to his property, peculiar and different in kind from that which is suffered by the community in general; and by "community in general" is meant those who reside in the immediate vicinity of the railroad owned by the company erecting such structure, and are subject to the inconvenience incident to such a structure. The location and operation of a railroad upon a public highway may occasion incidental inconvenience to an abutting landowner, but until it cuts off or materially interrupts his means of access to his property, or imposes some additional burden on his soil, his injury is the same in kind as the community in general. And injuries which result from the careful construction and operation of a railroad on the land of another are common to all those whose lands are in close proximity to such road; and for such injuries there can be no recovery in the absence of a statute entitling the owner to maintain such action. Decker v. Evansville Suburban & N. R. Co. 133 Ind. 493, 33 N. E. 349.

The fact that one has recovered judgment against a railroad company for damage to his lands as the result of the erection of their road, which did not touch his lands, and which was carefully and skilfully erected in accordance with authority duly conferred by statute, which judgment the railroad company has never paid, does not entitle such an one to maintain an action to have the erection declared a nuisance and to have the same abated. New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Higman, 18 Ind. 77.

2. Injuries from location and construction of road.

The general rule is that in the location public business increased, and thus increased the operations in the terminal yards; that the erections complained of were built pursuant to lawful powers, and that the damages complained of are such as are suffered by all persons who live in a city which grows and expands, and who happen to reside near any coal-burning concern that cannot move from place to place; that the location was determined by public necessity and convenience and the demands of commerce, as well as by charter rights; and that the original road was built long before plaintiff's residence was erected, and the proximity of its depots and yards to plaintiff's house has come about by reason of necessary expansion in serving the public.

The third plea was that the topography of the city of Nashville rendered any other location impracticable.

The fourth plea was based upon the public convenience and public necessity for locating the terminal facilities within reasonable reach of the public.

The fifth plea recited the charter of the Nashville & Chattanooga Railroad, and the original location of its road where the present tracks are situated; the original charter of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company; the construction of its railroad in Tennessee; its extension from its original depot, on the west bank of the Cumberland river, through the territory now occupied and past plaintiff's residence; the original charter of the Tennessee & Alabama Railroad, the Nashville & Northwestern Rail and construction of its road a railroad company is in precisely the same situation as any private property owner. If it creates a nuisance to adjoining property, it must answer therefor.

Thus, a railroad company cannot be justified in an injury to private property any more than a private individual, unless the act causing the injury was done as the agent or in behalf of the government and to effect an object of public interest. In the construction and use of their railroad they are not acting in the capacity of public agents, but as an incorporation pursuing their own interest in the mode warranted by their charter; and if in the lawful exercise of this power they inflict an injury upon the private rights of others they must respond in damages for such injury; but such an injury, however, must be the natural and direct result of the act itself, and not a consequence which results from the fears, prejudices, passions, or caprices of the public. Bordentown & S. A. Turnp. Road v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 17 N. J. L. 314.

An act of the legislature which gives a railroad company which it incorporates the right to build a road between certain localities gives the company no more absolute right to build the road in question than the common law gives every man to build upon his own ground; and the act becomes unlawful in the one case precisely upon the same principle and to the same extent as in the other. And in Tinsman v. Belvidere D. R. Co. 26 N. J. L. 148, 69 Am. Dec. 565, it was held that, because the charter of the railroad authorized its construction over such a route as made it necessary to cross a stream, that gave the defendant no right to erect a dam or embankment so as to injure the plaintiff's right of navigation; the embankment in this case being declared a private nuisance.

So, a railroad company is liable for the diversion of surface water by ditches along its right of way, where an individual would be liable therefor, although the legislature has authorized the construction of the road, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) and the work which caused the diversion is necessary, and is skillfully and carefully performed. Staton v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. 11 N. C. 278, 17 L. R. A. 838, 16 S. E. 181.

In that case it was held that the lack of any constitutional provision against taking property for public use without just compensation does not prevent a railroad company from becoming liable for consequential damages to property incidentally injured by the construction of its road under legislative authority, as in the case of diversion of surface water to the injury of a neighboring proprietor. The court in answer to the claim of the defendant that, inasmuch as the legislature had authorized the defendant to construct its road, it was not liable to an adjacent proprietor for any damage incident to such construction, provided the work was necessary and was skillfully and carefully performed, said that it was true that some of the cases from other states go to the extraordinary length of sustaining that proposition; but that they were not in accord with the more recent and better authorities, and were rapidly being submerged by the steady and increasing current of judicial decision; and said that Mr. Lewis, in his excellent work on Eminent Domain (§ 566), referring to cases of a similar character, remarks that the underlying such decisions "is an erroneous assumption as to the rights acquired by the purchase or condemnation of property for public use. This assumption is that there is acquired, not only all the ordinary proprietary rights in the property taken, but also certain proprietary rights which pertain to the property not taken. . . . There is no warrant for this assumption either in reason or authority outside of the particular cases referred to. There is no reason why a railroad, in purchasing or condemning property for its use, should be held to acquire anything more than would be acquired by a private individual purchasing the same property for the same use."

A private corporation stands on the same ground as individuals not clothed with corporate privileges, in respect to responsibility and the Nashville & Decatur Railroad, and other lines extending into Nashville, and their ultimate connections through Nashville and along the tracks now used for criminal purposes near plaintiff's residence; the charter of the Louisville & Nashville Terminal Company, and its construction of the terminal facilities, and its lease to the two railroads. The plea further averred that the present terminal facilities were built in order to serve the public and to meet a public demand, and that they are operated solely by the railroad companies, and not by the terminal company; that in said operations said companies used machinery and engines manned by suitable, competent, and skilled employees, and burn the same coal which has been used by railroads in this section since long before the plaintiff became the owner of the property which he claims is injured; the soft coal is the only practicable fuel in the south, and that defendants make no more smoke, noise, dust, ashes, etc., than arise from a reasonably skilful and careful operation of their business; that plaintiff acquired the same property, for the alleged injury of which damages are claimed, when defendants were already operating many engines and trains, and doing a large amount of switching upon their own premises in the necessary transaction of their business, and that the additional smoke, etc., is due to the increased traffic rendered necessary by service to the public; that the location of the yards and terminal facilities was the most reasonable lies for injuries for which its charter allows no remedy; and a railroad company which crossed bottom lands, and which, in building their railroad across such bottom land, and a bayou which drained them, raised a heavy embankment across the bayou and a portion of the bottom, thereby greatly increasing the force and current of the stream at its high stages, and forcing the waters onto the plaintiff's land, is liable to the latter for the damage thus caused. Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Dick, 9 Ind. 433.

And statutory authority which confers upon a railroad company, or its grantor, the right to construct a bridge and embankment across the stream gives it no right to obstruct the flow of the water in the stream, and cause the same to flow back upon the lands of a private individual; and hence a complaint which charges a railroad company with such obstruction of the flow of the water of the stream by its bridge and embankment sets forth a wrongful and unauthorized act on the part of the railroad company and its grantors,—the creating of a nuisance. Orris v. Elmira, C. & N. R. Co. 17 App. Div. 187, 45 N. Y. Supp. 367.

In an action against a railroad company the complaint alleged and the evidence warranted a finding of an obstruction by the company of the natural course of the water of a stream, and of the insufficiency of a culvert to pass water at all times, by reason of which water was thrown upon the plaintiff's property to his injury. It was held that the maintenance of a nuisance by the railroad company was thereby established, and that the plaintiff was not required to base his action on negligence simply, the statutory authority to construct the railroad being no defense. Mundy v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 75 Hun, 479, 27 N. Y. Supp. 469.

So, if the legislature authorizes a public work to be constructed, and, as the Constitution does impliedly in every case, couples with its authorization the declaration that the person or company to whom the authority is given shall not take, damage, or destroy the private property of the citizen in L.R.A. (N.S.)

order to accomplish the contemplated purpose, unless compensation therefor is first made, then the authority must be received and exercised with the limitation with which it is given; and if not so exercised, and that be taken, damaged, or destroyed which can only be taken, damaged, or destroyed for a public purpose after just compensation, then, in so far as the unauthorized act affects private rights, it gives cause for private action, and the act stands as though no legislative permission was ever given, in so far as the right of the injured person to recover damages is concerned. Gulf. C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Fuller, 63 Tex. 467; Citing, approving, and following Gulf. C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Eddins, 60 Tex. 656, and approved and followed in Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L. R. A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42, 14 S. W. 259.

So, in Costigan v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 54 N. J. L. 233, 23 Atl. 810, the declaration charged that the defendants wrongfully, etc., dumped and filled into and upon the natural surface of lands near to the plaintiffs' lot and dwelling houses a vast quantity of earth, gravel, stones, and other filling, and raised embankments upon said lands to a height of 30 feet, and thereby forced and pressed large quantities of the said earth, etc., into and upon the lot of the plaintiffs, beneath the surface of the same, and thereby upheaved and greatly disturbed the surface and soil of his lot, and forced and carried the dwelling houses out of their proper position upon said lot and upon the lands of others, and caused the foundation thereof to fall away, crack, and crumble, and the walls to become broken and to topple and lean over, etc. The defendants by a special plea justified as lessees of another railroad company organized under the general railroad law and authorized to lay out, construct, and maintain and operate a railroad between certain designated points, and averred a survey and location of a railroad by the company, duly made and filed, and that the company had acquired title to lands required for the construction of its railroad, and that the defendants as such and practicable location to be found, considering the necessities of the public as well as the railroad companies; that defendants rely upon their charter rights for locating and operating their depots, roundhouses, shops, and other terminal facilities, and for operating and running trains in said yards.

The defendants also filed pleas of the statute of limitations of one and three years.

They also filed a plea known in this record as the "John Doe plea," which is that this property and the plaintiff's property were originally owned by one John Doe, who, for a consideration, conveyed the property now owned by the railroad companies, and over which these operations are had, to the railroad companies, etc. But no proof was introduced under this plea, and it was stricken out.

lessees, in order to carry into effect the object of the incorporation of the company, proceeded to construct the road upon said lands with reasonable prudence and care, doing no unnecessary damage to private or other property, and did, in the prosecution of the said work, necessarily, with reasonable prudence and care, doing no unnecessary damage to private or other property, dump and fill into and upon the natural surface of their own lands so acquired a quantity of earth and other filling, and raise and bank up upon said last-mentioned lands embankments of great height, as they lawfully might do for the causes aforesaid, which were the supposed trespasses or grievances of which the plaintiffs complained. The court said that the merits of the controversy arose upon consideration of the pleas filed by way of justification, and that the doctrine of Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164, and Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 51 N. J. L. 42, 15 Atl. 833, was not applicable to acts done under legislative sanction, which were essentially private wrongs and a direct invasion upon private property, and that for such injuries the company's charter afforded no justification, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment on the plea.

So, in Tennessee the rule that lands lying at a lower level are burdened with the servitude of receiving all waters which naturally flow down to them from lands adjoining and upon a higher level has been adopted and applied not only to living streams, springs, etc., but also to surface water and waters falling as rain or snow upon such higher lands. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mossman, 90 Tenn. 157, 25 Am. St. Rep. 670, 16 S. W. 64. And so it has been held that it is the duty of a railway company to provide culverts or other means for the safe passage of accumulated surface water, and that they are liable for damages resulting from injuries to adjacent land by waters backed upon such land for want of proper provision for the escape of such water through the railway embankment. Ibid. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Plaintiff joined issue on all the pleas except the last named.

The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff tended to show that, at the time he acquired this property, Gowdy street was a quiet street, suited for residence purposes; that there was no unusual noise, and no unusual amount of dust, dirt, and cinders; and that it was a comfortable place to live. The coal chutes complained of are used for dumping coal from cars into bins, to be used in firing engines; that the cars are hauled up on an inclined trestle, from which the dumping is done. That the roundhouse has some 10 or 12 stacks running up about 4 feet into the air.

That there is a sand or dry house in the yards; that in the terminal operations trains are made up in the yards, and that

As against a municipal government in the careful exercise of its right to grade, change, and improve streets there can be no cause of action for any unavoidable injury done; but as against a private corporation such as a railroad company, in no wise connected with the municipal government obtaining authority to use the streets in an extraordinary manner, for its own private purposes and profit, the case is quite different. As against such a party the owner of a plot of ground, with a building thereon bounding on a street, is entitled to the natural support which the bed of the street may afford to the foundation of his house, and notwithstanding authority may have been obtained both from the city and the state legislature to make the extraordinary use of the street, yet that authority must be exercised at the peril of the party to whom it is delegated; and if any injury accrues to private property in the exercise of the power the party producing it must be held liable; and this, though due care be exercised, if the injury is the natural or inevitable result or consequence of the doing of the act authorized to be done; and in such cases the party doing the act and producing the injury must indemnify the sufferer; and it is no answer to the claim for such indemnity, that there was no negligence or want of care in doing the work. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Reaney. 42 Md. 11.

Obstructing egress from property at highway.

Where a railroad is located in a street in such a way as to obstruct the passage of and from abutting property, it has taken an easement of the property owner, and has therefore, taken property, within the meaning of the constitutional provision requiring compensation. But many such cases, instead of being decided on that ground, have been placed on the ground that a nuisance was created.

In Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Esterl 13 Bush, 667, it is said that, notwithstanding a railroad company which enters upon switching and operations of engines and cars are practically constant; that coal is dumped day and night and on Sunday. That the switch engines move forward and backward continually, and frequently stop opposite plaintiff's house, and the noise and smoke from them come directly to his house. That the first discomfort he experienced on account of the smoke, noise, etc., was after the terminal yard opened. That his family consists of his wife and three children, and they suffer from these discomforts proceeding from the terminal yards. That as many as 12 or 15 engines can be seen in the yards at one time, and, when the smoke from these comes over his premises, he can smell it. Sometimes it is impregnated with gas, and causes coughing.

the occupation of a street by its road with the approval and express consent of the city authorities has the right, so far as the general public is concerned, to keep and maintain its railway tracks and to pass its trains over them, if the tracks have been so located as unreasonably to obstruct the ingress to and egress from a lot abutting on the street, by its owner, such lot owner is entitled to recover for the damages directly resulting therefrom.

The owner of a lot abutting on a street may maintain an action against a railroad company maintaining tracks in the street so as to cut off his access to and from his property, and so as to injure his building by casting soot, smoke, and fire into and against the same. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. v. Ingram, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 853, 30 S. W. 8.

So, in Smith v. Southern P. R. Co. 146 Cal. 164, 79 Pac. 868, 106 Am. St. Rep. 1, in which a railroad located in a public street contended that since it had not changed the grade of the street, but had merely interfered with the convenient use of the street by the abutting lot owner, the liability was adjudged. The court says it is no answer to say that it was necessary to build the road in the way it was built. "Whatever appellant's necessities were in the premises, if what it actually did caused special and peculiar damage to respondent, it is liable for such damage."

An early New York case held that a statute which authorizes a railroad company to enter upon and occupy a public highway in laying the track of their road relates only to the public property in the road, to the public use and enjoyment of it, without intending to interfere with any private or individual interests that may be concerned. Such a statute effectually protects the company if they comply with the conditions, from an indictment, or against any interference with their works as a public nuisance, on account of their occupation of the highway, but not against claims for private damages arising from consequential injuries to adjacent owners. In this case no provision for such injuries was made, be-
L.P.A. (N.S.)

In the summer time the front windows of his house cannot be opened for any length of time without experiencing trouble from cinders, soot, and smoke. The furnishings in the house belong to his wife, and he holds the house as trustee for his wife and children, under a deed to him from his mother. He valued the entire property at $7,000 and furniture at $1,500.

There was evidence tending to show that the grass, trees, shrubbery, and flowers in the vicinity died, and that the smoke, soot, and noises were unpleasant, and they disturbed the sleep of himself and family, and damaged both the house and its furniture and furnishings; that there was considerable noise from the ringing of engine bells, but the whistle was seldom blown. That cause no authority was conferred to commit them. The company had a right to occupy the road, but they must occupy it, at their peril, in a way not to prejudice private rights. And so where in using the said road, the railroad company erected an embankment which obstructed the passage of an adjacent landowner to and from his premises, and by reason of such embankment his premises were frequently inundated with water, and injured and damaged thereby and greatly depreciated in value, the railroad company was liable to him in an action therefor. Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462.

It was said in Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357, that this case stood upon somewhat questionable ground. Alluding to such statement, the judge who delivered the opinion in Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42, intimated that it had been overruled by the Radcliff Case, and in Uline v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 98, 53 Am. Rep. 123, note, 4 N. E. 536, and Conklin v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 113, 6 N. E. 663, it is stated positively that it was overruled by both the Radcliff and the Bellinger Case. But as the doctrine asserted in the Fletcher Case has been repeatedly approbated by courts of the highest authority in England and in this country,—including New York—loose statements to the effect that it is "questionable ground," or that the case has been overruled, would not seem entitled to a great deal of weight.

The first count of a declaration set out that the defendants, a railroad company, had carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully caused to be constructed an embankment in front of and near to the dwelling house of the plaintiff, by reason whereof he did not have and enjoy passage into and upon his lands and to and from the dwelling house, and was deprived of the use of his office, and that because of the embankment his dwelling house was frequently inundated with water, so that he was deprived of the use of his cellar and basement; to which the defendants pleaded that they were incorporated by an act of the legislature, and the plaintiff had been in the habit of taking his family to the country in the summer, leaving the city the 1st of June, and remaining away until in September. That the noises from the terminal yards had a tendency to disturb the nervous system, and were disturbing to visitors, but one would get accustomed to it, though at the expense of nervous force.

The defendants introduced in evidence the charters of the several railroads composing the lines using these yards for terminal purposes, and also the charter of the Louisville & Nashville Terminal Company, which constructed the yards and leased them to the two railroad companies, together with the lease itself, the ordinance of the city of Nashville, and the contract between the city and the terminal company for the construction and operation of the yards. It is not necessary to refer to these charters, lease consolidations, and connections more in detail.

Owing to the immense growth in travel and traffic, it was deemed advisable and necessary, for the benefit and convenience of the public, to provide new and enlarge terminal facilities at Nashville; and a lot was selected, centrally and conveniently located on Broad street and embracing something like 100 acres, upon which was erected a passenger station house and roundhouse, and coal chutes and bins, as a sand house, and a large number of tracks used for switching and other purposes. This was in 1900.

by such act they were authorized, on paying a turnpike company a certain sum, to take and possess all the rights, privileges, property, and estate of the company, and use and enjoy the same; and that they had done so; and that in laying their track upon and over the lands before used and occupied by the turnpike company they were required to erect and make and construct an embankment for the grade of their railroad along and upon the road so purchased by them; and that they laid their railroad upon such embankment without doing unnecessary damage to the plaintiff. A demurrer to the plea was sustained, the court saying that the purchase of the turnpike company under the act of incorporation only conferred upon the defendants authority to use the road as a public highway, the same as before used and enjoyed by the turnpike company, and vested them with no greater powers than were possessed by that company, which were to occupy and maintain the line of the road as a public highway or turnpike; that the charter of the defendants, upon which they must depend for their justification, empowered them to make the erections in question; and being the owners of the turnpike, they had no damages to pay to the turnpike company, which otherwise they would have been bound to pay; but that this did not excuse them from answering for such consequential damages as might arise to the adjacent owners by reason of such erections upon former public thoroughfares. Mahon v. Utica & S. R. Co. Hill & D. Supp. 156.

The reasoning applicable to change of grades and improvement of streets for municipal purposes does not apply to a grant of power to change the grade of and occupy the street with steam railroad tracks, by a railroad company having no connection with the municipal government. In such case a different principle applies, and the rights of individual property owners are in no respect subordinated to the rights of the railroad company. O'Brien v. Baltimore Belt R. Co. 74 Md. 369, 13 L. R. A. 126, 22 Atl. 141.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And so, while the right of the state to grant the power to a railroad company to occupy the street is unquestionable, by virtue of its power to control all the public highways of the state, the adjoining lot owners are not without redress for any substantial injury to their property rights by reason of the construction or operation of the railroad in the street. Ibid.

This is undoubtedly the true doctrine and is a perfect refutation of the statement of Denio, J., in Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42, that the doctrine that where persons are authorized by the legislature to perform acts in which the public are interested, such as grading, leveling and improving streets and highways, and the like, and they act with proper care and prudence, they are not answerable for the consequential damages which may be sustained by those who own land bounded by the street or highway,—is equally applicable to the construction of a railroad by a private corporation; and also of a similar statement of Beasley, Ch. J., in Beaman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164, to the effect that the attitude of a railroad company, so far as relates to the applicability of legal principles, is not dissimilar to the case of altering the grade of a city street which the legislature may authorize.

A railroad company which is the successor of another railroad company, which latter company had constructed a side track on a street under a license given by a statute "to construct its road over the street," and an ordinance of the city authorizing it to do so, is liable to an abutting owner of a foundry for maintaining an embankment of such height as prevents and seriously interferes with access to his premises, such embankment having been erected by the original railroad company; as the license, under the statute and the consent of the city authorities, to use the street for railroad purposes in no wise touches the question of damages to private property on the line of the street; and a right to a just compensation for the injuries thus inflicted is in no wise affected by the question

Engines and cars have been operated since 1851 within 225 feet of the front of Mr. Lellyett's house, upon tracks that still are used and are a part of the terminal facilities. None of the tracks or houses erected under the terminal station plant are nearer to Mr. Lellyett's house than these original tracks; the new and additional tracks being to the west of the original tracks and further removed from Mr. Lellyett's location.

On the west side of Gowdy street, opposite Mr. Lellyett's house, and between it and the terminal yards, are a number of houses, almost every lot being built upon, so that the smoke, dust, cinders, and noise must pass over these before reaching him. From Mr. Lellyett's house to the nearest point of the roundhouse is 750 feet; to the center of the roundhouse, 950 feet; and to the most distant wall of the roundhouse is 1,100 feet. From Mr. Lellyett's house to the nearest point of the coal chutes on Kayne avenue was 700 feet, and the further end of the coal chutes 800 feet. From his house to the coal bins on Gleaves street, at the nearest point, was 1,150 feet, while the farthestmost point was over 1,200. From his house to the sand house was between 1,100 and 1,200.

The yard space between his house and these sand houses and coal chutes is occupied by tracks used for incoming and outgoing trains, and for switching and yard purposes.

Defendant's evidence also showed that whether such consent had been or had not been given. Coats v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Cal. App.) 82 Pac. 640.

One may recover damages against a railroad company for erecting an embankment in a street in front of his dwelling house, whereby he is deprived of access to and from the street, although the road is authorized by law and is otherwise lawfully operated. Parrot v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 624.

In Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Lefoldt (Misa.) 39 So. 459, the supreme court of Mississippi decided that a city had no power which it could transfer to a railroad company to raise the grade of a street to the injury of the property of an abutting owner and that an action could be maintained by the latter against the railroad company for his damages sustained by reason of such change in the grade.

In an action against a railroad company for damages occasioned by a building on an alley which ran through from street to street in the rear of plaintiff's premises, which so obstructed the alley (which was not wide enough for a team to turn about in) that the plaintiff could not have access with teams and vehicles, as formerly, to the rear of his premises, it was held that the obstruction was sufficiently immediate, and the interference sufficiently peculiar to the plaintiff, to constitute special damage to him. Kaje v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 57 Minn. 422, 47 Am. St. Rep. 627, 59 N. W. 493.

The owner of a lot fronting upon a street which does not extend beyond the west side of the lot may maintain an action against a railroad company, where the latter, in the construction of its road, has made an excavation 7½ feet deep and 35 feet wide at the top, diagonally across the street, at a distance of 35 feet at the nearest point from the line of the lot, and not intruding upon the soil thereof, where such excavation cuts off all convenient access to the lot, and renders it practically inaccessible except over private property. Brakken v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 29 Minn. 41, 11 N. W. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

124. The court said that, although the manner of the defendant's incorporation did not appear in the record, it was safe to assume, what was well known, that it was created by special charter, and that such charter contained the usual provisions authorizing the company to construct its railroad across public streets and highways in a proper manner: and, this being so, the fact of the construction of the railroad across the street was not the ground of the injury, and the plaintiff had no right to complain of it, but the real cause of the injury was the improper manner of construction.

3. Yards and terminals.

The location of yards, terminals, shops, coaling stations, etc., is a matter which admits of a wide latitude in choice of sites, and therefore the courts are less inclined to relieve railroad companies from the results of nuisances committed in and about them than from those arising in the operation of the road proper.

Probably the most important case on the subject under consideration, and one that has been most frequently cited in favor of the doctrine that legislative grants of privileges or powers to corporate bodies, like those to a railroad company to bring its tracks and construct its works within a city, confer no license to use them in disregard of the private rights of others and with immunity for their invasion, is Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719. The plaintiff was a religious corporation created under the general incorporation act of Congress in force in the District of Columbia. The defendant was a railway corporation created under the laws of Maryland, and was authorized by act of Congress to lay its track within the limits of the city, and construct other works necessary and expedient to the proper completion and maintenance of its road. The act provided that the road which the company was authorized to construct should enter the city at such place and pass along such pub-there were operated in the terminal yards 17 engines in the daytime, and 10 of these engines at night. Only 3 or 4 of these engines however, operated continually in that part of the yard opposite Gowdy street, the balance of them, being assigned to different locations,—some working in South Nashville, some in West Nashville or New Town, some in East Nashville, and others north of the Broad Street Viaduct,—would only come into the terminal yards for a little while at a time, and at perhaps long intervals. These three or four engines which worked opposite Gowdy street, and consequently opposite Mr. Lellyett's house, were engaged mostly in hauling passenger trains. They used about 400 to 500 bushels of coal, in all, in 24 hours.

He street or alley to such terminus as might be allowed by Congress, upon the presentation of a survey and map of its proposed location. Subsequently Congress allowed the company to enter the city with its railroad by one of two routes, as it might select. It selected one by which the road was brought along an avenue in front of the church of the plaintiff. It appeared that the church had owned its premises for ten years before the passage of the act, and in the year of such passage the present building was begun, and since a year or two after the passage of the act the church had been continuously occupied as a house of worship; that thereafter the railroad company erected upon a parcel of ground immediately adjoining the church premises, and when completed occupied the same and maintained, an engine house and machine shop, where large numbers of locomotives and steam engines were housed and their fires made, and to and from which the engines were propelled, and in which they were coaled, watered, repaired, and otherwise used; that when the ground was first broken for the erection of these works the plaintiff advised the company that if put there they would prove to be a nuisance and ruinous to the plaintiff's interests, and protested against their erection; that the company, however, proceeded to erect the works upon the building line of its own premises, within 5½ feet from the church edifice, and constructed upon the engine house sixteen smoke stacks lower in height than the windows of the main room of the church; that the nearest of the smoke stacks was less than 60 feet from the windows, and the others were in a semi-circular curve, at gradually increasing distances; and that during the time of the occupation by the company of said building and until the commencement of the suit the services of the church and Sunday School were disturbed by the noises made in the workshops of the company, the rumbling of its engines passing in and out of them, and the blowing off of steam, which noises were so great as to prevent the members of the congrega-

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The evidence showed that the terminal yards began operations in January or February, 1900. This suit was brought August 25, 1902, about thirty-two months after the terminals began operations. During this time, according to Mr. Lellyett's evidence, he had been absent from the city, with his family, from the middle of June to about the middle of September each summer. Deducting these periods of time he was away it would appear that he and his family were in their residence about twenty-four months.

The case was submitted to the jury under a charge of the court, and a verdict was rendered against the defendants for $4,000. Under this charge, no damages were awarded for injuries to the fee, and all damages tion from hearing what was said, sometimes the blowing off of steam compelling the pastor of the church to suspend his remarks from five to fifteen minutes, and that this habitually occurred day and night, and on Sundays as well; that in the summer time, when the windows of the church were open for air, smoke, cinders and dust were blown from the smoke stacks through the windows of the church, settling upon the pews and furniture, and soiling the clothes of the occupants, accompanied by an offensive odor which greatly annoyed the congregation; and that locomotives were allowed to stand on the sidewalks, impeding the passage of church members to and from the church. The main reliance of the railroad company to defeat the action was the authority conferred upon it by the act of Congress to exercise the same powers, rights, and privileges in the construction of a road in the District of Columbia, the line of which was afterwards designated, while it could exercise under its charter in the construction of a road in Maryland, by which charter it was empowered to make and construct all works whatever which might be necessary and expedient to the proper completion and maintenance of the road. The jury, under instructions given to it by the trial court, having found for the plaintiff, and a judgment entered thereon having been affirmed by the supreme court of the District to review that judgment the defendant brought the case to the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of error. The opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Field, who stated that the matters proved were unquestionably a nuisance, and that for such annoyance and discomfort as was shown in this case the courts of law will afford redress by giving damages against the wrongdoer, and that, when the cause of the annoyance and discomfort are continuous, courts of equity will interfere and restrain the nuisance. The court held that the authority of the company to construct such works as it might deem necessary and expedient for the completion and maintenance of its road did not authorize it to

to the furniture were, at plaintiff's request, withdrawn. Hence this verdict must be taken as damage to the value of the use of the property, and other elements alleged in the declaration.

The defendants have appealed to this court, and assigned errors,—29 in number.

The first error assigned is that there is no evidence to support the verdict.

Under this assignment it is insisted that the suit is brought in the name of John T. Lellyett, trustee and next friend for Mary R., Mary Frances, and Catherine Lellyett; while there is nothing in the several counts and allegations to indicate that the suit is brought for the use and benefit of anyone, except John T. Lellyett, individually, and that the word, "trustee," annexed to his name, is merely descriptio personæ; while the proof shows that the title to the property is in John T. Lellyett, trustee, for the use and benefit of his wife and two children, the parties named in the summons; and hence, there is a variance between the allegations and proof of title, which is fatal to the action. We think this objection not well taken, and that it sufficiently appears that Mr. Lellyett was trustee for his wife and children, and the suit was brought for damages to the use of their property, health, and comfort.

The second assignment of error is that there is a misjoinder of parties and causes of action. The insistence is that there are five distinct and separate causes of action stated in the declaration, to wit: First, place them wherever it might think proper in the city, without reference to the property and rights of others. That whatever the extent of the authority conferred, it was accompanied with this implied qualification, that the works should not be so placed as by their use to interfere unreasonably with and disturb the peaceful and comfortable enjoyment of others in their property. That grants of privileges or powers to corporate bodies like those in question confer no license to use them in disregard of the private rights of others, and with immunity for their invasion. That undoubtedly a railway over the public highways of the District, including the streets of the city of Washington, might be authorized by Congress, and if when used with reasonable care it produced only that incidental inconvenience which unavoidably follows the additional occupation of the streets by its cars, with the noises and disturbances necessarily attending their use, no one could complain that he was incommoded, as what-ever consequential annoyance might necessarily follow from the running of cars on the road with reasonable care was damnum absque injuria. The private inconvenience in such case must be suffered for the public accommodation. But that this case was not of that nature. It was a case of the use by the railroad company of its property in such an unreasonable way as to disturb and annoy the plaintiff in the occupation of its church to an extent rendering it uncomfortable as a place of worship, and that the authority granted by Congress would not justify an invasion of other's property, to an extent which would amount to an entire deprivation of its use and enjoyment, without compensation to the owner. Nor could such authority be invoked to justify acts creating a physical discomfort and annoyance to others in the use and enjoyment of their property to a less extent than entire deprivation, if different places from those occupied could be used by the corporation for its purposes without causing such discomfort and annoyance. That the acts that a legislature may authorize, which without such authorization would constitute nuisances, are those which affect public highways or public streams, or matters in which the public have an interest and over which the public have control. The legislative authorization exempts only from liability to suits, civil or criminal, at the instance of the state; it does not affect any claim of a private citizen for damages for any special inconvenience and discomfort not experienced by the public at large. After referring to the various other clauses of the complaint which would justify designating the defendant's acts as a nuisance, the court further said that the fact that the smoke stacks of the engine house were as high as the city regulations for chimneys required was no answer to the action, if the stacks were too low to keep the smoke out of the plaintiff's church. That in requiring that chimneys should have a certain height, the regulations did not prohibit their being made higher, nor could they release from liability if not made high enough. That it is an actionable nuisance to build one's chimney so low as to cause the smoke to enter his neighbor's house, and that if any adjudication was wanted for a rule so obvious it would be found in the cases of Sampson v. Smith, 8 Sim. 272, and Whitney v. Bartholomew, 21 Conn. 213; and the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was affirmed.

Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 537, is a prominent authority and one that has been frequently cited in favor of the doctrine that legislative authority, while it will render a railroad company immune from liability for damages which are incidental or consequential to the necessary construction and operation of the railroad, such construction and operation being done and accompanied with ordinary prudence, skill, and care, does not release it from liability to persons who sustain damage because their property is diminished in value by the establishment, construction, and operation of its terminals, workshops, ena joint cause of action for damages to the real estate. Second, a separate cause of action to John T. Lellyett for damages to his furniture. Third, fourth, and fifth, separate causes of action in favor of the wife and two children for injury to their health.

In regard to this assignment, it is only necessary to say that all claim for damages to personal property of John T. Lellyett was abandoned, and the jury was so instructed, and this was not embraced as one of the elements of damages in the charge of the trial judge.

As to what are styled the third, fourth, and fifth causes of action, we think the assignment and criticism made is not well founded. There is no claim for damages for sickness, doctor's bill, etc. The allegation of impairment to health of the family is gine houses, or loading stations, or by reason of smoke, soot, cinders, and coal dust, or noise and vibration, or by the use of the road in such a way as to create a private nuisance, or a public nuisance especially injurious to private parties. In this case the court said that in many cases it was difficult to draw the line, and to determine whether a particular use is consistent with the duties and burdens arising from vicinage, or whether it inflicts an injury for which the law affords a remedy. In this case also the trial court had found—and the court of appeals said justly so—that the defendant railroad company had built an engine house, and in it stored, repaired, and fired its locomotives, and so used its coal bins as necessarily to cause damage to the plaintiff's dwelling house, the coal bins being unprovided with sufficient cover to prevent the dust of the coal from time to time stored therein and removed therefrom from passing into and upon the plaintiff's land and dwelling house; and that at all times since the erection there had been emitted from the engine house and smoke stacks, and from the defendant's engines in the engine house, hurtful and offensive gases, smoke, soot, cinders, and coal dust from the coal bins, and that the same poured down upon and were borne by the winds into and upon the plaintiff's dwelling house and premises, filling the house with smoke, soot, and cinders, injuring the furniture and clothing therein, rendering the air offensive and unwholesome, and the house uncomfortable and unhealthy as a habitation, and greatly reducing the rental value of the premises. The court said that it was scarcely necessary to cite authorities to show that the engine house as used was, within every definition, a nuisance for which, as between individuals, an action would lie for damages, and for which a court of equity would afford a remedy by injunction. The trial court had given judgment in favor of the defendant, and such judgment had been affirmed by the general term of the superior court, from which the appeal in this case merely a specification of the damage done the place as a home or place of residence, just as is the destruction of the grass, trees, shrubbery, etc., and the presence of smoke, cinders, etc. In other words, the averment is directed to the damage to the use of the property, and this damage consists in its being rendered unhealthy, uncomfortable, and unsuitable for residence purposes.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the charge of the court the jury were not instructed to give any damages for sickness or impairment of health of any of the family, but it was omitted, and the jury could not have given any damages for sickness or impairment of health, separate and apart from the damage done the property as a comfortable, healthy, and suitable place of residence.

The damages for which recovery was di-was taken (16 Jones & S. 31). The court further said that the principle upon which the court below proceeded was that what the legislature had authorized the defendant to do could be neither a public nor a private wrong; in other words, the legislature had authorized the maintenance of this nuisance by the defendant, and the plaintiff must bear the consequences; that the court below, in denying any relief to the plaintiff, of course assumed that the legislative authority and the act of the defendant thereunder, resulting in flooding the plaintiff's premises with soot, smoke, and noxious gases, was not a taking of the plaintiff's property within the Constitution. And the court then said that it placed the present judgment in this case on the ground that the legislature had not authorized the wrong of which the plaintiff complained, and it was, therefore, unnecessary to determine whether the legislature could have authorized it consistently with the principles of the Constitution for the security of private rights, without providing for compensation. The court further said that in Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357, the court had declared it had never been considered that consequential damage to private property, resulting from opening and improving streets or highways, or other work of a public nature, could be recovered. That the case had been frequently followed and its authority completely established by repeated decisions. That it was an application of a principle well settled, that private interests must yield to the public welfare, but that the case carried to the utmost limits the right of the legislature, for public reasons, to interfere with private property to the injury of the owner, without making compensation; and in speaking of the case of Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42, the court said that it was perhaps the strongest case to be found in the reports of the state, of the application of the doctrine that a statutory authority justifies acts which otherwise would give a right of action; but said that that case was rected to be given by the charge were "to the use, comfort, peace, quiet, and enjoyment of the house and lot," and health and sickness are not referred to in that part of the charge relating to the measure of damages. We think, therefore, that there was no separate cause of action recovered upon for sickness or impairment of health.

We think it well to analyze the pleadings, and see what issues are properly before us, and see whether there were issues submitted to the jury which were not warranted under the pleadings.

The first count in the declaration sues for permanent injury and impairment to the value of the premises of complainant. So, with the fourth count, the damage claimed is to the permanent injury to the property. Now, the court charged the jury, to be distinguished by the fact that it was one where the line of the road was fixed by the charter, and it was necessary, in constructing the road on that line, to cross the creek on the bridge, and the lowlands upon an embankment, which was the damage complained of. The case was regarded as being nearly, if not exactly, upon all fours with Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719. The judge delivering the opinion of the court saying in conclusion that that case fully supported the conclusion reached in this, and that the able opinion of Mr. Justice Field in that case vindicated the rights of private property to protection against substantial invasion under color of corporate franchises.

In Spring v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 88 Hun, 385, 34 N. Y. Supp. 810, it was found that a structure containing coal bins or pockets was of the largest kind in use, and was constantly used by the defendant for storing coal and coaling its engines therefrom to the number of sixty or seventy a day, and was within 300 or 350 feet of a closely populated section of a city which had been laid out into city streets, blocks, and building lots suitable for dwelling houses; and that for the purpose of supplying the coal bins with coal, locomotive engines using soft coal drew cars heavily loaded with coal up a steep incline leading from the railroad tracks into the bins, into which the contents of the cars were thrown, and emitted hurtful and offensive gases, sparks, smoke, soot, and cinders, and from the coal dust and dirt, all of which, borne by the wind, settled down upon the dwelling house of the plaintiff, injuring furniture and clothing therein, thus rendering the same unwholesome, uncomfortable, and unsuitable as a habitation, and reducing the rental and actual value of the property. And the referee before whom the action was tried found that the structure, as described, was a private nuisance to the plaintiff, and that the defendant should be enjoined from depositing in and taking from said structure at plaintiff's request, that the plaintiff could not recover for the injury done the fee of the premises, and any proof adduced as to the value of the premises, if such there be, must be considered only in determining the question as to whether or not the comfortable use and enjoyment of the premises had been impaired or destroyed. This instruction by the trial judge was made at the request of the plaintiff, but really it is immaterial whether the charge was given at plaintiff's request or on motion of the court. This instruction eliminates the first and fourth counts, since they claim for permanent, and not recurrent, damages. These two counts must be eliminated, therefore, from our consideration, as not presenting the issues upon which the case was tried and damages found.

coal in such manner as to set afloat in the air and cast or deposit upon or into the premises of the plaintiff, smoke, soot, cinders, sparks, dust, or dirt. A judgment in accordance with the finding was affirmed by the general term, the court stating that the contention of the defendant that the right to erect and use this structure in coaling its engines was necessarily and materially incident to the operation of its railroad, and therefore was embraced within its franchise, and that such use was not a nuisance although it might operate as such, and that the plaintiff had no remedy, was opposed to the doctrine laid down in the Cogswell Case, 103 N. Y. 10, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 537, which seemed to be somewhat in point against such a proposition. After stating the decision in that case the court said that no special legislative sanction was shown for the structure in question, and that the defendant or its lessor had other lands where the new structure might have been placed, although not so conveniently. The case was afterwards affirmed in the court of appeals on the opinion of the general term. 157 N. Y. 692, 51 N. E. 1094.

In Garvey v. Long Island R. Co. 9 App. Div. 254, 41 N. Y. Supp. 397, the trial court found that the defendant so conducted its business and managed a turntable situate upon its premises as to constitute the same a nuisance as to the plaintiff and his premises. The evidence tended to establish that the defendant so conducted its business as unnecessarily to cause a vibration of its turntable, which was communicated to plaintiff's premises and caused great annoyance and damage and that this condition was greatly aggravated by casting thereon smoke, cinders, and ashes, accompanied by irritating and harassing noises. The defendant sought a reversal of a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the court below, claiming that it had authority for what it did, in the statute authorizing its creation and operation, and hence that no liability attached thereto for its acts. It was not

The second and fifth counts are for damages to the furniture and fixtures in the house, and these are eliminated because all claim for damages on this account was withdrawn by the plaintiff.

This leaves only the third and sixth counts not eliminated, and these counts claim damages for injury to the use and enjoyment of the premises as a home. The third count states the wrongful act to be that the plaintiff's place has been changed from a quiet, restful home into an unhealthy, noisy, dirty, filthy place, which has greatly injured the health of plaintiff's family; and the sixth count states the wrongful act to be the injury and destruction of the health, peace, comfort, and happiness of the family; and upon these counts the verdict must be sustained, if at all.

contended that the statute conferred express power authorizing it to maintain and operate the particular turntable and yard as it was operated, or that it was within the clearly expressed intention of the legislature derived from the statute. The appellate division of the supreme court affirmed the judgment of the lower court. This judgment of the appellate division was afterwards affirmed in the court of appeals (159 N. Y. 323, 70 Am. St. Rep. 550, 54 N. E. 57), the court quoting with approval what was said in Hill v. New York, 139 N. Y. 505, 34 N. E. 1090: "Obviously, the general doctrine which levies upon individuals forced contributions for the benefit of the public, and denies compensation for the injury done, is vulnerable at two points. It is defeated sometimes by construing the harm inflicted into a taking of private property for which compensation must be made, and sometimes by a rigid construction of the authority claimed. Both methods indicate a lurking doubt of the equity of the general doctrine, and a disposition to narrow the field of its operation."

In an action for erecting a coal shed and for throwing coal into an iron hopper by means of an iron scraper operated by steam power, which coal was then received into an iron conveyor run by steam and lifted a number of feet and emptied into a chute plated with iron, and conveyed through the same, and dumped upon the floor through openings in the chute; in which way twenty-three cars would be unloaded in one day; which process caused the coal to break and grind by coming in contact with the iron conveyor, and produced deafening noises and clouds of coal dust in a thickly settled portion of the city,—the defense was that the coal shed was erected and the machinery in it operated upon the property of a railway company and under a license from the company, and that it was a lawful railroad use of the right of way, and that the company had a right to license the defendant to do what it could itself thus do. There were other defenses, but upon the one under 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The question before us is, therefore, whether the use and enjoyment of the property of plaintiff has been materially impaired by the acts of defendants, and, if so, are the defendants liable therefor? There can be no question but that some detriment has been done to the use and enjoyment of the property. The evidence in the record leaves no ground for doubt as to this feature, but to what extent, we will consider more at length. Defendants do not seriously contend that they are not the parties who have caused this damage, but the contention is that they are not liable for the same. The argument is that the defendants have authority, under their charters, to locate the terminal yards, roundhouse, etc., where they have placed them, and, while the exact location of these things is not prescribed by consideration the court said that, although railroads are a public necessity and a public benefit, and many inconveniences and annoyances grow out of their operation which must be borne by the public, as the passage of a train of cars upon the street of a city, which is necessarily attended with noise, the emission of smoke, detention at crossings, etc., and that no recovery can be had for injuries suffered from such causes, yet, that the company has the power to do certain things, which it has also the discretion to do in particular ways and at particular places. It needs grounds upon which it may receive and discharge its freight and passengers; but its discharge of a certain kind of freight at one place upon its right of way may work serious injury to property owners, while its discharge of the same at another place thereon might not produce any such injury, and the selection of a locality for such purpose where damages are inflicted, in preference to one where damages will not be inflicted, cannot be said to be necessary to the ordinary and prudent operation of the road. Wylie v. Elwood, 134 Ill. 281, 9 L. R. A. 726, 23 Am. St. Rep. 673, 25 N. E. 570.

In Austin v. Augusta Terminal R. Co. 108 Ga. 687, 47 L. R. A. 755, 34 S. E. 852, the court distinguished Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, saying that in the case before it the company had no round house, machine shop, or structure at the point complained of, but only freight yards immediately adjoining its depot, where the public was served by it as a carrier, and that the evidence did not show any unlawful, improper, or unusual noise, smoke, or movement of cars, and therefore it could not have been a nuisance, and that in fact the petition did not allege that it was a nuisance; and approved the concession made by Justice Field, in the case alluded to, that whatever consequential annoyance may necessarily follow from the running of cars on the railroad with reasonable care is damnum absque injuria, as the

the charter, the defendants had the legislative discretion to locate them where it would be most convenient to them and the traveling public. Concede, for the sake of argument, that this is true (and within certain limitations it is), still the question remains, If such location result in material damage to adjacent or contiguous owners, are the defendants liable? And this proposition presents the real controversy so far as the merits are concerned.

While there are many criticisms of the charge so far as it relates to this question, they are crystalized in the exception to the following part of the charge: "I instruct you that it is no defense to this action to prove that the yards where the business of defendants is carried on is at a suitable locality, or that the business is a lawful business and one useful to the public, or that the best and most approved appliances and methods are used in the conduct and management of the business. Where a trade or business is carried on in such a manner as to interfere with the reasonable and comfortable enjoyment of another of his property, or which occasions material injury to the property itself, it amounts to a wrong to the neighbor, and one for which an action will lie."

This portion of the charge is taken from the opinion of the court of chancery appeals in the case of Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. v. Barnes, 60 S. W. 600, which was, as to its result, approved by this court, and to some extent followed in the case of Swain v. Tennessee Copper Co. 111 Tenn. 437, 78 S. W. 93.

private inconvenience in such case must be suffered for the public accommodation; and said, in addition, that if in this case the company would not be liable for operating its cars in the usual and ordinary manner in the street it surely would not be liable for the same sort of operation when it moved the cars out of the street and upon its private property. There was a strong dissent by the presiding justice and another, in which it was said that the logical result of the conclusions reached by a majority of the court would necessarily lead to a denial of any relief to an owner of private property, even though he and his family might be actually driven from their home by noises so deafening, volumes of smoke and cinders so vast, and noxious and offensive gases and odors so baleful and injurious to the health, as to render the premises uninhabitable and absolutely worthless for any purpose; that unquestionably, as had been seen, the common law would have afforded relief against any such wanton invasion of private rights; and they, the dissenting judges, had no reason to believe that the framers of the present Constitution even remotely contemplated that such rights should be ignored in any case where the power of eminent domain might be exercised, either by the city itself, or by any corporation under legislative authority, in the taking or damaging of private property for the public welfare.

And in Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64, 42 S. E. 315, where a terminal yard of railroad companies, the operation of which was sought to be enjoined by owners of property in its locality, was located under and its construction authorized by statutory powers, the court said that the general rule, supported by an almost unbroken line of authorities, is that a work so located and constructed, if constructed and operated in a proper manner, cannot be adjudged a nuisance; and this applies with special force to works thus authorized to facilitate transportation on railroads, which are of a quasi public nature. From this rule it follows that injuries and inconveniences to persons residing near such works, from noises of locomotives, rumbling of cars, vibrations produced thereby, and smoke, cinders, and soot, and the like, which result from the ordinary and necessary, and therefore proper, use and conduct of such works, are not nuisances, but are necessary concomitants of the franchises granted. The court held, however, that the use of switches by the railroad trains at the terminal station did not come within the exception usually made in favor of works of necessity on Sundays, and that such use by the defendant railroad company was a nuisance which should be enjoined.

The court said that these rules were based upon the soundest reason, and that this case was clearly distinguishable from cases like that of Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, where railroads erected engine houses, coaling stations, or workshops on their rights of way, from which the emission of ordinary noises, smoke, soot, and cinders may be a nuisance to owners and residents of abutting property. Like other cases of lawful business not partaking of a public nature, and not having legislative sanction. The court said, further, that the contention of the plaintiffs that this terminal yard of stations and side tracks was a nuisance because dwellings were erected there before the construction of the yard, and that it could have been located at another point, where there were no residences, without being a nuisance to anyone, is without modern legal precedent to sustain it, and is unsound for at least two reasons. That in the first place the terminal yard was located at the terminus of one railroad, on an existing right of way of another railroad, and under statutory power. In the second place it is obvious that, if a terminal yard is a nuisance because located near dwellings, it would clearly be a nuisance wherever it might be put, even in the woods or fields, as soon as the owners of adjacent lands build houses on

As further bearing directly upon the question of liability, and meeting the criticism of defendants' counsel, the court charged: "I charge you, gentlemen, that, under the charter of the defendants and the contract with the city of Nashville, the state has not authorized the wrong complained of. In locating the yards and the various structures thereon so that injury necessarily resulted to adjacent landowners, the defendants acted at their peril. In locating the terminal yards the defendants stood on the footing of an individual, and were entitled to no superior rights of immunity by legislative authority. The authority to construct the yards did not authorize defendants to place them wherever they might think proper in the city, without reference to the property rights of others. Defendants have no right to use the yards in disregard of the rights of others, and with immunity for their invasion. If you find from the evidence that the terminal yards are located in or adjacent to a residence neighborhood, and that in their operation the defendants make noises which, because of their volume, character, proximity, or unreasonableness, cause plaintiff material distress, discomfort, or injury, then, in that case, the defendants are liable. It is no defense that such noises are necessary to the operation of defendants' business, its location, manner in which it is conducted, the hours of its operation, character and volume of the noises, reasonableness or unreasonableness of the hours during which such noises are made, and their land; for the old rule maintained by some authorities, that coming to a nuisance will prevent a person so coming from making any complaint, has long since been exploded. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64, 42 S. E. 315.

The attempt to distinguish this case from the case in 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, would appear to be a lame effort, for in the latter case Justice Field, who delivered the opinion, said that it admitted of grave doubt whether Congress could authorize the company to occupy and use any premises within the city limits in a way which would subject others to physical discomfort and annoyance in the quiet use and enjoyment of their property, and at the same time exempt the company from liability to suit for damages or compensation to which individuals acting without such authority would be subject under like circumstances. If this is true as to the power of Congress, why not of a state legislature? If the decision in the case here attempted to be distinguished was correct, that in the case under consideration was wrong, as the cases are identical. What was done in each case was the same thing which was declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the one case, to be a private nuisance, from liability for committing which an act of Congress was no protection, and declared by the Georgia supreme court, in the other, to be a case in which the sufferers from what the Federal court declared a private nuisance were remediless. It would seem as though the injunction in the Georgia case should have been continued upon one of two grounds: First, that the legislative act was no authority for doing that which but for it would be an actionable nuisance; or second, if it assumed to confer such an authority, it was unconstitutional; and in either event was no protection to the defendant.

A statute requiring railroad companies to furnish proper facilities for the reception and shipment of stock was held in Anderson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 85 Minn. 337, 88 N. W. 1001, not to justify a railroad I.L.R.A. (N.S.)

company in erecting stock yards in such a situation that it was impossible to secure proper drainage therefrom, and in maintaining them in such a condition as to interfere with the comfort, enjoyment and health of adjacent property owners, the court says: "We have no hesitation in holding that this statute does not authorize the erection and maintenance of a nuisance. We cannot conceive that a railroad company in the conduct of its business may create malodorous and noxious conditions on its own property so near the private dwelling of citizens as unnecessarily to interfere with the health of the inmates; for, if it be admitted that the business so carried on was a nuisance per se, it would then be our duty, notwithstanding the statute referred to, to say that it was a question of fact on the evidence whether its act, in that respect, did not subject it to damages."

Of the correctness of the doctrine contained in the foregoing quotation there cannot be the slightest doubt. The real reason for holding the railroad company liable in this case and discharging it from such liability in Carroll v. Wisconsin Central Co. 40 Minn. 168, 41 N. W. 661, is not apparent. It certainly cannot be said that the danger to health alone makes the company liable in one case and frees it from liability in the other, for if that were so, the case of Adams v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 39 Minn. 286, 1 L. R. A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644, 39 N. W. 629, must have been wrongly decided, for it was there held that the same things which failed to create a cause of action in the Carroll Case created a liability in the Adams Case, the only distinction being that in the former it was on the railroad company's land that the obnoxious elements originated, and in the Adams Case they had their origin in the street, in which the court held that the plaintiff had an interest which amounted to a property right.

4. Use of street as yard.

Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Pattison, 67 Ill. App. 351, was an action against a railroad company for maintaining a all other attendant circumstances. I further charge you, and instruct you, gentlemen, that neither is it any defense that when the nuisance was established it was in a convenient place, and that the public had come to the nuisance either by the extension of the town or the operating of highways and streets. The fact that the business was originally established in a convenient place, but that the public has come to it, is no defense."

The legislature may authorize public corporations and quasi-public corporations to take private property for public use. Thus, it may authorize a railroad to take private property for its right of way, for its depots and station houses. It may also authorize terminal companies to take private property for its station houses, roundhouses, coal chutes and other necessary conveniences; but it cannot authorize such public corporations in locating such works, to seriously impair or destroy property not so taken, but which becomes impaired, or is destroyed, by the use of that which is taken. There is no authority for the commission of a nuisance, or the doing of a hurtful act, to adjacent or contiguous property, in order to operate that which it lawfully has. This question, we think, has already been decided in this state in a number of cases. In Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 741, 61 L. R. A. 188, 72 S. W. 957, which involved the location and construction of a roundhouse by this same terminal company, it is said: "To a claim for switch in front of and near the plaintiff's dwelling house, and suffering cars loaded with hogs and cattle, and others in which they had been transported, to stand and be upon such switch for a long time, whereby noxious, offensive, and unwholesome smells and odors arising from the animals and from filthy and offensive matters in the cars and the decaying bodies of dead animals therein entered and permeated plaintiff's dwelling house and rendered his home unhealthy, unwholesome, and unfit for habitation; and for permitting its locomotive engines to stand and remain upon such switch, creating noisome, noxious, and offensive vapors, fumes, smoke, smell, dust, cinders, etc., which rendered his dwelling unhealthy and unfit for habitation; and the plaintiff had a verdict and judgment. On appeal therefrom the court said that a legislative grant authorizing a railroad company to construct and operate its road has no effect to relieve it from liability to answer in damages for nuisances, unless such nuisances arise as a necessary and natural result of the proper operation of the road.

The plaintiff in an action against a railroad company alleged that defendant laid down a railroad track in a street, and a side track between the main track and the sidewalk and on the side of the street adjacent to her property, without her consent and without compensation; that the defendant used this side track for standing cars and loading and unloading coal at all hours of the day and night, converting that portion of the street into a coal yard. A count in the answer pleaded that the railway company entered upon the street and constructed and, up to the time of the appointment of the defendant as its receiver, used the main track under the authority of an ordinance of the city, and that it afterwards, under like authority, constructed the side track. This count was separately demurred to, and it was held that the demurrer should be sustained. The court said that the right to use a street for the running of trains gives no right to establish a repair shop thereon, but a railroad company may be liable (L.R.A. (N.S.)

ble to damages if it obstructs the street by unreasonably and improperly leaving its cars standing thereon, as it cannot abuse the right given to it to another's damage; that whatever use is reasonable and proper it may enjoy without liability, but when it goes beyond that it is liable, as any other wrongdoer; that what use is reasonable and proper will, of course, vary with the circumstances, and cannot be absolutely determined in ignorance of the surroundings. Frankle v. Jackson, 30 Fed. 398.

If a railroad be constructed on a street in pursuance of its charter and permission of local authorities empowered to license such use, and the street is graded under the direction of such local government, it is not a nuisance and cannot be abated as such; but, notwithstanding such grant of occupation, it is liable to the abutting owners for the new burden imposed upon the fee of the street if they own it, or for any substantial destruction of the easement in the highway appurtenant to their property resulting from an abuse of railroad privileges; and all uses of such street in excess of what is necessary for the ordinary and proper operation of the road, such as running trains faster than permitted by law, making dangerous switches, parking cars, using it as a switch yard, keeping engines and trains standing unnecessarily long (if such uses substantially destroy the easement in the highway and the right of ingress and egress),—are unlawful. Harmon v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 87 Tenn. 614, 11 S. W. 703. To the same effect is Smith v. East End Street R. Co. 87 Tenn. 626, 11 S. W. 709.

5. Ordinary operation of road.

There is no doubt that the ordinary operation of a railroad in a prudent and careful manner does not constitute a nuisance except in rare instances. But a little carelessness may render the road a nuisance to all in the community; and the relation between the road and particular parcels of property may be such as to constitute a nuisance.

exemption from liability rested on a charter right, the answer may be properly made that the state has not authorized the wrong complained of, and, in locating its round-house so that the injury necessarily resulted to the adjacent landowner, it did so at its peril."

It appears to be the English doctrine that Parliament may authorize the construction of such a work at a specified place where its use would constitute a nuisance at common law, and no compensation could be claimed in respect to an injury to private rights, apart from a negligent use. But, even under the English system, no such immunity could be claimed, unless there was sanction to do so, either expressed or implied.

As is said in Hill v. Metropolitan Asylum sance for which compensation should be made.

If a railroad is built and operated by authority of law, its operation, of course, cannot be held to be in law a nuisance; but, while that is so, damages resulting to adjacent property from its operation are not in any degree affected by that circumstance. And if the noise, confusion, and disturbance caused by the railroad company's engines and cars are such as would, in the absence of legislative authority, have constituted an actionable nuisance, the existence of such authority in no way relieves them of their damaging effect, so as to take away from property owners their right to redress, or so as to convert what was before actionable into a case of damnum absque injuria. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Darke, 148 Ill. 226, 35 N. E. 750, that was an action for laying tracks in close proximity to the plaintiff's premises, which before that time were free from noxious vapors, smoke, unhealthy, and injurious substances; and for keeping upon such tracks locomotives which emitted large quantities of smoke, cinders, dust, soot, ashes, sparks of fire, and other noxious and injurious substances; and for operating a railway so near to and opposite the plaintiff's property, causing the soil of the plaintiff's premises to be greatly shaken, disturbed, vibrated, and damaged; and the proofs showed that such facts existed, and the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for a substantial amount in damages, for which judgment was entered. The court on appeal from such judgment affirmed the same, and said, further, that some of the decisions seemed to hold that the employment of locomotive engines, the running of trains, and the noise and confusion thus caused, are the necessary and lawful incidents of the operation of railways, and therefore the damages to lands abutting upon or near the railway were damnum absque injuria, and therefore incapable of affording any ground for the recovery of damages, but that the court in this case was not prepared to coincide with that view.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

District, L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 433 [L. R. 6 App. Cas. 213]: "Where the terms of the statute are not imperative, but permissive, when it is left to the discretion of the persons empowered to determine whether the general powers committed to them shall be put in execution or not, I think the fair inference is that the legislature intended that discretion be exercised in strict conformity with private rights, and did not intend to confer license to commit nuisance in any place which might be selected for the purpose."

This court, approving this doctrine, said, in addition, in Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 743, 61 L. R. A. 188, 72 S. W. 957: "But over and beyond this, we think this corporation, in selecting a

And a similar ruling was made in First Baptist Church v. Schenectady & T. R. Co. 5 Barb. 79.

Where a contractor, doing public work under authority of law, in disposing of excavated material used cars drawn by steam engines which were heavily loaded and run with considerable speed and frequency from morning till night, the route adopted being the most feasible one, but not the only one by which the contractor could have removed the excavated material, the running of which cars greatly annoyed the plaintiff and injured his property, causing the building to vibrate, being attended with noise, and smoke and cinders being blown upon his premises to such an extent that the court found the same a nuisance.—it was held that the public character of the work did not exempt the contractor from liability, as, to make the rights of the plaintiff subservient to the public, it would be necessary to hold that the legislature intended that this particular route should be used for the purpose of carrying away the excavated material; and that no such contention could be sustained, neither could it be contended that the legislature intended to subordinate private interests along any route which might be selected by the contractor for such purposes. The court said that consequential damages were withheld only in cases where it appeared that the legislature expressly or by clear implication sanctioned the doing of the very act complained of, and that none of the cases go further. Bohnsack v. McDonald, 26 Misc. 493, 56 N. Y. Supp. 347.

In King v. Morris & E. R. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 397, it was held that the defendants must be restrained from running any coal engines on their road, if the consequences were necessarily such as were shown by the proofs in the case, and that the position taken by their counsel, that the privilege of running locomotives upon their road having been granted by the legislature the residents and owners of property in the vicinity must suffer the consequences without relief, was not tenable, as the legislature never intended to grant, and never did place for its roundhouse, acted in a private capacity, and is responsible for the injurious consequences which may result from its use. This is the view taken in Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 167. It is there said: 'A railroad, in selecting a place for repair shops and engine house, acts altogether in its private capacity. Such location is a matter of indifference to the public. Consequently, with respect to such act, the corporation stood on the footing of an individual, and was entitled to no superior rights of immunity. . . . The authority to construct such works did not authorize it to place them wherever it might think proper in the city, without reference to the property rights of others. Grants of power to corporate bodies like these can have no license to use them in disregard of the rights of others, and with immunity for their invasion.' To the like effect is the leading case of Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 56 Am. Rep. 6, note, 8 N. E. 537."

The Fifth Baptist Church Case, which is a leading case upon this question, has been cited and approved in a large number of cases, and by all the text-books and compilations, since it was delivered in 1883. It is said that it is weakened in the case of London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 50, but we do not find this to be so; but that case, by the opinion of the court itself, is differentiated from the grant, to them the right to scatter fire and desolation along their line to a width over which an engine could be contrived or constructed to throw burning coals; that their right to use locomotives was granted only on the condition imposed by law upon the use of all privileges and property, that is, that they should be so used as to do no unnecessary damage to others; and that, if coal burners could not be used without such increase of danger as was shown in this case, it would be the duty of the company to abandon them and return to wood burners.

Although Mathews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 121 Mo. 331, 25 L. R. A. 169, 24 S. W. 597, has some bearing, it can hardly be said to be a positive authority, on the subject under consideration. The real question in that case was whether a statute making a railroad company liable for damages caused by fire from a locomotive without regard to the negligence of the company was unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of its charter, or denying it the equal protection of the laws, or contravening a natural right; and it was held the law was constitutional. But in answer to an argument of counsel for the railroad company, that no law could be sustained as a police regulation which imposed a penalty or conferred an action for doing that which had never been declared unlawful, and which, on the contrary, was made legal, the court said: that the counsel had gone too far in his assumption and in his argument that the law of the state constituting the charter of the road and permitting it to use steam in the operation of its trains was a protection from liability for fire set out by engines, providing it was guilty of no negligence, and in invoking the principle that that which the law authorizes could not be a nuisance, although it might result in damages to individual rights or property. The court further said that the rule is now established that the statutory authority which would justify an injury to private property and afford immunity for acts which would otherwise be a nuisance must be express, or must be a clear and unquestionable implication from powers expressly conferred, and it must appear that the legislature contemplated the doing of the very act which occasioned the injury.

Railroad in street.

When a railroad is constructed along a residence street in a city, the conditions are ripe for the existence of a nuisance to every householder, unless extreme care is exercised in the operation of its road.

While a railroad company which occupies a street by its road, with the approval and express consent of the city authorities, have a right, so far as the general public is concerned, to keep and maintain their railway tracks and to pass their trains over them, notwithstanding this license, if the houses of lot owners have been injured by having smoke, sparks, or cinders thrown or blown into or upon them, or if their walls have been cracked by the rapid movements of heavy trains of cars, such lot owners are entitled to recover for the damages directly resulting therefrom. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Esterle, 13 Bush, 667.

In Kentucky the right of an abutting owner to recover damages from a railroad company for throwing soot, cinders, etc., upon his property, does not arise from his interest in the street. Such damage does not result because the railroad track is located upon a street, except in so far as the running of trains on it is in such proximity to the property as to produce the injury; and if it had been located on an adjoining lot which had been purchased from another person, and the effect of the operation of the road had been the same as the operation of the road in the street, a cause of action would have existed. Willis v. Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. 104 Ky. 186, 46 S. W. 488.

Therefore when a railroad is constructed through a city by legislative authority, and it occupies the streets by municipal license, it is in the lawful exercise of a right; and it is in the exercise of such a right when it so enters a city, and acquires the right to and Hill Case and the Church Case, the Truman Case resting upon the English railway acts, which were assumed to establish the proposition that a railway might be made and used, whether it was a nuisance or not.

The Truman Case is contrary to the other cases, because it is based upon the authority of the English railway acts, which authorize the construction and operation of the railway, even though it be a nuisance. No such legislation has ever been attempted in the United States, and it is so utterly repugnant to our Constitution and system of government, by which the rights of every individual are protected, that it will never be attempted or upheld.

In the Fifth Baptist Church Case, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, it does locate its road on private property. In either case, if, in the operation of the road, soot, cinders, etc., are thrown upon the property which abuts on the street, or upon property which abuts upon the private property acquired as indicated, and the owner is thus injured, he may maintain an action. Ibid.

In Sone v. Fairbury, P. & N. W. R. Co. 68 Bl. 394, 18 Am. Rep. 556, it was said that it must be conceded that an incorporated town or city owns the fee-simple title to the public streets, and has the exclusive power to control and regulate the same, and in the exercise of that power may rightfully authorize and permits a railroad company to occupy and use a public street with its railroad track; yet, under the organic law of the state, the railroad company must be held responsible to property owners upon the street for such direct or physical damage as shall result from the construction of the road or the operation of the same after its completion; and that, while it must necessarily happen that the streets will be used for various legitimate purposes, which will, to a greater or less extent, discommode persons residing or doing business upon them, and just to that extent damage their property, still such damage is incident to all city property, and for it a party can claim no remedy: but that a demurrer to a declaration which averred that smoke and cinders were thrown from the engines of the defendant on the property of the plaintiff, by means whereof his property was greatly damaged, should be overruled, as, if such averments were true, the plaintiff had sustained a direct and physical injury to his property for which he was entitled to recover.

In an action for damages against a railroad company it appeared that the defendant, under authority of the common council of the city—which authority the city charter empowered the council to give—had constructed and was operating the main line of its railroad,—an ordinary and commercial railroad, running to and through the city and passing in front of plaintiff's lot. Safe and sufficient ingress and egress to and is said: "It is no answer to the action of the plaintiff that the railroad company was authorized by act of Congress to bring its track within the limits of the city of Washington, and to construct such works as were necessary and expedient for the completion and maintenance of its road, and that the engine house and repair shop in question were thus necessary and expedient, that they are skilfully constructed, that the chimneys of the engine house are higher than required by the building regulations of the city, and that as little smoke and noise are caused as the nature of the business in them will permit.

"In the first place, the authority of the company to construct such works as it might deem necessary and expedient for the

from the lot were not materially impaired. The injurious consequences to the lot were not due to any improper construction or operation of the road, but were such as result from constructing and operating a railroad through a street in an ordinary and prudent manner, and arose from the engines and trains passing day and night, and throwing steam, smoke, dust, and cinders upon the plaintiff's premises and into his house, polluting the air with offensive smells, and interfering with the free circulation of light and pure air into and upon his premises, and jarring the ground so as to cause the house and furniture to vibrate, causing physical discomforts and annoyance to plaintiff and his family, whereby the rental value of his premises was diminished: and it was held that whenever, without the consent of the owner of a lot abutting on a public street in a city, such a railroad is laid and operated along a portion of the street in front of his lot, so as upon that part of the street to cause the particular annoyance set out in the above statement, the lot owner may recover whatever damages to his lot are thus caused by so laying and operating the railroad. Adams v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 39 Minn. 286, 1 L. R. A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644, 39 N. W. 629.

The rule laid down by the supreme court of Minnesota in Brakken v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 29 Minn. 41, 11 N. W. 124, that the owner of lots abutting on a public street, whether he owns the soil to the center of the street or not, has a special interest in the street different from that of the general public, and such an one as will enable him to maintain an action against any person or corporation who interferes with the street in such manner as to cause appreciable injury to his property, to recover damages for such injury, would seem to be founded on reason and good sense. And what was held in Adams v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 39 Minn. 286, 1 L. R. A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644, 39 N. W. 629,—viz., that where plaintiff's property was injured by the operation of trains throwing steam, smoke, dust, and cinders upon his premises completion and maintenance of its road did not authorize it to place them wherever it might think proper in the city, without reference to the property and rights of others. As well might it be contended that the act permitted it to place them immediately in front of the President's house or of the Capitol, or in the most densely populated locality. Indeed, the corporation does assert a right to place its works upon property it may acquire anywhere in the city. Whatever the extent of the authority conferred, it was accompanied with this implied qualification: That the works should not be so placed as by their use to unreasonably interfere with and disturb the peaceful and comfortable enjoyment of others of their property. Grants of privileges or powers to corporate bodies, like those in question, confer no license to use them in disregard of the private rights of others, and with immunity for their invasion. The great principle of the common law, which is equally the teaching of Christian morality, so to use one's property as not to injure others, forbids any other application or use of the rights and powers conferred." 108 U. S. 329-332, 27 L. ed. 744, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 727.

And again, page 332 of 108 U. S., page 745 of 27 L. ed., page 729 of 2 Sup. Ct. Rep.: "The acts that a legislature may authorize, which, without such authorization, would constitute nuisances, are those which affect public highways or public streams, or matters in which the public have an interest.

and into his house, polluting the air with offensive smells, and interfering with the free circulation of light and pure air into and upon his premises, and jarring the ground so as to cause the house and furniture to vibrate, causing physical discomfort and annoyance to him and his family whereby the rental value of the premises was diminished, an action was maintainable against the railroad company by him therefore—is a natural sequence to the rule laid down.

While the grant of a right by the legislature prevents the act done from being regarded as a nuisance, it is not a logical or legal consequence of such grant that it may not inflict injury or damage. South Carolina R. Co. v. Steiner, 44 Ga. 546.

And so, when the state grants a right, the use of which works an injury to another, and the law provides no mode of assessing compensation for such an injury, the right of suit for damages, if any can be proved, is not taken away by such law. Ibid. In this case the court said it was not satisfied that the use of a public street in a city by steam power was within the legitimate use of such street. That there was no doubt that the streets might be used and tracks laid upon them, and cars drawn over them by horses; but there was something in a locomotive power, in throwing smoke into the houses along the street, its tremendous weight shaking the houses and breaking plastering and walls; and in the noise and screeching of whistles, which, in the machinery employed, might make it the subject-matter of injury, which the horse cars slowly driving along would not occasion. The damage from the running of a steam railroad over the streets of a city must be such as the law recognizes as actually something tangible and determinable; and to arrive at this the occupation of the parties by which losses in scholars, or in trade, or the like, have been occasioned would not be legitimate; but the actual depreciation of the value of property would be proper, and this depreciation, not only from questions of access upon the street, but the noise, smoke, shaking of walls, or plastering, and the like, which can be traced as effect to cause. In cases of this kind damages are not given for feelings of parties, or the fact that carriages might be injured by runaway horses, or that visitors are prevented from coming to the house, but must rest upon some solid, tangible injury.

In an action brought against a railroad company by one claiming that certain real estate belonging to him had been permanently injured and depreciated in value in consequence of defendant's having constructed its roadbed along a street adjacent to the property, and occupying and using the street as its right of way, operating trains thereon, emitting sparks of fire, smoke, and cinders, from its locomotives, endangering any building that might be erected on the block, and making harassing noises by ringing bells, blowing whistles, and the rumbling and jarring of passing trains; to which complaint the defendant answered by a general denial, and specially that it constructed this railroad along and upon the mentioned street under an ordinance of the city authorizing it to do so, and with care so as to injure abutting property as little as possible,—it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for any depreciation in the value of the property which the jury believed was occasioned by the probable fact that the defendant in operating and using its road would make unusual and loud noises, as was alleged by the plaintiff. Ft. Worth & N. O. R. Co. v. Pearce, 75 Tex. 281, 12 S. W. 864.

6. Cases absolving company.

The extreme difficulty of maintaining a clear view of the principles under discussion is clearly demonstrated by the following decisions. In some instances the same court which, as shown above, has held that authority to operate a railroad does not absolve the company from liability for private nuisance has, upon a similar state of facts, reached an opposite conclusion by the application of a different principle which was equally well established, but which had no and over which the public have control. The legislative authorization exempts only from liability to suits, civil or criminal, at the instance of the state; it does not affect any claim of a private citizen for damages for any special inconvenience and discomfort not experienced by the public at large."

And again, page 334 of 108 U. S., page 745 of 27 L. ed., page 730 of 2 Sup. Ct. Rep.: "If, as asserted by the defendant, the noise, smoke, and odors which are the cause of the discomfort and annoyance to the plaintiff are no more than must necessarily arise from the nature of the business carried on with an engine house and workshop as ordinarily constructed, then the engine house and workshop should be so remodeled and changed in their structure as to prevent, if that be possible, the nuisance complained of and, if that be not possible, they should be removed to some other place, where, by their use, the plaintiff would not be thus annoyed and disturbed in the enjoyment of its property. There are many places in the city sufficiently distant from the church to avoid all cause of complaint, and yet sufficiently near the station of the company to answer its purposes."

To the same effect is the case of Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 50 L. R. A. 488, 42 C. C. A. 178, 102 Fed. 85, Citing Stevens v. New York Elev. R. Co. 25 Jones & S. 416, 8 N. Y. Supp. 313; Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268, 10 N. E. 528; Kane v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 186, 11 L. R. A. 640, 26 N. E. 278; Druck proper application to the case to be decided. The two principles most frequently applied are that what the legislature authorizes cannot be wrongful, and that there is no liability for consequential damages. The first principle is not applicable, because it is limited to lawful authorization by the legislature, and the legislature has no power to destroy private property by authorizing the erection of a private nuisance in its vicinity. The second principle is not applicable, because the destruction of property values by the maintenance of a nuisance is not a consequential, but a direct, injury, and results in direct damage. These propositions seem self-evident when stated, but failure to keep them in mind has caused the courts great difficulty.

Thus, in Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42, the railroad company which was the predecessor of the defendant, and to whose rights and liabilities the latter had succeeded, was authorized by law to construct its railroad on the course on which it was afterwards located; and in making such construction it crossed a creek, and ran on an embankment over the whole of the land between the creek and a village, about 150 rods. The bridge on which the track ran over the creek was nearly 500 feet long, and there was a space of 82 feet in the embankment for water to pass in the time of flood. The embankment, except this space, was from 4 to 12 feet high, and near its west end there was a culvert 4 or 5 feet high. It was shown that the railroad company had acquired title to the land occupied by the track of its road, and that the plaintiff had received payment for the value of his portion of that land, and for his damages in consequence of the road having been laid out through it. The action was to recover damages against the defendant for "negligently, wrongfully, and improperly" constructing its road across the creek and across the lowlands forming the valley thereof, by means of which plaintiff's lands in the valley on the east side of the creek were repeatedly overflowed, the soil, fences, and manure washed away, and large quantities of rubbish left upon the ground, etc. The case is one that has been largely cited to uphold the doctrine that a legislative grant to construct and operate a railroad will protect the company from liability for consequential or inferential damages caused by the proper and prudent construction and operation of a road without unskillfulness or negligence on the part of the company; and while the reasoning of the judge who delivered the opinion of the court is largely to that effect, yet a careful consideration of the case leads one to the belief that the case is not so satisfactory an authority for the doctrine mentioned as has been so often claimed for it. The question upon which the case turned was whether a question addressed to an expert engineer of the defendant as follows: "Were the embankment and the bridge carefully and skillfully constructed, with reference to this creek?" which was objected to by the plaintiff as incompetent and excluded by the trial judge, should have been permitted to be answered; and the judge who wrote the opinion, after holding that all the other questions in the case must be decided against the defendant and in favor of affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, then said: "If one chooses of his own authority to interfere with a watercourse even upon his own land, he, as a general rule, does it at his peril, as respects other riparian owners above or below. But the rule is different where one acts under the authority of law. There he has the sanction of the state for what he does, and unless he commits a fault in the manner of doing it, he is completely justified."—and concluded by saying that the judgment should be reversed on account of the erroneous ruling upon the question of evidence. The language last quoted would appear to be in direct opposition to that of the judge who delivered the opinion in Brown v. Cayuga & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 487, and yet the judge who delivered the opinion in this case was the same who in that case made the remark that the correct principles in regard to consequential damages were laid down in Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Went.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

er v. Manhattan R. Co. 106 N. Y. 157, 60 Am. Rep. 437, 12 N. E. 568; Duyckinck v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 710, 26 N. E. 755; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 56 Am. Rep. 6, note, 8 N. E. 537; Peyser v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 13 Daly, 122; Smith v. New York Elev. R. Co. 44 N. Y. S. R. 875, 18 N. Y. Supp. 132; Bohm v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 576, 14 L. R. A. 344, 29 N. E. 802. The same doctrine is laid down in Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. 93 Tenn. 492, 27 L. R. A. 256, 29 S. W. 104. In that case this court quoted approvingly the case of Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. 135 N. Y. 393, 17 L. R. A. 674, 31 Am. St. Rep. 838, 32 N. E. 148, which said: "We are not prepared to hold that a person, even in the prosecution of a lawful trade or business upon its own land, can gather there, by artificial means, a natural element like electricity, and discharge it in such volume that, owing to the conductive properties of the earth, it will be conveyed upon the grounds of his neighbor with such force and to such an extent as to break up his business or impair the value of his property, and not be held responsible for the resulting injury."

Again, on pages 520, 521, of 93 Tenn., page 243, 27 L. R. A., page 111 of 29 S. W.: "The important consideration is that a thing of value has been taken from plaintiff for the benefit of defendant as the representative of the public, and for that thing compensation must be made. It is a plain dictate of jus-

462, and in reference to these two cases, in the conclusion of his opinion in the present case, he said: "There are two other cases mentioned in the opinion of the general term, namely, Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462, and Brown v. Cayuga & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 486. The first of these cases is substantially overruled in the one referred to in 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357, (the Radcliff Case). In the other case the only question presented was whether a party continuing a nuisance was liable if he had not had notice to remove it. The concluding sentence in the last opinion given in that case was written when the writer had not in his mind the case in which Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. was reconsidered; but no part of that opinion was adopted by the court. The case itself raised no question material to the present inquiry; and it cannot, therefore, be considered a precedent in the case under consideration." As a matter of fact an inspection of the report of the Brown Case shows that all the judges were in favor of affirmance for the reasons stated in the opinion of the judge, who held that the railroad company was liable for consequential and indirect damages the same as an individual would be, and that the court did not pass upon the question whether the defendant was liable without notice to remove the obstruction and restore the bank of the stream; and the attempt by the learned judge who wrote the opinion in the Bellinger Case, to impair the value of the Brown Case as an authority in favor of the doctrine asserted by it in its prevailing opinion, which, as before stated, was concurred in by all the judges, would appear to be without foundation.

There is a statement in the case "that the railroad company had acquired title to the land occupied by the track of its road, and that the plaintiff had received payment for the value of his portion of that land, and for his damages in consequence of the road having been laid out through it." That fact furnishes abundant ground for the result arrived at in this case, and for a great deal better reason than that given by the 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

judge who wrote the opinion, namely, that when the plaintiff's land was acquired by the railroad company, whether in condemnation proceedings or by agreement and purchase from him when he was paid for it, it must be presumed that the authorities making the award or the parties to the grant themselves, whichever it was, had in contemplation, among other things, that a proper construction of the road would nevertheless cause the damage for which the plaintiff suffered and for which he sought to recover in the action, and therefore he could not so recover without showing negligence or unskillfulness on the part of the railroad company. A very careful and correct review of this case may be found in 3 Farnham, Waters, 2650, § 904.

The opinion in the case of Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462, was written by Samuel Nelson, chief judge of the supreme court of New York, and for twenty-five years associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and was concurred in by all the members of the New York supreme court. The case has been cited with approval in many cases decided both before and since the Bellinger Case, and in the New York court of appeals under its present organization; although judges delivering the opinion in two cases in that court have let fall the loose statement that it had been overruled in the Radcliff Case and the Bellinger Case. So far from being "substantially overruled" in the Radcliff Case, all the reference to it there was that the judge who wrote the opinion, after deciding the only question in the case, namely, the right of a city to change the grade of one of its streets, without being liable to an abutting owner for injuries sustained by him by reason of the change, and after then saying "this short view is enough, perhaps, to dispose of the case,"—proceeded to devote nine of the ten pages of his opinion to questions other than the one actually decided, and in his long dissertation said in passing: "The case of Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462, stands on the somewhat questionable ground that the legtice that the public, not the individual citizen, should bear the burdens imposed upon private property for the public benefit. That defendant's act may have been authorized and lawful can make no difference. The legislature has not the power (except, perhaps, as to corporate franchises) to authorize, and in this case it has not undertaken to authorize, the taking of private property for a public use without compensation."

In Booth v. Rome, W. & O. Terminal R. Co. 140 N. Y. 272, 24 L. R. A. 105, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552, 35 N. E. 593, it is said: "But while there are decisions which give countenance to the view that an authority conferred upon a railroad corporation to construct a railroad carries with it immunity from liability in executing the work for consequential damages to private property to the same extent as pertains to the sovereign in executing public works" (Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42), it is now the settled doctrine in this state that the powers granted to such corporations are to be construed as privileges conferred, but upon the understanding that they shall be exercised in strict conformity to the private rights, and under the same responsibility as though the acts done in execution of such powers were done by an individual (Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 56 Am. Rep. 6 note, 8 N. Y. 537). This doctrine accords with reason as with the presumed intention of the legislature. The franchises of a railroad commission did nothing more than to shield the railroad company from an indictment for the wrong which would otherwise have been done to the public by occupying the highway with their road, without giving the company any authority whatever, so far as related to the rights or property of individuals." An examination of the Fletcher Case discloses the fact that the foregoing is not an exact statement of what was there decided. And the statement that the principle laid down in the Fletcher Case is "questionable ground" would seem, from the cases on the subject, to be opposed to some of the highest authorities, both in this country and in England.

In Conhocton Stone Road Co. v. Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. Co. 3 Hun, 523, the court approving and following Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42, said that in that case, as in this, evidence was given tending to show that the lands in the neighborhood had been at times of freshet overflowed prior to the erection of the structures of the defendant; and that the principle laid down in the case was that where one has the sanction of the state for what he does, unless he commits a fault in the manner of doing it he is completely justified.

Friedman v. New York & H. R. Co. 89 App. Div. 38, 85 N. Y. Supp. 404, was an action to recover damages and for an injunction for the abatement of a nuisance maintained by the defendants in operating their railroad train yards, the plaintiff alleging that her premises, some 150 feet from the railroad tracks, were injured by the smoke and dirt discharged upon them from the defendant's engines, and that her property had decreased in value, owing to the noise and inconvenience created by the defendants in the maintenance of their railroads and yard. The answer denied that a nuisance existed, alleged that the defendants were operating their trains, switches, roundhouses, etc., as duly authorized and directed by law, and that the operation was necessarily attended with noise and the emission of smoke, steam, vapors, and dust. There was testimony given by the plaintiff to sustain the allegations of the complaint; the defendant offered no evidence to offset that of the plaintiff, but rested upon putting in evidence the various acts and laws by virtue of which they operated their trains and yards. Upon an appeal from a finding that the injury suffered was the result of the lawful operation of the road, for which no damage could be recovered, and a judgment entered thereon dismissing the complaint, it was held, citing and following Uline v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 107, 53 Am. Rep. 123 note, 4 N. E. 536, that as the plaintiff had neither alleged nor proved that the railroads were operated negligently nor improperly; and as it was not claimed that the injuries suffered were other than those caused by the regular operation of the roads—that the case was controlled and governed by the Uline Case rather than by Garvey v. Long Island R. Co. 159 N. Y. 323, 70 Am. St. Rep. 550, 54 N. E. 57, which the court together with the Cogswell Case and Sadler v. New York, 40 Misc. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 308, endeavored to distinguish. One of the judges dissented, saying that in principle he thought the facts shown upon the trial brought the case within the doctrine announced in the Garvey Case, that the evidence fairly established that in the use which was made by the defendants of their yard a nuisance was created, from which the plaintiff suffered special injury, and that the legislative authority to maintain and operate a railroad does not justify, and did not justify in this case, the creation of such a nuisance, and that the method by which the nuisance was created was not of consequence, if it existed.

The case was appealed to the court of appeals, and it would seem as though this would have been an excellent opportunity for that tribunal to make an endeavor to lay down the true rule, once for all; but for some reason it refrained from doing so, and affirmed the decision of the appellate division without opinion. 180 N. Y. 550, 73 N. E. 1123.

In First Baptist Church v. Utica & S. R. Co. 6 Barb. 313, in the general term of the poration are conferred in consideration of supposed public benefits which will result from the construction of its road. The projects of such an enterprise are moved by considerations of personal advantage. To acquire corporate charter and privileges, they are willing to subject themselves to certain public duties. But it is quite unreasonable that, in executing its corporate powers, the corporation should be exempted from liability for injuries to private property, as though it was acting as a strictly public agent. See also Long Island R. Co. v. Garvey, 159 N. Y. 334, 54 N. E. 60.

In Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 331, 83 S. W. 658, noxious fumes and smoke were found to be sufficient to constitute a nuisance. With reference to location and operation, the court (pages 342, 343 of 113 Tenn., page 660 of 83 S. W.) said: "The court of chancery appeals finds that the defendants are conducting, and have been conducting, their business in a lawful way, without any purpose or desire to injure any of the complainants; that they have been and are pursuing the only known method by which these plants can be operated and their business successfully carried on; that the open-air roast heat is the only method known to the business or to science by means of which copper ore of the character mined by the defendants can be reduced; that the defendants have made every effort to get rid of the smoke and noxious vapors, one of the defendants having spent $200,000 in experi-supreme court of New York in the fourth district, the judge delivering the opinion upon the argument of a demurrer to the declaration said that the fair construction to be given to the declaration was that the church or society occupying the church edifice owned by the plaintiffs had been disturbed during divine worship on the Sabbath by the noise made by the defendants in the use of their road, by which the property had very much depreciated in value for use as a church, which acts were alleged to be unlawful, not from their being done unnecessarily, wantonly, and maliciously, but because their road was used on the Sabbath. It was held that the demurrer was well taken for several reasons, and that, although the abuses alleged might amount to a public nuisance as to the plaintiffs as owners of the building, the consequences were too remote. The court said that no case had been cited, and was of the opinion that none could be found, where a suit had been maintained for injury done to real estate by mere noise, although many nuisances removable in their nature might be an injury, even to the reversion. The judge delivering the opinion said that perhaps it was not necessary to decide the question raised in this case, whether the facts stated in the declaration amounted to a common nuisance, but that if it were, he should doubt the position very much; that while unquestionably the noise might amount to a nuisance, and also be actionable, that which is authorized by an act of the legislature cannot be a nuisance, and that the reason a private action will not lie for a common nuisance unless there be special or particular damage is not only because of multiplicity of suits, but because the King is entrusted with the remedy. The court then cited King v. Pease, 4 Barn. & Ad. 30, and American cases holding that if in the construction and maintenance of a railroad under authority by statute to follow a given line, and in the running of the road, horses of travelers were frightened by the trains, this interference with the rights of the public must be taken to have been sanctioned and contemplated by the legislature. While it was held that the declaration could not be sustained, for the further reason that the proper persons actually molested by the alleged nuisance were not the plaintiffs, but the persons attending the church, still the general trend of the decision must be said to have been on the theory that the acts of the defendant which were alleged, while they did disturb the congregation and people worshipping in the church, were not actionable, for the reason that they were contemplated and justified by the act of incorporation.

Thereafter, in the same year, the First Baptist Church of Schenectady, being the same church the trustees of which had brought the action in the preceding case, brought an action against the Schenectady & Troy Railroad Company for the same cause of action; wherein the defendant, among other things, set up the acts of the legislature incorporating it as a railroad company, and alleged that, if the things averred in the complaint had taken place and occurred as therein stated, the same had necessarily and unavoidably happened in the lawful use of its railroad, as it was authorized and empowered to use the same by virtue of the acts of the legislature aforesaid; and insisted upon the trial that no action for a nuisance could be maintained by the plaintiffs in their corporate capacity against the defendant for any acts done in the ordinary use of the road in pursuance of and by the authority of the legislature. Defendant also set up substantially the same defense that the defendant took by demurrer in the Utica & Schenectady Case. All these propositions were overruled by the circuit judge, who directed a verdict for the plaintiffs for nominal damages. On a motion for a new trial the general term of the supreme court in the third district denied the motion on the theory that, as far as the question under consideration is concerned, the plaintiffs had shown a right to bring the action, and that the use of the road in the manner alleged in the complaint was a private nuisance for which the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

ments to this end, but without result. It is to be inferred from the description of the locality that there is no place more remote to which the operations referred to could be transferred."

And again (page 358 of 113 Tenn., page 664 of 83 S. W.): "A judgment for damages in this class of cases is a matter of absolute right, where injury is shown."

In view of these and many other authorities, we are of opinion that there was no error in the charge of the court, as claimed by the defendants, except as hereinafter indicated. It remains to apply the principles laid down as determining liability to the facts of this case, with such criticisms and modifications as we think are proper under the facts.

On this subject the court said that the defendant was indeed authorized to make the railroad, and to acquire the land necessary for that purpose. That it was also authorized to use the road for the transportation of passengers and freight. But that in the exercise of this authority it was only to be exempt from liability for injuries to others to the same extent as if the railroad had been constructed and used by individuals owning the land, without legislative sanction. That if, either in the construction or use of the road, it committed an act for which an individual, under the same circumstances, would be liable, it too must be held answerable for the consequences. That every corporation takes its powers subject to this implied restriction, and any other doctrine would lead to unimaginable mischiefs. An that where, as in this country, corporations are so multiplied and so extensively engaged in the various departments of business, to hold that they may, with impunity, do any act for which an individual would be amenable to justice, would result in the most pernicious consequences. 5 Barb. 79.

These two cases would seem to militate against each other, but that was not the end of the seeming inconsistency of things, for in Chapman v. Albany & S. R. Co. 10 Barb. 360, the same judge who wrote the opinion of the general term in the third district, in the First Baptist Church v. Schenectady & T. R. Co. wrote the opinion of the general term reversing a case which had been tried before the same justice who delivered the opinion of the general term in the fourth district in First Baptist Church v. Utica & S. R. Co. and based his opinion upon that case as his authority for doing so (p. 367), stating: "The law of such a case is clearly stated by the same learned judge whose decision is the subject of this review, in the First Baptist Church v. Utica & S. R. Co. 6 Barb. 313." In this case the defendant railroad company, in pursuance of authority granted by the legislature, and with the consent of the common council of the city, constructed its railroad across a street of the

As before stated, tracks were laid in front of the property in controversy, and about 225 feet from it, as early as 1851 or 1852: and the entire traffic and travel of the Nashville, Chattanooga, & St. Louis Railway and Louisville & Nashville Railroad to and from the south passed over these tracks. With the increase of travel and traffic, the cars have been caused to pass more frequently than when the roads first commenced operations; and other tracks have been laid entering into the terminal station, and passing through it, in order to accommodate the increase. When the first tracks were laid, the property now in controversy, as well as that contiguous, was vacant. With the growth of the city this space has been occupied, and residences have been erected.

city, entering that street upon the easterly side at a point nearly opposite to the premises of the plaintiff, on the westerly side, and crossing the street diagonally to a point north of the plaintiff's premises. The grade of the railroad where it was made to cross the street was 2 feet above the former grade of the street, and the common council passed an ordinance directing that the grade of the street at this intersection with the railroad be altered so as to form on the north side of the railroad a plane from the level of the railroad regularly descending to another street, and on the south side of said road a plane descending in like manner to or near a point in the street thus crossed. The result being the raising of the grade of the street 2 feet opposite the plaintiff's north line and not quite so much opposite his south line. There was some evidence tending to show that the plaintiff's property had been somewhat injured in the change of the grade. The trial court had charged the jury, among other things, that, whether the soil of the street belonged to the plaintiff or not, he could recover for any particular damage sustained by him in consequence of the defendant's raising the street or the sidewalk opposite his premises, if that damage was special and peculiar to himself. This trial judge, it will be recollected, was the same who had written the opinion of the general term of the fourth district, in First Baptist Church v. Utica & S. R. Co. On a review of the case by the general term of the third district a new trial was ordered for error in that charge, the opinion being written by the same judge who held the railroad company in First Baptist Church v. Schenectady & T. R. Co. liable for the damages caused the church corporation by the noise of its road, and, as before stated, quoted the decision of the judge in First Baptist Church v. Utica & S. R. Co. as his authority.

In constructing an open tunnel or cut through land which had been the property of the plaintiff, but which seems to have been regularly condemned by a railroad company, such company, in order to extend the

Thus, both the travel and traffic of the roads, as well as the growth of the locality, have gone hand in hand. We are of opinion that, in so far as the growth and increase of travel and traffic into and through the station has brought discomfort to plaintiff, he is without remedy. In other words, the roads have the right to accommodate their increasing traffic and travel without liability, so long as their trains are operated without negligent disregard of the comfort and usable value of the plaintiff's property, and, for this purpose, to lay such additional tracks, side tracks, and switches into and through the station as may be required to accommodate such travel and traffic, both passenger and freight; and it is only for the additional conveniences of roundhouses, sand houses, coal bins, coal chutes, and the switch yards and tracks necessary to operate such additional conveniences, which might be located elsewhere, though not so advantageously, perhaps, that the plaintiff can complain, if they materially damage the plaintiff's property.

There has been no effort made to distinguish between the damage caused by the entrance of trains and passing of trains and exit of trains from the station and switching trains in operating the road, and the operation of the switch tracks, the coal bins, coal chutes, roundhouse, sand house, and other facilities introduced and operated as part of the terminal facilities. It is only for the latter that plaintiff has a right of action, and proof should have been con-come to a sufficient depth, found it necessary to remove a rocky formation, and to accomplish this it was necessary to blast such rock with gunpowder; and in Booth v. Rome, W. & O. Terminal R. Co. 140 N. Y. 267, 24 L. R. A. 105, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552, 35 N. E. 592, it was held that the railroad company was not liable to the owner of the adjacent property which had not been taken for railroad purposes for vibrations of his residence thereon, caused by the blasting for the purposes aforesaid on the property so condemned and taken, the same having been transacted with due care and diligence, without any negligence on the part of the company. The court said that the immediate act was confined to the company's own land, but the blasts by setting the air in motion, or in some other unexplained way, caused an injury to the plaintiff's house; that the lot of the defendant could not be used for its roadbed until it was excavated and graded, and the blasting was necessary and was carefully done, and the injury was consequential, but there was no technical trespass, and that under these circumstances the plaintiff had no legal ground of complaint; that while the protection of property is doubtless one of the great reasons for government, it is equal protection to all, which the law seeks to secure; and that the rule governing rights of adjacent landowners in the use of their property seeks an adjustment of conflicting interests through a reconciliation by compromise, each surrendering something of his absolute freedom so that both may live; and that to exclude the railroad company from blasting to adapt its lot to a contemplated use, at the instance of the plaintiff, would not be a compromise between conflicting rights, but an extinguishment of the right of one for the benefit of the other; and that the law would not, in a case like this, protect the plaintiff's house by depriving the defendant of its right to adapt its property to a lawful use, through the means necessary, usual, and generally harmless.

While that case seems to be devoid of justice, it must be remembered that for the 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

strip of land taken plaintiff had received compensation, which, in the theory of the law, included the injuries which would result to his remaining property from a careful and proper construction of the road; and, if blasting was necessary, the damages which would result therefrom had presumably been paid, and plaintiff was not entitled to a second recovery.

In Briesen v. Long Island R. Co. 31 Hun, 112, it was found as a fact that the defendant's use of its lot interfered with the beneficial use of the plaintiff's premises, and was a disturbance and injury thereto, but that such use was confined entirely to the ordinary operation and maintenance of a depot for passengers and freight, and a yard for the accommodation of incoming and outgoing passenger and freight trains, and to such drilling operations as were absolutely necessary to the proper transaction of such business, and to no other use or purpose whatever. The court said that, as a general rule of law in New York, what is done by sanction of the state under legislative authority is completely justified when done without negligence or fraud, and, citing Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 196, 53 Am. Dec. 357, said that it was decided in that case that where persons are authorized by the legislature to do certain things they are not responsible for consequential damages where they act with prudence and care. The judge delivering the opinion of the court admitted that in the case of Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719 (erroneously cited here as Bellemont & O. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church), the Supreme Court of the United States laid down a different rule of law, but said that they had stated here the law as they understood it to be settled by the courts of New York, and felt bound to follow their own rule until the highest appellate court of the state should declare a different rule. It would seem as though the highest court of the state, as in the Cogswell Case, and in three other cases which have followed it, laid down an entirely different rule; and this case would hardly fined to that feature of the situation, and not to the general discomfort and damage caused by the entering and departure of trains from the station, as well as the operation of the other facilities.

Again, it is not every inconvenience or discomfort that will entitle a property holder to damages, even though it be material or considerable, and especially as against a public or quasi-public enterprise. The noise of paved streets and of street cars is a material discomfort to abutting owners. The smoke from factories, hotels, and manufacturing establishments may form a material discomfort and annoyance to persons living near by; but these are discomforts and annoyances that the individual must bear in deference to the convenience and comfort of the public. The noise of trains passing through the country districts and the dust of vehicles passing along the public highways may be a great annoyance to residents along the line of such roads; and the rumbling of carriages of belated revelers and of early market wagons along the paved highways may disturb the slumbers and harass the nerves of persons who desire to sleep in the cities; but it is not for such annoyances and discomforts that the law allows redress, but only where the discomfort and inconvenience proceeds to such an extent as to injure the usable and rental or permanent value of the property that the law will award damages. It must amount, to some extent, to the taking of the value of the property, either temporary seem to be good authority on the subject, since those decisions.

This case seems to have received the approval of the judge delivering the opinion in Re New York Elev. R. Co. 36 Hun, 427.

In an action of trespass on the case against a railroad company, the ground of the complaint was that the defendants made excavations so near the plaintiff's land that, by the action of the elements and the frost, portions of the soil from time to time caved in from the top of the slope, until after a number of years it reached the plaintiff's land, and, since he owned it, portions of his soil had broken off at the summit of said slope, and slid and washed down the side of said slope towards the bank wall at the bottom. It was not charged that the defendants were negligent, but it was admitted that the excavations were necessary for the purpose of the road, and that the road was built under and according to their charter. This charter, granted by the legislature of the state, gave to the defendants express license to make all excavations necessary to the construction of their road; and for parties injured thereby a remedy was provided in the charter or in the general statutes of the state; or, if the damage was so remote or consequential as not to be included in the remedies thus provided, then it was damnum absque injuria and the parties were without remedy. In general, railroad companies are responsible in damages, in an action of tort, for doing what their charter does not authorize, or for improperly doing what it does authorize; but when they have done no more than is authorized by their charter, and that has been done in a skilful and careful manner, for such acts an action of tort cannot be maintained against them. The principle of the common law, that a man must not dig so near the land of another as thereby to withdraw the natural support of the soil and render it liable to break away and slide down of its own weight, does not apply to excavations made in pursuance of a license; and a license from the legislature, if within its constitutional limits, affords as ample protection as a license from the injured party. It was held that the action could not be maintained. Boothby v. Androscoggin & K. R. Co. 51 Me. 318.

The court fails to explain how it is within the constitutional limits of legislative power to grant to the railroad company an immunity from liability which under the same circumstances would rest on other individuals and corporations.

In Kansas the title to the streets is in the county, but the legislature has given to the city government the power of full control, and it has been held that an abutting lot owner has no greater right to the use of a public street than a railroad company that has been authorized to construct its line along it, as each must respect the use of the other, and nothing short of a practical obstruction of the use by one will be a cause of action to the other. A railroad is not an unreasonable obstruction to the free use of a street, but rather a new and improved method of using the same, and germane to its principal object as a passageway, like the electric, steam motor, and horse car lines; and so, if the location and construction of the line of railroad are authorized by the city council, and its location in the street is such as to give the lot owner ingress to and egress from his lot, such use of the street by the railroad company does not interfere with the use of the lot owner, and consequently he cannot recover for the remote and indirect inconvenience arising from smoke, noise, offensive vapors, sparks, fires, shaking ground, and other annoyances. Kansas, N. & D. R. Co. v. Cuykendall, 42 Kan. 234, 16 Am. St. Rep. 479, 21 Pac. 1052.

This case was not referred to in ARCHERSON, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. ARMSTRONG, but is in line with, and with it illustrates the Kansas rule.

Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Garside, 10 Kan. 552; and Ottawa, O. C. & C. G. R. Co. v. Larson, 40 Kan. 301, 2 L. R. A. 59, 19 Pac. 661, held that where a railroad company has a legal right to construct and operate its road over certain grounds it cannot be or permanent, and depriving the owner thereof. See Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Bingham, 87 Tenn. 522, 4 L. R. A. 622, 11 S. W. 706; Demarest v. Hardham, 34 N. J. Eq. 469.

This distinction will, we think, tend to harmonize to a large extent cases which appear to be, and are, no doubt, somewhat in conflict with the case we have cited. In other words, there are cases, some of them cited by counsel, which seem to hold that damages will not be awarded when they arise from the careful operation of lawful enterprises; but these cases, when carefully analyzed, do not present such a strong state of facts as shows a material injury to the property, amounting to a taking of it, in part or in whole; but they present cases where the inconvenience and damage do not amount to a nuisance, and, hence, being done in the prosecution of a legal, public business, they do not present a case for damages.

The liability of defendants is, we think, to be determined by the principles we have laid down; and it remains to consider the question of damages, if there is liability.

One assignment of error is that the damages are so excessive as to indicate passion, prejudice, or caprice. In our opinion, there are two theories upon which damages might be estimated or based, if there is liability. One is the theory that the defendants are carelessly and negligently operating their property so as to make it an unnecessary and unwarrantable and hurtful nuisance, while at the same time they have it in their held liable for damages of any kind, where it constructs and operates its road in a legal and proper manner; and where a city, having by the laws of the state control over a levee or levee street, has given complete and ample power for the time being to a railroad company to construct and operate its road over such levee, that is all that is necessary; and if the company constructs and operates its road in a legal and proper manner it is not liable to abutting owners on such levee for any damage they may sustain by reason of such construction and operation.

The Ohio court has held that a railroad company which has constructed and is operating its road in a street, as authorized by law, is not liable to an abutting owner for causing to be made sounds and noises by its engines, locomotives, cars, and trains, and for jarring and shaking the dwelling house and premises, and generating and emitting large quantities of noxious and offensive vapors, smoke, and filth. For discomforts arising from the ordinary use of the railroad by the company such lot owner has no more right to recover than any citizen who resided or might have occasion to pass so near the street as to be subjected to like discomforts. Parrot v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 624.

But in Columbus, H. V. & T. R. Co. v. Gardner, 45 Ohio St. 309, 13 N. E. 69, the court, after referring to and citing what was decided in Parrot v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 624, stated that the decision was made previous to the adoption of a section of the Ohio Code, and that the provision then in force created no remedy for landowners, such as was being considered in the present case. A section of a statute which had been adopted since the decision in that case provided that "every company which lays a track upon any such street, alley, road, or ground shall be responsible for injuries done thereby to private or public property lying upon or near to such ground, which may be recovered by civil action brought by the owner, before the proper court, at any time within two years from the completion of such track;" and under that provision, in estimating such injury it was held proper and competent to take into consideration evidence of substantial injury and loss to the property, which was special to the plaintiff and not common to others, caused by smoke, noise, and sparks of fire occasioned by the running of locomotives and cars along the track in front of the property. Columbus, H. V. & T. R. Co. v. Gardner, 45 Ohio St. 309, 13 N. E. 69.

In Fleishman v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 543, the court, after reiterating the general proposition so frequently indulged in by courts anxious to decide a case in favor of the rights of a railroad company, that an adjacent landowner cannot maintain an action at law for consequential damages from the operation of its cars unless he can show a negligent exercise by the railway company of its legal rights, and after stating the dictum of Judge Field in Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, as authority, and then ignoring the real decision in that case, as is often done by the courts endeavoring to screen the railroad,—decided in effect that the rule laid down in Columbus, H. V. & T. R. Co. v. Gardner, 45 Ohio St. 309, 13 N. E. 69, was not the true one. The court distinguished Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432, and approved the case of Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164.

In Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Speer, 56 Pa. 325, 94 Am. Dec. 84, it was held that the power granted the company by its act of incorporation, to run its road to a city and to locate and construct it on the street of the city, being established, carried with it the authority to make and maintain on the street the switches which were the direct subject of the action; that by the express words of the charter the power was conferred of making as many sets of tracks as were deemed necessary; and the court further held that if these were not expressed it was clearly to be inferred from power to correct the evils and obviate the trouble by adopting other means, and being more careful in the manner of operating the yards; and, coupled with this, is the presumption that the nuisance will be only temporary, and the evil will be remedied. In that aspect of the case recurrent damages to the use and enjoyment of the property may be recovered from time to time until the nuisance is abated. In such case the measure of damages will be the injury to the value of the use and enjoyment, which may be measured, to a large extent, by the rental value of the property, and to what extent that rental value is diminished.

The other theory is that the yards, etc., are carefully and properly operated, so much so as can be done considering the use of the property; but the location of the yards, etc., and their proper operation, nevertheless causes an actionable injury to the plaintiff's property. In such case it is not contemplated that any change in operation will be made, and the damage will continue so long as the yards are continued, which will be permanently. In such case the proper measure of damages will be the injury to the fee or permanent value of the property by the continued and permanent operation of the yards. To the extent that such permanent injury is inflicted, the property is, in a sense, taken or appropriated.

The doctrine of successive suits rests upon the following principles: (1) That the act complained of is a nuisance. (2) That it may be abated or discontinued, and, until the general powers conferred and the essential purposes of the grant, as a power to build side tracks is essential to the purpose and use of the road; and that a power to build a road of a single track, without the means of passing trains or of leaving the track for the shifting of cars, or of repairs at the shops and yards, and without standing room for the cars not in motion, would be clearly wanting in all that is necessary to safety, convenience, and utility, and would be vain and nugatory. The action was for damages to the plaintiff's house on the corner of the street through which the railroad passed, by reason of two switches, whereby the street and sidewalk were encroached upon and constantly blockaded with cars, producing great noise and throwing off great volumes of smoke, and kept on the switches for a long time, whereby noxious and offensive smells from cattle and large volumes of smoke penetrated his house, rendering it unwholesome, etc., and it was held that the action could not be sustained.

A coal railroad terminating on a navigable river must, in the course of thirty-five years, necessarily increase its wharf accommodation far beyond its original wants, and this must necessarily increase the number of tracks or branches leading from the main stem to its various wharves, where the coal is shipped to all parts of the United States. This was the language used by the court in Black v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 58 Pa. 249. In this case the court further said that "the word 'railroad' ex vi termini includes sidings," and must of necessity include the present track or branch which is complained of by the plaintiffs, and that the fact that the tonnage had increased to 4,400,000 tons in twenty-two years shows the propriety of giving such a fair and liberal construction to the chartered powers of the company," which, with a slight change of the language, would seem to amount to saying the same thing as was said by the court in Mercer v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 36 Pa. 99.

In Struthers v. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

87 Pa. 282, it appeared that the defendant corporation was authorized by its charter to construct a railroad from the northern boundary of the county to any point in a borough of the county, and that with the consent of the borough authorities the defendants laid and constructed their railroad along the center of a street in the borough, directly in front of plaintiff's premises. At the time the road was being constructed the plaintiff had erected and nearly completed, at considerable expense, a handsome dwelling house on his premises, and he brought an action of trespass on the case to recover damages for the inconvenience and annoyance occasioned by the building and operating of the railroad immediately in front of his residence. The court said that the pleadings were not given, but it gathered from the charge of the court that the annoyance caused by the passage of trains, the cinders and smoke, and the hindrance to the passage of carriages, were the chief matters of complaint; and held that, however considerable these annoyances might be, they did not constitute a cause of action, and that there was no principle of law better settled in Pennsylvania than that a common-law action did not lie against a corporation for consequential injuries occasioned by the construction and operation of its works. In this case the court made use of the following language: "It was admitted by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, that the current of authority was against his view of the case, and we were urged to review the previous decisions of this court, and recast them in harmony with the state of public opinion at the present day. We see no reason why the law should change to suit the barometer of public opinion. On the contrary, we see many reasons why it should not. And especially are we not disposed, for such reason, to overturn a long line of cases, solemnly decided, which have, to some extent, become rules of property, and upon the faith of which investments have been made and rights have grown up. It is our duty to apply the maxim stare decisis."

that is done, damages may be recovered from time to time. This assumes that the nuisance will be abated, and that the cause of the injury is not permanent, nor intended to be so.

On the other hand, when the operation of the yards is lawful and reasonable, and the injury results from the location and necessary operation, and it is not contemplated to be removed or capable of being removed, then the damages are permanent, and they should be estimated on the permanent injury to the property in the depreciation of its value in the market.

Now, upon this feature, the measure of damages in the record is in a very unsatisfactory condition. The declaration in its different counts claims damages upon each theory; that is, some of the counts for damages for use and occupation, and others for damages to the value of the property. There were other counts alleging damages to the furniture.

Much proof was taken showing damages in a general way,—that is, injury to the property, both real and personal; but there is very little, if any, estimate of salable value, and none of rental value or rental depreciation. It is not shown how much the rental or usable value has been diminished. It is not shown, in definite estimates, how much the permanent value of the property has been depreciated. The case was presented to the jury upon all the counts; that is, permanent damages to the property, temporary damages to the use, and

The Pennsylvania cases illustrate to the full the Pennsylvania rule that the statutes which give the right to the railroad corporation generally to construct and operate the railroad are to be construed favorably to the railroad corporation, and all implications are to be in its favor, in express opposition to the rule laid down by the courts in other jurisdictions.

In an action against a railroad company for erecting an embankment across bottom lands, and using the same as the approach to a bridge built across a creek running through such bottom lands owned by the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff's crops and fences were washed away and destroyed, it was held that the jury ought to have been plainly charged, so far as the injury for overflowing the lands of the plaintiff by the construction of the embankment and abutments were concerned, that if they found, from the evidence, that the embankment and abutments were necessary to the safety of passengers and property passing over said road, and that it was built, constructed, and erected with care, skill, and prudence, not only as to safety of persons and property passing over the road, but also for the protection and safety of the property holder, then the finding on that issue should be for the defendant. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. McKinley, 33 Ind. 274.

The owners of property in the vicinity of a railroad necessarily suffer inconvenience, such as detention by trains upon the track, the noise of passing trains, the smoke emitted from engines, and the like, for which they cannot recover in a suit for damages. Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co. 72 Iowa, 182, 33 N. W. 456. This doctrine was approved by the court in reversing a judgment for the plaintiff based upon the claim that the plaintiff's dwelling house, which was 93 feet from a coal chute of the defendant, and did not abut on the defendant's right of way, was injured, when the wind was in the west and the coal chute was being operated, by coal dust and smoke from engines blown over and upon and around such dwelling house, and that the supplying of coal to the engines was attended with considerable noise.

The Colorado court has held that an action cannot be maintained against a railway company duly chartered by the legislative assembly of the state and authorized to construct its road in a particular city, where the title in fee of the streets is in the city and under the entire control of the city authorities, for injuries sustained by an abutting owner due to trains of cars passing over the track upon the street, which have jarred, shaken, cracked, and injured the plastering and walls of his building, and to the emission of smoke, cinders, and ashes from the engines upon and against the building, and whereby ingress and egress to and from the premises have been impeded, by reason of all of which the value of the premises has been lessened, where an ordinance of the city was in force at and prior to the date of the construction of the road, by which the city council was empowered "to open, alter, abolish, widen, extend, establish, grade, pave, or otherwise improve or keep in repair streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, sidewalks, drains, and sewers of said city, . . . to direct and control the location of railroad tracks, . . . and to regulate the rates of speed of all railroad trains;" and another ordinance granted permission to the railway company to construct and operate its railroad through the city in question. Colorado C. R. Co. v. Mollandin, 4 Colo. 154.

In Hill v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 38 La. Ann. 599, the court stated that it had recently very considerably determined that "the legislature has the power to authorize the building of a railroad on a street of a city, and may directly exercise this power, or devolve it upon the local or municipal authorities," in the cases of Harrison v. New Orleans P. R. Co. 34 La. Ann. 462, 44 Am. Rep. 438; Werges v. St. Louis, C. & N. O. R. Co. 35 La. Ann. 641; and Tilton v. New Orleans City R. Co. 35 La. Ann. 1062; and that if the defendant railroad company had lawful authority derived, directly or indirectly, from the legislature, to construct damages to the furniture. But, when the court came to charge the jury, all claims for damages to furniture were withdrawn; all claims for damages to the fee or permanent injury were, at plaintiff's request, withdrawn; and the case went to the jury alone upon the question of damages to the use and occupation; that is, to the rental or usable value of the real estate. It must have been confusing to the jury to have the matter submitted to them in this way, requiring them to eliminate from their minds the damage to the personal property, and the permanent damage to the realty, and to consider only the injury to the rental value. There is almost, if not an entire, absence of any basis for an estimate of the depreciation of the property in the rental or usable value. It was shown in the proof over protest, that the value of the real estate was $7,000. This was for the purpose of furnishing a basis for its rental or usable value, and was so confined; the argument being that the injury to the rental or usable value of $7,000 would be more than that of a $2,000, or less than that of a $20,000. In this condition of the record, it is not improbable that the jury were misled into believing they could look to the injury to the personal property and the permanent injury to the property, whereas they could only look, as the case was finally submitted to them, to the damage to the use and enjoyment of the real property during the time the terminal property was being operated: that is, from January, 1900, to the bringing and operate the road complained of, an injunction applied for by the plaintiff—a property holder on a street of the city upon which the defendant company was operating its road—would not be granted to restrain the road from running its locomotives and cars because the same pollutes the atmosphere with smoke, soot, and dust, and shakes and cracks the walls and ceilings of the plaintiff's houses, injuring the same and impairing the value of his property; the evidence being deficient of proof that the defendant was guilty of any fault in the construction or operation of its road, or in the machinery used, or that it occasioned any injury which could be avoided, or which was not necessarily incident to the prudent exercise of its right. The court said, further, that while it could not be questioned that some inconvenience was occasioned to plaintiff by the noise of the trains and by the smoke and soot of the engines and by the jarring of the houses, and that it might be possible that the price of property on the street might have been somewhat impaired by the establishment of a railroad thereon, these were merely consequential injuries, for which defendant, who was merely doing a lawful act in a lawful manner, could not be held responsible.

Where a person or a corporation is vested with authority by the legislature to do an act, they will be perfectly protected from all responsibility, and will be liable to no suit, either at law or in equity, provided that what they are authorized to do is done carefully and skilfully, though without such authority it would have been a nuisance; but if done carelessly and unskilfully, and damages result from such carelessness and want of skill, they will be responsible. Spencer v. Point Pleasant & O. River R. Co. 23 W. Va. 427. Approved, followed, and decided in connection with this case are Campbell v. Point Pleasant & O. River R. Co. 23 W. Va. 448, and Smith v. Point Pleasant & O. River R. Co. 23 W. Va. 451.

The decision was undoubtedly correct so far as the result was concerned, but a better reason could have been given for it, namely, that when the plaintiff's land was taken by the railroad company in condemnation proceeding it must be presumed that the authorities making the award took into consideration, among other things, that blasting would be necessary, and also what damage to the plaintiff's remaining land was liable to occur by reason of the facts and circumstances on which the action was founded. As said elsewhere, negligence and nuisance are entirely different causes of action, and where the former is present there is no necessity of considering the latter. But this axiomatic distinction is one which many of the other courts of last resort, as well as that of West Virginia, have failed to recognize or observe.

In Taylor v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 33 W. Va. 39, 10 S. E. 29, the court, after approving the rule laid down in the Spencer Case, before stated, said further: This rule holds them responsible for want of skill, carelessness, and negligence. When the legislature grants a charter or privilege to perform a work, it is always with the understanding that it is to be exercised in such manner, where possible, as not to injure others. An action will not lie for injury from the execution of powers given by act of the legislature, those powers being exercised with judgment and caution; if the statutory powers are exceeded, or are not strictly pursued, or are carelessly, or negligently exercised, an action is maintainable.

In Watson v. Fairmont & Suburban R. Co. 49 W. Va. 528, 39 S. E. 193, the doctrine laid down in the Spencer Case and approved in Arbenz v. Wheeling & H. R. Co. 33 W. Va. 1, 5 L. R. A. 371, 10 S. E. 14, and in the Taylor Case, was followed.

In Dolan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 118 Wis. 362, 95 N. W. 385, where the alleged nuisance consisted of stock yards maintained by the defendant upon its grounds in a village, from which offensive and injurious odors and noises were said to proceed, to the great discomfort of the plaintiff and his family, the court said that the evidence was entirely sufficient to sus-of the suit in 1902. This was a period of about thirty-two months, during about six of which the plaintiff did not occupy the premises, but was away voluntarily for the summer.

The damage found was $4,000. This, for the use of a property worth $7,000, for only thirty-two months, would be grossly unreasonable for rental or usable value, even if the property was rendered uninhabitable. It would be at the rate of $2,000 per year for a property which, from its value, would, perhaps, rent for not more than $500 per annum. So that, if the plaintiff had lost the entire rent or use of his property, the amount found as damages therefor was grossly excessive, even taking into consideration, in addition to the rental, the destruction of the trees, flowers, shrubbery, etc. Treating the case, as we must, upon the record, that only temporary damages were awarded, they are so excessive as to indicate either misapprehension by the jury, or showing passion, prejudice, or caprice on their part, which must vitiate their verdict.

We have not been able to find in the record any evidence of the rental or usable value of the property. There is no evidence to show what the property would have rented for before the terminal plant commenced operation, nor how much, if any, that rental value had been diminished.

Nor is there any evidence or estimates in figures of the permanent injury to the property, if that was to be considered. Evitain the findings of the jury, and that the questions presented were purely questions of law. The court further said that the railroad company was bound by positive requirement of law to receive and transport freight tendered to it for shipment, and to provide suitable facilities for receiving and handling the same at any of its stations. That it was also required to maintain a station at every village through which it passed which had a postoffice and a population of 200 people or more. That it must receive for carriage all live stock offered it from February 1 to September 30, inclusive, and properly transport the same over its road. That, in order to discharge the statutory duty of receiving and transporting live stock, it must have facilities for the purpose at its stations, or in some convenient place within a reasonable distance. That, inasmuch as it could not have a train ready at all times to receive and immediately transport the stock offered, it must necessarily have yards or inclosures in which the animals may be kept until they can be taken away in the regular course of the operation of the road. That offensive smells and unpleasant noises will inevitably come from such yards when in use is matter of common knowledge. That the skill of man has not yet devised means, within the bounds of reasonable expense and diligence, by which these disagreeable results can be wholly avoided, and that it must follow that, if a railway company exercises reasonable and proper diligence and care in the location of its yards and in its management, it has performed its whole duty. That impossibilities cannot be required, and that duties cannot be imposed, and punishments inflicted simply because the duties have been performed; and so, if injury results to others, it must in such case be damnum absque injuria. The court assumed to distinguish Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, saying that the construction of the roundhouse and machine shop next to the church, the noise from which seriously disturbed the religious 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

exercises, was held to be an actionable nuisance because the fact plainly appeared that the location was unreasonable, and that there were many other places in the city where the shop could have been placed and answer all railroad purposes fully as well; but that the case went no further, and, when rightly understood, it did not antagonize the propositions laid down in this opinion. The court also distinguished Anderson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 85 Minn. 337, 88 N. W. 1001, on the ground that the evidence in that case established the fact that the yards were kept in an absolutely filthy condition, to the extent that dead animals were allowed to remain in them and become putrid, and that it was in view of these facts that the opinion in that case must be read; but the court said that the stock yards must be adjacent to the railroad line, the location of which is fixed, and that they must be at or in convenient proximity to a station, and it would not do to say that the company must go into unsettled districts in the country for its stock yards; for this is to say that, as soon as people begin to reside in the vicinity, the yards must be again removed to some more secluded spot, and so on ad infinitum. A grave and subtle reason indeed, for refusing to compel a railroad company to compensate a private individual for the destruction of his home. Suppose a soap boiling factory or a slaughter house had located in what was a secluded spot, and a city had extended its limits to the vicinity, would this court hold that they might continue their operations as before? And, if not, why should a railroad company go scot free in committing the same nuisance?

In Carroll v. Wisconsin Central Co. 40 Minn. 168, 41 N. W. 661, it was held that an action could not be maintained against a railroad company by a lot owner on the street of a city for damage caused to his premises by the noise, smoke, and vibration of the ground, all of which arose from the lawful, proper, and prudent operation of the railroad by the company, either upon dence was introduced to show that smoke, soot, cinders, dust, and noise were caused by other industries than those of the terminal company. In regard to the several assignments on this feature of the case, we are of opinion that it was competent to show that the property in controversy was injuriously and prejudicially affected by smoke, dust, cinders, etc., from other sources, but not to show the effect of same on property near by, or contiguous to, the plaintiff's property.

Neither is it competent to show how other property contiguous to, or near by, that of plaintiff has been affected by the installation of and operation of the terminal plant, but the proof should be confined to the premises of plaintiff.

Nor is it competent to compare the noise existing at plaintiff's residence with that prevailing in other portions of the city; nor to show that Nashville, generally, is a dirty, smoky, noisy place or city.

Other minor errors are assigned, which it is not necessary to pass on specifically.

For the reasons we have indicated, the judgment of the court below must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. Appellee will pay costs of appeal.

Upon this new trial plaintiff should elect whether he will claim for temporary recurrent damages to his property in its use and rental value, or whether for permanent injury, and proof should be confined accordingly. So, also, all evidence as to damages to furniture should be eliminated, and not put before the jury. So, also, should the proof be limited to the damage caused by the operation of the roundhouse, sand house, coal chutes and bins, and the tracks used in operating the same, excluding such inconvenience and damage as arises from the operation of incoming or outgoing passenger and freight trains into the station, and the operation of such switches as are required to handle the same in entering or leaving the station. All other matters should be excluded from the jury as tending to confuse them.

In the present state of the record, we cannot say whether defendants are liable for any amount.

its own lands or upon land in which the plaintiff had no interest.

It is proper to say in connection with that case and the Minnesota decisions cited supra, IV. b, 5, that the distinction between the rule which is generally applied in condemning property taken by a corporation for a public use, and that applied in actions against a corporation for maintaining a nuisance, should be carefully noted and preserved. To illustrate: Where a railroad passes along a street in which the public has only an easement and the abutting owner still owns the fee, the interest and property of such owner in the portion of the street so owned by him must be condemned by the exercise of the right of eminent domain; and in such case the rule in ordinary cases of condemnation of land, that the owner of the land is not only entitled to the value of the land actually and physically taken, but is also entitled to damages for the injury which he may sustain from any cause whatever, which has been held to include noise, vibration, and the throwing of steam, smoke, noxious vapors, etc., upon the remaining land, prevails. Where, however, the fee of the street is in the municipal corporation, and the abutting owner owns only to the line of the street, a railroad having legislative and municipal authority to construct and operate its road on a street may lawfully do so, and no condemnation proceedings are necessary. But light and air and means of access through, over, or by means of a street to the property of an abutting owner have been held to be easements, and therefore property, and so, where any of these are cut off or interfered with by the construction or operation of a railroad, condemnation in the exercise of eminent domain 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

is necessary, and this was the state of affairs in the Brakken and Adams Cases.

But in the Carroll Case, where the injury is stated by the court to have arisen from the lawful and proper and prudent operation of the railroad by the company upon its own lands, or upon land in which the plaintiff had no interest, it was held that the railroad company was not liable. And yet the injury was of the same character and was caused by the same noise, smoke, noxious odors, and vibration of the ground as was caused by the defendant in the Adams Case. This particular subject will be further alluded to in connection with what are known as the New York Elevated Railroad Cases.

Right here would seem to be the proper place to give an illustration of the ridiculous effect of the rule claimed by those courts and judges who hold that a corporation clothed by an act of the legislature with quasi public authority is exempt from liability for the commission of an act which amounts to a private nuisance and affects an owner of land abutting on a street to his injury. Let us suppose that A owns lands on both the east and west sides of a street running north and south in a city, and owns the fee of the street, and conveys the land owned by him on the west side of the street to B, but gives him title only to the side of the street. Thereafter a railroad company duly authorized by the legislative act of its incorporation to construct and operate its railroad upon the streets of the city, and having also the license and permission of the municipal authorities so to do, proceeds to construct its railroad through the street. Now, in accordance with the decisions in New York and most of the other

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

G. C. GOSSETT, Appt.,

v.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY et al.,

and Two Other Cases.

(.... Tenn.)

1. Blasting—effect of legislative authority.

A railroad company is not relieved from liability for injuries to adjoining property and the health of its occupants by blasting for its right of way, by the fact that it is a quasi public corporation authorized by the legislature to condemn, take, and use land for railroad purposes and works of public improvement, even if the work can be and is done without negligence.

2. Same—nuisance.

Blasting which causes loud noises and unusual and unpleasant concussions of air, and renders adjoining property untenable by reason of the fact that its occupants are inconvenienced, frightened, and states, in order to do so it must first condemn the right of A in the fee of the street, and in doing so the authorities entertaining the condemnation proceedings must not only award damages for the actual invasion and physical taking of the land, but, under the decisions in the Elevated Railroad Cases, must also take into consideration the damage which the remaining lands are liable to suffer from noise, smoke, offensive odors, vibration, etc., and he is awarded damages accordingly; but when B, who, simply owning to the side of the street, has nothing which is taken and therefore nothing to condemn, comes into court for damages from injuries which he sustains from the same causes for which A was awarded damages in the condemnation proceedings, the judges and courts that we have mentioned turn him down, with the assertion that his injuries are consequential, and that, the railroad being clothed with the authority to construct and operate its road, such injuries are, as to him, damnum absque injuria, and must be borne by him without compensation.

Destruction of easements in street.

Wherever a railroad is lawfully built with proper care and skill, there it is not a nuisance. What the law sanctions and authorizes is not a nuisance, although it may cause damages to individual rights and property. If a railroad be built upon a highway after acquiring the public right and the private property, if any, in the street or the soil thereof, then the owners thereof are not responsible for any damages necessarily resulting from the construction or operation of the railroad to private property adjacent or near to the made restless and that their health is affected, is a nuisance.

L.R.A. (N.S.)

3. Nuisance—discomfort—right of action.

Mere occupants of property adjoining that where a nuisance is being maintained have no right of action, where they are merely disquieted and kept in a state of alarm and apprehension, if it does not result in sickness or physical injury.

4. Same—injury—freehold.

A landowner who is driven from his home by the maintenance of a nuisance on adjoining property, or whose comfort is so interfered with as to lessen the desirability and usable value of his home, is entitled to recover damages therefor.

5. Pleading—accord and satisfaction.

An accord and satisfaction cannot be set up under the general issue or plea of not guilty.

(October 13, 1905.)

A PPEALS by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Knox County in favor of the defendants in actions brought road. Uline v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 98, 53 Am. Rep. 123, note, 4 N. E. 536.

And so, where a railroad company which had acquired all the rights of adjoining owners in the streets of a city, and, under a license from the city authorities, had raised the grade of a street in front of the lands of an adjoining owner so as to make the grade of the street the same as that of the railroad crossing it, the work being done by the railroad company with sufficient care and skill, and it not being alleged or proved that the street as a street for travel was in any way injured or its use unnecessarily impaired,—it was held not liable for any consequential damages to the plaintiff's land; the reason being that, as the city could have raised the grade of the street without liability to adjoining owners, it could lawfully authorize the defendant to do so without such liability. Ibid.

The court, after citing several cases which it claimed had settled the law to this effect, further stated that the case of Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462, so far as it holds a contrary doctrine, had been overruled by the cases it had just cited, which were the Radcliff Case and the Bellinger Case, and Davis v. New York, 14 N. Y. 506, 67 Am. Dec. 186, and Kellinger v. Forty-second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 50 N. Y. 206. This is a sample of the careless manner in which some judges refer to cases and to what they decide. The following is from the opinion in the Kellinger Case. "The decision in Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462, is cited and relied upon by the plaintiff. There the defendants were authorized to build a railroad upon a line to be selected by themselves, and to cross public highways, by restoring them to their

to recover damages for the alleged maintenance of a nuisance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. F. Mynatt and Pickle, Turner, & Kennerly, for appellants:

One who uses high explosives in excavating so near to the property of another that the natural and probable result of an explosion will be injury to such property is liable for the injuries caused even by the vibration of earth and air, however high a degree of care he may have exercised in their use.

Fitz Simons & C. Co. v. Braun, 199 Ill. 390, 59 L. R. A. 421, 65 N. E. 249; Longtin v. Persell, 30 Mont. 306, 65 L. R. A. 655, 104 Am. St. Rep. 723, 76 Pac. 699; Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 58 Am. Rep. 556, 10 Pac. 395; Tiffin v. McCormack, 34 Oh. St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408; Carman v. Stebbinsville & I. R. Co. 4 Oh. St. 399; Scott v. Bay, 3 Md. 431; 1 Thomp. Neg. § 76; Knoxville v. Klasing, 111 Tenn. 134, 76 S. W. 814; Kolb v. Knoxville, 111 Tenn. 31, 76 S. W. 823.

An action lies for damages to property or for interference with its enjoyment caused by lawful business, useful to the public, carried on in a suitable locality with the best and most approved appliances or methods.

Swain v. Tennessee Copper Co. 111 Tenn. 432, 78 S. W. 93; Ducktown Sulphur Copper & I. Co. v. Barnes, (Tenn.) 60 S. W. 600; Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur Copper & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 336, 83 S. W.

original usefulness. In crossing the highway near the plaintiff's premises, they raised an embankment which obstructed free access, and otherwise injured his property, and they were rightfully held liable for the damages." To the same effect as the Uline Case, Conklin v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 113, 6 N. E. 663.

While many things were said touching the necessity of acquiring rights of private individuals by the exercise of eminent domain, and as to what would and what would not be considered a private nuisance, and many cases on both of these subjects were considered and discussed by the judge who wrote in the Uline Case an opinion of more than twenty-five pages of the official report, the judge who thus wrote commenced his opinion with these words: "Many exceptions were taken at the trial on behalf of the defendant, which its counsel argued before us and relied upon for a reversal of the judgment. But I shall notice those only which have reference to the rule of damages laid down by the trial judge."

A railroad company authorized by an act of Congress to extend its line into the District of Columbia and the city of Washington, which built its road in that city in conformity with a grade specified by a subsequent act of Congress, is not liable to a lot owner on the street by reason of the grade being raised 2 feet higher than it was, such change in grade being also authorized by the city authorities, whereby water was formed into pools and deep holes in front of and near his property and access thereto rendered difficult. Nottingham v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 3 MacArth. 517.

A railroad company had been required by mandamus to construct a viaduct or bridge over a street, and elevate the roadbed of the latter so as to allow its trains to pass under the same, with approaches on either side of the bridge so as to give an easy or convenient grade for the travel over such bridge. By the terms of the statute constituting the railway charter under which defendant was acting, it was given the right to construct its railway across any highway or street subject to the obligation and duty, expressly enjoined on it, to put such streets in such condition and state of repair as not to interfere with the free and proper use of the streets; and it was in fulfillment of this requirement of the charter that the judgment was rendered and its enforcement compelled on behalf of the city in the mandamus case. The defendant railroad company built the viaduct and also the approaches as commanded, and thereby damaged the plaintiff's property by cutting off his access to the same by vehicles, and consequently depreciating the value thereof. In an action to recover damages for such depreciation it was held that, as the work was done by the authority of the state, and was clearly within the purpose for which the street was laid out and dedicated, and was done with reasonable prudence and skill, and it was competent for the legislature to provide therefor, and to authorize and require the defendant to construct the improvement, and since such improvement was confined to the highway, the defendant was not a trespasser, and was not liable for consequential damages to plaintiff. Robinson v. Great Northern R. Co. 48 Minn. 445, 51 N. W. 384.

The trouble with that decision is that it was not a case of consequential damages but was one of a taking of plaintiff's easement of access.

A charter of a railroad company authorized them to lay out and construct a railroad between certain termini, which they did. They procured from the plaintiffs a conveyance of the land belonging to them over which the railroad passed, and the road was lawfully constructed. The deed from the plaintiffs to the company reserved the right of way over the land conveyed to them, and the obstruction complained of consisted in the raising of the grade of the highway so that the public travel would pass over a bridge which had been erected above the railroad, instead of on the level of the road. It was held that, while it might be admitted that the rights of way over the land conveyed could not be used

3; Watson, Damages for Personal Injuries, § 4.

Messrs. Jourlmon, Welcker, & Hudson, appellées Southern R. Co. and Condon. Messrs. Templeton, Lindsay, & Templeton for appellee W. J. Oliver & Company.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These three causes were consolidated and tried together in the court below against the Southern Railway Company, W. J. Oliver, and S. P. Condon for damages resulting from blasting near the premises and one of the plaintiffs.

Some wordy controversy is had as to whether it is an action for a nuisance, or an action on the case, with which we need not concern ourselves. The action is plainly one on the facts of the case; and the facts set out in the declaration, so far as necessary to be stated, are that plaintiff C. C. Gossett owned and occupied as a residence a certain house and lot near Knoxville. His wife and minor child, about two years old, resided with him and constituted his family. The defendant railroad located, graded, and constructed its line immediately adjoining the home and premises of the plaintiff, and within a few feet of their lot and residence house. Large quantities of dynamite and high explosives were used day and night for a long time in blasting and loosening earth and rock in the construction of the road by the railroad, and by Oliver and Condon, as contractors, caus-with the same facility that they could have done before the alteration, and that the access to the plaintiffs' house was less convenient, and that the value of their property was diminished by what had been done, it is a sufficient answer that the defendants, in all which they thus did which might be injurious to the plaintiffs, acted in the performance of a public duty, upon compulsion, a fact, of the constituted authorities; for which reason their acts must be deemed lawful, and of course they could not be liable as wrongdoers. Towle v. Eastern R. Co., 17 N. H. 519. In this case the charter of the railroad company provided, among other things, that corporations should have power to raise or lower any turnpike, highway, or private way crossed or intersected by it, so that the railroad, if necessary, might conveniently pass under or over the same; and the court said that, as the legislature had the right to provide for such alteration in the highways as the public good might require, by reason of the construction of the railroad, and to prescribe the mode by which this should be determined, a lawful alteration of the highway, although it might operate injuriously to an adjoining land holder, could not be made the subject of an action for damages.

A street in a city, 30 feet wide, extended along a tow path of a state canal, connecting two streets, each of which ran at right angles to and came to an end at it. On the corner of the street first mentioned and one of the other two, plaintiffs had erected a brick warehouse with reference to the then existing grades of the streets, so far as the same had been fixed and determined, so conceived as to give them a ready access to the canal, for purposes of trade and business, upon which the value of the property was largely depended; and the plaintiffs and those under whom they claimed had been in the uninterrupted exercise and enjoyment of these rights and privileges until the time of the filing of the bill. A railroad company having a charter from the legislature to construct its road and permission of the city to occupy the canal street, and in order to construct the same, raised the street 12 feet. The gutters, culverts, bars, posts, and gates put up by the company were in conformity to their contract with the city. The effect of this was to cause the store and warehouse of the plaintiffs to overflow in heavy rains, and, in addition thereto, the plaintiffs were prevented, owing to the raising of the street by the railroad embankment and trestle work, from draying salt from the canal to their store, across it, as they did when the street was 12 feet lower. The court held that under these circumstances an action for an injunction could not be sustained, and dismissed the bill, and in doing so made use of the following language, which, it may be stated here, is about the reason given by the Pennsylvania supreme court in a large number of cases for the position which it assumes, and which would seem to be antagonistic to that of the ultimate courts of other jurisdictions,—and to justice:

"This railroad, in connection with the Pennsylvania railroad, forms a continuous line of travel and traffic between the metropolises of Pennsylvania and that of the flourishing state of Illinois, and we are asked by two private individuals, the owners of one small property on this railway of hundreds of miles, to put a stop to the whole of this valuable trade, by tearing up the railroad on Canal street, in the city of Allegheny, and thus preventing the cars and locomotives from incommoding the owners and occupiers of this single store." Mercer v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 36 Pa. 99.

The judge who made these remarkable utterances knew just as well as any ordinary lawyer does, that the equity action was brought by the plaintiffs, not with any hope that the railroad would actually be torn up and the traffic stopped, but in the hope that the injunction which they claimed they were entitled to would be granted, but its operation probably be suspended in order to permit the railroad company to do what it should have done in justice in the first place.

ing great noises and explosions, shocks and concussions, of the earth and the air, near and at the home of the plaintiff, and greatly alarming and frightening the plaintiffs Carrie and Calvin Gossett, so as to deprive them of the necessary sleep, rest, and repose, and, it is claimed, impairing the health of the said Carrie, and alarming and terrorizing said Calvin, until they both became sick and disordered in body and mind, nervous, and otherwise injured, driving them away from home, at great trouble and expense, for several months.

To the declaration in each case the defendants plead not guilty.

It appears that the railroad was constructing its line in front of the plaintiff's premises, and had a force of from eighty to one hundred men employed at it, working day and night, for twenty hours per day. They blasted rock during the day and during the night, using both deep blast and surface or adobe blasts. This was done in a cut about 15 feet from plaintiff property, and 30 feet from their house.

The house was struck by flying stones and the weather boarding was shattered. The concussions were so great that the windows in the house were smashed, and crockery, china, fruit jars, clocks, pictures and other personalty were broken, shattered, and otherwise injured. Carpet mattings, and curtains were likewise injured by the dust. The work was continued from August, 1903, to June, 1904, and, as a consequence of the nervous strain and fright and what the court by its mandatory process should have compelled them to do,—pay these two private individuals, "the owners of one small property," for the destruction of that "small property."

In an action against a railroad incorporated under several acts of the legislature, for constructing an embankment $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet high across two highways, on the corner of which the plaintiff's store, bakery, and dwelling house were situate, it was held that the railroad company having constructed its roadbed with as little injury to the plaintiff's premises as was consistent with the convenient grade of the railroad and the public use of the highways, the damages suffered by the plaintiff were consequential, and under the acts authorizing the construction of the railroad an action for them could not be maintained. Hatch v. Vermont C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49, Approved in Richardson v. Vermont C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 465, 60 Am. Dec. 283.

The Hatch Case was again under consideration in 28 Vt. 143. The court said in this case that, unless the plaintiff could stand upon the ground of negligence or want of proper care in the defendants, in the construction of their road, the principles of the case were settled by the court in its previous decision in 25 Vt. 49.

After approving what was said in Hatch v. Vermont C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49, the judge delivering the opinion in Richardson v. Vermont C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 465, 60 Am. Dec. 283, said that he did not feel called upon to vindicate the soundness of that decision, and neither should he enter into the reasons or the authorities upon which it was founded; that it sufficed to say that it had been fully done by the chief justice, and he would only add that the decision was, in his view, according to the adjudged cases.

7. The New Jersey decisions.

The New Jersey courts have had so much difficulty with the question under discussion that for emphasis they are grouped under a division by themselves.

In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432, a case 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

arising in the city of Camden, the vice-chancellor, after deciding that the smoke, dirt, cinders, noises, and smells referred to by the witnesses in the case worked inconvenience, discomfort, hurt, and damage to the complainants, as by reason of the same they were not permitted to have anything like the same comfort and enjoyment in their home that they otherwise would, as the value of their property for a dwelling was therefore greatly depreciated, and that if these things were so, that what is generally denominated a nuisance existed in the case, proceeded to say, further, that one of the complainants' neighbors were engaged in any vocation on an adjoining lot and were to do and carry on any business, however legitimate in itself, which could only be carried on by making like noises as smoke and dirt, he certainly would be enjoined, and that the defendant had no greater rights or more extended than as an individual; that the law was intended to operate alike upon all persons, artificial as well as natural; that the defendant's franchises did not extend to doing damage of this character without compensation or restraint; and that it could not be said that the legislature ever intended to authorize the defendant to commit a trespass, or any other injury, to any citizens; that there was nothing in the charter to that effect read it as you might. The counsel for the railroad company insisted that the act complained of were authorized by law, and therefore could not be a nuisance, citing the Hinchman and Hogencamp Cases. The vice-chancellor said that he did not understand that the point before him was before the chancellor who decided those cases; that a corporation of any sort can no more invoke these cases as a shield than can the butcher, soap boiler, or tallow chandler; that the business of each of these, and all the like, is perfectly legitimate, and stands on as firm a rock as any corporation can; but they cannot carry it on to the detriment of others; that it may put the butcher to some inconvenience to erect his slaughter pen outside of the city, and drive his beer he wife and child were rendered very nervous, and deprived of rest and sleep during the night; and about January, 1904, they were compelled to leave their home and seek refuge and temporary rest in another locality. Gossett was put to extra expense in maintaining his family away from home, and at the same time looking after his property at home.

It appears that defendants repaired plaintiffs' house, so far as physical damage was done to it by the explosions; and for these and the injury to personal property no recovery is sought, but only for the injury, physical and mental, done to the plaintiff and his wife and child, and rendering the house uncomfortable and less valuable as a residence. At the conclusion of the evidence the defendants moved the court for peremptory instructions that there could be no recovery by the wife and child, on the ground that no physical injury had been shown to them, and therefore no recovery could be had in their behalf.

The court sustained this motion, and directed a verdict in favor of the defendants in these two cases, to which action the plaintiffs excepted. He then charged the jury in the third case of C. C. Gossett against the defendants, and under that charge the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiffs have all appealed to this court.

It is assigned as error that the court improperly instructed the jury to render a verdict in favor of the defendants against here, and cart his meat back into the city or sale, but the health, the comfort, and the enjoyment of the citizens require it, and the law compels him to go outside, or to abandon his trade; and that it was certainly much more reasonable to say that the defendant should continue to make up and distribute its trains elsewhere than to inflict the discomfort and injury upon the complainants. The vice chancellor made a decree advising an injunction, and on appeal therefrom to the court of errors and appeals that court held that, following the prayer of the bill, the decree and injunction below were in the main correct, but that perhaps they might be interpreted as going further than they should, in that they absolutely forbade, under any circumstances, the use of defendant's tracks in front of complainants' premises for the purpose of distributing and shifting cars and making up trains, and putting and placing thereon cars laden with cattle, sheep and hogs; that such a use might, sometimes, in extraordinary emergencies, be unavoidable, and, if it then should occasion a material injury to complainants, should be paid for in damages, rather than be prohibited by injunction. The injunction should be against the use of those tracks for the purposes indicated, in the transaction of the ordinary business of the defendant, leaving it at liberty to show, in response to any attempt to punish it for violation, that an occasional use was necessitated by an unforeseen contingency, and that in order to make this modification the decree below should be reversed. In deciding the appeal the court held that the acts of the defendant railroad complained of were a nuisance, and that the nuisance was continuous and materially diminished the comfort of plaintiffs in their residence, and that this made the case one proper for an equitable remedy by injunction, unless the defendant could justify its conduct; and that the justification attempted by the defendant at the argument, upon the ground that the legislature and the common council of the city had authorized the defendant to use the avenue for its business, and that its business required such use as the defendant had hitherto made, and that therefore the use could not in a legal sense be injurious, could not be upheld for two sufficient reasons, the first being that neither the legislature nor the common council had attempted to grant so extensive a privilege as was here set up. The charter of the original railroad company under which the present defendant claimed to act, authorized it to construct and operate a railroad, with all necessary appendages, within certain limits embracing the locality under consideration, and that thereafter the common council of the city, by resolution authorized that company to use the avenue in question for the purposes of its roadway; that thereafter the legislature authorized railroad companies whose incorporating acts limited the quantity of land which they might hold at their stations, to purchase and hold so much land as might be strictly necessary for most conveniently storing and working upon their engines, cars, fuel, and materials to be used on their roads, and for receiving and delivering property transported on their roads to the best advantage, and for tracks, wagon roads, platforms, and all other strictly station and railroad purposes; after which the city council, by an ordinance to afford facilities to the original railroad company for running their trains through the city, gave its consent and authority to the company to lay side tracks running obliquely from a point on the railroad, along the avenue in question, between two other streets, and to and upon the company's depot property lying west of one of said last-mentioned streets; that from these laws and regulations arose whatever rights the defendant, who was the lessee of the original company, appeared to have in the avenue in front of complainant's house; and, in the judgment of the court of errors and appeals, they indicated that those rights were such as pertained to the use of the avenue for the purposes of the way, not for the purposes of a station yard; that the primary privileges given was that of passage; and that this and its reasonable the wife and child, and, also, that he erred in his charge to the jury in regard to the liability of the defendants to C. C. Gossett, and that he refused to give in charge to the jury certain requests made by the plaintiffs. It is also assigned as error that there is no evidence to support the verdict.

Without attempting to dispose of the assignments of error as they are made, we proceed at once to consider the several interesting and difficult questions which are presented by the record and the assignments of error, premising that we think that they have all been virtually settled by former adjudications of this court, most of which are quite recent.

In the first place, the fact that the defendant is a quasi public corporation, authorized by the legislature to condemn, take and use land for railroad purposes and works of public improvement cannot, under the authority conferred upon it by the legislature, exempt it from liability, even if the work can be done without negligence. We think the true doctrine is aptly expressed in the case of Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 5 Am. Rep. 6, note, 8 N. E. 537: "The power granted to such railroad corporations as to be construed as privileges conferred, but upon the understanding that they shall be exercised in strict conformity to private rights, and under the same responsibility as though the act were done by an individual in the exercise of such powers. See also case of Garvey v. Long Island R. Co.

incidents covered the whole scope of the grant; and that the right of storing engines and cars, either for a longer or shorter period, and the right of making up or breaking up trains, were not embraced in such a concession, these being strictly station and terminal purposes, and by providing for station yards the legislature had indicated its intention that business of that nature should be transacted there. But the court would not say that the company might not, under any circumstances, do upon its roadway what ought commonly to be done in its yards; for no doubt unforeseen occurrences might sometimes render such acts almost indispensable, and then other less urgent rights, of the public at least, must give way; but that when, in the ordinary course of its business, the company devotes a portion of its roadway to station purposes, it goes beyond express legislative sanction, and can support itself, if at all, only as a private individual might; and that this was what the defendant did in the avenue in front of complainants' house. Having a right of passage there, it used its tracks as though they were in its terminal yard; and so used them constantly in its everyday concerns; and for this there was no legislative or municipal authority.

Thereafter, in Beesman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164, in an action for damages alleged to have been done to the houses and lands of the plaintiff by the running of the defendant's trains the declaration was that the defendant had used its track in Jersey City within 10 feet of the dwelling houses situated on the rear of plaintiff's lots, for the passage of locomotives and cars to transport cattle, sheep, swine, manure, and other freight, so as to render said dwelling houses of the plaintiff unfit for habitation and of no use or value to the plaintiff whatever; and that the defendant during all the time mentioned, both in the daytime and at all hours of the nighttime, had wrongfully allowed its cars loaded with cattle, sheep, swine, manure, and other freight, emitting noisome and unhealthy odors, to stand upon the track, within 10 feet of the dwelling houses on the rear of said lots, and had then and there shifted and distributed its cars, and blown the whistles of its locomotives, and started its trains of cars, and suddenly stopped them and backed them and started them again causing great and unusual noises in the neighborhood of said dwelling houses, and causing divers noxious, offensive, and unwholesome vapors, fumes, smoke, smells and stenches to flow, arise, and surround said dwelling houses, and thereby also jarring the doors and walls of said dwelling and breaking the plaster upon the wall, and by such means had driven the tenants from such houses, and rendered the same uninhabitable and unfit for use. To this the defendant pleaded and set out its chartered right to build its road, and then averred that all that it did was in execution of said powers and by force and virtue of said acts. To this plea the plaintiff demurred. In overruling the demurrer, Beasley, Chief Justice, delivering the opinion of the court, said that the "defense, stripped of all verbosity, is that, by force of its franchise derived from the public grant, it has built its road and run its trains, carrying merchandise and freight near to the lands of plaintiff, doing the plaintiff no more damage than that which necessarily results from the transaction of such acts and business. Its position is that for such incidental and unavoidable damage it is not responsible. The plaintiff occupies the opposite ground, claiming that with respect to private property a railroad is per se a nuisance whenever it throws a detriment such as would be actionable at common law on such property." The chief justice further said that, if railroad companies were to be regarded purely as private corporations, it inevitably resulted that they must be responsible to each person whose possessions were thus molested; that such a doctrine would make these companies, touching such landowners, general tortfeasors; that their tracks run for miles through the cities of the state, and every landowner on each side of the track would be entitled to his 159 N. Y. 334, 70 Am. St. Rep. 550, 54 N. E. 57.

The court proceeded upon the idea, and charged the jury upon the theory, that the railroad company and its contractors in constructing the railroad were engaged in what might be termed "governmental functions," delegated, first, to the railroad company by the state, and by the railroad company to its agents employed to do the work, and that, if no damage and injury were done to the plaintiffs except what was necessary to be occasioned in the prosecution of such work, then the defendants would not be liable. In other words, if the work was authorized and legitimate, then the defendants could only be made liable for the negligent prosecution of it. This is contrary to the holdings of this court, and, as we think, to the great weight of authority, though there are cases, a few of which have been cited to us by counsel, holding that, if the work is legitimate, then the only damage that can accrue to the company prosecuting the work must arise out of its negligent execution. In the case of Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 331, 83 S. W. 658, it was held that the defendants were conducting a lawful business in a lawful way and by the most scientific and approved methods, and had made every effort known to science and experience to avoid injury to the plaintiff, but injury had resulted as a necessary consequence of the work itself; and the court further held that there was no other place to which the hurtful operation; and so, in the less populated districts, each proprietor of lands adjacent to the road would have a similar right, and thus the litigants would be numbered by the thousands: and that it was questionable whether the running of railroads would be practicable if subjected to such a responsibility: but that it was a radical error to regard these corporations as simply private; that it was quite irrational to say that the making of the track is an act done so far in behalf of the community that the eminent domain of the state may be resorted to for its furtherance: but that the running of trains upon such track is a purely private affair, in which the people at large have no interest: that the legislature may authorize the altering of the grade of a city street; such act may occasion immense loss to the owners of the abutting property, and such loss is damnum absque injuria, the reason being that the improvement is a matter of public concern, and that each individual member of the community, while he is entitled to its benefits, must submit to its evils: and that the attitude of a railroad company, so far as relates to the applicability of legal principles, is not dissimilar, as they run their trains by legislative authority for the public benefit, and that account, in doing such acts, they are so far forth the representatives of the body of the people: and that the defendant here having alleged that it had kept entirely within the limits of its charter rights in running its trains, and that the plaintiff suffered no damage except such as was necessarily incident to such transactions, it seemed to him that if this was true the action could not be maintained. He distinguished Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432, and Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 106 U. S. 328, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Rep. 719, saying that the former presented to the court the naked proposition whether the railroad company, the defendant in the proceeding, should be restrained from doing certain acts which were obviously ultra vires, the court having found as a fact that the defendant was continuously doing to the detriment of the complainant that which was entirely unauthorized by its charter; and that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the other case referred to rested on the same basis. One of the four judges composing the court dissented.

On a writ of error to the supreme court from the court of errors and appeals the judgment of the supreme court was affirmed for the reasons given by the court below. 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169.

The futility of the reasoning to the effect that the plaintiff should not have his action because every landowner on each side of the track would be entitled to his action, and the litigants would be numbered by thousands, and that it was questionable whether the running of railroads would be practicable if subjected to such a responsibility, is plainly apparent. As is stated elsewhere, the experience in New York city, in what are known as the Elevated Railroad cases, is a perfect answer to any such chop logic as this. The effect of the decisions in those cases was to compel the elevated roads to pay to each and every owner of property on the streets on which the roads were located, in a thickly settled city,—the metropolis of the Western Hemisphere,—for a distance of miles in extent, compensation for the damage to his property by the construction and operation of the road. Notwithstanding all which the roads are still running, and have increased in number, and all are paying extensive profits to their stockholders.

The weakness of this case as an authority would seem to consist in the reasons given for distinguishing it from the two cases mentioned. The same railroad company was defendant in the Beseman Case as in the Angel Case, and so the authority contained in the charter was identical in both cases; and to say that there was any difference in substance in the circumstances that were held to be a nuisance in the Angel Case from those which were held to be within the authority of the charter in the Bese- tions could be transferred. Still, the court said that a judgment for damages in this class of cases is a matter of absolute right, where injury is shown. This was a case where injury was inflicted by noxious fumes and smoke spreading from the furnace property over adjoining property, so as to create a nuisance and injure the adjoining property.

In the case of Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. United Electric R. Co. 93 Tenn. 492, 27 L. R. A. 236, 29 S. W. 104, it was held, in substance, that a person, even in the prosecution of a lawful trade or business upon his own land, cannot gather there by artificial means a natural current, like electricity, and discharge it upon his neighbor with such force and to such an extent as to break up his business or impair the value of his property, without being responsible for the resulting injury.

The Fifth Baptist Church Case is a leading case upon this question; and it was there held, among other pertinent matters, that grants of privileges or powers to corporate bodies, like railroads, conferred no license to use them in disregard of the private right of others, and with immunity for their invasion. It was there said: "The great principle of the common law, which is equally the teaching of Christian morality, so to use one's property as not to injure others, forbids any other application or use of the rights and powers conferred." In the same case it is said: "The acts that man Case would appear to require a mental operation such as it is not usual to ascribe to the judicial mind. To allow cars loaded with cattle, sheep, swine, manure, and other freight to stand upon the track in close proximity to a dwelling house, and to shift and distribute its cars, and blow its whistles, and start its trains, and suddenly stop them and back them and start them again, is very much like doing what was done in the Angel Case. And the fact that the court of error and appeals affirmed the case for the reasons given in the court below would look as though the affirmance was more a matter of form than if the appellate court had written an opinion and made some pretense of an endeavor to reconcile the case with the Angel Case.

Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 51 N. J. L. 42, 15 Atl. 833, was an action to recover damages for injury to the possession of two pieces of property on one of which the plaintiff dwelt, situate on the same avenue in Camden as was the property of the complainant in the Angel Case. The suit was to recover damages for alleged injury to the possession of these tenements by surrounding them with noises, noisome and offensive smoke, and stenches, through unlawful management by the defendant of its railroad. There was a verdict taken for the plaintiff at the trial, and a rule granted to show cause why that verdict should not be set aside. The supreme court, in making the rule absolute and ordering a new trial, said that it was proved in the case, and that it was not contested, that the defendant of right occupied the avenue in question with its railroad, and was endowed with due authority to run over its lines of road trains for the transportation of passengers and freight, and that the rule was not put in question that the adjacent landowner can maintain an action at law for damages resulting from the running on such public highway when, and only when, he can show a negligent exercise by the company of its legal rights, or a use in excess of such rights, injurious to such owner; and that it was not denied that those incidental inconveniences which unavoidably follow the careful and skilful running of trains upon a railroad, whether from noise or other disturbances necessarily arising from such use are within the corporate privileges, and give no ground of action to the persons suffering from them; that this concession of the relative rights of the parties in respect to the subject-matter of this suit was only in recognition of principles clearly established by settled adjudication,—and cited the Angel Case and the Beesman Case as authority therefor. The court then said, further, that, conceding that there was evidence in the case to go to the jury, tending to show such illegal management in the running of defendant's trains and consequent annoyance to the plaintiff in the enjoyment of his property, there had been error in the admission of evidence without qualification, as the first direct question to be resolved was, What loss in depreciation of the rental value of the plaintiff's property was occasioned by unwarranted uses of the defendant's railroad? and that the plaintiff had not pursued a course of inquiry that could throw light on this issue, but, instead, each of his witnesses called to speak on the question of damages was asked in his turn to give his opinion and estimate of the depreciation of the plaintiff's property by reason of the presence of the railroad in the street; and that the opinions of these witnesses all related to the depreciation of such value wrought by the presence in the street of the defendant's railroad, and were not based upon injury to plaintiff's property caused by injurious acts of the defendant in excess of its charter rights; and that the jury had been led to consider the damages of the plaintiff upon an entirely erroneous principle; and for this and other reasons the rule for a new trial was made absolute.

Evidently upon the same state of facts, and before or after the action at law, the same plaintiff had brought suit in equity to enjoin the actions of the defendant in the street opposite his dwelling houses as a nuisance. The vice chancellor (the same who delivered the opinion in the original a legislature may authorize, which without such authorization would constitute nuisances, are those which effect public highways or public streams, or matters in which the public have an interest and over which the public have control. The legislative authorization exempts only from liability to suits, civil or criminal, at the instance of the state; it does not affect any claim of a private citizen for damages for any special inconvenience and discomfort not experienced by the public at large." See case of Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719.

In the case of Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 741, 61 L. R. A. 189, 72 S. W. 957, it is said: "To a claim for exemption from liability rested on a charter right, the answer may be properly made that the state has not authorized the wrong complained of, and in locating its roundhouse so that the injury necessarily resulted to the adjacent landowner, it did so at its peril." And, again, it is said: "Grants of power to corporate bodies like these can give no license to use them in disregard of the rights of others and with immunity for their invasion." To the same effect see the case of Swain v. Tennessee Copper Co. 111 Tenn. 437, 78 S. W. 93. All of these cases have been cited, analyzed, and commented upon in the case of Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Lellyett (Tenn.) 85 S. W. 886 et seq., and many other cases are there referred to. The gist of these suit in the Angel Case) stated that the complaint in this case was that the defendant so managed the engines, cars, and trains on its road, opposite the dwelling house of the complainant, as to create a nuisance to the complainant. That the allegations in the bill were so similar to, and the testimony so nearly corresponded with the testimony in, the Angel Case, that he should be content with calling attention to that case. That in that case the court of appeals decided that acts similar to the ones established in this case amounted to a nuisance. And that so far as the questions raised in this case were similar to the questions raised and decided in that, the counsel for the defendant did not expect him to disregard the law as laid down in that case. The vice chancellor then said, further, "It is true that counsel called my attention to the case of Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164; and the counsel claims that the supreme court decided in favor of the company, and that the facts on which the judgment was based were in all respects similar to the facts in this case. But, unless the questions now before me are quite distinguishable from the Angel Case, I shall not be justified in departing from the rule there laid down."

On appeal to the court of error and appeals the decree was unanimously affirmed for the reasons given by the vice chancellor. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Thompson, 45 N. J. Eq. 870, 19 Atl. 622.

Thus it would seem that for the same transaction causing the same injury the supreme court of New Jersey set aside a verdict for damages on account of the injury, and the court of error and appeals affirming a decree of the vice chancellor (being the same vice chancellor who made the decree in the Angel Case) awarded an injunction restraining the railroad company from continuing the acts which produced the injury. It is true that one reason given for the decision of the supreme court was that the new trial should be granted because the testimony of witnesses had not been distinctly to the only fact for which damages should have been awarded; but inasmuch as the new trial was also granted for the reason that the defendant of right occupied the avenue with its railroad, and that an adjacent landowner can only maintain an action at law for damages when he can show a negligent exercise by the company of its legal rights, or a use in excess of such rights, and the court cited as its authority therefor the Beseman Case, it can hardly be said that the question was not decided in that case; and when it is seen that the vice chancellor in an equity action by the same plaintiff and for the same injury and to restrain a repetition and continuance of the same acts, although the Beseman Case was called to his notice, practically ignored the latter and followed the Angel Case, and was unanimously affirmed by the court of error and appeals in doing so, the question whether the plaintiff or the defendant in the two Thompson Cases succeeded or was defeated is a difficult nut to crack.

In Ridge v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 58 N. J. Eq. 172, 43 Atl. 275, the complainant owned a three-story brick house fronting on a street 100 feet north of the avenue on which plaintiff's property was situated in the Angel Case, and also in the Thompson Case, and the bill charged that for a long time the company had unlawfully used three tracks in that same avenue for the purposes of distributing cars and making up trains, and had used engines there for shifting and coupling and detaching cars near the dwelling of the complainant; and that at frequent intervals during every day and night the engines stopped and kept standing near said house from one to thirty minutes, and discharged large volumes of smoke, soot, cinders, and gases which were carried into the rooms of the house; and that cars loaded with cattle and manure were kept standing there; and that the noise of bumping cars, shouting of men in drilling cars, the ringing of bells, the blowing of whistles, the hissing of steam, and the groaning of cattle was a nuisance. The defendant answered that it had acquired the fee to the soil on the ave-decisions, so far as applicable to the facts of the present case and the questions here involved, is that a railroad company, in constructing its road, although it may be guilty of no negligence and exercise proper care and caution, will still be liable to adjacent property owners, if the work done, although necessary to be done, and in fact skilfully constructed, shall result in injury to such property. Most of the cases cited by counsel holding a contrary doctrine are cases in which the work was being done under government directions and control; and, so far as they do not rest upon this feature of government regulation and control, they are not in accord with the holdings of this court, nor, as we think, with the weight of authority, nor are they in accord with sound reason and legal justice.

It remains to be considered whether the injuries complained of in these cases were injuries for which liability arises.

In Fitz Simons & C. Co. v. Braun, 19 Ill. 390, 59 L. R. A. 421, 65 N. E. 249, it was held that one who uses high explosive in excavating so near the property of another that the natural and probable result of an explosion will be injury to such property is liable for injuries caused even by the vibration of earth or air, however high a degree of care he may have exercised in their use. To the same effect are Longtin v. Persell, 30 Mont. 306, 65 L. R. A. 653, 104 Am. St. Rep. 723, 76 Pac. 698; Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 58 Am. Rep. 556, nue on which the three tracks were laid, together with the property purchased on the north side, and that the same was acquired for terminal purposes, and constituted the throat of the yard, and had been used in connection with the terminal. It denied the general allegation in respect to the standing of cattle and manure cars; and in respect to the emission of smoke, gas, and noises it stated that it was one of the incidents of defendant's business, and the result of the necessary use of the property so acquired, for the purpose of drawing cars upon it in order to clear the switches in front of the passenger station, or to run them upon the storage tracks, and to draw freight cars to place them upon their proper tracks to be made up into trains. The court said that if the right of the railroad company to use the three tracks had not been enlarged since the decision of the Angel Case the complainants were clearly entitled to an injunction. It appeared that since the decision in the Angel Case the company had acquired a fee in the land covered by the three tracks, and 60 feet of the street had been vacated, leaving the fee in the company disencumbered of the easement. The vice chancellor held that although the company had the right to use the strip of land in conjunction with their former yard he did not think that the company had the right to so use the strip of land in the same way that they could use their former yard. He distinguished the Beseman Case, saying that the plea in that case, as construed by the court, set up that the injury charged was a necessary incident in the operation of the defendant's road under its charter; that the court held that, as railroads possess a public character, therefore any injury which is the consequence of the necessary exercise of their charter privileges is damnum absque injuria. (It will be remembered that the question in the Beseman Case arose on a demurrer to the plea, no evidence, and the facts were of course taken to be as stated in the plea.) He further called attention to the fact that in the opinion in the Beseman Case the case of Balti- more & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 328, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, was referred to, and the doctrine there laid down was approved in the opinion of the Beseman Case, upon the ground that in selecting a place for repair shops the railroad company acted altogether in a private capacity; and after stating what further was said, as we have seen in the Beseman Case, and also in the Baptist Church Case, he proceeded further to say that therefore the right of this company to use the strip of land upon which the three tracks were placed between the two streets, on the avenue mentioned in all these cases, for terminal purposes, did not include the right to use them for all purposes to which a terminal yard might be devoted, and that the company was bound to take into consideration the environments, and adjust its operations so as to produce the least annoyance to persons and property in placing the instruments necessary to transact its business; but, after stating this, the vice chancellor proceeded to consider the testimony, and concluded by saying that there was not proved such a clear case of habitual violation by the defendant of the rights of the complainant as would justify an injunction, even in the very general form in which such a writ would have to be drafted if allowed; and he advised a decree dismissing the bill.

Beideman v. Atlantic City R. Co. (N. J. Eq.) 19 Atl. 731, was a suit in equity to enjoin the defendant from using its tracks for the purpose of shifting its cars, in making up its trains or in unmaking, in the vicinity of complainant's dwelling. The tracks were about 60 feet from the dwelling, and were used by the defendant in preparing trains for departure, and in shifting cars of incoming trains to various localities. The work was done by the use of the engine, and more or less noise was made, and smoke and steam cast off from the engine. These noises and the smoke more or less disturbed the complainant and his wife, by keeping them awake and by affecting their dwelling, imparting to it a trembling or 10 Pac. 395; Tiffin v. McCormack, 34 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408; Scott v. Bay, 3 Md. 431.

Mr. Thompson, in his work on Negligence (§ 772), uses this language: "The subordinate courts of the state of New York, following the analogy of early decisions in that state, have held that a railroad company is liable to an adjoining property owner for injuries which are the direct and necessary result of blasting rock by such company for the purpose of leveling its right of way, although such blasting is done without negligence, and although no rock or earth is thrown upon the adjoining premises. But the court of appeals of that state have more recently held otherwise. In one of these decisions the action was against a contractor executing public work under the United States; and the decision proceeded partly on the ground that he was acting in virtue of the sovereignty of the United States, and could no more be called to answer in damage than the government could. But the other case holds that a railroad company, in grading its right of way, can shake a dwelling house to pieces by the concussions produced by the frequent firing of blasts, without being liable to pay any damages therefor, provided it is made to appear that the blasting is necessary and that it is done without negligence. This decision, though concurred in by the whole court, is directly opposed to principles laid down by the same court in early cases. It manifests such gross insensibility to jusvibratory motion, so that a tumbler would not stand upon the table, nor a lamp upon the mantelpiece, and by rendering the atmosphere unpleasant, if not unwholesome. The wife of the complainant would be awakened by it at night, and she claimed that it produced nervous prostration. It was insisted that the use of the track for these purposes was not only unlawful, but unnecessary, and that the shifting of the trains was a part of the terminal business of the company, and that the statute expressly provided for the condemnation of sufficient land for that purpose. In dismissing the bill the same vice chancellor who decided the Angel Case and the Thompson Case said that this method of reasoning would not aid the complainant, for the reason that, whatever land might be condemned, the work of shifting cars and making up trains might still be carried on just as near to his residence, or to the residence of some other citizen, and work all the inconvenience and discomfort now complained of. The vice chancellor further said that he did not understand that it was insisted that the land so condemned for terminal purposes should be at any given distance from the residence of citizens, or that it should be of any particular form, such as a square, or long or narrow; nor did he see that the court could prescribe the bounds or fix the shape or character of the land used for terminal purposes; and that if this were so, then, in every case where the tracks are used for the purposes above indicated alone, the court could only inquire whether there had been any abuse of the privilege or franchise which the law conferred; that in this case it had not been disputed by the defendant but that the use of its tracks for the shifting of its cars caused a trembling motion in the house of the complainant, and a nervous prostration at times to his wife, and aroused them from sleep at night during three or four months of the year, on every Friday, Saturday, and Sunday nights. He further said that the inquiry was whether or not a railroad company might be adjudged guilty of a nuisance when it used its main tracks, not only for outgoing and incoming trains, but for the necessary shifting of its cars in making up and unmaking trains, when in so doing it caused disturbance, discomfort, or nervousness to the individuals residing near its track, unless some abuse of its charter privileges was clearly shown to accompany the act, and that the facts which show results in every given case must control the court, whether the individual complaining resides near by or at a greater distance, providing he is near enough to be affected. After saying that it had not been shown that the wife's nervous condition resulted from the operation of the defendant's road alone, the vice chancellor further said that the fact that there was still difficulty in determining the rights of the parties was made very apparent by numerous cases; and that with that element out of it, and the question for consideration being whether or not the defendant had abused the franchises granted to it by the legislature and the city authorities, he was constrained by the great weight of adjudication to conclude that it had not; and said that it was upon this theory that the Angel Case was decided, and the same view, he thought, was also sustained in the Thompson Case; and that in those cases, while the shifting of the cars was complained of, the great burden which rested upon the defendant company was not only in allowing engines to stand long periods of time in front of the complainant's dwelling, emitting large quantities of smoke and steam, and in making hideous noises by whistling and casting off steam, greatly beyond any necessity, but especially in allowing great numbers of cars loaded with cattle, sheep, or swine also to stand long periods of time near by and in front of said dwellings. He further said that he was aware that the complainant's counsel relied upon the first two of these cases, and insisted that the present one was clearly within the rules there laid down, but that after a very full consideration he was wholly unable to come to that conclusion; that there was no proof in the tice that, although concurred in by the whole court, it scarcely deserves respectful mention." Mr. Thompson, in his notes, cites the various cases referred to, most, if not all, of which are relied on by counsel in this case. His own opinion of the law proceeds upon the view that the carrying on of an employment so dangerous near the land of another, thereby keeping him in continual danger and alarm, is a nuisance per se; so that, if any damage happens to him thereby, he may recover, irrespective of the question of diligence or negligence in carrying on the dangerous work. And he says: "If it is a nuisance per se, then, if the existence of negligence is necessary to support an action for the damage, it is for the same reason negligence per se." [§ 764.]

case to show that the defendant had negligently exercised the right conferred by the legislature; and that the bill must be dismissed.

And it would seem as though the complainant's counsel very naturally, relied upon the Angel Case, for the same vice chancellor had in that case said: That if one of the complainant's neighbors were to engage in any vocation on an adjoining lot, and were to do and carry on any business, however legitimate in itself, which could only be carried on by making like noises and smoke and dirt, he certainly would be enjoined, and that the defendant had no greater or more extended rights than an individual; that the law was intended to operate alike upon all persons, artificial as well as natural; that the defendant's franchises did not extend to doing damage of this character without compensation or restraint; and that it could not be said that the legislature ever intended to authorize the defendant to commit a trespass, or any other injury, to any citizen. The counsel for the railroad company in the Angel Case insisted that the acts complained of were authorized by law, and therefore could not be a nuisance, and that contention was speedily disposed of by the same vice chancellor who decided the present case. Whether or not it is the business of an annotator to endeavor to reconcile decisions which seem to assert different doctrines, when such decisions are based upon the opinions of the same judge the task is indeed a difficult one.

In Hayes v. Waverly & P. R. Co. 51 N. J. Eq. 345, 27 Atl. 648, it appeared that the owner of a piece of land conveyed half of the same, and in such conveyance stipulated that the premises so conveyed should not be used for certain purposes, mentioning them, or any other purpose that should be a nuisance or detrimental to the surrounding property of the plaintiff. Such restriction, however, was not to be held to apply to a railroad on the level of the adjoining streets. Thereafter the grantee in the deed conveyed to the defendant railroad company her title

Most of the cases to which we have been referred and which we have been able to find, involving damages by blasting, proceed upon the idea of a trespass upon the adjoining property, where dirt or rock or other material is actually thrown upon it, as where the buildings and improvements are damaged and shaken; and the right of recovery in such cases seems to be clear, as it is also where water is illegally thrown upon a man's land; but the present case goes further than this. All these physical damages to the property caused by the blasting, it is shown, have been settled for and satisfactorily adjusted. The present action is for rendering the home uncomfortable, insecure, and unpleasant, and for virtually compelling the occupants to vacate to a portion of the land, and a railroad track was laid over the land so purchased, on the level of the adjoining streets, but was subsequently taken up; and at the time of the filing of the bill the railroad company was engaged in erecting an embankment upon it, which when completed would be 15 feet high, upon which its railroad would be laid and operated. The bill, after stating these facts, prayed for an injunction to restrain the operation of the railroad on the embankment. Upon a demurrer to the bill it was insisted for the defendant that the plaintiff had no right to equitable relief, because the erection and operation of the defendant's railroad were authorized by law, and, being executed within the limits of the legislative authority and with due skill and care, the damages resulting therefrom to abutting property were merely incidental to the lawful undertaking, and no recovery could be had because of them. The court admitted the general proposition on the authority of Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164, Affirmed in 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169, and said it was perhaps difficult to logically reconcile this rule to the full extent to which its protection might be invoked, with the constitutional requirement that private property should not be taken for public use without compensation, and said, further, that what is accepted in New Jersey as the reconciliation is stated in the opinion in that case. The court then held that the railroad company was concluded by the restrictive stipulation in the deed from the complainant to its grantor, inasmuch as it was not brought within the exception of the stipulation, that the railroad to which the stipulation would not apply must be a railroad on the level of the adjoining streets.

c. Other charters.

A statute authorizing in general terms the creation of corporations for manufacturing and supplying illuminating gas will not exempt a corporation organized under its provisions from liability for consequential injuries to adjoining property the premises during the time when the work was being prosecuted; and it is said that the noise and discomfort from the repeated concussions and loud noises was so great as to affect the comfort and health of the family. It is not shown that any of them were made sick; but they were inconvenienced, frightened, and made restless, so that the home was no longer a place of refuge and quiet, and it became untenable as a home for several months; and it is for this class of damages that the suit is brought; and the argument is made that there is liability for noise which creates discomfort and nervous disturbance, just as there is for gas and smoke, solids and liquids, which affect the comfort and health of the tenant. Our courts have recognized the right to damages in cases of nuisances arising from foul odors, smoke, and gas; and there is no good reason why the same doctrine would not apply to loud noises and unusual and unpleasant concussions in the air. In support of this doctrine we are referred to Knoxville v. Klasing, 111 Tenn. 134, 76 S. W. 814; Kolb v. Knoxville, 111 Tenn. 311, 76 S. W. 823; Swain v. Tennessee Copper Co. 111 Tenn. 432, 78 S. W. 93; Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. v. Barnes (Tenn.) 60 S. W. 600; Madison v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. 113 Tenn. 336, 83 S. W. 658.

Bearing upon this feature of the case it is said in Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Lellyett (Tenn.) 85 S. W. 889: "It is not every inconvenience or discomfort that holders, flowing from the careful prosecution of the business for which it was created. To have such a result the statutory exemption must be express, or must be a clear and unquestionable implication from powers expressly conferred; and it must appear that the legislature contemplated the doing of the very act which caused the injuries. Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 122 N. Y. 18, 9 L. R. A. 711, 25 N. E. 246.

In Rosenheimer v. Standard Gaslight Co. 36 App. Div. 1, 55 N. Y. Supp. 192, the court said that the pleadings in the case raised plainly the issue as to the existence of a private nuisance; and the verdict of the jury established the affirmative of that issue; and in answer to the exemption claimed by the defendant for the reason that it, as a chartered corporation, held a franchise from the state to manufacture gas, and it was, therefore, lawfully engaged in a business in the conduct of which those things complained of by the plaintiff were necessary incidents, and that it carried on all its processes of manufacture by methods productive of as little inconvenience as possible to those in the vicinity of its works, and that its apparatus and appliances were adapted to that end, and that it exercised the greatest care in that regard,—the court said that the exercise of care to prevent annoyance and discomfort, or to reduce to a minimum the injurious consequences incident to the manufacture of gas, could not affect the question of liability, so long as that care was ineffectual; for there was no duty to construct or operate the gas works imposed by law on this private corporation organized for gain; nor did the mere fact that the defendant was engaged in the lawful manufacture of gas save it from liability for the injuries resulting to neighboring property owners from that manufacture, for the use of one's own land for the purposes of lawful trade may become, and as the jury had found in this case did become, a nuisance.

A pipe line company which was said to be a limited partnership without the right of eminent domain constructed a pipe line (L.R.A. (N.S.)

for the transportation of oil, and at a certain point took the oil from the pipe and loaded it upon tank cars for transportation by railroad. Their improvements erected for the purpose of storing and shipping their oil were entirely upon their own land and separated from the plaintiff's land by the railroad tracks and the public road. The evidence tended to show that oil escaped from defendant's pipes, percolated through the grounds, and injured plaintiff's springs and lands, destroyed the fish in a millpond, and rendered a tenant house uninhabitable. The defendants claimed that they were not liable for damages resulting from their business by reason of oil escaping from their own lands where it was being handled, unless such oil escaped through the negligence of the company or its agents. The trial court said: "We will answer this in the negative, saying to you, as has been said by our supreme court in the case of Pottstown Gas Co. v. Murphy, 39 Pa. 263, that the question is one of nuisance, and not of negligence." The supreme court said: "The court was right in saying that this is not a question of negligence, but of nuisance. The defendants think that as a corporation [this company is a quasi corporation simply] authorized by statute to carry on this business, and to purchase in fee simple such real estate as may be necessary for it, they are not answerable for such consequential damages as are complained of here—this was destroying a well. We cannot adopt this view. No such exemption is involved in the fact of incorporation, nor in the privilege of buying land. The principle they invoke applies only where an incorporation, clothed with a portion of the state's right of eminent domain, takes private property for public use on making proper compensation." Hauck v. Tidewater Pipe Line Co. 153 Pa. 366, 20 L. R. A. 642, 34 Am. St. Rep. 710, 26 Atl. 644.

By its charter act of incorporation a company was created for the construction and operation of motors and cables and the necessary apparatus and mechanical fixtures for applying and operating the same. It will entitle a property holder to damages, even though it be material or considerable, and especially as against a public or quasi public enterprise. The noise of paved streets and of street cars is a material discomfort to abutting owners. The smoke from factories, hotels, and manufacturing establishments may form a material discomfort and annoyance to persons living near by; but these are discomforts and annoyances that the individual must bear in deference to the convenience and comfort of the public. The noise of trains passing through the country districts, and the dust of vehicles passing along the public highways, may be a great annoyance to residents along the line of such roads; and the rumbling of carriages of belated revelers and of early market wagons along the paved highways may disturb the slumbers and harass the nerves of persons who desire to sleep in the cities; but it is not for such annoyances and discomforts that the law allows redress, but only where the discomfort and inconvenience proceed to such an extent as to injure the usable and rental or permanent value of the property that the law will award damages. It must amount, to some extent, to the taking of the value of the property, either temporary or permanent, and depriving the owner thereof. See Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Bingham, 87 Tenn. 522, 4 L. R. A. 622, 11 S. W. 705." In such case it is a nuisance and actionable. And this is the rule that prevails in all cases, whether it be an individual, a private cor-was stated that it was not invested with the power of eminent domain; and in Rogers v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 182 Pa. 473, 61 Am. St. Rep. 716, 38 Atl. 399, the court said that its authority to hold real and personal estate necessary for its purposes did not in any way extend its charter power or privileges. That as an artificial person it could not, any more than a natural person, escape liability for special injury done to others, and that no such proposition as that, because it was a mere creature of the law, it enjoyed immunity from liability which natural persons do not, had ever been recognized in any well-considered case, and that no authority could be found for it, in the Lippincott Case or the Marchant Case, or any of that line of cases. In this case the facts were that the defendant owned a lot in the rear of plaintiff's properties fronting on a street, and it erected thereon a power house, in which it placed large and powerful engines and machinery, for the purpose of furnishing power to move its cable cars, and in consequence of the great and violent shaking, jarring, vibration, and concussion the plaintiff was annoyed, disturbed, and injured in the reasonable and ordinary enjoyment of the buildings on the property. The court cited and followed Pottstown Gas Co. v. Murphy, 39 Pa. 263, and Hauck v. Tidewater Pipe Line Co. 153 Pa. 366, 20 L. R. A. 642, 34 Am. St. Rep. 710, 26 Atl. 644, in holding that where a corporation has no right of eminent domain the operation of its works causing a special physical injury to another's property is virtually an actionable nuisance; and that the fact that the defendant is a company authorized by law to erect and operate its works gives it no authority to maintain its works in a way that will produce a nuisance.

The injuries to which immunity from responsibility attaches are such only as arise incidentally from acts done under a valid act of the legislature, in the execution of a public trust for the public benefit, by persons acting with due skill and caution within the scope of their authority. If the injury be direct, or the work be done for the benefit of an individual or corporation, with private capital and for private emolument, the principle which absolves the parties from liability to action at the suit of persons injured does not apply, even though the public be incidentally benefited by the improvement. Where the main purpose of an act incorporating a water power company is the promotion of the private interests of the members of the company by increasing their capacity to prosecute their business and navigation, an action will lie to recover damages if an injury be direct, even though there is an incidental advantage to the public to be derived from it. Trenton Water Power Co. v. Raff, 36 N. J. L. 335.

V. Effect of direct grant of power.

a. In general.

In considering the question of the effect of a direct grant of power to do a particular act which may constitute a nuisance, the distinction must be maintained between those which will result in a public and those which will result in a private nuisance. Legislative authority is a complete protection against accountability for a public nuisance, but whether or not the same is true in regard to a private nuisance depends upon the power of the legislature to authorize such nuisance. Many courts, however, without considering the latter question, have applied the rule as to public nuisances in cases where they were unquestionably private, and have denied a liability when it undoubtedly existed. In many cases the question is so plain that there can be no room for doubt.

Thus, in an action for a nuisance in a river by erecting a grist mill, dam, etc., under the plea of not guilty the defendant relied much upon a license which he had obtained from the town in whose bounds and stream he was to erect the mill and dam; but the court said that the license, however it might estop the town from proceeding against the dam as a common nuisance, could be no excuse or justification for an poration, or a quasi public corporation. In all such cases the maxim, Sic utere tuo, ut alijs non laedas, applies, and no matter how lawful or necessary the improvement may be, nor skillfully it may be constructed, nor carefully it may be operated, if it results in injury to the adjoining property owner, the party causing it is liable in damages, either recurring or permanent, dependent upon whether the nuisance is abated or not.

Under the rules which we have laid down in the cases we have cited and commented upon, we are of opinion that there could be no damages, or rather no liability, to the wife and child in this case. There is no evidence that they were physically injured, nor that their healths were impaired. The most that is proven is that they were disquieted and kept in a state of alarm and apprehension, but this is not shown to have resulted in any sickness or physical injuries. We think, therefore, that the trial judge was not in error in instructing the jury that these parties had no right of action.

The question which should have been submitted to the jury, in our opinion, is whether the injuries complained of in this case amounted to a nuisance, and whether the usable or rental value of the homestead was destroyed or lessened temporarily to such an extent that the law will award damages therefor. It is not claimed that there were any permanent damages to the freehold. We think the case should have been submitted to the jury upon this theory, injury done to private property; and there was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. Nichols v. Pixly, 1 Root, 129.

So, in Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248, 1 Am. St. Rep. 51, 13 Pac. 655, the supreme court of California held that, while the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco granted the defendant a license to erect and maintain a steam engine, they could not license him thereby to create a nuisance; and he, having done so by allowing soot to issue from the smoke stack of the boiler, was enjoined from permitting the same to continue.

So, a grant of powers and privileges by a city council, under their authority, to do certain things, does not carry with it any immunity for private injuries which may result directly from the exercise of such powers and privileges. Larson v. Ring, 43 Minn. 90, 44 N. W. 1079. There the plaintiff was injured by coming in contact with a guy or rope stretched across a street, and it was held that the city authorities could not, by any license or privilege granted to contractors, absolve either themselves or the contractors from the charge of negligence, if the guy or rope was not put high enough.

So, where the corporate authorities of a city have power, under the charter, to license hackney coaches, and to designate such portions of the streets of the city for the standing places thereof as they see fit, they are bound to exercise that power with reasonable discretion; and, as no ordinance of the corporation can lawfully authorize the creation of a private nuisance, it follows that no such ordinance will justify him who creates one. Masterson v. Short, 7 Robt. 299. In this case it was held that the continual blocking up of the only doorway of the plaintiff's stable by hackney coaches standing in front of it, which the owners of such coaches were licensed to do, was a nuisance which neither the provisions of the ordinance nor the charter permitting the passing of an ordinance licensing hackney coaches would justify.

So, a saloon keeper's license for the sale of intoxicating liquors is no defense against liability to adjoining property owners, as to whom his saloon may constitute an actionable nuisance. Haggart v. Stehlin, 137 Ind. 43, 22 L. R. A. 577, 35 N. E. 997.

But although, in the absence of any statutory provision or regulation, a bawdy house, or house of ill fame, is a public or common nuisance, it has been held that where a city by its charter is clothed by the legislature with power to "regulate or suppress bawdy houses," a house of that character licensed by the city authorities under such provision of its charter is not a nuisance so long as it is kept within the regulations prescribed by the ordinance licensing it. And under such circumstances the owner of a building where such a house is maintained is not liable for leasing it, in an action by one whose residence has been damaged and its value diminished by the proximity of the house in question. Givens v. Van Studdiford, 86 Mo. 149, 56 Am. Rep. 421.

This seems to be the only case in which a court has had the hardihood to declare that the legislature might authorize a nuisance of such an outrageous character to be committed by a private citizen to the injury of neighboring property.

In Crittenden v. Wilson, 5 Cow. 165, 15 Am. Dec. 462, it appeared by a statute that the defendant was authorized to build a dam across a creek or river, and one of the provisions of the statute was that once in every three years, if required by any person who had sustained any damage by his land being flowed by the dam, the court should appoint freeholders, who should once in every year appraise the damages sustained in consequence of the dam, which should be paid by the defendant. The action was a case for overflowing the plaintiff's land by reason of the dam, and the court held that, notwithstanding the authority of the statute, and its provision for ascertaining the damage, and the payment thereof, inasmuch as the statute, in giving such remedy, did so without a negative expressed or implied, and it was a matter which was action-and, in not doing so, the trial judge committed error. If the plaintiff was driven from his home by the blasting and other operations carried on by the defendants, or his comfort was so interfered with as to lessen the desirability and usable value of his home during the time the work was being prosecuted, for these things the plaintiff should be entitled to recover.

The trial judge instructed the jury that they might find an accord and satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim for damages, if the facts should so justify. We think this was error, as there was no plea of accord and satisfaction, and that defense could not be set up under the general issue or plea of not guilty.

We think that, if there is any liability able at the common law, the plaintiff might still sue at the common law, as well as proceed upon the statute, for damages sustained by reason of the dam overflowing his land.

An action was brought by an insurance company as insurers of a canal boat and cargo of wheat, which was lost in consequence of the canal boat's striking the piers of a bridge built by the defendants, which loss the insurance company had been obliged to pay. It was alleged that the defendants placed the piers in the channel of a navigable river so as essentially to obstruct the navigation of the same, and that in consequence of such obstruction the loss occurred. The defense was that by an act of the legislature of the state the defendants were authorized to erect the bridge, and place as many piers in the bed of the river as might be necessary for the support and construction of the bridge, provided a certain space from pier to pier, which embraced the principal channel of the river, were left and always kept open for the passage of all craft navigating the river. It was held that a demurrer to the plea should be sustained upon the ground that it did not deny the allegation of the declaration, that the bridge was a material obstruction to the navigation of the river. Columbus Ins. Co. v. Curtenius, 6 McLean, 209, Fed. Cas. No. 3,045.

The action was continued against the Peoria Bridge Association as defendant, which corporation had been substituted for the original defendants; and their new pleadings traversed the averment in the declaration that the bridge, as constructed, was a material obstruction to the navigation of the river. The court held that the state, having the power to provide means of crossing the river by bridges when the wants of the public required them, might, or if they delegated the power to a corporation, the corporation as a general thing was exclusively to, judge of the time, place, and circumstances which were to give it exercise. That every bridge, except a suspension bridge, may be said to be an obstruction to for damages under the facts of this case it is a joint liability upon the part of the railroad and the contractors; and in such case we do not understand that there is such a thing as primary and secondary liability.

For the reasons which we have indicated the judgment of the court below in the case of C. C. Gossett v. Southern Railway Company et al. is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial, and the defendants will pay the costs of the appeal; and the judgments in the cases of C. C. Gossett and Wife, and Calvin Gossett, by Next Friend, v. Southern Railway Company, are affirmed, and these causes are dismissed at the cost of the plaintiffs herein.

navigation, but that delay or risk which is inseparable from the existence of the thing which the state has the power to create does not make it an obstruction in contemplation of law. The necessity is the justification, and for such delay or risk the law will not give a right of action. 6 McLean, 70, Fed. Cas. No. 3,046.

A bridge constructed over a navigable river in accordance with the legislation of both state and Federal governments must be deemed a lawful structure, however much it may interfere with the public right of navigation. Miller v. New York, 109 U. S. 385, 27 L. ed. 971, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 228. The plaintiff in this suit had brought the action in the circuit court of the United States to restrain the erection of the Brooklyn bridge, claiming that the erection thereof at a height of 135 feet above mean high water would obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the navigation of the river, and prevent vessels with masts of a greater height than that from reaching his warehouse above the bridge. The opinion states that the court below did not find in the allegations of a possible loss to the plaintiff in his warehouse business, or in the proofs offered to sustain them, sufficient ground to restrain the completion of the work, and dismissed his case as being without substantial merit.

It will be noticed that in that case the court was considering the question of public nuisance, holding that no private nuisance had been established.

But in Henry v. Pittsburgh & A. Bridge Co. 8 Watts & S. 85, it was held that a bridge thrown across a navigable stream from the terminus of one highway to that of another, without encroaching on the plaintiffs' soil or invading their dominion, which would, if done without authority, be a nuisance and the subject of an action on the case, was not actionable, because the bridge company was authorized by its charter to build the bridge and make the road conform to it, under the principle which it was claimed was laid down in Philadelphia & T. R. Co.'s Case, 6 Whart. 43, 36 Am. Dec. 202, that a state or a company author-

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

J. B. ARMSTRONG.

(.... Kan.)

1. Nuisance—municipal authority.

An authorized business, properly conducted at an authorized place, is not a nuisance, for whatever is lawful cannot be wrongful; and the owner of a railroad thus authorized and operated is not liable in damages to one whose residence is permeated by smoke, cinders, and gas emitted from the engines

Headnotes by GREENE, J.

ized by charter may take the property of a street, without compensation to the corporate government of the town or the individuals residing in it. The court merely stated the proposition, giving no reason for it, nor any authority except that of Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coons, 6 Watts & S. 101, which had no reference whatever to the question under consideration.

That ruling is correct so far as it affects plaintiff's rights as one of the public, but if it interfered with his private rights in the stream it cannot be justified.

When a state is admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, the sovereignty, for all internal municipal purposes, and for all purposes, except such purposes and with such powers as are expressly conferred upon the national government by the Constitution, passes to the state. Thenceforth the only interest of the United States in the public lands is that of a proprietor, like that of any other proprietor, except that the state, under the express terms upon which it is admitted, can pass no laws to interfere with their primary disposal, and they are not subject to taxation. In all other respects the United States stands upon the same footing as private owners of land. They can authorize no invasion of private property, either to enable their grantees to mine the lands purchased by them of the government, or otherwise. And so, where a mining company had purchased mining lands under grants from the general government, such purchase gave them no right to fill up the navigable waters of the state, or its non-navigable water channels, and send their debris over the neighboring country to the destruction of farms and improvements of their owners, on the ground that Congress knew, when it authorized the sale, that the grantees of the United States could not make the lands so purchased available for all the uses for which they were valuable, and in many instances for which they were only valuable, such as mining gold, without committing such nuisances. Wood- I.R.A. (N.S.)

to such an extent as to be injurious to the health and comfort of the inhabitants.

2. Same—railroad—injury to health and property.

One whose residence is rendered uncomfortable or unhealthy to the occupants by smoke, cinders, and gas emitted from the locomotive engines of a railway company cannot recover damages therefor, in the absence of any special constitutional or statutory authority, where it appears that such company has not abused or exceeded its authority in locating or constructing its line, or in the operation of its engines.

(May 6, 1905.)

ERROR to the District Court for Johnson County to review a judgment in ruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. 9 Sawy. 441, 18 Fed. 753.

A statute of the state provides that if the works or materials of any manufactory or other corporation cause any inconvenience to those in the same or neighboring houses, by diffusing smoke or nauseous smells, and there be no servitude established by which they are regulated, their sufferance must be determined by the rules of the police or the customs of the place. In Lewis v. Behan, 28 La. Ann. 130, the defendants operated a whisky distillery in a city, the distillery being established under authority from the city. The plaintiffs brought the action to abate the operation of the distillery as a nuisance and to recover damages. It was held that, the defendants being in pursuit of a lawful business, and there being nothing in the evidence to warrant the conclusion that they were not conducting it properly and with a due regard to the police regulations of the city, though the smoke and noise might disturb the plaintiffs, it was an inconvenience from which they could not be relieved. One of the judges dissented in the following language: "The evidence in the record satisfies me that the defendants' distillery is to them [the plaintiffs] a nuisance, and that it greatly deteriorates the value of their property. The noise of its machinery is heard by day and by night; the smoke from its chimney, when the wind is from a certain point of the compass, fills their houses, blackens the walls thereof, soils their furniture, settles upon the roofs, whence it is carried into their cisterns, thus polluting the water which they use for all family purposes; the nauseating smell which heated grain gives out infects the air which they breathe. What is this but a nuisance?"

. . . The defendants claim that they are protected by a license from the city. I do not think that the council has any power to authorize the erection of a nuisance in a populous portion of the city. If its power is unlimited in this regard, it can authorize the establishing of a soap factory in the neighborhood of the St. Charles Hotel; for favor of the plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the operation of an alleged nuisance. Reversed.

Statement by Greene, J.:

The plaintiff sued to recover damages on two causes of action, the first being based on injuries sustained by the defendant's having deprived him of access to his property by closing an alley, and the second on injury resulting from his residence being permeated with cinders, smoke, and gas from defendant's locomotive engines. The facts, summarily stated, are as follows: There is a block in the town of Gardner bounded by Washington street on the north, Kane street on the south, and Elm street on the west, through which there is an alley, 16 feet wide, running east and west. For the purpose of this case it may be said that the plaintiff owns the north half and the defendant the south half of this block. The plaintiff has a valuable residence on the north half facing west on Elm street. The defendant operates a line of railroad which runs across the south half in a northwesterly direction, crossing Elm street near the south line of the block. None of the land occupied by the defendant as a right of way ever belonged to the plaintiff. Several years after the defendant built its road the plaintiff erected his residence, and after the residence was built, the defendant lowered its roadbed through Gardner to such a depth that the smokestacks on its engines were on a line with the surface of the earth instance, and make that building in that neighborhood uninhabitable."

Attention is also called to Blanc v. Murray, 36 La. Ann. 165, 51 Am. Rep. 9, in which the court held that the legislature had no power to authorize a private nuisance.

In one case it was held that a canal company authorized by an act of the legislature "to make, construct, and forever maintain a canal, or slack-water navigation of suitable width, depth, and dimensions, to be determined by the corporation," has the power under such authorization to alter by widening and deepening whenever, in the judgment of the company, the dimensions previously adopted shall, by reason of the increase of business, become unsuitable, provided the same is done upon their own lands or lands on which they have acquired the legal right to enter and use for that purpose; as the canal, though not strictly a public work, is yet of the nature of one, as much as a railroad, and is to be regarded as a public work in the same sense. The acts of such construction and enlargement, therefore, being authorized by express enactment of the legislature, and performed in good faith upon a work of a public nature, the canal company is not liable for injuries to the lands of an adjoining owner by water which soaked through the banks in consequence of raising the banks and increasing the depth of water in the canal, where there is no allegation of bad faith on the part of the canal company or their agents, or of any negligence or want of skill in the construction or management of the work, but the damages are merely consequential, naturally flowing from the construction and maintenance of the work by reason of the nature and character of the structure. Selden v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 29 N. Y. 634.

That decision is so obviously unsound as to require little comment. If the canal company did not confine the water within its banks, but permitted it to flow out upon and occupy adjoining property there was a taking of such property to the extent of the occupation, for which the Constitution requires the making of compensation.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where various acts of Congress appropriated moneys for the improvement of a certain channel which had been obstructed with rocks and thereby was rendered dangerous it was held, in Benner v. Atlantic Dredging Co. 134 N. Y. 156, 17 L. R. A. 220, 30 Am. St. Rep. 649, 31 N. E. 328, Reversing 58 Hun, 359, 12 N. Y. Supp. 181, that the court would take judicial notice of such acts of Congress; and that where a dredging company had entered into a lawful contract with an officer of the United States government, who was duly authorized to make the same on the part of the government, to remove the obstructions from such channel injuries to a house from blasting, caused merely by the shaking of the earth or pulsations of the air, or both, gave no right of action in the absence of negligence in doing the blasting, where it was done for the purpose of removing such rocks under such contract.

It will be noticed that the injury in the case was committed by a performance of government work, and that the only provision for protection against injury or encroachment by the Federal government is that property shall not be "taken" for public use without compensation.

Under the clause of the Massachusetts Constitution which authorizes the legislature to pass all laws which it deems to be for the public good, the court of that state has sanctioned legislation which could not be upheld elsewhere.

Under the Massachusetts statute ordinarily known as the "mills act," for the erection and maintenance of mills and mill dams, it was held, in Eames v. New England Worsted Co. 11 Met. 570, that the same was a remedial statute for the purpose of securing to a landowner whose land had been flowed or directly damaged by water raised by a dam for mill purposes, by another, on his own land, a fair and adequate compensation for that damage arising directly from that cause; and where a complainant sought, in addition to such damage to recover for damage done to other lands—uplands not reached or affected by the water

This cut made that part of Elm street where the tracks crossed impassable. The defendant then entered into a contract with the city that, in consideration of the city's vacating a certain portion of Kane street for the company's use, and giving it some other privileges, it would quit-claim certain property to the city, build a viaduct over its lines at the crossing of Elm street, and make approaches thereto from the north and south in accordance with certain specifications made by the city. An ordinance was passed containing all these conditions, and specifying the width of the approach and per centum of the grade. After the ordinance was accepted by the company, the latter built the viaduct and made the approaches in accordance with its provisions. The approach on Elm street north, the same having been made in accordance with the per centum of grade established by the city, extended past the alley in the rear of, and some distance along the plaintiff's property, in front of his residence. The plaintiff claimed in the first cause of action of his petition that this approach deprived him of access to the rear of his property by way of the alley, and he recovered judgment. For his other cause of action he stated that, as a result of the defendant's lowering its roadbed and tracks through Gardner, smoke, cinders, and gas emitted from its locomotive engines could not rise before reaching his residence, and were blown therein, thereby injuriously affecting the health of himself and family, and great-raised by the dam—in consequence of noxious and offensive smells proceeding from the land flowed when not covered by water, by means of which such uplands were rendered less eligible and valuable as building lots. Such damage was held too remote and not within the scope of the act.

In Davis v. Sawyer, 133 Mass. 289, 43 Am. Rep. 519, the defendant was enjoined from ringing a large bell for the purpose of arousing keepers of boarding houses and operatives in defendant's mill before a certain hour named in the injunction, on the ground that the same was a private nuisance. Thereafter a statute was passed by the legislature authorizing "manufacturers and others employing workmen for the purpose of giving notice to such employees, to ring bells and use whistles and gongs of such size and weight, in such manner and at such hours, as the board of aldermen of cities and the selectmen of towns may in writing designate." The selectmen of the town where a mill was situated granted a license to the owner to ring the bell on the mill at an hour which in the previous suit had been enjoined. Thereafter the mill owner brought a bill of review praying that the injunction might be dissolved, or the decree modified so as to enable plaintiffs to act under their license without violating the decree; and it was so ordered. Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27.

b. Constitutionality of statutes.

In considering the effect of legislative authority to commit an act which will create a private nuisance, the constitutional limitation of the legislative power must be kept in mind. Not only do the Constitutions provide that private property shall not be taken, and in some instances injured, for public use, without compensation, and implicitly forbid the taking of private property for private use, but many forbid the granting of special immunities and privileges, and all confine the functions of the legislature to legislation. It has been said that the taking of property from one person and giving it to another would not be legislation, but robbery. Equally is it robbery to permit the destruction of one man's property by the maintenance of a nuisance on adjoining property for the sole benefit of its owner, and so beyond the legislative power. As the Texas court in Rainey v. Red River, T. & S. R. Co. (Tex.) 89 S. W. 768, says, the legislature may authorize a public service corporation to commit a nuisance, "provided always the damages be fully compensated by the payment of money."
J. R. A. (N. S.)

The court, in Hooker v. New Haven & N. Co. 15 Conn. 312, which involved the question of the liability of a canal company for injury to neighboring property by the discharge of waste water, after saying that it was not claimed on the part of the defendants that any express authority was given to them to protect their works by the act of the legislature at the expense of injury to others, but that the court was called upon to say that it was implied, upon the principle that an authority to do an act necessarily implies that the grantee may use the means necessary to accomplish it,—further said that, had the legislature expressly given such a right to the corporation without providing any compensation to the party injured, it would have demanded their serious consideration whether such an act was constitutional; and that they were not bound to give such a construction to the legislative grant as would subject the legislature to the imputation of great injustice, if not a violation of constitutional rights, where such an intent is not clearly expressed.

And in Winchell v. Waukesha, 110 Wis. 101, 84 Am. St. Rep. 902, 85 N. W. 668, the court said that whenever the legislature should enact that streams generally, or any streams, should be used as sewers, without liability to the owners of the soil through which they run, the question of constitutional protection to private rights might be forced upon the courts for decision.

In Blanc v. Murray, 36 La. Ann. 165, 51 Am. Rep. 9, the plaintiffs, owners of valuable property occupied by them as dwellings, complained that the defendant was ly damaging and decreasing the value of his residence property. He also recovered on this cause of action. The defendant prosecutes this proceeding in error. There are no allegations in the petition that the lowering of the track was not properly and skilfully done, that it was not a betterment of its roadbed, and necessary to the proper and efficient conduct of defendant's business and operation of its trains; nor was negligence charged on the part of the defendant's locomotive engineers in the management of their engines. By subd. 6 of § 1316, Gen. Stat. 1901, railway companies are empowered to take and convey persons and property on their railway by the power of steam; and by § 1320 they are authorized to "change the roadbed or road line, or any part thereof, for the purpose of shortening the line or to overcome natural obstacles."

Messrs. A. A. Hurd, Alfred A. Scott, and Robert Dunlap, for plaintiff in error:

The legislature may legalize a nuisance—that is to say, it may make lawful an act, state, or condition of affairs which, without such authorization, would constitute a nuisance.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, title Nuisance, 2d ed. p. 736; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Gar side, 10 Kan. 552; Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co. 72 Iowa, 182, 33 N. W. 456; Beideman v. Atlantic City R. Co. (N. J. Eq.) 19 Atl. 731; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27.

constructing, contiguous to them, within the fire limits of the city, and in violation of its ordinances, an inflammable and dangerous wooden structure, in which he had placed a large quantity of pine and cypress lumber, which endangered their property and the lives of their families, and diminished the value of the former and impaired its use, thus causing them irreparable injury and creating a nuisance. One of the defenses was that the defendant was constructing the building according to law and in compliance with the city ordinances. In affirming a judgment perpetuating an injunction, the court said that it was indisputable that noise, smoke, noxious vapors, unwholesome smells, or other cause which creates a public nuisance, may, by interfering with comfortable enjoyment of property, create a private nuisance, and occasion a special and particular damage which will justify and sustain an individual action for damages; and that where a right to the private remedy exists there can be no doubt that an injunction will lie. The court said, further, that the defense that a structure is authorized by the city council, and has been made in compliance with its requirements, will not avail if the proof establishes the fact of private nuisance; as a municipal body cannot legally do more than the legislature of a state, and, although the latter may authorize a use of property that will operate to produce a public nuisance, it cannot authorize a use of it that will create private nuisance; or, to put the doctrine in more exact form, that which is authorized by the legislature, within the scope of its constitutional power, cannot be a public nuisance, but it may be a private nuisance, and the legislative grant is no protection against a private action for damages resulting therefrom. And the doctrine sometimes stated in the elementary works, and which has been held by some courts, that whatever is authorized by a legislature cannot be a nuisance of any kind, is exploded. Citing and referring with approval to Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

719, the court further said: "The highest judicial authority has recently said, in reference to the grant by Congress to a railroad of the right to lay its track within the limits of the National Capital and to construct other works necessary to the proper completion and maintenance of its road 'Whatever the extent of the authority conferred, it was accompanied with this implied qualification, that the works should not be so placed as by their use to unreasonably interfere with and disturb the peaceful and comfortable enjoyment of others in their property. Grants of privilege or powers to corporate bodies confer no license to use them in disregard of the private rights of others and with immunity for their invasion.' . . . And what is true of a grant by Congress to a railway corporation is a fortiori true of an authorization by a city council to a private individual."

The use of a public street cannot be granted to a private corporation for use which constitute a private nuisance and result in injury to abutting owners, either by legislative enactment or a city ordinance, except upon making compensation for such injuries, as such a corporation has no more right than a private person to erect and maintain a nuisance on its own premises on a public street. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 50 L. R. A. 488, 42 C. C. A. 178, 102 Fed. 85.

The use of a public way may be granted to a railroad company for passage through a city or town, or for switches from its main track to its depot, or as a receptacle for passengers and freight, because it is in many cases necessary and may be done without materially injuring the street as a public way. But even a grant for that limited purpose cannot be made, or the right under it exercised, except upon condition of the company being liable for injury done thereby to owners of abutting property. For legislative power does not exist to exempt either an individual or a corporation from obligation to so use his or its own as not to hurt others. Owensboro & N. R. Co.

Struthers v. Dunkirk. W. & P. R. Co. 87 Pa. 82; Randle v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 325; Omaha. H. & G. R. Co. v. Doney, 3 Kan. App. 515, 43 Pac. 831; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. av. title Eminent Domain 2d ed. p. 1112; Mawa. O. C. & C. G. R. Co. v. Larson, 40 Kan. 401, 2 L. R. A. 59, 19 Pac. 661; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. R. Lippincott, 116 Pa. 472, 2 Am. St. Rep. 618, 9 Atl. 871; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. 541, 4 Am. St. Rep. 59, 13 Atl. 690; Pennsylvania Co. v. Pennsylvania S. Valley R. Co. 151 Pa. 334, 31 Am. St. Rep. 762, 25 Atl. 107; Jones v. Erie W. Valley R. Co. 151 Pa. 30, 17 L. R. A. 58, 31 Am. St. Rep. 722, 25 Atl. 134; Hatch v. Vermont C. R. Co. 28 Vt. 143; Parrot v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 624. Where an individual brings an action for damages on account of an alleged public nuisance, he must show that he has sustained damages peculiar to himself; it is not enough that such damages are greater in degree than those suffered by the public at large,—they must be different in kind.

School Dist. No. 1 v. Neil, 36 Kan. 617, 59 Am. Rep. 575, 14 Pac. 253; Heller v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 Kan. 625.

In the accomplishment of works of a public nature, or in or over which the state retains an interest or control, the legislature may validly permit the doing of incidental or consequential damage to property of private individuals without liability therefor.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 66; King v. Pagham, 8 Barn. & C. 355; Northern Transp.

Sutton, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 247, 13 S. W. 666.

And so, on appeal from a judgment enjoining and restraining defendant from passing and repassing plaintiff's dwelling house with its locomotives, in making up its trains in the street, and from using the street as a depot for cars, and from receiving and discharging freight from its cars therein, the judgment was affirmed, the court holding that there was no reason or necessity in this or any other case like it, for a railroad company to use a public street as a place for making up its trains, or as a depot for standing cars, or for receiving or discharging freight; for such use necessarily defeated the purposes for which streets are dedicated to the public, prevented a reasonable enjoyment by owners of abutting property, and consequently a municipal legislature is without power to grant the right. Ibid.

In Sadler v. New York, 40 Misc. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 308, after proceeding to state the effect of a law which did what the bridge company claimed in this case that its charter did, the court said, further, that in this country the more plain and explicit the legislature might be in authorizing the taking of private property, or a "direct" injury hereto by a nuisance per se, or any trespass, without compensation, the more plain it would make manifest that it had exceeded its constitutional powers, and that the full extent of legislative power to legalize and shield a nuisance is to exempt it from public prosecution.

It is a principle of the fundamental laws of the state, that the property of individuals cannot be taken for public use except upon the condition that just compensation be made therefor: and any statute conferring power upon a municipal body, the exercise of which results in the appropriation, destruction, or physical injury of private property by such body, is inoperative and ineffectual to protect it from liability for the resultant damages, unless some adequate provision is contained in the statute for making such compensation. Seifert v. I.L.R.A. (N.S.)

Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321.

VI. The Elevated Railroad Cases.

The cases known as the Elevated Railroad Cases, decided by the New York court of appeals, are, strictly speaking, not on the question here involved; but, inasmuch as they incidentally touch upon it, it has been thought that some benefit may be derived from what was said in some of those cases.

The first of these cases was Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146. The main and general proposition which was there established is that abutters upon public streets in cities are entitled to such damages as they may have sustained by a diversion of the street from the use for which it was originally taken, and its illegal appropriation to other and inconsistent uses. Thereafter, in Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268, 10 N. E. 528, the court of appeals held that the Story Case had definitely determined:

"First. That an elevated railroad in the streets of a city, operated by steam power and constructed as to form, equipments, and dimensions like that described in the Story Case, is a perversion of the use of the street from the purposes originally designed for it, and is a use which neither the city authorities nor the legislature can legalize or sanction without providing compensation for the injury inflicted upon the property of abutting owners.

"Second. That abutters upon a public street, claiming title to their premises by grant from the municipal authorities, which contains a covenant that a street to be laid out in front of such property shall forever thereafter continue for the free and common passage of and as public streets and ways for the inhabitants of said city, and all others passing and returning through or by the same, in like manner as the other streets of the same city now are or lawfully ought to be,—acquire an easement in the bed of the street for ingress and egress to and from their premises, and also for the free and uninterrupted passage and circulation of light and air through and over such street for the benefit of property situated thereon.

Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 640, 25 L. ed. 338; Hammersmith & C. R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 196; London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 45; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382; Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 42 Minn. 75, 43 N. W. 785; Lincoln v. Com. 164 Mass. 368, 41 N. E. 491; 1 Sedgwick Damages, 7th ed. p. 207; 4 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. p. 3024; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 548; Burroughs v. Housatonic R. Co. 15 Conn. 124, 38 Am. Dec. 64; Vaughan v. Taff Vale R. Co. 5 Hurlst. & N. 679; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Garside, 10 Kan. 552; Kansas, N. & D. R. Co. v. Cuykendall, 42 Kan. 234, 16 Am. St. Rep. 479, 21 Pac. 1052; British Cast Plate Mfrs. v. Meredith, 4 T. R. 794; Hatch v. Vermont

C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49; Wellington v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 185, 33 N. E. 393; Struthers v. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. 57 Pa. 282; Randle v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 325; Decker v. Evansville Suburban & N. R. Co. 133 Ind. 493, 33 N. E. 349; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 737, note; Dolan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 118 Wis. 302, 95 N. W. 385; Carroll v. Wisconsin Central Co. 40 Minn. 168, 41 N. W. 661; Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 42 Minn. 75, 43 N. W. 785; Kaje v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 57 Minn. 422, 47 Am. St. Rep. 627, 59 N. W. 493; Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Thompson, 45 N. J. Eq. 870, 19

"Third. That the ownership of such easement is an interest in real estate, constituting property within the meaning of that term as used in the Constitution of the state, and requires compensation to be made therefor, before it can lawfully be taken from its owner for public use.

"Fourth. That the erection of an elevated railroad, the use of which is intended to be permanent, in a public street, and upon which cars are propelled by steam engines, generating gas, steam, and smoke, and distributing in the air cinders, dust, ashes, and other noxious and deleterious substances, and interrupting the free passage of light and air to and from adjoining premises, constitutes a taking of the easement, and its appropriation by the railroad corporation, rendering it liable to the abutters for the damages occasioned by such taking."

The Lahr Case was an action brought to recover damages to plaintiff's property abutting on a street in the city of New York, alleged to have been caused by the construction and maintenance of an elevated railroad over the street. The chief judge, delivering the opinion of the court, commenced by saying that the action was the sequel of the Story Case, and stated that the doctrine of that case, although pronounced by a divided court, must be regarded as stare decisis upon all questions involved therein, and as establishing the law, as well for the court as for the people of the state, whenever similar questions might be litigated. In considering the question of damages which the plaintiff should recover of the elevated railroad company, in answer to the claim of the defendant that the railroad company was not liable for the operation of its trains, and the consequences flowing therefrom in respect to the manufacture and distribution in the air of gas, smoke, steam, dust, cinders, ashes, and other unwholesome and deleterious substances from its locomotives and trains, as they moved to and fro over its tracks, the court took the position that inasmuch as, under the decision of the main question, the railroad company was unlawfully occupying the street to the plaintiff's damage, it did not see any reason why the defendant should not be liable for the injury thus occasioned provided the evidence established the fact that they were destructive of the easements of light, air, and access belonging to the plaintiff; and that no partial justification of the damages inflicted by an unlawful structure and its unlawful use could be predicated upon the circumstance that, under other conditions and through a lawful exercise of authority, some of the consequences complained of might have been produced without rendering their perpetrators liable for damages. Of the six judges present at the argument two concurred with the chief judge, one took no part, and the remaining two—who dissented in the Story Case—concurred in the result on the authority of that case, but deemed it necessary to add their opinion that the abutter could not recover damages to or upon their abutting property, caused by the lawful operation of the road, and not by the deprivation or destruction of their easements in the street. By the Constitution of New York, if four judges do not concur to reverse a judgment on appeal to that court the same is affirmed, and the judgment was affirmed in this case upon the concurrence of three judges only; one of the judges of the court having recently been elected thereto, it is presumed he did not hear the argument, and another took no part, so that only five judges of the seven took part in the decision of the case. As will be seen hereafter, one of the judges, who dissented from the rule of damages laid down by the chief judge and concurred in by two of the others, declined to recognize it as a rule established by the court.

In Drucker v. Manhattan R. Co. 106 N. Y. 157, 60 Am. Rep. 437, 12 N. E. 568, that judge, after recapitulating what had been decided in the Lahr Case, referred to the rule laid down by the three judges, who, as before stated, were the majority of the

Atl. 622; Beideman v. Atlantic City R. Co. (N. J. Eq.) 19 Atl. 731; Costigan v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 54 N. J. L. 233, 23 Atl. 510; Parrot v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 624; Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co. 72 Iowa, 182, 33 N. W. 456; Georgia E. & Bkg. Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64, 42 S. E. 315; Ottawa, O. C. & C. G. R. Co. v. Larson, 40 Kan. 301, 2 L. R. A. 59, 19 Pac. 61; Ricket v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 2 H. L. 177; Meyer v. Richmond, 172 U. S. 82, 43 L. ed. 374, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 45 L. ed. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Hollister v. Union Co. 9 Conn. 436, 25 Am. Dec. 36; Langing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 146; Selden v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 29 N. Y. 634; Uline v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 98, 53

Am. Rep. 123, note, 4 N. E. 536; Atwater v. Canandaigua, 124 N. Y. 602, 27 N. E. 385; Uppington v. New York, 165 N. Y. 222, 53 L. R. A. 550, 59 N. E. 91; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. 541, 4 Am. St. Rep. 659, 13 Atl. 690, 153 U. S. 380, 38 L. ed. 751, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 894; Pennsylvania Co. v. Pennsylvania S. Valley R. Co. 151 Pa. 334, 31 Am. St. Rep. 762, 25 Atl. 107; Jones v. Erie & W. Valley R. Co. 151 Pa. 30, 17 L. R. A. 758, 31 Am. St. Rep. 722, 25 Atl. 134; Rand v. Boston, 164 Mass. 354, 41 N. E. 484; Glasgow Union R. Co. v. Hunter, L. R. 2 Sc. H. L. App. Cas. 78; Spencer v. Pt. Pleasant & O. River R. Co. 23 W. Va. 427.

Neither the raising nor lowering of railroad tracks affords the abutting owner any judges taking part in the decision, but a minority of the whole court, saying that it was a "restricted rule, which had not as yet received the sanction of the court."

In Kane v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 186, 11 L. R. A. 640, 26 N. E. 278, the court, with one judge dissenting, said that, if the defendant had the lawful right to operate its trains in the street, such inconvenience as might result to the plaintiff in the enjoyment of his property, from the ordinary and useful operation of the defendant's road, would not, in the absence of negligence on its part, furnish a ground of action; but that the court had held in the Lahr Case, that as to abutting owners having easements in the streets through which the road was constructed, whose rights had not been acquired by condemnation, the defendant railroad company was a trespasser; and that upon general principles, therefore, it would seem that any consequential injury to the plaintiff's property from the acts of the defendant while engaged in the unauthorized occupation and use of the street was proper to be considered by the jury.

The construction and operation of a surface railroad along and upon a city street, substantially upon the same grade therewith, under authority from the legislature and by permission of the city, is not a taking of any property of an abutting landowner who has no title to any portion of the street, which will entitle him to compensation, either for interference with any of his easements in the street or for consequential damages to his adjoining property, necessarily resulting from a reasonable operation of the road, where the use of the street is not exclusive in its nature, and the passage through and across it is left free and unobstructed for the public. Fobes v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 121 N. Y. 505, 8 L. R. A. 453, 24 N. E. 919.

In this case the judge who delivered the opinion of the court said: "Looking carefully over the cases involving the elevated railroads and their rights and liabilities, we cannot see that any new rule was adopted in any of those cases which would hold the defendant herein liable, under the facts proved, for the taking of any property or any portion of an easement belonging to the plaintiff. On the contrary, we think the plaintiff's case is still governed by the case of Drake and the other cases in this court which have already been cited, and in which the principle decided in the Drake Case [Drake v. Hudson R. R. Co. 7 Barb. 508] has been assented to and affirmed. Upon such facts it has been held that there was no taking of any property or easement of an adjoining owner who had no title to any portion of the land upon which the street was laid out, where the company was authorized by law and licensed by the city to so use the street."

The logic of the reasoning in this case is not apparent. If the cases known as the Elevated Railroad Cases were correctly decided, it is difficult to see how the Fobes Case was, as it would seem as if, when the construction and operation of a railroad in a street deprive an abutting lot owner of the easements of light and air and means of access, it can make no difference whether the railroad is operated upon the surface or upon stilts.

And the decision in the case of Adams v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 39 Minn. 286, 1 L. R. A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644, 39 N. W. 629, where it was held that a surface railroad which, under authority of the legislature, was so constructed and operated as to interfere with an abutting lot owner's easement of light and air, was within the inhibition of the Constitution of that state, prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without just compensation, was a more logical view.

Afterwards, in Sperb v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 155, 20 L. R. A. 752, 32 N. E. 1050, the general term of the supreme court had reversed a judgment entered upon the report of a referee, which enjoined the defendants from operating their elevated roads in front of the plaintiff's premises until they had paid certain damages to him for the injuries caused by such operation, including those caused by the right to recover alleged damages consequent thereon.

Muhlker v. New York & H. R. Co. 173 N. Y. 549, 66 N. E. 558; Cassidy v. Old Colony R. Co. 141 Mass. 174, 5 N. E. 142; Kotz v. Illinois C. R. Co. 188 Ill. 578, 59 N. E. 240; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Loeb, 118 Ill. 203, 59 Am. Rep. 341, 8 N. E. 460; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. McAuley, 121 Ill. 160, 11 N. E. 67; Penn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Heiss, 141 Ill. 35, 33 Am. St. Rep. 273, 31 N. E. 138; Galt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 157 Ill. 125, 41 N. E. 643; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. 541, 4 Am. St. Rep. 659, 13 Atl. 690.

The legislation which we are considering is the exercise of the power of eminent domain.

smoke, dust, vibration, etc., which resulted from the passing of trains (61 Hun, 539, 16 N. Y. Supp. 392). The judge who delivered the unanimous opinion of the court of appeals said that the general term justices, in their opinion, took the quite unwarrantable view that the defendants, in acquiring the right to maintain their structure in the street, were not bound to make compensation for the incidental injuries produced by the running of trains upon the same, and that future discharges of smoke, cinders, and noxious gases were not items of damage which should be considered in the estimate of the compensation to be made, and that the defendants' counsel concisely stated the proposition of the general term justices to be that the plaintiff had no easement which could be taken by the running of trains, and that he earnestly and ingeniously sought to sustain its correctness, his argument being that, although such item may properly enter into the estimate of damages suffered in the past, the trespass itself consisted only in the maintenance of a permanent structure in the street; and the lawful operation of the company's franchises, in the running of trains upon the structure, whatever might be the incidents attendant, if necessarily so, could not afford grounds for an award of compensation when the company sought to acquire or to condemn the rights of the abutting property owner. The court said that the argument rested almost wholly upon the decision in Fobes v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 121 N. Y. 505, 8 L. R. A. 453, 24 N. E. 919, and that that decision was very much misapprehended when it was sought to make use of it as an authority for such a doctrine, as in that case the question presented grew out of the operation of a steam surface railroad upon the bed of the street, and related to the right of an abutting owner whose property was bounded by the exterior line of the street, to hold the railroad company liable for consequential damages; that the doctrine of the elevated railroad cases was that in their occupation and use of the street they took from the abutting lot owners a

The right to take or injure private property for public uses is a right inherent in the state.

Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 406, 25 L. ed. 208; United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 27 L. ed. 1015, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346; Giesy v. Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. 4 Ohio St. 309; Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 Kan. 453.

Messrs. J. W. Parker and J. P. Hindman, for defendant in error:

If the smoke or dust, or both, that arises from one man's premises and passes over and upon those of another, causes perceptible injury to the property, or so pollutes the air as sensibly to impair the enjoyment thereof, it is a nuisance.

portion of their easement in the street without making compensation, and hence that they were, as to them, illegally there, and thus liable for the consequential damages caused by their unlawful use of the street.

But the elevated railroads had the same legislative authority for the construction and operation of their roads as the surface railroad.

In an action brought to enjoin an elevated railroad company from running its trains in front of the plaintiff's dwelling, it was admitted that the defendant occupied the street from curb to curb, opposite to the plaintiff's premises, by an elevated steam railway, and that there was a deprivation of light and air, and a noise and stench created, and an exposure of the privacy of the plaintiff's dwelling, and a diminution of the value of the same in consequence of the occupancy and running of the trains of the defendant; and it was held that the corrupting of the air of a man's dwelling by noisome smells is a nuisance, and the infliction thereof by the defendant upon the plaintiff in this action was not justified by the statute of the state authorizing the construction of elevated railroads, as neither the acts of the legislature under which the company was incorporated, nor the requirements or conditions imposed upon the defendant by the board of commissioners created by the legislature, conferred, or attempted to confer, any right or power to introduce into the plaintiff's premises the stench or noxious gas of which the plaintiff complained, and which the defendant admitted, and which greatly diminished the plaintiff's enjoyment of his dwelling house. Caro v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 14 Jones & S. 138.

VII. Grant to municipal corporation.

a. General rule.

The rule prevails in grants of authority to municipal corporations, that authority to commit a nuisance will not be implied, but must be express. And in the use of their private property they are subject to the (Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 712; Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 568, 20 Am. Rep. 567; Ft. Worth & N. O. R. Co. v. Pearce, 75 Tex. 81, 12 S. W. 864; Ross v. Butler, 19 N. J. 24, 294, 97 Am. Dec. 654; Stone v. Fairbury, 2 & N. W. R. Co. 68 Ill. 394, 18 Am. Rep. 56; Wesson v. Washburn Iron Co. 13 Allen, 6, 90 Am. Dec. 181; Omaha & N. P. R. Co. v. Janacek, 30 Neb. 276, 27 Am. St. Rep. 99, 46 N. W. 478; Daniels v. Keokuk Waterworks, 61 Iowa, 549, 16 N. W. 705; Churchill v. Burlington Water Co. 94 Iowa, 89, 62 C. W. 646; Pennoyer v. Allen, 56 Wis. 502, 3 Am. Rep. 728, 14 N. W. 609; Chicago-Firden Coal Co. v. Wilson, 67 Ill. App. 443; Mills, Em. Dom. § 183; 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. 20; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 682-694; Wood, Nuisances, chaps. 13, 14.

In the absence of any statutory or constitutional provision on the subject, the common law afforded redress in all such cases.

Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Brand v. Hammersmith & C. R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. 223; Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L. R. A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42, 14 S. W. 259; Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 161, 31 L. ed. 638, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820; Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557.

It is no defense that plaintiff came to the nuisance.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 691; Cooley, Torts, 612; St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 35 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 66, 11 H. L. Cas. 642; Bushnell v. Robeson, 62

same rules as individuals; but in the exercise of the governmental power delegated to them, the only rule applicable is the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without compensation. They are not subject to the rule as to special immunities or equal protection of the law. Nevertheless, in many cases where there has been a direct and distinct taking of property, the courts have shielded them from liability under the theory of consequential damages.

The following from the opinion in Brower v. New York, 3 Barb. 254, is believed to state the true rule with regard to the rights and liabilities of municipal corporations in the use of real property owned by them: "The premises known as the North Battery are owned by the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York, and while as such owners they enjoy, in respect to this property, all the rights to which private persons would be entitled, they are subject also to the same duties and obligations in respect to others owning adjacent lands, that the law imposes upon private persons owning real estate. That the premises in question are held as a public trust, and that no private gain or profit is to be derived from their possession, does not in the least diminish or vary the duties and obligations of the common council in respect to adjacent owners whose rights may be injuriously affected by a particular mode of using this property. The great injunction of the law, addressed to all proprietors of real estate, is, 'So use your own as not to injure another;' and a municipal corporation owning lands is as much bound to the observance of this precept as a private person. . . . The idea of the irresponsibility of such a corporation, or their lessees. . . . can only be entertained by the courts where the corporation is in the exercise of a purely governmental function. . . . As a law-giver, a municipal corporation is irresponsible, and the court cannot interfere with its police regulations, which are ordained as laws for the observance of the citizen. But it can enforce the obligation which rests 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) alike upon owners of land, whether corporations or individuals, so to use their property as that adjacent proprietors shall be rendered secure in the enjoyment of their estates."

In Sadlier v. New York, 40 Misc. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 308, although the decision of a single justice of the supreme court at special term, is an admirably considered opinion which deals with the question under consideration in a very able and lucid manner in both aspects. The action was against the city as the owner of what is known as the New York & Brooklyn Suspension Bridge, which on the Brooklyn side of the river was about 80 feet above the roof of the plaintiffs' building, which was about 20 feet away from the bridge, on the southerly side thereof. Dirty water and slush accumulated on the wagon roadway of the bridge on that side, and ran off in considerable quantities, and was blown by the wind upon the roof and against the windows of the plaintiffs' building, the effect of which, as to the roof, was to clog the waste pipes, causing them to overflow and the water to leak through the roof. It was contended that the things complained of were necessarily and unavoidably incident to the existence and use of the bridge, and that, therefore, as the legislature located and authorized the construction and use of the bridge, just where it was and as it was, the plaintiffs were remediless; that the injury done to their property had to be deemed damnum absque injuria; that the law of this state is that individuals can have no redress in the courts for injury done to their property by a nuisance authorized by the legislature, or by reason of the construction or use of any public work so authorized, unless the legislature also provides that compensation be made for such injury. In refusing to sustain the contention the court said that there was no such rule in this state nor anywhere in this country, and, more than that, that it was impossible that there should be, under our constitutional restraints on legislative power in respect of the property rights of individuals; and,

Iowa, 540, 17 N. W. 888; Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 568, 20 Am. Rep. 567; King v. Morris & E. R. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 397.

The fact that the business was a lawful one will not relieve from the rule.

Cooley, Torts, 601, 2d ed. 714; Fish v. Dodge, 4 Denio, 311, 47 Am. Dec. 254; Ross v. Butler, 19 N. J. Eq. 294, 97 Am. Dec. 654; Norcross v. Thoms, 51 Me. 503, 81 Am. Dec. 588; Dodge v. Essex County, 3 Met. 380; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 689, 692; Susquehanna Fertilizer Co. v. Malone, 73 Md. 268, 9 L. R. A. 737, 25 Am. St. Rep. 595, 20 Atl. 900.

Nor is it any defense that the business is carried on in a proper manner and on their own land.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Calkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 79 S. W. 852; Republican Valley

R. Co. v. Fellers, 16 Neb. 169, 20 N. W. 217; Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn. 294; Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 568, 20 Am. Rep. 567.

The idea that if, by a wrongful act, a serious injury is inflicted upon a single individual, recovery may be had against the wrongdoer, and that if, by the same act numbers are so injured, no recovery can be had, is absurd.

3 Sutherland, Damages, 423; Wesson v. Washburn Iron Co. 13 Allen, 95, 90 Am. Dec. 181; Omaha & N. P. R. Co. v. Janeeck 30 Neb. 276, 27 Am. St. Rep. 399, 46 N. W. 478; Park v. Chicago & S. W. R. Co. 4 Iowa, 636; Wood, Nuisances, 657; Davenport, R. I. & N. W. R. Co. v. Sinnet. 111 Ill. App. 75.

If the plaintiff's rights are invaded, "be further, that the misunderstanding on this head arose from the inadvertent citation of English decisions, which, by reason of the superior and unrestrained power of Parliament, really have no application with us.

In an action against a city to restrain the erection of a pest house on land near that of the plaintiff, but which was outside of the city limits, the court, after holding that the simple erection of the pest house outside of the city, under a statute which provided where and how the pest house might be established, put no restrictions upon the municipal corporation as to obtaining the consent of other municipalities or other authorities, further held that a law which provided that a city might establish a quarantine ground or grounds within or without its own limits and which further provided that if such place be without its limits the consent of the municipality or township within which it is proposed to establish it shall first be obtained, did not apply, and that the erection of the pest house was not a private nuisance. Lorain v. Rolling, 24 Ohio C. C. 82. In this case the court further said: But if a method is pursued that will necessarily make it dangerous beyond that already contemplated by the law, then it may be a nuisance, and, before actually using, might be condemned by the authorities and they be enjoined from using it; but that if the mode prescribed and manner contemplated had been pursued, or if no mode or manner was definitely pointed out by the law, if that generally approved was pursued, then there could be no injunction, and no declaring it a nuisance until it was wrongfully used; and that if it was so negligently used, so carelessly used, and so used contrary to the intent of the law, it might become a nuisance, and it might then be enjoined.

In Hill v. New York, 139 N. Y. 495, 34 N. E. 1090, the court, after holding the erection and maintenance of a structure covering nearly half of a pier which was owned by the plaintiff and the city in severalty, and the manner in which the half of the pier belonging to the city was used for the conveyance of the refuse matter and garbage of the city into boats for transfer to the ocean, to be a nuisance, refused to sustain the contention of the city that a municipal corporation engaged in the performance of a public duty upon which the public health and comfort depend, and acting by express authority of the legislature, is not liable for consequential injuries resulting to others, even though its acts would amount to a nuisance as to individuals, on the ground that power to do the act complained of was not expressly, nor by clear and unquestionable implication, conferred by the legislature. To support its ruling the court cited the statement of Chief Justice Marshall in United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch. 390, 2 L. ed. 314, wherein he says: "Where rights are infringed, where fundamental principles are overthrown, where the general system of the law is departed from, the legislative intention must be expressed with irresistible clearness . . . to suppose a design to effect such objects."

Some courts have, however, been so impressed with the necessities of the public that they have permitted the rights of individuals to be borne down under the weight of public convenience,—a result which it was the very purpose of the Constitutions to prevent.

In Alexander v. Milwaukee, 16 Wis. 248, it appeared that the plaintiff was seeking to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by him in consequence of the city's making a harbor improvement consisting of a channel known as a straight cut, a work which the city was specially authorized by the legislature to make. The court said that there was no allegation in the complaint that the damages resulted from any unlawful or improper act on the part of the city authorities in making the improvement; but it appeared that the plaintiff owned a lot bordering or situated on the Milwaukee river, near the shore of Lake Michigan, and also two lots situated on an island in that river, upon which he had a is entitled to protection, be the consequences what they may."

Susquehanna Fertilizer Co. v. Malone, 73 Md. 268, 9 L. R. A. 737, 25 Am. St. Rep. 595, 20 Atl. 900.

Neither the injury done to the plaintiff nor that done to anybody else has ever been compensated for.

Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn. 294; Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 27, 7 L. ed. 542; Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557; Hooker v. New Haven & N. Co. 14 Conn. 146, 36 Am. Dec. 477; Bangor & P. R. Co. v. McComb, 60 Me. 290.

The municipality could not legalize a nuisance as against plaintiff's rights.

Leavenworth, N. & S. R. Co. v. Curtan, 51 Kan. 432, 33 Pac. 297; Chicago, K. & W.

R. Co. v. Union Investment Co. 51 Kan. 600, 33 Pac. 378; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Arnold, 52 Kan. 720, 35 Pac. 780; J. K. & W. H. Gilcrest Co. v. Des Moines (Iowa) 102 N. W. 831; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Garside, 10 Kan. 552; Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Twine, 23 Kan. 585, 33 Am. Rep. 203; Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Andrews, 30 Kan. 590, 2 Pac. 677; Hedrick v. Olathe, 30 Kan. 351, 1 Pac. 118; Ottawa, O. C. & C. G. R. Co. v. Peterson, 51 Kan. 604, 33 Pac. 606; Kansas, N. & D. R. Co. v. Cuykendall, 42 Kan. 234, 16 Am. St. Rep. 479, 21 Pac. 1051.

While the state may restrict its own rights, it cannot restrict or take away rights which are purely individual, even though they are intimately associated with the public right.

dock, a shipyard, and other valuable improvements; and it was alleged that the waves and waters of the lake were driven by the wind through the canal or channel made by the city, into the river and upon his lots, so as to wash them away, or to render them insecure, dangerous, and unfit for use. At the trial the court, on motion of the defendant, dismissed the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and on an appeal from a judgment so rendered, the court, in affirming that judgment, said, among other things: "We are not, however, prepared to say that the injuries complained of in this case come within the rule of being remote and speculative, and therefore not recoverable upon that ground. They might, perhaps, constitute a good cause of action if they resulted from the acts of a natural person. But they result from a municipal corporation making a great public improvement exclusively for the benefit of the public, in the precise way authorized by the legislature, and in a careful, discreet manner. And for damages thus sustained, however equitable, upon principles of justice, it may be that the party should be compensated by the state or the public, yet the current of authority is that the city is not liable. And it is quite obvious that if the appellant may maintain this action for them, so might every proprietor of lots lying along the river whose property had been at all affected by the work, just to the extent of his injury. This may not afford a conclusive reason why a municipal corporation should not be answerable for all such consequential damages, but it at least will convince anyone that if such corporations were answerable, few improvements of this nature would ever be undertaken by them." The court in this case cited several Ohio decisions which supported the opposite doctrine, which placed the liability of a municipal corporation upon the same grounds as that of an individual, and held it liable for any consequential damages, whether its agents acted with due skill and caution in the exercise of corporate authority, or not, and said that the doctrine of the Ohio decisions appears to be fully supported by that of Baron v. Baltimore, referred to in Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. 147, 158, 31 Am. Dec. 123, and stated, further, that they were cited with decided approval in Goodall v. Milwaukee, 5 Wis. 38; but claimed that the liability in that case was placed upon an entirely different ground. The court further said that as an original question there was much justice and equity in the principle of the Ohio cases, but said that the law seemed to be too well settled the other way to permit it to follow them.

So, in Atwater v. Canandaigua, 124 N. Y. 602, 27 N. E. 385, it was decided that the trustees of a village who were commissioners of highways in and for the village, were not liable as such commissioners, in constructing a coffer dam which was necessary in order to build across a stream of water a bridge which they were authorized by law to build, for damages caused by the piling back of the waters of such stream upon lands above the dam so that crops growing, or which might have been grown thereon, were prevented for a whole season: where it was not alleged that there was unnecessary delay on the part of the defendants in the commencement or prosecution of the work of constructing the bridge, and the evidence fairly permitted the inference that they were not chargeable with any want of care which caused the injurious consequences and the time and the necessity for the construction of the bridge and dam were matters to be determined by the trustees, upon whom was imposed the duty in that respect; and that assuming, as the court must upon the evidence, that they had acted in good faith, their exercise of discretion in those respects was not the subject of review. That by the statute constituting the charter of the village the trustees had the lawful authority to do whatever was essential to the proper performance of the work of making the improvement, and it was for that purpose only that the coffer dam was erected; that Cooley, Torts, 616; Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157; Porter v. North Missouri R. Co. 33 Mo. 128; Dairy v. Iowa C. R. Co. 113 Iowa, 716, 84 N. W. 688; Chamberlain v. West End & C. P. R. Co. 2 Best & S. 605; Caledonian R. Co. v. Walker, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 259; Shively v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 169, 7 Am. St. Rep. 471, 37 N. W. 133; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146.

Where the injury is more than a mere annoyance, and is so serious as to result in a depreciation in the value of the real estate, or becomes injurious to the occupants, the injury amounts to a taking for which compensation must be made.

the necessity for it made it lawful, and its usefulness was dependent upon the obstruction by it of the flow of water in the channel at the place where the improvement was made. To the contention on the part of the plaintiff that the damages were incurred by the direct and physical invasion of his land by the defendants in the construction of the dam, and that it constituted a taking of his property within the meaning of the provision of the Constitution that private property shall not be taken for public use without compensation, the court said that the subject had had much discussion and judicial consideration, and that consequential damages to property of others, occasioned by the performance of public work, were not treated as the taking of it within the meaning of the Constitution was not an open question in New York. That the dam did not, nor did any of the work, encroach upon the plaintiff's premises. That the right to construct this dam, and thus obstruct the flow of water in that channel to the prejudice of owners of property affected by it, depended upon its necessity for the purpose of the work of the public improvement according to the plan devised for the structures to be erected, and that, assuming for the purpose of the question under consideration, that it was such and that the defendants properly and expeditiously performed the work, it could not be seen within the doctrine before stated how the defendants could be held liable for the consequences resulting from it to others.

Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557, has settled the law to be that the flooding of land is just as much a taking as is a physical occupation of it. This being true, it is difficult to see any ground for holding that no compensation need be made when the taking is only for one season, instead of permanently. Equally sound would be the contention that the occupation of plaintiff's house by the laborers on the bridge for the season, to the exclusion of plaintiff, would be a consequen-

Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622, 37 L. ed. 463; Hot Springs R. Co. v. Williamson, 45 Ark. 429; Penn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Heiss, 141 Ill. 35, 33 Am. St. Rep. 273, 31 N. E. 138; Tipping v. St. Helen's Smelting Co. 4 Best & S. 616; 11 H. L. Cas. 642; Cooley, Torts, 161; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 56 Am. Rep. 6, note, 8 N. E. 537; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Esterle, 13 Bush, 667; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Annis, 62 Ill. App. 180; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Grabill, 50 Ill. 241; Chicago & I. R. Co. v. Baker, 73 Ill. 316; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 737; Shively v.

tial injury for which no compensation need be made.

b. Pollution of waters; sewers.

In Locks & Canals v. Lowell, 7 Gray, 223, the court admits that where a canal company, duly authorized thereto by a legislative act of incorporation, has constructed a canal, and appropriated, by purchase and condemnation to its use, lands necessary for the purpose, such lands and the use of the canal may be taken by a city for the purpose of drainage, under statutes containing suitable provisions and conferring the requisite authority; but where a statute contains no such provisions and confers no such authority, but merely authorizes the city, by a provision expressed in very general terms, to lay down drains and sewers through streets and private lands, and in it there is no such directness as to import that a new appropriation, to the public use, of lands which have already been lawfully taken and are still held and devoted by the canal company to another public service, is intended by, or even at all in the contemplation of, the legislature, such general provision will not justify the city in emptying its drains and sewers into such canal to the discomfort, annoyance, injury, and damage of the canal company.

Merely granting to a city authority to construct sewers for the convenience and benefit of its inhabitants does not necessarily make their use a governmental use in the sense that there can be no remedy, unless given by statute, for consequential injuries resulting therefrom. Platt Bros. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154.

And therefore the pollution of a river by city sewers, though it may become justifiable when done for a public purpose, is the subject of payment of compensation for invasion of the property rights of riparian owners. Ibid.

Legislative permission to construct and maintain a system of sewers confers no li-Ledar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 169, 7 Am. St. Rep. 471, 37 N. W. 133.

The law considers the infringement of the rights of a party an injury for which damages must be given, because upon no other principle could one's rights be protected. Every infringement of them may, to some extent, endanger the right itself; in some cases, indeed, a continuance of the infringement would, in time, deprive the party altogether of his right.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 551; Franklin County v. Lathrop, 9 Kan. 453; St. Paul, & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. 572, 19 L. ed. 74; Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386; Brisbane v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 23 Minn. 114.

Railroad companies are not, by the common law, entitled to any greater immunity when causing damages to others than the practisers of other useful and longer established trades.

Brand v. Hammersmith & C. R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. 223; Bamford v. Turnley, 3 Best & S. 62, 31 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 286; St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 35 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 66, 11 H. L. Cas. 642; Chamberlain v. West End & C. P. R. Co. 2 Best & S. 605, 32 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 173; Senior v. Metropolitan R. Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 258, 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 225; Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L. R. A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42, 14 S. W. 259.

Greene, J., delivered the opinion of the court:
If the plaintiff, through the acts of defend-

and that the question of care and skill in conducting the work did not enter into the solution of the question, and that if filth is gathered together and poured into a stream, either directly or indirectly, if it pollute the waters of that stream so that the lands of the riparian owners are diminished in value, the person or corporation who causes the damage must pay for it; and not even the state is exempt from liability.
In Moody v. Saratoga Springs, 17 App. Div. 207, 45 N. Y. Supp. 365, which was an action against a village for injury caused by the discharge of offensive matter from a sewer, it was contended by the defendant that the act which authorized the extension of the sewer causing the injury, and the fact that the extension was not negligently or unskillfully executed, justified the defendant, and that it was not liable for the injury which the plaintiff had suffered; but the court said that the plaintiff did not complain of the construction, but of the use which was made of the sewer to his injury, and that the act authorizing the extension undoubtedly authorized the use of the sewer, but not such a use as resulted in the nuisance; as, assuming the lawfulness of the construction and the right to its use, the use must not be to the injury of any legal rights of another.

The title of riparian owners above tide water extends to the middle of the stream, subject only to the use of the public for the purposes of navigation; and as to such owners a statute authorizing the sewage system of a city is no protection to it for injuries to them by emptying its sewage into the river, as the pollution of the river by the sewage constitutes such a taking of the property as is inhibited by the Constitution, and therefore cannot be authorized by the legislature. Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson, 60 N. J. Eq. 335, 48 L. R. A. 717, 83 Am. St. Rep. 642, 45 Atl. 995.
Although the Massachusetts court in a recent case (Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694) has held that the court cannot presume that the legislature intend-mon law, entitled to any greater immunity when causing damages to others than the practisers of other useful and longer established trades.

Brand v. Hammersmith & C. R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. 223; Bamford v. Turnley, 3 Best & S. 62, 31 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 286; St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 35 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 66, 11 H. L. Cas. 642; Chamberlain v. West End & C. P. R. Co. 2 Best & S. 605, 32 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 173; Senior v. Metropolitan R. Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 258, 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 225; Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L. R. A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42, 14 S. W. 259.

Greene, J., delivered the opinion of the court:
If the plaintiff, through the acts of defend-

and that the question of care and skill in conducting the work did not enter into the solution of the question, and that if filth is gathered together and poured into a stream, either directly or indirectly, if it pollute the waters of that stream so that the lands of the riparian owners are diminished in value, the person or corporation who causes the damage must pay for it; and not even the state is exempt from liability.
In Moody v. Saratoga Springs, 17 App. Div. 207, 45 N. Y. Supp. 365, which was an action against a village for injury caused by the discharge of offensive matter from a sewer, it was contended by the defendant that the act which authorized the extension of the sewer causing the injury, and the fact that the extension was not negligently or unskillfully executed, justified the defendant, and that it was not liable for the injury which the plaintiff had suffered; but the court said that the plaintiff did not complain of the construction, but of the use which was made of the sewer to his injury, and that the act authorizing the extension undoubtedly authorized the use of the sewer, but not such a use as resulted in the nuisance; as, assuming the lawfulness of the construction and the right to its use, the use must not be to the injury of any legal rights of another.

The title of riparian owners above tide water extends to the middle of the stream, subject only to the use of the public for the purposes of navigation; and as to such owners a statute authorizing the sewage system of a city is no protection to it for injuries to them by emptying its sewage into the river, as the pollution of the river by the sewage constitutes such a taking of the property as is inhibited by the Constitution, and therefore cannot be authorized by the legislature. Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson, 60 N. J. Eq. 335, 48 L. R. A. 717, 83 Am. St. Rep. 642, 45 Atl. 995.
Although the Massachusetts court in a recent case (Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694) has held that the court cannot presume that the legislature intend-mon law, entitled to any greater immunity when causing damages to others than the practisers of other useful and longer established trades.

Brand v. Hammersmith & C. R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. 223; Bamford v. Turnley, 3 Best & S. 62, 31 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 286; St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 35 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 66, 11 H. L. Cas. 642; Chamberlain v. West End & C. P. R. Co. 2 Best & S. 605, 32 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 173; Senior v. Metropolitan R. Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 258, 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 225; Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L. R. A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42, 14 S. W. 259.

Greene, J., delivered the opinion of the court:
If the plaintiff, through the acts of defend-

and that the question of care and skill in conducting the work did not enter into the solution of the question, and that if filth is gathered together and poured into a stream, either directly or indirectly, if it pollute the waters of that stream so that the lands of the riparian owners are diminished in value, the person or corporation who causes the damage must pay for it; and not even the state is exempt from liability.
In Moody v. Saratoga Springs, 17 App. Div. 207, 45 N. Y. Supp. 365, which was an action against a village for injury caused by the discharge of offensive matter from a sewer, it was contended by the defendant that the act which authorized the extension of the sewer causing the injury, and the fact that the extension was not negligently or unskillfully executed, justified the defendant, and that it was not liable for the injury which the plaintiff had suffered; but the court said that the plaintiff did not complain of the construction, but of the use which was made of the sewer to his injury, and that the act authorizing the extension undoubtedly authorized the use of the sewer, but not such a use as resulted in the nuisance; as, assuming the lawfulness of the construction and the right to its use, the use must not be to the injury of any legal rights of another.

The title of riparian owners above tide water extends to the middle of the stream, subject only to the use of the public for the purposes of navigation; and as to such owners a statute authorizing the sewage system of a city is no protection to it for injuries to them by emptying its sewage into the river, as the pollution of the river by the sewage constitutes such a taking of the property as is inhibited by the Constitution, and therefore cannot be authorized by the legislature. Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson, 60 N. J. Eq. 335, 48 L. R. A. 717, 83 Am. St. Rep. 642, 45 Atl. 995.
Although the Massachusetts court in a recent case (Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694) has held that the court cannot presume that the legislature intendant, was deprived of access to his premises by way of the public alley, he may recover damages therefor. Whether he was deprived of such access was a question of fact. The evidence was conflicting, some tending to show that such passage had not been materially interfered with, and some tending to prove the contrary. The jury, after hearing and weighing the evidence, found in favor of plaintiff, and this finding was approved by the trial court on a motion for a new trial. The judgment, therefore, must be sustained.

When this case was first submitted, doubts were entertained of the right of the plaintiff to recover for damage to his residence by reason of its permeation with smoke, gas, and cinders. Thereupon the court deduced from the evidence and finding the following question, and resubmitted it for argument: Where a railroad company constructs and operates its road on its own land in a proper manner, is it ever liable to the owner and occupant of adjacent property for consequential damages arising from his residence becoming permeated with smoke and offensive vapors from its engines, which injuriously affect the health of such occupants? Counsel for both parties, realizing the importance of the question and of a correct decision, have ably reargued it orally and in briefs. The company having been specifically authorized to make the alleged improvement in its roadbed, in the absence of any charge that it was unnecessary, or unskillfully done, or ed to exempt a city from the obligation to use due care in the construction and management of its sewers, it had held in a prior case that a city which, under state statutes and ordinances of its council, has constructed and operated a system of sewerage, whereby a stream of water is polluted and rendered less pure than in its original state, is not liable to a riparian owner on the stream below the city for such pollution. Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592.

Under the peculiar provision of the Massachusetts Constitution empowering the legislature to pass laws which they may deem to be for the public good, it may be a question if the provisions protecting property rights are not somewhat modified, so that the law applicable elsewhere might have less force in that state.

Where a city or board of municipal officers is authorized by the legislature to lay out and construct common sewers and drains, and provision is made by statute for the assessment, under special proceedings, of damages to parties whose estates are thereby injured, the city is not liable to an action at law or a bill in equity for injuries which are the necessary result of the exercise of the powers conferred by the legislature. And where, in a bill in equity brought for the purpose of abating an alleged nuisance committed by the authorities of a city, the only acts charged against the city are the converting of a channel of a brook into a sewer, and the opening of other sewers and drains into the same, which acts were expressly authorized by a statute, and the only further allegations in the bill consist of a conclusion of fact, that a nuisance to the plaintiff was thereby created, and a conclusion of law, that the acts of the city were unauthorized and in violation of the plaintiff's rights, such a bill does not allege any negligence of the city, either in the manner in which the sewage was discharged from the mouth of the sewer, or in omitting to take proper precautions to purify it; and a demurrer to the bill must be sustained. Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 458. 1 L.R.A. (N.E.)

In Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610, the general statement is made that it had long been the settled law of Indiana that for consequential injuries resulting from the construction, maintenance, or operation of sewers, streets, and other public works, in the absence of negligence or want of due care and skill, a municipal corporation is not liable; citing as authority for such doctrine, Macy v. Indianapolis, 17 Ind. 267; Weis v. Madison, 75 Ind. 241. 39 Am. Rep. 135; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618; Evansville v. Decker, 84 Ind. 325; 43 Am. Rep. 86; Rice v. Evansville, 108 Ind. 7, 58 Am. Rep. 22, 9 N. E. 139; Terre Haute v. Hudnut, 112 Ind. 542. 13 N. E. 686.

And so, a city which, in the construction of its sewerage system and in the operation thereof, uses due care, and causes such construction and operation to be done under the most approved system, and uses for the discharge of its sewers the natural drainage system of the country before the existence of the city, is not liable for the pollution of a stream to a lower owner of land. Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610.

Following Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610, and in line with it, is the case of Valparaiso v. Hagen, 153 Ind. 337, 48 L. R. A. 707, 74 Am. St. Rep. 305, 54 N. E. 1062, where it was held that a city cannot be enjoined from discharging sewage into a stream, when it acts skilfully and in conformity to the statute, and the stream constitutes the only natural and reasonably possible line of drainage; and that damages resulting to the property of riparian owners by the discharge of such sewage into the stream in a skilful manner and in conformity to statutes are merely consequential, and give such owners no right to compensation; as what the law grants cannot constitute a nuisance per se, either public or private, and, if the law is obeyed, no actionable wrong can result.

In Valparaiso v. Hagen the court exhibits the careful consideration for the public municipality and the utter want of it for the rights guaranteed by the organic law to the made at a place not authorized, it is not liable for damages as for the maintenance of a nuisance. That which is done under authority of law, at a place and in a manner authorized, cannot be a nuisance. Mr. Cooley, at page 670 of the second edition of his work on Torts, says: "An actionable nuisance may therefore be said to be anything wrongfully done or permitted which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights." In the case of Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 640, 25 L. ed. 336, 338, it was said: "That cannot be a nuisance, such as to give a common-law right of action, which the law authorizes. We refer to an action at common law, such as this is. A legislature may, and often does, authorize, and even direct, acts to be done which are harmful to individuals, and which, without the authority, would be nuisances; but in such a case, if the statute be such as the legislature has power to pass, the acts are lawful, and are not nuisances, unless the power has been exceeded." Also in the case of Hammer-smith & C. R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 171, 196, it was said: "If the legislature authorizes the doing of an act (which, if unauthorized, would be a wrong, and a cause of action), no action can be maintained for that act, on the plain ground that no court can treat that as a wrong which the legislature has authorized; and consequently the person who has sustained a loss by the doing of that act is without remedy, unless in so far as the legislature has thought individual, usual with those courts who, for the sake of the public, by their decisions actually work confiscation of the property of the private individual, in the following language: "Surely it is not the law that a salutary statute, essential to the health and welfare of the public, may be thus nullified by exhibiting a damage to private right. The sewage must be despatched or the city abandoned. The place adopted for the out-pour is that provided by nature, and cannot be had elsewhere. The facts present a case wherein the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number must be permitted to operate, and private interest yield to the public good; and if the erection has been skillfully performed, and without negligence . . . and in a way to do the least mischief, it must be held to be a lawful exercise of power that equity will not restrain."

The New Jersey court has held that the power of the legislature to authorize municipalities to use a tidal navigable stream for sewerage purposes is beyond question, and the degree of pollution to be permitted is a matter over which the legislature has full power and control, and therefore the legislature may constitutionally confer on municipalities the right to use tidal streams for sewerage purposes; and where a city executes the powers thus granted, within the bounds of its discretion and with care, and thereby produces consequential damages to a riparian owner, such damage is a loss for which there is no remedy, being a burden to which the sufferers must submit as members of the community, from which they receive compensatory benefits. Sayre v. Newark, 60 N. J. Eq. 361, 48 L. R. A. 722, 83 Am. St. Rep. 629, 45 Atl. 985.

This ruling is put upon the ground that the title of riparian owners below tide waters is only to high-water mark, as the state is the absolute owner of the bed of the stream, and such riparian owners are not entitled to restrain a city from emptying sewage into the stream. Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Pater-son, 60 N. J. Eq. 385, 48 L. R. A. 717, 83 Am. St. Rep. 642, 45 Atl. 995. But the court overlooks the fact that the abutting owner has certain easements in a highway the fee of which is in the public, which constitute property protected by the Constitution.

c. Obstruction of street or highway.

No recovery can be had in the cases mentioned in this and the following subdivision, if the act complained of merely constitutes a nuisance. The municipality being in the exercise of its governmental powers, there can be no recovery unless there is a taking of property, or unless the Constitution provides compensation in case the property is damaged. But the word "property" is not limited to real estate, but includes all the easements and property rights belonging to the landowner, and he is entitled to compensation in case any of them are taken or destroyed.

In Uppington v. New York, 165 N. Y. 222, 53 L. R. A. 550, 59 N. E. 91, it is said that when a municipal corporation has general authority by statute to make a public improvement in a public street, which does not involve direct encroachment upon private property, it is not liable for consequential damages, unless they are caused by negligence, misconduct, or want of skill on the part of its servants or agents. In such cases the corporation is the agent of the state, and acts done in the proper exercise of governmental powers do not make such agent liable at common law, even if they indirectly affect, but do not directly invade, private property. And so, a relief sewer built wholly in a public street without encroaching upon private property, and duly authorized by statute, under contract by the city with competent contractors, is no cause for which an action can be maintained against the city, although injuries are inflicted upon abutting property as an indirect result of the work, if they are not caused by wilful misconduct. The injuries consisted in causing the ground to settle in front of the plaintiff's premises, and in injuring her house, by reason of the trench dug for the purpose of laying the sewer. The value of the decision as an authority on the subject under consideration is somewhat lessened because the court also de-it proper to provide for compensation to him. He is, in fact, in the same position as the person supposed to have suffered from the noisy traffic on a new highway is at common law, and subject to the same hardship. He suffers a private loss for the public benefit." The acts of the defendant having been done under authority granted to it, in the performance of which it neither exceeded nor abused such authority, the plaintiff cannot recover his alleged damages unless a recovery is authorized by the Constitution or some provision of the statute. The only provision in the Constitution that can have application to the question is § 4 of article 12, which reads: "No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money, to the owner irrespective of any benefit from any improvement by such corporation." Section 1360 of the General Statutes of 1901 provides: "Upon application being so made in writing, such board of county commissioners shall forthwith proceed to lay off such route, side tracks, etc., for such distance through their said county as may be so desired, and of such width, within the limits aforesaid, and upon such location, as may be desired by such corporation, having the same carefully surveyed, and ascertaining carefully the quantity of land necessary for such purposes out of each quarter section or other lot of land through which said route, side-track, etc., is located, and appraise the value of decided that it appeared in the case that the city had power to contract for the construction of the sewer, and had entered into a contract with competent contractors doing an independent business, who agreed to furnish the necessary materials and labor, and make the entire improvement, according to specifications prepared in advance, for a lump sum, or its equivalent, and that such contractors were not the servants or agents of the city, but were independent contractors. Moreover, if the settling of the ground was a necessary result of the work, so that the expenditure of money was necessary to protect the abutting property, there was a taking of the money within the meaning of the Constitution.

So, in Plant v. Long Island R. Co. 10 Barb. 26, it was held that if a city is authorized by its charter to construct a tunnel under a street, and if, in constructing the tunnel, the authorities injure an abutting owner of property on the street by impeding the carrying on of his ordinary business and preventing the free access of customers to and from his store during the continuance of the work, there being no complaint of negligence or unskilfulness, it is a case of damnum absque injuria; and the plaintiff was held not entitled to recover. In that case there was a taking of his easement of access, entitling him to compensation.

Where a city was authorized to construct a tunnel or passageway along the line of a street and under a river crossing the street, and in the construction of such tunnel they deprived one of access to his premises, which were bounded on one side by the street and on another side by the river, where the obstruction was not a permanent one, and was not continued during a longer time than was necessary to complete the improvement, and there was no unreasonable delay in pushing the work to completion, and a coffer dam constructed in the river for the purpose of the improvement, extending some 25 or 30 feet in front of such person's lot, was necessary and indispensable for the construction of the tunnel, an action could not be maintained by the lessee of such lands for the temporary 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) injury sustained. Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 640, 25 L. ed. 336. It was argued by the plaintiff that the erection of the coffer dam and the necessary excavation in the street constituted a public nuisance, causing special damage to the plaintiff, beyond those incident to the public at large; and it was inferred therefrom that the city was responsible to the plaintiff for the injurious consequences resulting therefrom. The court said that the answer to this argument was that the assumption was unwarranted, as what the law authorized could not be a nuisance such as to give a common-law right of action; that a legislature may, and often does, authorize, and even direct, acts to be done which are harmful to individuals, and which without the authority would be nuisances; but in such a case, if the statute be such as the legislature has power to pass, the acts are lawful, and are not nuisances, unless the power has been exceeded.

It is to be regretted that the plaintiff's argument in that case obscured the point involved, so that the decision of the court, although right if placed on the ground suggested by the argument, actually worked injustice, and may be subject to question under the doctrine which should have been applied. There was no question of public nuisance in the case. The legislative authority settled that. But there was a temporary destruction of plaintiff's right of access to the street, which was a temporary appropriation of his property, for which he was entitled to compensation.

After the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, there was another Constitution adopted in Illinois, in which the prohibition against the appropriation of private property for public use without compensation was declared in different words from those employed in the former Constitution, and in which the provision was that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation." And in Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 161, 31 L. ed. 638, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820, the court said that an important inquiry in that case was to the such portion of any such quarter section or other lot of land, and assess the damages thereto; and when such commissioners shall ascertain that such portion of such quarter section or lot belongs to different owners, they shall appraise the value, and assess the damages of each such owner's interest; all which doings the board of commissioners shall embody in a written report, and file in the office of the county clerk of such county." The plaintiff's case is not within either of the provisions quoted. Under each there must be an actual taking before recovery can be had; and then the owner may recover only the value of the land taken and the damage to the remainder of the tract or lot occasioned by such taking.

The damages alleged to have been sustained in this case are purely incidental, and arise from a proper operation of the defendant's locomotive engines. Railroad companies are public corporations, organized and maintained for public purposes. Railroads cannot be operated without causing more or less inconvenience to the public, and disfigurement and possible damage to persons living adjacent to their lines. All such inconveniences and incidental damages must be endured by the individual for the general good. Such private inconveniences and injuries result, in a less degree, to persons who live along public highways, from dust arising from the passage of teams and wagons. For such injuries the law provides no remedy. This and similar questions have arisen in other courts of this country, and, so meaning of the word "damaged," in that clause. There had been a judgment for the plaintiff against the city, and on the trial there was evidence before the jury tending to show that, by reason of the construction of a viaduct by the city, the actual market value of the plaintiff's lot for the purposes for which it was specially adapted, or in fact any other purpose for which it was likely to be used, was materially diminished by the access to it being cut off, and also that one of the results of the construction of the viaduct was that the coal yard of the plaintiff was often flooded with water running onto it from the approaches of the viaduct, whereby the use of the premises as a place for handling and storing coal (for which it had been used) was greatly interfered with and often became wholly impracticable. The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the judgment, principally upon the ground that the question had been decided by the state courts of Illinois, although it did further hold that the introduction of the word "damaged" into a clause of the new Constitution indicated a deliberate purpose to abolish the old test of direct physical injury to the property affected.

That it is a legitimate use of a street or highway to allow a railroad track to be laid down in it, and for doing so the city is not liable for any damages which may accrue to individuals, was held in Murphy v. Chicago, 29 Ill. 279, 81 Am. Dec. 307. The court said that cases are constantly occurring where individuals are incommoded, and thus really damaged, in this way, for which the law can afford no remedy. The court gave an illustration, as, where portions of a street are occupied by building materials to the great inconvenience of a neighbor, to which he must submit from necessity and without compensation. The illustration is not apt; the railroad track being a permanent thing, while the building materials remain in the street only until the building is erected.

4 Nuisance caused by change of highway grade.

As indicated in the preceding subdivision,
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

there can be no recovery against the municipality for a mere nuisance created by changing a highway grade, but if the change amounts to a taking of easements or other property rights, on principle there should be a recovery. However, the doctrine of consequential injuries has in many cases obscured the fact that property rights were actually taken.

In Nevins v. Peoria, 41 Ill. 502, 89 Am. Dec. 392, it was decided that while a city has absolute control over the grade of its streets, as their owner, that it can make the grade light or heavy, that it can elevate or lower it at pleasure, and that the owners of adjacent lots cannot call it to account for errors of judgment in these respects, or demand damages because they may incur inconvenience or expense in adjusting the level of their own premises to that of the street for the purpose of ingress and egress, it has no more power than a private individual has over his own land, and it cannot, under the specious plea of public convenience, be permitted to exercise that dominion to the injury of another's property, in a mode that would render a private individual responsible in damages, without being responsible itself; and though a city may elevate or depress its streets, as it thinks proper, if in so doing it turns a stream of mud and water upon the grounds and into the cellars of one of its citizens, or creates in his neighborhood a stagnant pond that brings disease upon his house, the city will not be excused from paying for the injuries it has directly wrought. Approved and followed, Aurora v. Gillett, 56 Ill. 132; Aurora v. Reed, 57 Ill. 29, 11 Am. Rep. 1; Jacksonville v. Lambert, 62 Ill. 519; Dixon v. Baker, 65 Ill. 518, 16 Am. Rep. 591; Pekin v. Brereton, 67 Ill. 477, 16 Am. Rep. 629; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Morrison, 71 Ill. 616; Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64.

In the Nevins Case the court said: "It must be admitted that the rule laid down by the courts of New York has been quite generally adopted. Thus the cases divide themselves into two classes: One, and the larger class, holding that a city is only held to reasonable care and skill in grading its far as this court has been able to ascertain, a recovery has generally been denied, unless given under some constitutional or statutory provision. Some cases may be found which have construed similar injuries to be a taking. These, however, are exceptional, and without the general rule. In the case of Carroll v. Wisconsin Central Co. 40 Minn. 168, 170, 41 N. W. 661, which was an action for similar injury, the court said: "Railroads are a public necessity. They are always constructed and operated under authority of law. They bring to the public great benefits; to some persons more, to other persons less. The operating them in the most skillful and careful manner causes to the public necessary incidental inconveniences, such as noise, smoke, cinders, vibrations of the ground, interference with travel at the crossings of roads and streets and the like. One person may suffer more from these than another. For instance, one whose premises lie within a hundred feet of the railroad will feel the inconvenience in a greater degree than one whose premises are at the distance of a thousand feet; and one who has to pass many times a day along a street crossed by a railroad suffers more inconvenience from it than one who seldom has occasion to pass. But the difference is only in degree, not in kind. Such inconveniences are common to the public at large. If each person had a right of action because of such inconveniences, it would go far to render the operating of railroads practically impossible." In the case of Par- streets, and that if these are used it can shield itself under its corporate powers from liability to individuals; the other holding that a city in the management of corporate property must be held to the same responsibilities that attach to individuals for injury to the property of others. We cannot doubt that the latter is the sounder rule. We are unable to see why the property of an individual should be sacrificed for the public convenience without compensation. We do not think it sufficient to call it damnum absque injuria." Nevins v. Peoria, 41 Ill. 502, 89 Am. Dec. 392, was also approved in Stack v. East St. Louis, 85 Ill. 377, 28 Am. Rep. 619; and in that case it was further said that the cases of Moses v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 21 Ill. 516, and Murphy v. Chicago, 29 Ill. 279, 81 Am. Dec. 307, were essentially modified by the case of Nevins v. Peoria, and other subsequent cases in the supreme court of Illinois.

In Louisville v. Louisville Rolling Mill Co. 3 Bush, 416, 96 Am. Dec. 243, it is said that nearly all the decisions on the subject recognize the rule that a municipal corporation may change the grade of its streets; and that lot owners on the street are remediless for damages sustained incident to such change of grade without improper execution or exercise of the power, the same being in a technical sense no injury, but an inevitable loss which must, as a misfortune incidental to an act rightly done, be borne without remedy. But this right of the municipality is not completely absolute and beyond control; and when a proposed street improvement will nearly destroy the property of an adjoining owner, or render it comparatively valueless, it will be enjoined.

A city had passed an ordinance establishing permanently the grade of certain streets in one of its wards, and providing that in case any person had theretofore or should thereafter erect any building fronting on said streets or either of them, the faith of the city was fully pledged that the grade should not be altered to the injury of such persons without the ward first making good all damages which might thereby accrue to such persons; and in Goodall v. Milwaukee, 5 Wis. 38, it was held that the city was liable for damages caused by executing a subsequent ordinance of the common council of the city by which such grade was lowered some 20 feet or more, and by which buildings so erected in reference to the former grade were rendered of comparatively no value.

In Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 243, the court, in holding that it would not permit a city to assess a tax against the plaintiff's lots to abate a nuisance, which, it appeared, was created entirely by the act of the city in so constructing a street as to cause the water to flow and remain upon the lots when it would not otherwise have done so, said: "I cannot recognize the right of a corporation to create a nuisance on the lot of an individual. But to create the nuisance, and then tax him to abate it, is a double wrong. I shall not attempt any examination of the question upon authority, but I am satisfied such a right cannot be sustained. I think this conclusion results from the reasoning of Mr. Justice Smith in Goodall v. Milwaukee, 5 Wis. 32, which I fully approve. And until I am prepared to say that private rights must yield, even to the extent of total destruction, rather than place any impediment in the way of whatever proceedings corporations may see fit to take, I cannot say that a city may create a nuisance on the lot of a citizen without making him any compensation for the damage, and then tax him to abate it."

Where a municipal corporation in opening, altering, improving, repairing, or changing the grade of one of its streets, which is an act done for the benefit of the public and under ample authority, does so in such a manner that no want of skill or care in doing the work can be imputed to the municipality, it is not liable to an adjoining owner for any injury suffered by him on account thereof, provided the legislature had power to grant the authority without providing for the payment of such consequential damages as have fallen upon the adjoining lot owners.

st v. Cincinnati. H. & D. R. Co. 10 Ohio 624, which was an action to recover damages for obstructing the street by a railroad track, and also for damages for noises, smoke, and vapor arising from the operation of the cars, it was said: "That each owner and occupant is entitled to damages for any obstruction to the street by earth, gravel, timber, or rail substantially affecting his use of such street as an annoyance to his premises. That in respect to the noises, smoke, vapor, or other discomforts arising from the ordinary use of the railroad by the company, the occupant and owner of such lot and dwelling house has no more right to recover damages of the company than any citizen who resides, and may have occasion to pass, so near the street and railroad as to be subjected to like discomforts. That a railroad authorized by law, and lawfully operated, cannot be deemed a private nuisance." As stated, there appears to be but little, if any, disagreement in the decisions upon this question. See, also, Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164; Hatch v. Vermont C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49; Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co. 72 Iowa, 182, 33 N. W. 456.

Counsel for defendant in error cite us to the case of Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, as a decision contrary to the opinion herein expressed. That was an action to recover damages for discomforts occasioned by the erection of a build-Laddell v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 196, 53 Am. Dec. 357.

The action was for damages against the city, claimed to have been sustained by the plaintiff's testator by the changing of the grade of a street, causing a portion of plaintiff's premises to fall, whereby his ground, shrubbery, fixtures, fences, etc., were wholly lost; and the effect of the holding by the whole court was simply an assertion of the doctrine that the injury caused to lot owners adjoining a street, by the change of the grade of the street, is damnum absque injuria; but the judge who delivered the opinion entered considerably into the question under consideration, and in doing so said of Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462, that it stood "on the somewhat questionable ground that the legislature did nothing more than to shield the railroad company from an indictment for the wrong which would otherwise have been done to the public by occupying the highway with their road, without giving the company any authority whatever so far as related to the rights of property of individuals."

In his dissenting opinion in Fries v. New York & H. R. Co. 169 N. Y. 270, 62 N. E. 354, the present chief judge of the New York court of appeals, in alluding to this case, has this to say: "That case has been repudiated in many jurisdictions, and, though firmly imbedded in the law of this state, the hardships occasioned by its application have been so great that in most cases legislative enactments have given abutters the right to compensation for their injuries."

If it is not a taking of property to construct an excavation immediately adjoining it, of such a character that a fall of the property into the excavation is a necessary consequence, it is difficult to see why not.

A negligent and unskilful act on the part of a municipality is a nuisance, and when private property is injured the city must reimburse in damages. Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610, citing Stein v. Lafayette, 6 Ind. App. 414, 33 N. E. 912. But the court in that case laid down the general principle that the improvement of streets and alleys by a municipality is a lawful act, and if unavoidable injury ensues no liability results. That which the law authorizes is not a nuisance so as to give a right of action; citing Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; and Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Loeb, 118 Ill. 203, 59 Am. Rep. 341, 8 N. E. 460.

In Smith v. Washington, 20 How. 135, 15 L. ed. 858, it is said that with slight exceptions and qualifications it would seem to be the universal doctrine that where a municipal corporation has the trust confided to it and the duty imposed upon it, not only of opening streets, but of keeping them in repair, such streets cannot be opened and kept in repair, or made safe or convenient for public use, without being made level, or as nearly so as the nature of the ground will permit; and if the duty imposed on the corporation requires this to be done the power must be coextensive with the duty. And so the corporation has authority to change the level or grade in order to keep the street in repair, and, having performed this trust according to the best of their judgment and discretion on land dedicated to public use for the purposes of the highway, they have not acted unlawfully or wrongfully, and are, consequently, not liable to damages, where they have committed no wrong, but have fulfilled a duty imposed on them by law as agents of the public.

A municipal corporation has undoubted power to raise, pitch, grade, and make the street and avenue; and the proceedings for the purpose of doing so being regular it is lawful for the city to do so; and if any adjoining owner is thereby incommoded it is damnum absque injuria, and gives such owner no right of action against those who have only exercised a legal power vested in them for the public convenience and welfare. Wilson v. New York, 1 Denio, 595, 43 Am. Dec. 719.

VIII. Remedies.

a. By action for damages.

In Drake v. Hudson River R. Co. 7 Barb.

ing for housing the locomotive engines of the railway company contiguous to a building used for Sunday school and public worship by a religious society. It was claimed that these services were habitually interrupted and destroyed by the hammering noises made in the workshops of the company, the rumbling of its engines passing in and out of them, and the blowing off of steam; that these noises were so great at times as to prevent members of the congregation who might be sitting in parts of the church farthest from the shops from hearing what was said. The plaintiff was permitted to recover, but it was because the company had no authority to build its engine house at the place where it did. On page 33 of 108 U. S., page 744 of 27 L. ed., as page 727 of 2 Sup. Ct. Rep., the court said "It is no answer to the action of the plaintiff that the railroad company was authorized by act of Congress to bring its track within the limits of the city of Washington, and to construct such works as were necessary and expedient for the completion and maintenance of its road, and that the engine house and repair shop in question were thus necessary and expedient; that they are skilfully constructed; that the chimneys of the engine house are higher than required by the building regulations of the city; and that as little smoke an 508, the court denied an injunction to restrain a railroad company from laying its tracks in the streets of a populous city, where the railroad company was duly incorporated by a legislative act, and had the permission of the municipality to lay its tracks in the streets, and held that the taking of property for public uses, forbidden by the Constitution unless compensation was made therefor, did not extend to the damage that property not actually and physically taken might suffer by reason of injury thereto caused by the railroad operating in the street; but in doing so said: "That the plaintiffs are entitled to compensation for any loss or damage they may sustain from the railroad, or any of the operations connected therewith, is not denied. And whenever and as often as any such loss or damage may arise or accrue from any such cause, the plaintiffs, or such of them as may sustain the same, will have their remedy therefor by action at law against the defendants. The right and privilege granted to them by the legislature to construct their railroad on such line or route as they may select, and to lay down rails and run trains of cars thereon, will not protect them from the claim of those whom they may wrongfully injure or aggrieve by their operations, for redress, nor be any defense to actions against them for damages from any such cause by the parties aggrieved."

In Daniels v. Keokuk Waterworks, 61 Iowa, 540, 16 N. W. 705, the court said that they were impressed by the evidence that the plaintiffs, because of the escape of smoke and soot from the defendant's smoke stack, were deprived of the comfortable enjoyment of their property, and that the statute defines this to constitute a nuisance for which the party injured may bring an action at law, in which action the nuisance may be enjoined or abated and damages recovered.

In Rainey v. Red River, T. & S. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 80 S. W. 95, the court said that the statutes of the state clearly authorized the acquisition by a railroad company, either by purchase or condemnation, of all real estate necessary for its right of way, or any other lawful purpose connected with or necessary to building, operating, or running its road; that a citizen whose property is actually taken cannot enjoin the construction of a railroad, however disastrous the consequences may be to him, but he is relegated to his remedy provided for damages; and for a greater reason one whose property is not actually taken, but is damaged only cannot enjoin the construction of the line of road; and in either case the remedy of one whose property is damaged is an action for damages, and not an injunction to abate the structure. That case was, however, reversed in 89 S. W. 768, the court holding that the facts presented a proper case for an injunction.

Damages sustained by the owner of a lot abutting on a street, caused by operations of a railroad corporation upon the street which will not amount to such an absolute destruction of the value of the property as will be equivalent to a virtual taking of it must be recovered, if at all, in an action at law therefor; and equity will not entertain jurisdiction to prevent the operations causing such damage. Arbenz v. Wheeling & H. R. Co. 33 W. Va. 1, 5 L. R. A. 371, 10 S. E. 14. The court claimed to follow Spencer v. Point Pleasant & O. River R. Co. 23 W. Va. 427.

In Garrett v. Lake Roland Elev. R. Co. 7 Md. 280, 24 L. R. A. 396, 29 Atl. 830, it was claimed that the construction of an abutment of solid masonry in the bed of a stream and an elevated structure thereon, would, by reducing the width of the stream in front of plaintiff's lots to less than 10 feet, destroy the access to his property from the street and prevent him from reaching the same with vehicles ordinarily used in the city, and that this rendered his property entirely unsalable, and deprived him of the market value thereof, and constituted in fact and in law a taking of his property without making compensation therefor as required by the Constitution of the state, and that the structure deprived the premises of light and air; that this too was a taking of the property within the prohibition of the Constitution. It was further claimed that the act of the legislature and the ordinance of the city under which the railroad company claimed to be authorized to commit the act were both noise are caused as the nature of the business in them will permit. In the first place, the authority of the company to construct such works as it might deem necessary and expedient for the completion and maintenance of its road did not authorize it to place them wherever it might think proper in the city, without reference to the property and rights of others. As well might it be contended that the act permitted it to place them immediately in front of the President's house, or of the Capitol, or in the most densely populated locality. Indeed, the corporation does assert a right to place its works upon property it may acquire anywhere in the city." Thus it will be observed that the court held that the railroad company exceeded its authority in building its shops where it did, and on that ground permitted the plaintiff to recover. The inconveniences and discomfitures of which the plaintiff complains are such as all persons who live along a line of railroad must endure without other compensation than the conveniences enjoyed by living in proximity to such public thoroughfare.

The judgment of the court on this cause of action is reversed, and the cause remanded. The costs of the proceedings in this court are equally divided.

All the Justices concur.

unconstitutional. The court held that there had been no physical invasion of the plaintiff's property, and that the acts of the railroad company complained of did not constitute a taking of the property, and furnished no foundation for an injunction, but hinted that he had another remedy.

In Werges v. St. Louis, C. & N. O. R. Co. 33 La. Ann. 641, the doctrine of the Harrison case, "that the legislature has the power to authorize the building of a railroad on a street of the city, and may directly exercise this power, or devolve it upon the local or municipal authorities," was approved and affirmed. One of the judges, while concurring in the decision, stated that, in his judgment, if the plaintiff could prove damages by the running of the trains of the defendant, he did not doubt her legal right to recover therefor, as no act of the legislature, nor ordinance of the city council, nor both combined, authorizing a railroad to run its trains through the streets of a city, could protect it against the claims for damages by those whose property was injured thereby.

A railroad company in pursuance of legislative authority had changed a watercourse which drained a marsh belonging to the plaintiff, by making a ditch or canal along the side of the road. In an action by the owner of the marsh which the creek had drained, for an injunction requiring the railroad company to desist from filling up the creek, it was held that, while the railroad company would be bound to keep the canal that they had made in a proper state of repairs to carry off the water, the bill for the injunction must be dismissed, and that if in bridging a stream, or in any way or for any purpose changing a watercourse from its natural channel to another, while the railroad company should take care that it should be equally beneficial for the purpose intended, there should happen to be private property so situated that some damage must be done to it, which could not be obviated by reasonable precautions, inasmuch as the railroad company was expressly authorized by the legislature, to exercise the right of eminent domain, such proprietor must be left to seek his compensation in the mode provided by the legislature. Rowe v. Granite Bridge Corp. 21 Pick. 344.

In Murtha v. Lovewell, 166 Mass. 391, 55 Am. St. Rep. 410, 44 N. E. 347, the court said that it was well settled in Massachusetts that, under statutes providing for the issuing of licenses by the authorities of cities for persons to operate some kinds of business, where the license is granted by such authorities, and the licensees are complying with the license, what they do cannot be considered as a nuisance or be restrained by the court. Under statutes providing therefor, a license was granted by the authorities of a city to erect a furnace for melting iron, with the provision that they build a stack 25 feet in height above the roof of the building, with a suitable spark arrester placed upon the top; and a copy of the license was served upon the defendants, but by mistake the height of the stack above the roof was stated to be 20, instead of 25 feet; and thereupon the defendants proceeded to erect their stack only 20 feet high. The mistake was afterwards discovered, and defendants filed a petition that the city authorities should revise the order by striking out the word 5 after the word 20; and thereafter the former action of the board was rescinded, and a new license was issued on condition that the chimney on said building be 20 feet high; but no notice, as required by statute, was given to anyone on this petition. It was held that as the defendants did not comply with the original license, even though it was no fault of theirs, and as the later license could not avail them because no notice was given, the plaintiff, if there were no other circumstances in the case, would be entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing the nuisance, and to damages for the injury already done his premises; but it was conceded that as, since the trial of the action and since the case was reported to the appellate court the defendants had obtained a license in proper form, after due notice, it was the duty of the court here to do in effect what was done in Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27, and it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction.

but only to recover damages which had been assessed.

Equity will not interfere to restrain the temporary excavation and obstruction of a public street, when the same is done by express license of the legislature; and a lot owner on such street, if actually damaged, must resort to his action at law therefor. Turl v. New York Contracting Co. 48 Misc. 164, 93 N. Y. Supp. 1103.

Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson, 60 N. J. Eq. 385, 48 L. R. A. 717, 83 Am. St. Rep. 642, 45 Atl. 995, was an action brought by the attorney general on behalf of the state, at the relation of owners and possessors of land along a river, to restrain a city from depositing or discharging its sewage through its drains or sewers into the river, and from constructing new sewers to discharge into the river, and from enlarging or increasing its present sewerage system with outlets into the river. The defense was that what had been done by the city was done by virtue of an act of the legislature authorizing the construction of sewers and drains in the city, and of acts amendatory of the original statute. The court said that the only question in the case was whether the power inherited in the legislature to bestow authority upon the city to construct the system of sewers, the use of which the complainants sought by their information and bill to restrain, as full power was conferred by the legislature upon the city to adopt and execute its own plan of sewerage so far as the rights of the state were concerned; and if such power did inhere in the legislature the municipal corporation was not responsible for those incidental damages which result from the proper exercise of its functions, and such exercise would not subject it to the charge of maintaining a public nuisance,—citing the Beseman Case. It appeared that a part of the injury complained of was in the river below and a part above tide water, and the court held that the relators in the information, of the attorney general, who were riparian owners above the flow of the tide, had a right of property in the river, and in that respect the legal rule applicable to them differed essentially from that which pertained to those below them, where the tide ebbed and flowed; but that the title of the riparian owner on the navigable waters of the state where the tide ebbs and flows extends only to high-water mark; and that the state is the absolute owner of the bed of the waters beyond high-water mark; and that the action for an injunction could not be maintained as to those relators who were riparian owners above tide water. The court held that, while they were entitled to a remedy in the way of damages or compensation for their injury, yet, in view of the fact of the magnitude of the injury which would fall upon the public by prohibiting the use of the sewers, it would be inequitable to enjoin, if relief could otherwise be afforded.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

b. By injunction.

A court of equity has concurrent jurisdiction, by injunction, equally clear and well established, to prevent the maintenance of private nuisance. Gardner v. Newburgh, Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526.

Where a legal right is invaded by the maintenance of a nuisance, and substantial damage is found, it is not error to award an injunction. Simmons v. Gloversville, 175 N. Y. 346, 87 N. E. 622.

Where the charter of a railroad company provided that, if the railroad should cross any highway, it must construct the same as not to impede and obstruct the safe and convenient use of the same, and empower the company to raise or lower the highway so that the railroad, if necessary, might conveniently pass under, or over, or across such highway, the bringing of the highway to the same grade as the railroad, and crossing it at the same level, is not in itself a nuisance to the highway; nor is it, being thus authorized, evidence of a nuisance; and though it is authorized to cross on the same level, and to raise or lower the highway for that purpose, nevertheless if it so exercises what is and what it may deem to be its duty as to create a public nuisance, the court may interpose; and, if it is proceeding to do this, may restrain it by injunction. Johnston v. Providence & S. R. Co. 10 R. I. 365.

In Babcock v. New Jersey Stock Yard Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 296, the chancellor, in modifying an injunction, said that he would not determine the fact as to whether the charter of the defendants relieved them from the effect of a general statute against carrying on offensive trades, for two reasons: First, because it was a question of law which might be considered doubtful, or that it was at least in good faith disputed, and had not been adjudicated by the courts of law of the state, and therefore a court of equity must not grant the preliminary injunction, founded upon that statute; and secondly and chiefly, because if that statute was in force against the operation of the company it would simply render the manufacture of offal and animal remains unlawful, but that this court could not enjoin it any more than it could the selling of liquor by small measure without a license, or any other unlawful act simply because unlawful, unless it caused irreparable injury for which there was no redress at law. But that he had no hesitation in holding, and it was not disputed by the counsel for the defendants, that this charter did not empower the defendants to carry on the business authorized, in a way that would be injurious to others, or would materially affect their health, their comfort, or their property, and that he had decided that question upon granting the limited injunction.

In Bulter v. White Plains, 59 App. Div. 30, 69 N. Y. Supp. 193, which was a suit for an injunction restraining the village from polluting the waters of a stream, the complaint was dismissed by the trial court upon the ground that the plaintiffs had an adequate remedy at law; but the appellate division reversed this decision, and held that, where the sewage of the defendant, by being discharged into a stream, produced at times a foul and offensive odor over the lands of lower riparian owners, and the discharge added to the discoloration and pollution of the stream, the riparian owner so injured was entitled to an injunction restraining the further operation of the sewer, even though the present damage was slight; it appearing that further increase of the discharge would be likely to create greater injury.

A statute authorized the council of a city to locate and cause to be opened a public street, and further provided that the space between such street and a river, after being improved and graded, should thereafter forever be occupied, used, and employed as a public landing. Claiming authority to do so under the provisions of this statute, the city authorities leased such space to an individual who proposed to erect structures thereon and maintain a landing, for the use of which he would charge. And in Reighard v. Flinn, 189 Pa. 355, 43 L. R. A. 502, 42 Atl. 23, which was an action brought against the lessee of the city by the owners of lots with buildings on them from a time before the lease mentioned was made, and who had always been accustomed to have a free and unobstructed passage to and over the public landing in front of their lots, which would be obstructed and their free access to and use of the public landing at that place and the enjoyment of light and air over the space be prevented, it was held that the city had no right to lease to its codefendant any part of such public landing, and that the plaintiffs had a right to maintain an equity action to declare such lease void, and to enjoin the lessee from erecting such structures, and for a mandatory injunction to compel the removal of those which had been erected.

Thereafter a supplemental bill was filed by the city to stay the injunction, on the ground that the city had become possessed of all the right of their former lessee to the property and improvements created by him, and which had been declared to be a public nuisance and ordered to be removed by him as such; and the court stated that the question then was, Had the city the right to maintain the same structure illegally erected by its lessee under and subject to its own authority as supervisor and comptroller of the public river landings of the city? and it was held that under the act first mentioned it had; and a judgment that the decree theretofore made, in so far as it required the removal or destruction of the dock or structure described in the supplemental bill, was vacated and modified so as to permit the city to maintain such docks or structure as a public landing, was affirmed. 194 Pa. 352, 44 Atl. 1080.

There can be no doubt of the right of a LL.R.A. (N.S.)

court of equity to interfere to prevent or restrain the maintenance of a private nuisance, where the consequence of a refusal to interfere would be to permit the perpetrators to do a material and irreparable injury to the complainant's property; but if the defendant in such an action be a railroad company authorized by law to construct their road on a route, a mere temporary injury which can be compensated for in damages will not justify a court of equity in stopping the progress of a great public work, although the work is nominally made by a railroad company which is a joint stock company. Hudson & D. Canal Co. v. New York & E. R. Co. 9 Paige, 323.

See also Lorain v. Rolling, 24 Ohio C. C. 82; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 458; Boston Rolling Mills v. Cambridge, 117 Mass. 396; Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Applegate, 8 Dana, 289, 33 Am. Dec. 497; Mercer v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 36 Pa. 99; King v. Morris & E. R. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 397; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Thompson, 45 N. J. Eq. 870, 19 Atl. 622; Ridge v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 58 N. J. Eq. 172, 43 Atl. 275; Newark Pl. Road & Ferry Co. v. Elmer, 9 N. J. Eq. 754; Louisville v. Louisville Rolling Mill Co. 3 Bush, 416, 96 Am. Dec. 243.

IX. Conclusion.

The result of the investigation would seem to be that the weight of authority in the United States is to sustain the doctrines set forth supra, I., and that those cases which seem to have gone apart from these cardinal principles have done so mainly through a misapprehension and misapplication of the rule or maxim damnum absque injuria; and that they have extended that rule or maxim far beyond what was ever intended by those who originated it. They seem to have nearly lost sight of the doctrines which undoubtedly exist; viz.: First, that a legislative authorization to do an act which would in a private individual amount to a nuisance only protects the person or corporation so authorized from a prosecution, civil or criminal, at the instance of the state, and is no protection against a suit or action by a private individual to prevent or abate the nuisance, or to recover damages for its commission. Second, that powers granted by the legislature to corporations, municipal or otherwise, will not protect such a corporation, any more than an individual, for committing a private nuisance. Third, that the legislative authority which will justify an injury to private property must be express, or must be given by clear and unquestionable implication from the powers expressly conferred, so that it can fairly be said that the legislature contemplated the doing of the very act which occasioned the injury.

As was said in the commencement, what constitutes a private nuisance has not been considered in the discussion of the question which is the subject of the note. When a court, or a jury acting under its instructions, has declared as a question of law or fact, or both, that a thing is not a nuisance, that case, of course, has no bearing upon the subject here considered; but when a court decides that an injury has been committed by a corporation upon an individual or another corporation, claiming to be authorized to do so by virtue of its charter or act of incorporation, and that by reason thereof it is by the legislative power protected and exempted from liability in doing an act which without such legislative authorization the court admits would be a nuisance, it may without hesitancy be stated that such a decision is not sound law under a proper application of the cardinal doctrines above enumerated. The whole theory and reason of the constitutional inhibitions contained in the Federal Constitution and in those of the several states, that private property shall not be taken, or, as in some of the state Constitutions, damaged, injured, or destroyed, without compensation, is that no real injury to an absolute right can be perpetrated under what is claimed to be authority of a legislative act. But there is another and a higher reason why this should be so, than the strict constitutional prohibition mentioned. It is no less true to-day than it was when the great commentator on the common law wrote that "the public good is in nothing more essentially interested than in the protection of every individual's private rights." 1 Bl. Com. 139.

Down to 1817, Connecticut, and to 1841, Rhode Island, had no Constitution whatever, except the provincial charters under which they were respectively originally organized as provinces of Great Britain; and while the people of the United States as a whole, and those of the several states respectively, have incorporated in the portion of their several Constitutions generally alluded to as the Bill of Rights, certain positive provisions and safeguards of the individual citizen's right to life, liberty and property, it must not be supposed that those are the only restrictions upon attempted legislative usurpation of power. There can be no question but that, in addition to the provisions of our written Constitutions, we have still preserved to us all the rights, privileges, and immunities which belong to the unwritten British Constitution.

It has been said that a state legislature possesses all power which is not in express terms denied to it by the Constitution. But it is conceived that the legislature was not created and given its place in our governmental structure until the foundation of such structure had been laid upon principles which were regarded as so fundamental and enduring that all the acts of the legislature must be in conformity with them, to be within the legislative power. The framers of the Constitution and the creators of the legislature had just been through a life and death struggle for the maintenance of the doctrine as declared by themselves, that all men are created equal, and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights. Running all through the Constitutions framed for the organization of the government is this idea of equality, and it would have been absurd to suggest to men so imbued with these ideas, that it was necessary to insert in the instrument a provision that the legislature could not take the property of one citizen and give it to another or grant to one citizen immunity from acts which constituted a nuisance to his neighbor. To prevent just such acts of favoritism, and protect the individual in his equal property rights, was the very object of the government, as everyone knew, and to have stated it in the Constitution would have been as absurd as to have stated that the wind blows, or that the sun shines. So long as the question is confined to the granting of such special immunity to the individual, there would probably be no one found to contend that the legislature had this right. Especially is this true in view of the provision in the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, declaring that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws. For if a law gives one man immunity from liability for a nuisance, which is denied to another, the latter is certainly denied the equal protection of the laws. These truths seem self-evident but even some of our greatest judges have drifted so far from the traditions of the fathers that it is sometimes necessary to recall the principles on which the government was founded, to find a guide for the course of the ship of state.

If such special immunity could not be given to an individual, it certainly cannot be given to a private corporation, since the artificial being has no greater rights or privileges under the government than has the natural person, its creator, and can be given none. But when the private corporation is organized to perform a public service, many courts have lost their bearings. Because it is necessary, in order for them to attain the objects of their creation, to exercise a portion of the governmental right of eminent domain, the courts have become confused, and regarded them as likewise possessing the immunities of government. Therefore it has been said that if the transaction of the business for which they are organized necessarily results in a private nuisance, the individual, and not the corporation, must bear the loss, in order to protect the public from inconvenience. But this conclusion by no means follows from the premises. A public service corporation is precisely like any private corporation, with the exception that it is permitted to exercise the paramount power of the state to attain its objects. It can take what property it needs, wherever it can find it, upon paying for it; and although in the transaction of its business it causes injury to private property, no individual can stop such business, whatever injury it causes, provided it is willing to make good the injury. But with regard to such injury it has no greater immunity from liability to make it good than a private citizen, and the legislature can give it none. That matter is of no interest or concern to the public, but is merely a question whether the cost of the enterprise, which includes the damage caused by it, shall be borne by the private corporation, which is to obtain the profits, or by the private citizen, who has no interest in it other than as one of the public. The answer to this question, upon principles of justice, and upon those at the foundation of our government, seems so plain that it is strange that more than one answer should be given. The cost should be borne by the corporation which has undertaken to bear it, and this cost includes the depreciation in the value of adjoining property by reason of the business proving a nuisance to it; and the legislature cannot decree otherwise.

But cannot the legislature authorize the creation of a private nuisance by the public itself, or a subdivision of it, without making compensation to the person injured? The general fundamental principles of the government would probably answer this question in the same manner they have answered the former ones. But to protect himself against just such injuries, the citizen placed in his Constitution the declaration that private property should not be taken for public use without just compensation. The term "property" is not confined to the physical land, gravel, and earth, or the buildings, trees, and shrubs, but is the sum of all the advantages which flow from the possession of a title to land. If the necessary result of a particular act done by the public, or a particular use of a parcel of land, is to destroy a portion of the usefulness of adjoining land, either by noisome odors hovering over it, or the pollution of the water thereon, or the destruction of the necessary quiet which by nature belongs to it, that property is taken to the extent that its legitimate use is destroyed, as fully as though physical occupation of the land had occurred. In planning any enterprise, the public must secure land enough so that the whole enterprise, including its deleterious effects, can be confined to the property owned by the public; and the Constitution will not permit the public to secure only enough land to accommodate the material necessities of its enterprise, and then compel adjoining property to bear the burden of the remainder. So far as it does so, it creates a nuisance to that property, which, so far as it destroys value, constitutes a taking which the legislature has no power under the Constitution to permit, unless due compensation is made.

P. H. V.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

CLARENCE SHOEMAKER, By Next Friend,
v.

D. W. JACKSON, Appt.

(.... Iowa.)

1. Assault—assisting elopement—counterclaim.

The expense which a father has been compelled to incur to repair the clothing of his minor daughter and restore her to health, and the value of the services lost during her illness, may be set up by him as a counterclaim when sued for damages for whipping one who conspired with a third person to secure the elopement of the daughter, and assisted in taking the daughter from home under circumstances from which it might reasonably be supposed that her clothing would be injured and her health impaired.

2. Same—justification.

Assisting in the elopement of a minor girl will not justify the father in administering a whipping to the one so doing, which is the result of deliberation, after the lapse of sufficient cooling time.

(July 13, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Montgomery County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged assault and battery. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. M. Junkin and Ralph Pringle, for appellant:

When exemplary damages are claimed, provocation should be admitted in mitigation.

Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 275.

The time intervening between the time of Case Note.—The reason for the rule that evidence of provocation is inadmissible in mitigation of damages for an assault committed after "the blood has had time to cool" is stated in Rochester v. Anderson, 1 Bibb, 428, in the following language:

"The law, out of respect to the frailty of human passions, may look with an eye of some indulgence upon the violation of good order, produced in the moment of irritation and excitement from abusive language. But where there has been time for deliberation, the peace of society requires that men should suppress their passions; and neither reason nor law will suffer them to claim a diminution of their responsibility for their misconduct. If opprobrious words for which the law allows an action have been used of a man, the law furnishes a remedy, and will not permit him to redress his own wrong. If they are so frivolous as not to be deemed by the law actionable, a peaceful citizen, when he has had the assault and the provocation is tested by closeness, not of time, but by causal relation.

Wharton, Ev. § 262; Field. Damages, § 118; Prentiss v. Shaw, 56 Me. 427, 96 Am. Dec. 475; Ward v. White, 86 Va. 212, 19 Am. St. Rep. 883, 9 S. E. 1021.

All who assist in doing an unlawful act become answerable for all the consequences of such act.

Cooley, Torts, p. 133; Turner v. Hitchcock, 20 Iowa, 310; Addison, Torts, § 1321; Webb's Pollock, Torts, p. 231; Brown v. Webster City, 115 Iowa, 511, 88 N. W. 1070; Corey v. Havener, 182 Mass. 250, 65 N. E. 69; Gunder v. Tibbits, 153 Ind. 591, 55 N. E. 762.

Messrs. Beeson & Pomeroy, for appellee:

The court did not err in refusing to submit to the jury the issue of mitigation, for time for reflection, will consult the peace and good order of society, as well as his own dignity, in disregarding them."

Among other cases on which the decision in Ireland v. Elliott, 5 Iowa, 478, 68 Am. Dec. 715 (cited in SHOEMAKER v. JACKSON), is based, is Avery v. Ray, 1 Mass. 12, in which, it appearing that the assault was deliberately planned, and committed without any provocation given by the plaintiff at the time, evidence of the circulation of a slanderous story by the plaintiff concerning the defendant's sister was excluded, Sedgwick, J., remarking that while he should be in favor of admitting evidence of provocation given, in mitigation of damages, upon a liberal scale, "to admit such evidence, where the blood had had time to cool, would be extending the rule so as to render it impossible to say where the court should stop."

Also cited in Ireland v. Elliott are Lee v. Woolsey, 19 Johns. 318, 10 Am. Dec. 230, where evidence of statements made by plaintiff, which came to defendant's knowledge on the evening preceding the assault, was excluded, the court considering such antecedent facts not "fairly to be considered as a part of one and the same transaction;" Barry v. Ingles, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 102, in which evidence of a provocation given some months before, by newspaper publications, was excluded; Sledge v. Pope, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 402, in which the rule under discussion was recognized, but held not to exclude evidence of prior threats made by defendant; and Waters v. Brown, 3 A. K. Marsh. 557, where, at the time of the assault, plaintiff presented a pistol at defendant, who thereupon shot him. Evidence of plaintiff's threats to kill defendant, made some time before, was held admissible, the distinction from the rule being made on the ground that they related to the acts which the plaintiff was attempting when he received his wound, and conduced to explain the acts of each party and the motives with which each acted in the encounter.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the reason that the evidence showed without conflict that the alleged provocation occurred the day before the assault, and the assault was made premeditatedly.

Gronan v. Kukkuck, 59 Iowa, 18, 12 N. W. 748; Thrall v. Knapp, 17 Iowa, 468; Ireland v. Elliott, 5 Iowa, 478, 68 Am. Dec. 715; Keiser v. Smith, 71 Ala. 481, 46 Am. Rep. 342; Brooks v. Carter, 34 Fed. 505; Carson v. Singleton, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1626, 65 S. W. 821; Quinby v. Minnesota Tribune Co., 38 Minn. 528, 8 Am. St. Rep. 693, 38 N. W. 623.

There was no error in refusing to permit defendant to offer evidence of damages after the separation of Shoemaker and Weyer.

Neither the injuries claimed nor any other injuries could have been anticipated by Shoemaker when he parted from Weyer.

Bishop, Non-Contract Law. §§ 37-47; 41

Ireland v. Elliott has itself been cited as an authority for the exclusion of evidence in Thrall v. Knapp, 17 Iowa, 468, of a slander circulated by plaintiff concerning defendant's daughters, brought to his knowledge on the day before, and again about three hours before the assault; in Gronan v. Kukkuck, 59 Iowa, 18, 12 N. W. 748, of a provocation arising on a day prior to the assault; in Cummins v. Crawford, 88 Ill. 312, 30 Am. Rep. 558, of threats made against the life of defendant, twenty days before; in Martin v. Minor, 50 Miss. 42, of the fact that defendants had learned about a month before that plaintiff was the father of their sister's illegitimate child; in Keiser v. Smith, 71 Ala. 481, 46 Am. Rep. 342, of the publication of libelous articles on the forenoon of the same day.

The case of Thrall v. Knapp, 17 Iowa, 468, relied upon in SHOEMAKER v. JACKSON, cites as authorities Cushman v. Waddell, 57, Fed. Cas. No. 3,516, where evidence that plaintiff, a schoolmaster, had severely punished defendant's son, was let in "to show the situation of the transaction," that the jury might decide "whether the defendant acted under the influence of the sudden excitement produced by the situation and story of his son, or a disposition to inflict a wanton injury or disgrace upon the plaintiff." Anderson v. Johnson, 3 Harr. & J. 102, where evidence of a quarrel between plaintiff and the defendant's friend, some time anterior to the assault was held to be improperly admitted; Matthews v. Terry, 10 Conn. 455, where evidence of misconduct before the chastisement complained of, of the plaintiff, who was defendant's hired boy, was held properly excluded; Fullerton v. Warrick, 3 Blackf. 219, 25 Am. Dec. 99, where evidence that the plaintiff had been for several years past, and up to the time of the commission of the assault, in the constant habit of abusing and slandering the defendant, and about six months before had said that the defendant was an unprincipled man and a liar, was held to 328; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 5-10; Sharp v. Powell, L. R. 7 C. P. 253; Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. §§ 29-31; 1 Addison, Torts, Wood's ed. §§ 10-12; Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 295, 40 Am. Rep. 649; Stewart v. Strong, 20 Ind. App. 44, 67 Am. St. Rep. 248, 50 N. E. 95; Lee v. Burlington, 113 Iowa, 356, 86 Am. St. Rep. 379, 85 N. W. 618; Dubuque Wood & Coal Asso. v. Dubuque, 30 Iowa, 176; Georgia v. Kepford, 45 Iowa, 48; Bosch v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 44 Iowa, 402, 24 Am. St. Rep. 754.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One Weyer and plaintiff were walking along a street of Villisca in the afternoon of July 31, 1903, when defendant requested the latter to come up to his office. He did so, and when both were inside defendant locked the door and administered to plaintiff a severe whipping. He had provided a whip for this purpose some time previous, having deliberately decided to have Weyer arrested and to chastise Shoemaker. To the petition claiming damages the defendant pleaded certain facts in mitigation, and also a counterclaim.

The only rulings complained of are the refusal of the court to submit the issue as to mitigation, and the rejection of certain evidence. The latter will be first considered. It appears that Weyer, then twenty years of age, had been paying his attentions to defendant's sixteen year old daughter, and that the plaintiff, a youth of eighteen summers, was trying to court the niece of a near neighbor. The boys had seen these girls at this neighbor's house in the afternoon of July 29th, and in the evening a be improper. See, in this connection, Dolan v. Fagan, 63 Barb. 73, in which evidence of a series of provocations, repeated and continued from day to day, and that every time the parties met the plaintiff took occasion to insult the defendant with most opprobrious language, was held to be improperly excluded, the court saying that whether a party has had a reasonable time to cool his blood depends on the peculiar circumstances of each case.

Thrall v. Knapp, 17 Iowa, 468, has been cited in State v. Lawry, 4 Nev. 161, a criminal case, in which evidence of the acts relied on as a provocation, which occurred and were known to defendant a day or two prior to the assault, was excluded.

Gronan v. Kukkuuk, 59 Iowa, 18, 12 N. W. 748, has been cited in Quinby v. Minnesota Tribune Co. 38 Minn. 528, 8 Am. St. Rep. 693, 38 N. W. 623, an action for libel, in which evidence of a publication that induced the libel in question, made the day before, was held improper.

The test of causal relation, referred to in SHOEMAKER v. JACKSON, shows the application of a broader view of what constitutes the res gesta, viz., that evidence of the provocation is admissible if it gives color or character to the act of the defendant in committing the assault, as opposed to the narrower rule of most of the preceding cases, that provocation is not part of the res gesta when reasonable time for reflection and for reason to regain control intervenes. This divergence seems, however, to exist more in principle than in practice.

In the case cited, Ward v. White, 86 Va. 212, 19 Am. St. Rep. 883, 9 S. E. 1021, the plaintiff, articles in whose newspaper, published the day before, had aroused the animosity of the defendant, was shot by the latter without warning, while walking along the street. Evidence of the articles was held proper in mitigation of damages, the court resting its decision upon the ground that defendant's passion had not had time to subside, as well as upon that 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) of causal relation, saying: "They caused the assault, provoked it, were of a character to greatly excite and inflame the passions of the defendant, and, while the time extended itself through the period during which the whereabouts of the plaintiff were unknown, the subsequent meeting brought the whole matter vividly before the mind, and again ignited the passions of a man thus put under the ban of a newspaper insult, which was, at the very time of the assault, under the eyes of thousands of his fellowmen, and which tended towards his utter degradation. He was taunted with the matter on every hand, and so far from cooling time, the lapse of time, itself short, and enforced by the absence of the offender, had only more and more excited the outraged passions of the defendant, and caused him to do an act which it is unreasonable to suppose he would have committed without them. They . . . were as essentially a part of the case as the assault itself." From which it appears that causal relation as a sole test is not supported by the case.

The case of Prentiss v. Shaw, 56 Me. 427, 96 Am. Dec. 475, cited in Ward v. White, 86 Va. 212, 19 Am. St. Rep. 883, 9 S. E. 1021, was an action for unlawful arrest and imprisonment, wherein defendant sought to introduce evidence that on the same day plaintiff had made certain statements, in consequence of which his arrest followed, which evidence was held admissible in mitigation of punitive damages, as giving color and character to the act.

In the case of Davis v. Franke, 33 Gratt. 416, which is also cited in Ward v. White, it is said:

"The rule which confines the defendant to proof of recent provocations received from the plaintiff is subject to modifications which more or less qualify the rule according to the particular circumstances of each case. In Fraser v. Berkeley, 7 Car. & P. 621, it appeared that the assault was made three or four days after the publication of the libel. Lord Abinger said the law witness testified to having observed plaintiff hand defendant's daughter a piece of paper when the girls were at defendant's home, where they stopped that night. After the family had retired, defendant was awakened by whistling and heavy walking on the pavement. This continued some time, when he noticed a light had been struck in the girls' room. He then arose, and went downstairs to the front porch. The noise ceased at once, and he returned to his couch. This was repeated. The third time he noticed a person get in range with the window in the girls' room, whistle and stamp, and by going about the house he found such person to be Weyer, who, after being scolded, left. Immediately afterwards the plaintiff stepped from behind a tree, and, in the conversation which followed, stated that they were watching to see that other boys were not with the girls, admitted that he had been instrumental in effecting a reconciliation between Weyer and defendant's daughter, declared that he did not know of defendant's objections to Weyer, and promised not to interfere farther. A ladder, which had been placed by somebody at the window of the girls' room, was then removed, and defendant retired. He was up again at 4 o'clock A. M., only to find the young women gone. He immediately began search, and, after telephoning to neighboring towns and ascertaining that Weyer had left the livery stable with a team at about 2 o'clock in the morning, met plaintiff as he was returning with said team. In response to inquiry the plaintiff informed defendant that he had left Weyer and defendant's daughter at Nodaway. Defendant, with the town marshal, left at once for that place, but found they had not been there. He then telephoned to Villisca, and was advised that they were at one Himiller's, 1½ miles south-east of Villisca. He then drove there, and learned that they had left after getting breakfast. The search was continued by the party until noon, when the marshal sent for men and teams to assist. At about 4 o'clock in the afternoon Weyer and the daughter were discovered, and the latter returned to her home.

After the facts as recited had been detailed, the following question was propounded to the defendant: Now, doctor, I will ask you the condition your daughter was in when brought home, as to her clothes being soiled, and her being sick, and how long that sickness continued?" This was objected to on the ground that it had not been made to appear that plaintiff caused or contributed to the injury of her clothing or the physical condition of the girl. The objection was sustained, whereupon counsel for the defendant stated that he proposed to show that defendant's daughter was strong and healthy prior to this escapade, but on her return she was ill, weakened, and confined to her bed for a week under a physician's care, and had since suffered from the nervous shock; that her clothing was soiled and torn; and that he proposed to show the value of her services lost thereby, and the cost of medical attendance and of repairing would be an unwise law if it did not make allowance for human infirmities; and if a person commit violence at a time when he is smarting under immediate provocation, that is matter of mitigation. He further said that in the case before him, as the blood has had time to cool, the parties, if death ensued, would be guilty of murder. The provocation three days before would not have availed them for going deliberately three days after to take their vengeance. At the same time he said, 'It appears to me too severe to say you should not look at the cause which induced the assault.' In other cases it has been held that although a considerable time may have elapsed between the provocation and the date of the assault, if the provocation was communicated to the defendant immediately preceding the assault it is admissible in evidence. Gaither v. Blowers, 11 Md. 536.

"And so, where the acts done or words spoken some time previous to the assault are a part of a series of provocations, repeated and continued up to the time of the assault, they may be received. Stetlar v. Nellis, 60 Barb. 524, 42 How. Pr. 163. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"In Rawlings v. Com. 1 Leigh, 581, 19 Am. Dec. 757, the general court, while declaring that the rule in civil and criminal cases is the same, and that acts of provocation received so recently the blood has not had sufficient time to cool are only admissible in mitigation of damages, seemed to concede that, where at the time of the assault allusion is made to the provocation previously given, the evidence is admissible as explanatory of the nature of the assault: provided the connection between it and the antecedent provocation plainly appears."

The rule as stated in SHOEMAKER v. JACKSON may be found in the following text-books: 2 Greenl. Ev. § 93; Field, Damages, § 604, p. 475; 1 Sutherland, Damages, 227, 228. In 2 Sedgwick on Damages, 7th ed. p. 525, "547, it is said: "The defendant cannot give in evidence, in mitigation of damages, the acts or declarations of the plaintiff at a different time, or any antecedent facts, which are not fairly to be considered as part of one and the same transaction, though they may have been ever so irritating or provoking."

her clothing. Conceding all this, the court held that such damages were not the proximate consequence of what plaintiff had done. In this ruling we cannot concur. The clothing furnished his minor daughter was the property of the defendant, and he was entitled to recover for any injury thereto which resulted directly from plaintiff's act. Parmelee v. Smith, 21 Ill. 620; Dickinson v. Winchester, 4 Cush. 114, 50 Am. Dec. 760. So, too, was defendant entitled to recover for any loss of services or for medical attendance occasioned directly by the acts of plaintiff. See 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1044 et seq. This does not seem to be questioned, but it is urged that the sickness and injury to clothing did not result from plaintiff's acts in taking the parties to Himiller's, but after they had reached there. This view ignores the evidence tending to show a conspiracy between plaintiff and Weyer, in pursuance of which the latter attempted to elope with the daughter, and that what was done might have been found to have been done in pursuance of such conspiracy. True, the plaintiff and Weyer denied that any arrangement had been made prior to starting for Himiller's place, but this merely raised an issue to be determined by the jury. The facts that plaintiff, when in company with Weyer, handed the note to defendant's daughter, if he so did; that he and Weyer repeatedly signaled to her at a late hour of the night under circumstances indicating a purpose to induce the girls to leave the house; that he accompanied Weyer and defendant's daughter to Himiller's, and then, to put defendant on the wrong track, deliberately deceived him,—these were circumstances tending to establish the existence of a conspiracy between the young men to deprive the defendant of the custody of his daughter, and were sufficient to have sustained a verdict had the jury so found. If so, each was liable for all damages naturally flowing from any wrongful act of either in carrying out their joint enterprise. It cannot be said that it was contemplated that flight should terminate at Himiller's, but little more than a mile from her home. Pursuit was anticipated, else deception would not have been practised to put defendant off track. Weyer and the girl had no other means of continuing their journey, after plaintiff left them at Himiller's, than on foot. That the parties to the conspiracy, if such there was, contemplated that the journey should be continued, the jury might well have found. They knew the conditions as to weather, roads, and fields, and that these were such that injury to clothing and health might result. At any rate, if such injuries were the natural consequence of what was done in executing the design of these young men, and resulted in damage to the defendant in the way of injury to his daughter's clothing and loss of her services and expense for medical attendance, he should have been allowed therefor on his counterclaim. The evidence was admissible. The plaintiff's conduct was most contemptible throughout, and he should not be permitted to escape responsibility for any damages directly consequent from the acts of either himself or Weyer, if within the scope of and in carrying out their common purpose.

2. The court instructed the jury not to take into consideration the circumstances pleaded in mitigation, in fixing the amount of damages to be allowed plaintiff. This was correct. The defendant admitted that he had deliberately decided to whip plaintiff and prosecute Weyer. Provocation, to be admissible in mitigation of damages, must be so recent and immediate as to induce a presumption that the violence was committed under the immediate influence of the passion thus wrongfully excited. If the assault has been made after time for reflection, and under circumstances leading to the presumption that it was for revenge, he stands in the position of an original trespasser, and conduct of the other party will not serve as an extenuation. The test is whether "the blood has had time to cool." Ireland v. Elliott, 5 Iowa, 478, 68 Am. Dec. 715; Thrall v. Knapp, 17 Iowa, 468; Gronan v. Kukkuick, 59 Iowa, 18, 12 N. W. 748. In the last two cases it seems to have been thought that a provocation happening the day previous to the assault ought not to be shown, for that sufficient time had intervened to allow the passions to subside and reason to regain control of the mind. Conceding the correctness of the rule as applied to the facts of those decisions, it is doubtful whether any arbitrary limitation of time should be adopted. The test is not that of time, but of causal relation, and provocation happening a longer time previous may, in exceptional circumstances, be shown. See Ward v. White, 86 Va. 212, 19 Am. St. Rep. 883, 9 S. E. 1021. In the instant case, however, what the defendant did was after deliberation, and not in the heat of passion. He may have been aggravated with the conduct of the boy, but he did not whip him in the heat of passion.

Reversed.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF WEBSTER CITY

v.

WILLIAM J. DUTCHER.

PLANO MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Cross Defendant, Appt.

(.... Iowa.)

1. Breach of warranty—question for jury.

The question of breach of warranty that a machine is of good material and workmanship, and will, when properly adjusted and operated, do good work, is, upon conflicting evidence, for the jury.

2. Sale—notice of defect—waiver.

The requirement of a contract for sale of a machine that notice of its failure to work must be given within two days of its receipt is waived by the continued and persistent efforts of the seller's agents, including the one who made the sale, to make the machine work after the expiration of the time limited.

3. Same—authority of agent.

The authority of an agent who sells a machine to waive a condition as to notice of breach of warranty is not destroyed by a provision of the contract that "no person has any authority to add to, or abridge or change this warranty in any manner."

4. Warranty of machine—trying to make it good.

Delay in returning a machine which does not fulfil the warranty is justified so long as the seller's agent continues to work upon it and hold out encouragement to the buyer that it will be made as warranted; and its return within a few days thereafter is sufficient.

5. Breach of warranty—remedy.

A purchaser has a right to return the machine, and his remedy is not limited to an action for damages, under a contract for the purchase of a machine warranted to do good work, and requiring the purchaser to give written notice if, after two days' trial, it appears not to be as represented.

6. Question for jury—reasonable time.

Whether or not a warranted machine is returned within a reasonable time after the seller's abandonment of attempts to make it fulfil the warranty is a question for the determination of the jury.

7. Surety—as party on cross petition.

A surety on a contract for the purchase of a machine is not a necessary party to proceedings by cross petition on behalf of the purchaser, when sued by an assignee

Case Note.—As an authority for the doctrine that the notice of the failure of a machine to work properly, which must be given the vendor within a specified time, according to the contract of sale, is waived by the attempts of an agent or representative of the vendor to remedy the defect, the court cites the case of Champion Mach. Co. v. Mann, 42 Kan. 372, 22 Pac. 417. This case involved the sale of a harvester under a conditional warranty that if, after a trial, it failed to work, the purchaser must give immediate notice in writing. It was held that the notice was waived by the presence of the manager of the company, who had authority to sell machines and to receive those which should be returned as unsatisfactory, and who personally supervised the operation of the machine after it had failed to work.

Champion Mach. Co. v. Mann, 42 Kan. 372, 22 Pac. 417, was cited in Aultman & T. Machinery Co. v. Wier, 87 Kan. 674, 74 Pac. 227, in which it was held that notice to the selling agent of the failure of the machine to work, and the attempts of the machinists, who were under the direction of the selling agent of a branch office, to make the machine work, did not relieve the purchaser of his duty to notify the vendor, according to the terms of the contract, of the failure of the machine to work. The court distinguished this case from the case of Champion Mach. Co. v. Mann, on the ground of a difference in the contract of sale and the person who had notice of the defects.

In Baker v. Nichols & S. Co. 10 Okla. 692, 65 Pac. 100, the court recognized the doctrine of L.R.A. (N.S.)

trine laid down in Champion Mach. Co. v. Mann, 42 Kan. 372, 22 Pac. 417, and held that the provision of the contract for the sale of a threshing machine and engine, which requires that a written notice of the failure of the machine to work be given to the seller within a specified time, is intended for the benefit of the seller, and that, when an agent is sent upon request of the purchaser to fix the machine, the vendor will be held to have waived the provision of the contract requiring notice.

As another authority, the court in FIRST NAT. BANK v. DUTCHER referred to the case of Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Welch, 47 Minn. 183, 49 N. W. 740, in which it was held that the company, by sending their machinists to make repairs, waived the requirement as to notice in case the machine failed to work. This case was cited with approval in Nichols & S. Co. v. Wiedemann, 72 Minn. 344, 75 N. W. 208, 76 N. W. 41, which held formal notice in writing of the failure of the machine to work was waived by showing that the vendor's expert was present when the machine was set up, and saw that it did not work, and by showing that some agent or officer of the vendor was present nearly every day, trying to make the machine work, and that the foreman and the agent whose special duty it was to look after machines were also present.

But in Trapp v. New Birdsall Co. 109 Wis. 556, 85 N. W. 478, it was held that the mere fact that an agent of the vendor visited the boiler which had been sold, and attempted to make it work properly, after an insufficient notice had been given of the

on the purchase-money notes, to recover against the seller for breach of his warranty of the machine.

1. Suretyship—parol evidence of.

That one who signed a contract to purchase a machine was a surety only may be shown by parol for the purpose of showing that he was not a necessary party to a cross petition by the purchaser, when sued on the purchase-money notes, filed to bring in and hold the seller liable for breach of warranty of the machine.

2. Supersedeas—proceeding with trial.

The filing of a supersedeas bond upon appealing from an order refusing to proceed with a case as an equitable action does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to proceed with the trial as one at law.

(July 13, 1905.)

APPEAL by cross defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Hamilton County holding him liable for breach of warranty of a machine for the enforcement of the purchase-money notes for which the action was brought. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Wesley Martin, for appellant:

It is competent for the parties to provide by contract that a particular course shall be pursued upon a breach of the contract, and the parties are bound to pursue the course agreed upon.

King v. Towsley, 64 Iowa, 75, 19 N. W. 859; Aultman-Taylor Machinery Co. v. Ride-nour, 96 Iowa, 638, 65 N. W. 980; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Brower, 88 Iowa, 607, 55 N. W. 537, 94 Iowa, 144, 62 N. W. 700; Davis' Sons v. Robinson, 67 Iowa, 355, 25 N. W. 280; Russell v. Murdock, 79 Iowa, 101, 18 Am. St. Rep. 348, 44 N. W. 237.

The declarations of an agent are inadmissible to change, alter, or vary the express provision of the contract.

Lee v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 79 Iowa, 379, 44 N. W. 683; Whitam v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 96 Iowa, 737, 65 N. W. 403; Ruthven Bros. v. American F. Ins. Co. 92 Iowa, 316, 60 N. W. 663; Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Crow, 70 Iowa, 340, 30 N. W. 609; Zimmerman v. Home Ins. Co. 77 Iowa, 685, 42 N. W. 462.

When, upon the face of the contract, the name of a party appears as a purchaser, such contract cannot be varied by parol, so as to show that such person is not in machine's failure to work, there being no proof that the vendor sent the agent, does not establish a waiver of the notice required by the contract. But the court said that if the seller acts in respect to remedying defects in the machine, without the notice which the contract calls for, the omission to insist upon such notice effectually changes the contract so as to make it conform to the conduct of the parties; and that such conduct waives the giving of any notice other than that upon which it is based, citing, as authorities, Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Welch, 47 Minn. 183, 49 N. W. 740; Kingman v. Watson, 97 Wis. 596, 73 N. W. 438; Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Feary, 40 Neb. 226, 58 N. W. 713; and Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Trindle, 71 Iowa, 600, 33 N. W. 79.

In Northern Electrical Mfg. Co. v. H. M. Benjamin Coal Co. 116 Wis. 136, 92 N. W. 553, the court held that notice according to the contract, of the failure of an electric motor to work, was not waived by the vendor's remedying slight defects in the machine before it was set up, and by proof showing that communications passed between the vendor and its agents concerning the vendee's having trouble before the machine was set up. The court said that "mere information of defects in the machinery, communicated to respondent in a manner different from that stipulated in the contract, not acted upon, in lieu of the notice agreed upon, did not operate to waive the condition of the guaranty,—citing Davis' Sons v. Butrick, 68 Iowa, 94, 28 N. W. 27; Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Welch, 47 Minn. 183, 49 N. W. 740."

Other cases citing the authorities mentioned in FIRST NAT. BANK v. DUTCHER, and sustaining substantially the same doctrine, are Canham v. Piano Mfg. Co. 3 N. D. 232, 55 N. W. 583; Robinson v. Berkey, 100 Iowa, 142, 62 Am. St. Rep. 549, 60 N. W. 434; Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Kennedy, 7 Ind. App. 502, 34 N. E. 856; and Aultman & T. Co. v. Frazier, 5 Kan. App. 207, 47 Pac. 156.

The text-book writers also refer to the authorities cited in the case of FIRST NAT. BANK v. DUTCHER. In Mechem on Sales, § 1384, it is stated that the vendee's failure to make the test or give the notice, unless waived by the seller, will be deemed to be an acceptance of the goods. On the subject of waiver of notice, § 1385 states that the time or manner of notice stipulated for may be waived expressly or impliedly; as where the seller or his agent requests the continuance of the test after the expiration of the time specified, or where he acts without objection upon irregular or informal notice. But waiver will not be implied where the seller disavows any further responsibility, or refuses to remedy or take back the article. Section 1812 states that when the parties have stipulated for notice of the defect and an opportunity to remedy it, such notice and opportunity are, unless waived, conditions precedent to the buyer's right to maintain an action for the breach of warranty.

As an authority for the power of the agent who sells the machine to waive a condition as to notice of the failure of the machine to work properly, FIRST NAT. BANK v. DUTCHER cites Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co.

fact a purchaser, but a surety for the purchaser.

Daly v. W. W. Kimball Co. 67 Iowa, 132, 24 N. W. 756; Allen v. Bryson, 67 Iowa, 591, 56 Am. Rep. 358, 25 N. W. 820; Davis v. Robinson, 71 Iowa, 618, 33 N. W. 132; Junge v. Bowman, 72 Iowa, 648, 34 N. W. 612; Osgood v. Bauder, 82 Iowa, 171, 47 N. W. 1001; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Markert, 107 Iowa, 340, 78 N. W. 33; McEnery v. McEnery, 110 Iowa, 718, 80 N. W. 1071; Jackson v. Mott, 76 Iowa, 263, 41 N. W. 12; Meader v. Allen, 110 Iowa, 588, 81 N. W. 790.

Where a purchaser of machinery ascertains upon trial that the machinery does not comply with the contract of purchase, and cannot be made to comply, it is his duty promptly to return the property.

2 Mechem, Sales, 1901 ed. §§ 1380, 1382-1384; Allison v. Vaughan, 40 Iowa, 421; Frey-Sheckler Co. v. Iowa Brick Co. 104 Iowa, 497, 73 N. W. 1051; Berthold v. Seevers Mfg. Co. 89 Iowa, 506, 56 N. W. 669; Brown v. Foster, 108 N. Y. 387, 15 N. E. 608; Olson v. Mayer, 56 Wis. 551, 14 N. W. 640; Pottlitzer v. Wesson, 8 Ind. App. 472, 35 N. E. 1030; Palmer v. Banfield, 86 Wis. 441, 56 N. W. 1090; Young Bros. Mach. Co. v. Young, 11 Mich. 118, 69 N. W. 152; Hirshhorn v. Stewart, 49 Iowa, 418; Mackey v. Swartz, 60 Iowa, 710, 15 N. W. 576.

Mr. W. J. Covil for appellee First National Bank.

Messrs. Boeye & Henderson, for appellee Dutcher:

The company, in legal contemplation, had notice from what its general and local agents saw for themselves.

Briggs v. M. Rumely Co. 96 Iowa, 202, 64 N. W. 784; Massillon Engine & Thresher Co. v. Shirmer, 122 Iowa, 699, 98 N. W. 504; Blaess v. Nichols & S. Co. 115 Iowa, 373, 88 N. W. 829; Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9; Peterson v. Walter A. Wood 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. Rep. 399, 66 N. W. 96. This was a case involving the sale of a reaping machine subject to the condition that immediate written notice of its failure to work well must be given the vendor, and that "no one has authority to add to, abridge, or change the contract." The court held that an agent who sells the machines, sets them up, and sees that they work properly, and receives them back in the event they do not work, has authority, notwithstanding the provision of the contract to the contrary, to waive written notice of the fact that the machine did not work, where he was present at the time it was started, and saw that it did not work.

The case of Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. 97 Iowa, 148, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. Rep. 399, 66 N. W. 96.

Dutcher did not keep the machine an unreasonable length of time, however long if he did it at the request of the company or its general or local agents.

Warder, B. & G. Co. v. Horne Bros. 110 Iowa, 285, 81 N. W. 591; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Brower, 94 Iowa, 144, 62 N. W. 700; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Russell, 86 Iowa, 556, 53 N. W. 310.

It was proper to prove that Mrs. Dutcher was only a surety, provided the company knew the fact.

Piper v. Newcomer, 25 Iowa, 221; Preston v. Gould, 64 Iowa, 44, 19 N. W. 834.

It was for Wm. J. Dutcher alone to pursue the company for breach of warranty.

Mahaska County State Bank v. Christ, 82 Iowa, 56, 47 N. W. 886, 87 Iowa, 415, 54 N. W. 450.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On September 9, 1901, the appellee William J. Dutcher, with his mother Permelia J. Dutcher, as an alleged surety, entered into a written contract with the Plano Manufacturing Company for the purchase of a cornhusking and shredding machine, manufactured by said company. The agreed price of the machine was $850, for which Dutcher executed several notes, one of which was assigned to the plaintiff bank before maturity, and in due course of business. The bank having brought action to recover upon said note from William J. Dutcher, he appeared thereto and filed a cross petition, impleading the Plano Manufacturing Company. By this pleading it is alleged that the machine was purchased under a warranty, and, not complying therewith, the defendant had returned it and demanded of the plaintiff a surrender of the notes given by him for the purchase price, which demand was refused. It is also alleged that 59 Am. St. Rep. 399, 66 N. W. 96. was cited in Blaess v. Nichols & S. Co. 115 Iowa, 375, 88 N. W. 829. as an authority for the proposition that a general agent having power to sell machines has authority, after having entered into the contract, to change or waive its terms.

FIRST NAT. BANK v. DUTCHER also cites Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9, in which it was held that an agent having power to sell threshing machines has authority, while the machine is being tested, to waive the provision of the contract relating to notice of its failure to work. This case was cited in the case of D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 380, 47 N. W. 70. and was recognized as a safe guide as to the authority of agents to waive conditions as to notice.

the notes have been transferred by the company to an innocent holder, against whom the defense based on a breach of warranty is unavailing. It is further shown that the warranty relied upon was in writing, and by its terms required the purchaser to give written notice to the company and its local agent, if, after two days' trial, the machine proved to be not as represented. The cross petition alleges that this condition was in fact complied with; but it is also claimed that the several conditions upon which the warranty was made to depend were waived by the company and its agents, and that by their request and direction the appellee continued the use of the machine and the attempt to make it work successfully beyond the time mentioned in the contract. Damages are asked from the company for the full amount of the notes given for the purchase price, $650, and for freight paid upon the machine, $29.25, with interest. The manufacturing company admits the sale of the machine and the warranty thereof upon the terms stated in the writing, but denies that the said purchaser has performed the conditions thereof on his part, and denies that it has ever waived such performance. In the principal case the bank recovered judgment against Dutcher for the full amount of the note sued upon, and from this judgment no appeal has been taken. On the issues joined upon the cross petition there was a trial to a jury and verdict in favor of Dutcher, and against the Plano Manufacturing Company, in the sum of $750. From the judgment entered on this verdict the manufacturing company appeals. The appellant contends, first, that no breach of the warranty is shown by the record; and, second, that the record discloses without controversy the failure of the appellee to comply with the conditions upon which the contract makes the effectiveness of the warranty depend.

1. The proposition that the alleged breach of warranty is without support in the evidence cannot be maintained. The undertaking of the company was that the "machine is warranted to be of good material and workmanship, and, when properly adjusted and operated, to do good work." This is probably neither more nor less than the warranty which, in the absence of the writing, the law would imply, that the machine was reasonably well made, of good material, and adapted to the uses and purposes for which it was constructed. Without attempting to rehearse the testimony, we may say that, if the appellee and his witnesses are to be believed, the history of the attempt to operate the machine, from the time it was started under the supervision of the appellant's agent until the experiment was finally abandoned, was a continuous series of failures. According to their story, though handled with ordinary care and skill, the machine was not only inefficient and incapable of turning out a reasonable amount of work, but the breaking of parts and consequent serious delays were a matter of daily occurrence. True, the appellant's testimony tends to show that the machine worked with reasonable success, and that the breaks and failures complained of were, in a large degree, at least, occasioned by negligence or want of skill on the part of the appellee and his assistants; but the conflict thus presented was one of fact, and, under familiar principles, its determination was a question for the jury.

2. The question most strenuously insisted upon in argument is whether there is sufficient evidence of a performance or waiver of the condition attached to the written warranty to justify the trial court in submitting the appellee's claim for damages to the jury. The conditions pleaded in the company's answer, and upon which it relies to defeat the recovery upon the warranty, are contained in written contract or order given for the machine, and are as follows: "If, within two days from the time of its first use, the said machine shall fail in any respect to fill the warranty, written notice shall immediately be given by the purchaser to the Plano Manufacturing Company, at Chicago, Illinois, by registered letter, and to the local agent through whom the same was ordered, stating wherein it fails to fill the warranty, and a reasonable time shall be given the Plano Manufacturing Company, and the agent through whom ordered, to send a competent person to remedy the difficulty; the purchaser to give the necessary and friendly assistance, and furnish the necessary material and power to start, operate, and test the machine, and help in general wherever it may be needed, free of charge.

. . . Possession or use of said machine after two days from the time of its first use, without giving notice as above, shall be conclusive evidence of the fulfillment of the warranty and full satisfaction to the purchaser."

Concerning the requirement for notice to the appellant, there was evidence from which the jury could find that, at the close of the second day's trial, the appellee did write and mail to the appellant's proper address an unregistered letter giving notice of his objections to the machine. It is argued that the failure to register the letter is such an omission as will, in itself, defeat any claim under the warranty. Upon this point the trial court instructed the jury that if the appellee, within the required time, mailed a letter to the appellant, giving notice of the alleged defect in the machine, and the appellant did in fact receive the letter in due course of mail, then the failure to register was immaterial and the notice was sufficient. Error is assigned upon the giving of this instruction. The rule stated that the trial court has more or less support in the cases. See Advance Thresher Co. v. Curd, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 492, 85 S. W. 690; Badgett v. Frick, 28 S. C. 176, 5 S. E. 355; E. T. Kenney Co. v. Anderson, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 367, 81 S. W. 663; Aultman-Taylor Machinery Co. v. Ridenour, 96 Iowa, 638, 65 N. W. 980; Frick Co. v. Morgan, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 836, 69 S. W. 1072.

But, under the conceded facts in this record, we think that, even if erroneous, no prejudice to appellant could have resulted. It appears without dispute that the first two days' trial was had in the presence and with the personal assistance of the appellant's agent who sold the machine. That this trial was thought insufficient and unsatisfactory by both is evidenced by the fact that the agent continued with the machine, actively assisting and directing the effort to make it work, for much of the time covering a period of several weeks, when an expert employed by the appellant appeared and continued the experiment until within a short time before appellee returned the machine. The agent to whom reference has been made was a member of a firm, having charge of the appellant's local business at Webster City. He was also what he terms the "block man;" that is, he had the charge and oversight of appellant's business in a given territory, called a "block," comprising about one fourth of the state, including Webster City. He says his duties in that capacity were various,—“making settlements with local agents, furnishing repairs, taking notes, and selling machines and settling for them.” The appellee testifies that Rood (the agent) sent the expert “from the Plano Company,” and that such expert received letters from the company concerning the machine while he was working with it. These trials by the block man, the agent, and the expert must have covered very nearly the entire period during which the machine was in appellee's possession, and it is quite clear that he was induced to keep it and continue the endeavor to make it work by the encouragement, assurances, and requests of these different representatives of the appellant. All this was done after the expiration of the two-day limit for giving notice by the purchaser, and without any claim or objection that no notice had been given. Under the uniform holdings of this court, we must hold that the requirement for written notice after two days' use of the machine was waived, and there was no error in submitting the alleged breach of warranty to the finding of the jury. Omaha F. Ins. Co. v. Dierks, 43 Neb. 482, 61 N. W. 740; Dean v. Nichols & S. Co. 95 Iowa, 89, 63 N. W. 582; Davis' Sons v. Buttrick, 68 Iowa, 98, 26 N. W. 27; Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. Rep. 399, 66 N. W. 96; Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9; Massillon Engine & Thresher Co. v. Shirmor, 122 Iowa, 699, 98 N. W. 504; Blaess v. Nichols & S. Co. 115 Iowa, 373, 88 N. W. 829; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Brower, 94 Iowa, 144, 62 N. W. 700; McCormick v. Russell, 86 Iowa, 556, 53 N. W. 310; Warder v. Robertson, 75 Iowa, 585, 39 N. W. 905; Briggs v. M. Rumely Co. 96 Iowa, 202, 64 N. W. 784; 2 Mechem. Sales, § 1385; Flatt v. D. M. Osborne & Co. 33 Minn. 98, 22 N. W. 440; Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Feary, 40 Neb. 226, 58 N. W. 713; Champion Mach. Co. v. Mann, 42 Kan. 372, 22 Pac. 417; Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Kennedy, 7 Ind. App. 502, 34 N. E. 856; Seiberling v. Newlon, 16 Ind. App. 374, 45 N. E. 151; Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Welch, 47 Minn. 183, 49 N. W. 740; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Machmuller, 1 Herdman (Neb.) 80, 95 N. W. 507; Parsons Band Cutter & Self-Feeder Co. v. Gadeke, 1 Herdman (Neb.) 605, 95 N. W. 850.

It is a well-settled rule that an agent having power and authority to sell a machine under a contract which contains conditions for the benefit of the seller has authority to bind his principal by a waiver of such conditions. Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9; Warder v. Robertson, 75 Iowa, 585, 39 N. W. 905; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Brower, 88 Iowa, 613, 55 N. W. 537; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 375, 47 N. W. 70; Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. Rep. 399, 66 N. W. 96.

The Peterson Case is also authority for the proposition that the personal knowledge of the agent that the machine sold by him fails to do good work renders unnecessary any written notice to him of such fact, although required by the strict terms of the contract of sale.

Nor is the application of this rule to be avoided by the clause of the contract providing that “no person has any authority to add to, abridge, or change this warranty in any manner.” The proposition is entirely too broad and sweeping to be effective. D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 375, 47 N. W. 70; Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. Rep. 399, 66 N. W. 96.

The appellant is a corporation which can act only through agents and employees. It cannot divest itself of the power to waive a condition made for its benefit, and that power can be exercised only through some agent. These men were its servants, working in its interest, and must be presumed to have had the authority usually exercised by other agents under similar circumstances. To say that its agents were vested with the mere, naked power to sell and deliver, without any authority to waive or modify any term of the printed contract, would be, as is well said in the Pitsinowsky Case, "to establish a snare by which to entrap the unwary, and enable principals to reap the benefits flowing from the conduct of an agent in the transaction of business intrusted to his hands, without incurring any of the responsibilities connected therewith." The stipulation in the contract which reserved the right to "the Plano Manufacturing Company, and the agent through whom ordered, to send a competent person to remedy the difficulty," is, in itself, a recognition of the authority of the agent to act in the premises. Hence, when, after the expiration of the two-day limit, the company or its agent exercised the right thus reserved to send its expert to take charge of the machine and to remedy its alleged defects, it is quite certain that this act, if not an admission of due notice, is sufficient, under the authorities cited, to uphold the plea that such limit was waived.

We may also say in this connection that as late as December 24, 1901, the appellee wrote a letter to the appellant, informing it that its expert and agents had been laboring for weeks to make the machine do good work, but without success, and that they had requested him to "keep on" with the trial. The letter further states his discouragement and dissatisfaction with the results produced, but offers to persevere in the trial, if the company will remedy the defects complained of. This letter was answered by the appellant under date of December 28th. In this answer it in no manner disavows or repudiates the acts of its agents or expert, but proceeds to give directions and advice concerning the management of the shredder. The correspondence thus disclosed is a significant circumstance, indicating that appellant's representatives were acting with its knowledge and approval. Within a few days after the receipt of this letter the appellee returned the machine to the agent's warehouse in Webster City. Was the return too late to comply with the terms of the contract? The contract provided no specific limit of time in which the return should be made. It did provide that if, after notice of the failure of the machine to fail to work as warranted, and opportunity given to the appellant and its agent to send a competent person to remedy the defects, the machine still failed to satisfy the warranty, it was to be returned by the purchaser to the place where he received it. Now, so long as the appellant's agents and experts continued to work with the machine and hold out encouragement to the appellee that it would be made as warranted, we think he was justified in postponing its return. Gaar, S. & Co. v. Stark (Tenn. Ch.) 36 S. W. 149; Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Calvert, 89 Wis. 640, 62 N. W. 532. Those efforts continued down to within a short time before the return was actually made. About this time appellee, as we have seen, addressed the company directly, rehearsing his troubles with the machine, and asking that someone be sent direct from the house to see it and make it good, if possible. The answer was of a character to invite still further trial, and we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the return of the machine five days later was not in reasonable time. Warder B. & G. Co. v. Horne Bros. 110 Iowa, 285, 81 N. W. 591; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Russell, 86 Iowa, 556, 53 N. W. 310.

Counsel argue with much earnestness that appellee kept and used the machine long after he had fully concluded it was not as warranted, and after he had made up his mind to return it. If this be so, then counsel is undoubtedly correct in saying that the right to rescind was lost. But for this court to say that such fact is established would be to invade the province of the jury. Taking some isolated sentences or expressions from the testimony of the appellee, this charge of duplicity may have some support; but, viewing it as a whole, and looking to his entire story, with the corroboration afforded by facts and circumstances developed on the trial, we think the jury could fairly find that he acted in good faith, and that the continued trial of the machine was induced by the conduct and assurances of appellant's representatives. Indeed, we see no good reason to doubt that the protracted experimentation with the machine was persisted in by both parties in an honest desire to give it a thorough and fair trial. That appellee began to have doubts as to its successful operation soon after the work began may be admitted. Certain it is he was not satisfied with it; and that he had good reason for dissatisfaction is demonstrated by the appellant's continued and unremitting efforts to remove the ground of his objection. But his dissatisfaction is not inconsistent with the continuation of the trial in good faith to give the appellant and its agents the amplest opportunity to make good the warranty. Indeed, so far as the record discloses, there was no apparent reason or inducement for the appellee to continue the use of the machine while secretly intending to return it. There is no showing that its operation was attended with any profit to him; but on the contrary, the evidence indicates that it was productive only of loss.

Counsel's assumption that appellee, after refusing to give security upon his notes pursuant to a demand made on January 2, 1902, and after announcing his intention to return the machine, continued to use it, is not borne out by the record. At least, such proposition is not undisputed. Indeed, the work performed on the day named seems to have been done at the request of appellant's agent, and, if so, it would not deprive appellee of his right to rescind. The rights of the appellant were fairly guarded by the instructions of the court, and in this respect, as well as in those which have already been considered, the verdict is sustained by the evidence. It is to be remembered that the conditions attached to the warranty are framed by the seller to limit his liability, and restrict the benefit thereof to the buyer. It is a settled rule that such conditions are to be strictly construed against the party in whose interest they are made. Parsons Band Cutter & Self-Feeder Co. v. Gadeke, 1 Herdman (Neb.) 605, 95 N. W. 850; Meyer v. Fidelity & C. Co. 96 Iowa, 385, 59 Am. St. Rep. 374, 65 N. W. 328.

3. It is contended that, conceding the alleged waiver of the written notice of failure of warranty, appellee had no right to return the machine, and that his only remedy was in an action for damages. Such is not our view of the rights of the parties under their contract. Without again reciting its language, we may say in general terms that it provides for a notice to be given, following which the appellant is to have reasonable time to remedy the defects, and, upon failure so to do, the appellee may then return the machine. The time when the right to return must be exercised depends upon the expiration of the period in which the appellant might rightfully continue its efforts to make the machine conform to the warranty. It did not necessarily depend upon the giving of the notice; for the parties could waive the notice and the appellant proceed with its attempt to remedy the defects for a reasonable period, or so long as the parties should mutually consent thereto. The waiver of the notice has no effect upon the stipulation for a return; for that right, as we have seen, accrues only when the appellant has ceased its endeavor to remedy the defect, and has failed so to do. The appellant did not in fact relinquish its attempt to make this machine work until a very short time before appellee returned it; and whether the return was made within a reasonable time thereafter was for the jury to determine.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

4. To the appellee's cross petition the appellant pleaded in abatement that Permelia J. Dutcher, who executed the contract of purchase with William J. Dutcher, was a necessary party to the determination of the matters stated in the cross petition, and not being a defendant in the main action, and therefore not entitled to unite in the cross petition, it should be dismissed. The appellee alleged that said Permelia J. Dutcher signed the order or contract for the machine as surety only, and was in no manner interested in the matters in controversy, save as such surety. The proof offered on the trial sustains the appellee's allegation in this respect, without controversy. Permelia J. Dutcher also appeared and filed a pleading disclaiming any interest in the machine or in the cause of action set up in the cross petition. Under this state of record the plea in abatement cannot be upheld. That, in an action upon a promissory note brought by an innocent holder, the maker may, by cross petition, implead the payee and recover from him upon a cause of action growing out of the transaction in which the note was given, and which might have been the subject of set-off or counterclaim, were the principal action brought by such payee, has been decided by this court. Mahaska County State Bank v. Christ, 82 Iowa, 56, 47 N. W. 886, 87 Iowa, 415, 54 N. W. 450. If then, the defendant Dutcher was in fact the purchaser of the machine, and, as between him and his mother, she was surety only, we think there is no rule of law which prohibits the pleading and proof of that fact. In an action brought by the seller upon the contract, it is possible that the rule which prohibits parol testimony to vary the terms of a written agreement would prevent the pleading or proof of such suretyship to the prejudice of the seller. The plaintiff in such case would have the right to rely upon the writing as executed; but, in so far as the relation of the two apparently joint purchasers to each other is concerned, it is always competent to show that one of them stands in the relation of surety to the other. This is true, even after judgment has been entered against both as principals. Atlee v. Bullard, 123 Iowa, 274, 98 N. W. 889; Hill v. King, 48 Ohio St. 75, 26 N. E. 988. If the appellant had any interest in having Permelia J. Dutcher made a party to the controversy, it was to protect itself against any possible claim by her in another action founded upon the same breach of warranty. Therefore, when she voluntarily appeared and put herself on record as disclaiming all right and interest in the matter, we think the plea in abatement ceased to have merit.

5. When the pleadings were finally settled, and before trial was begun, the appellant moved to have the cause set down for trial as an equitable action. This motion was overruled, and the appellant appealed from said order, and filed a supersedeas bond. This, it is said, deprived the court of jurisdiction to proceed with the trial to a jury, and the judgment rendered upon the verdict is therefore void. The order appealed from was self-executing, requiring no writ or process of any kind to carry it into effect. There was nothing to supersede by the giving of a bond, and the filing of such an instrument could have no effect to deprive the court of jurisdiction to proceed with the trial. See second paragraph of the opinion in Allen v. Church, 101 Iowa, 123, 70 N. W. 127. To hold otherwise, and say that, by appealing from an interlocutory ruling, a party may deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to take any further step in the case until, in the slow course of appellate procedure, it is remanded, only to begin another round through the appellate tribunal from the next adverse ruling, would be to deprive courts of the power to administer substantial justice, and prolong litigation until Jarndyce v. Jarndyce would cease to be any exaggeration of the law's delays. Of course, the party who proceeds with a case after his adversary has taken an interlocutory appeal assumes the risk of the effect which an adverse decision by the appellate court may have upon his rights; but that risk is often preferable to waiting until time and change have deprived the main issue of significance and value. There is little to choose between indefinite delay and absolute denial of right. Owing to variance in the terms of the practice acts in the several states, we do not derive much aid from decided cases in determining to what extent an appeal from an interlocutory order affects the jurisdiction of the trial court. But, as affording more or less direct support to the conclusion we have announced, see People ex rel. Scannell v. Whitney, 47 Cal. 584; Ford v. David, 3 Abb. Pr. 385; Fisk v. Albany & S. R. Co. 41 How. Pr. 365; Bramley v. Tyree, 1 Lea, 531; Barrow v. Rhinelander, 3 Johns. Ch. 120; Gorham v. Farson, 18 Ill. App. 520; State v. First Dist. Ct. Judge, 17 La. 511; Forbes v. Tuckerman, 115 Mass. 115; Barker v. Wing, 58 Barb. 73; Henry v. Henry, 4 Dem. 253; Sheaffer's Appeal, 100 Pa. 379; Barton v. Long, 45 N. J. Eq. 161, 16 Atl. 683; Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Lemar, 10 Paige, 506.

It should be said in this connection that, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) in any case where an interlocutory appeal is taken from some ruling not involving the merits of the controversy, and not subject to supersedeas under the statute, the trial court doubtless has the inherent power to order a stay of proceedings pending the disposition of the appeal, either upon its own motion or upon application by a party. No such order was asked in this case. The only question raised is one of jurisdiction.

Other errors are assigned, but none, except those to which we have referred, are argued. We have, however, examined the entire record in the light of the points thus made, and find no prejudicial error.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, For Use of A. M. VICARS, Plff. in Err.,
v.

W. G. WAMPLER et al.

(... Va. ...)

Assignment—of judgment—effect.

The assignment of a judgment does not carry with it a right of action against an officer and the sureties on his bond for failure, prior to the assignment, properly to return a forthcoming bond upon the judgment, notwithstanding a statute making choses in action assignable, and authorizing the assignee to maintain any action which the original obligee might have brought.

(September 14, 1905.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wise County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for failure properly to return a forthcoming bond. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Vicars & Peery, for plaintiff in error:

The original judgment creditor could have maintained this action before the assignment

Case Note.—The authorities cited and discussed by the court in the case of COM. USE OF VICARS v. WAMPLER have been cited in other cases, but on different questions. Some cases not cited by the court in the above case also pass on the question of what incidental rights pass by the assignment of a judgment. Without exception, none of the authorities sustain the right of the assignee to a litigious claim against a third party for damages arising before the assignment, as an incident to the assignment of the judgment. In general, the only incident which passes is some security of said judgments to appellant, and appellant, who is the assignee of said judgments, and the only party now interested in the collection of same, can maintain in his own name any action which the original judgment creditor could have maintained before said assignment.

Va. Code 1887, § 2860; Freeman, Judgm. § 431; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Loomis, 100 Iowa, 266, 62 Am. St. Rep. 571, 69 N. W. 443; Bolen v. Crosby, 49 N. Y. 183; Allen v. Clark, 40 N. Y. S. R. 175, 21 N. Y. Supp. 338; 141 N. Y. 584, 36 N. E. 345.

Messrs. Ayers & Fulton, for defendants in error:

The assignment did not carry the liability of the officer.

Com. v. Fuqua, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 41; Timberlake v. Powell, 99 N. C. 233, 5 S. E. 410; Robinson v. Towns, 30 Ga. 818.

Whittle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The single question presented by this record is whether the assignee of a judgment is entitled to maintain an action for damages against an officer and the sureties on his official bond for a breach of the condition for the debt, and not a collateral right of action.

Thus, in Schlieman v. Bowlin, 36 Minn. 198, 30 N. W. 879, the assignment of a judgment in replevin was held to operate as an assignment of the bond given to obtain a return of the property.

But in Forrest v. O'Donnell, 42 Mich. 556, 4 N. W. 259, it was held that the legal title to the bond did not pass by the assignment of a judgment in attachment.

In Ullmann v. Kline, 87 Ill. 268, the court held that the assignment of a judgment after an appeal in equity carried with it the security given by the appeal bond in case of affirmance. But the contrary is held in Re Silvary, 127 Cal. 226, 59 Pac. 571, in which an appeal bond was not a necessary incident to the assignment of the judgment.

In Hagemann's Appeal, 88 Pa. 21, the court held that the assignee of a judgment recovered on a lien filed by the city for the nonpayment of assessments for street improvements took the assignment with the priority which the municipal lien possessed in the hands of the municipality.

And in Thompson v. First State Bank, 102 Ga. 606, 29 S. E. 610, an assignment of a judgment recovered by the payee upon one or more of a series of notes given for the purchase money of land was held to pass to the assignee the vendor's special lien as one of its incidents.

In Bolen v. Crosby, 49 N. Y. 183, it was held that the assignment of a judgment against a corporation for services rendered to it carried with it the remedy against the trustees allowed by statute when they thereof which occurred prior to the assignment, by reason of his failure to return a forthcoming bond taken upon the judgment within the time and in the manner prescribed by statute to give such bond the force of a judgment against the obligors therein.

Upon demurrer to the declaration the trial court resolved that question in the negative, and rendered judgment for the defendants. Whereupon the plaintiff brings error.

The authorities are generally agreed that the assignment of a judgment carries with it "the cause of action on which it was based, together with all the beneficial interest of the assignor in the judgment and all its incidents." Freeman, Judgm. § 431.

Upon the same principle the assignment of a note carries with it all securities provided for its payment.

The doctrine is founded upon the theory that the debt is the principal thing and the security an accessory. They are not severable, and the security passes by virtue of the assignment as an inseparable dependent incident. Carpenter v. Longan, 16 Wall. 271, 21 L. ed. 313.

It will be observed that the present in-neglect to comply with its provisions requiring a report.

In Burns v. Mangert, 16 Mo. App. 22, the assignee of a judgment took the assignor's right to enforce the judgment by supplemental proceedings.

And also in Frost v. Parker, 65 Iowa, 178, 21 N. W. 507, the court held that the assignment of a judgment on the husband's note, which was given for an organ, carried the right to subject the property of the wife to the payment of the judgment, where the organ was used in the family, and so became a "family expense," for which the wife's property was liable by statute.

Some additional cases which also pass on the same question are Griffin v. Camack, 36 Ala. 695, 76 Am. Dec. 344; Ritter v. Cost, 99 Ind. 80; Goodman v. Pence, 21 Neb. 459, 32 N. W. 219; Heisen v. Smith, 138 Cal. 216, 94 Am. St. Rep. 39, 71 Pac. 180.

In 2 Freeman on Judgments, § 431, it is stated that an assignment of a judgment necessarily carries with it the cause of action on which it is based, together with all the beneficial interest of the assignor in the judgment, and all its incidents. The same rule is stated in Black, Judgm. §§ 948, 951, 952, and in 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 882.

Cyc. Law & Proc. vol. 4, p. 72, states that, as an incident to the assignment of a judgment, the claim upon which the judgment is founded and all of the remedies incidental thereto pass by the assignment. Citing Bolen v. Crosby, 49 N. Y. 183; Hagemann's Appeal, 88 Pa. 21; Frost v. Parker, 65 Iowa, 178, 21 N. W. 507; and Barker v. Gilliam, 5 Iowa, 510.

quiry does not involve the power of the judgment creditor to assign the right of action in question, but whether that right passed to the assignee as an incident to the assignment of the judgment.

Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Loomis, 100 Iowa, 266, 62 Am. St. Rep. 571, 69 N. W. 443, is the only case to which our attention has been called which directly sustains the pretension of the plaintiff in error. In that case it was held that "the assignment of a judgment in an action in which an attachment has been allowed and property seized thereunder passes to the assignee the judgment creditor's right to recover damages of the sheriff for negligence in the care of the property seized by allowing a disposition to be made of it."

The reasoning upon which that decision is based is not satisfactory. It proceeds upon the false premise that the right to sue for the breach of official duty must exist somewhere, and as the assignor cannot sue, having parted with the judgment, the right of action must rest in the assignee. Again, it is assumed that the right to sue for the previous dereliction of the officer is a necessary incident to the judgment; and therefore, under the principle adverted to, passed by the assignment.

Bouvier, in defining the word "incident," observes:

"This term is used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably, depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. For example, rent is usually incident to a reversion (1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 243); while the right of alienation is necessarily incident to a fee-simple at common law, and cannot be separated by a grant (1 Washb. Real Prop. 54). So a court baron is inseparably incident to a manor, in England. Kitch. 36; Co. Litt. 151.

"All nominate contracts and all estates known to common law have certain incidents which they draw with them, and which it is not necessary to reserve in words. So, the costs incurred in a legal proceeding are said to be incidental thereto." 1 Bouvier Law Dict. Rawle's Rev. 1006.

It will be seen from the foregoing definition and illustrations, that the distinguishing characteristic of an incident consists in the fact that it "usually or naturally and inseparably depends upon, appertains to, or follows" its principal.

The distinction as to what does and what does not pass by incidental assignment is, in some instances, nice and difficult to draw; but, in order for it to pass, the incident must, in a legal sense, constitute a security for the debt, and that can hardly be predicated of a mere collateral right of action against a public officer for a quasi tort in failing to discharge an official duty although his misconduct may affect the value of the judgment.

Accordingly, the supreme court of Kentucky, upon a similar state of facts, held that "the assignment of a judgment could not operate to transfer the right to recover for such an injury, for a right to compensation for such injury and the right to the judgment are separate and distinct rights. They are separate and distinct, not only in their origin and nature, but in relation to the persons against whom they must be asserted. The right to compensation for the injury may, indeed, be said to be incident to the right to the judgment in one sense, for it must necessarily belong to the person who was entitled to the judgment at the time the injury was done, but it is clearly not such an incident as must necessarily pass by the assignment of the judgment." Com. v. Fuqua, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 41.

In Redmond v. Staton, 116 N. C. 140, 21 S. E. 186, it was held that: "The clerk of the court is liable for damages to a judgment creditor arising from his failure to properly index the judgment, so as to render it a lien on the judgment debtor's lands. The mere assignment of a judgment does not carry with it a right of action which has accrued to the judgment creditor against the clerk of the court for his failure to properly index the judgment, so as to render it a lien on the judgment debtor's lands." The court then cites with approval the case of Timberlake v. Powell, 99 N. C. 233, 5 S. E. 410, as analogous authority, where the court says: "The present suit is not upon the judgment, but upon an alleged independent liability incurred by other tortfeasors. . . . This cause of action is separate and distinct from that involved in the former adjudication, and is outside the scope of the assignment."

In Robinson v. Towns, 30 Ga. 818, the court held that the assignment of the judgment did not pass any interest in the money which the sheriff had previously collected on the judgment. The court, at page 822, observes: "It was said that the plaintiffs could not maintain the suit, because they had parted with their interest by the assignment. They did part with their interest in the further enforcement of the judgment, but not with their interest in their money which the sheriff had previously collected on it. The assignee acquired, and they lost, the right to enforce the judgment as it stood at the time of the assignment; that is to say, the right to collect what was still due . . . [at the time of the assignment] out of the defendants in it. Money previously collected and held by the sheriff would not be reached by an exercise of the assignee's right of enforcing the judgment, for such money was the fruit of the previous enforcement of the judgment to that extent. Such money constituted a debt from the sheriff to the plaintiffs, to be enforced by a rule or suit against him."

While the Virginia statute has enlarged the rule of the common law so as to make choses in action assignable, and authorizes the assignee to maintain in his own name any action which the original obligee, etc., might have brought, it does not create new causes of action, and has no application to cases in which there is no assignment.

It would, in our judgment, be impolitic to extend the scope of the statute by judicial construction, so as to allow the assignment of a chose in action to invest in the assignee, as an incident, a litigious right against a third party to recover damages for an injury which accrued prior to the assignment.

The conclusion reached in this case is not in conflict with the decision in National Valley Bank v. Hancock, 100 Va. 101, 57 L. R. A. 728, 93 Am. St. Rep. 933, 40 S. E. 611, where the court recognizes the established general doctrine that a mere right in litem is not the subject of incidental assignment, but enforces a qualification of the rule called for by the facts of the particular case. In that case the debtor, without consideration, in the interest of his children, divested himself of property, to the prejudice of creditors. The diversion as to them was void, and hence they, or their assignees, had the right to follow the property or its proceeds, and subject it to their debts in the hands of the alienee. The debtor's individual liability and diverted property were securities for the debt, and passed as incidents to the assignment.

The case under consideration is wholly different. The effect is not to hold the debtor or his property liable, but to maintain an action to recover damages on an individual liability of a third person to the judgment creditor.

The judgment complained of is without error, and must be affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WASHINGTON ex rel. C. M. NETTLETON, Resp't.,

v.

OTTO A. CASE, Appt.

(.... Wash.)

1. Taxation—classification of property.

Property cannot be classified according to the value of its owner's estate, so that it shall bear a greater percentage of taxation 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

than is assessed against similar property which forms part of a smaller estate.

2. Probate court—fees of clerk.

An arbitrary standard for the measurement of the value of services of the clerk of the probate court according to the value of the estate to be administered cannot be adopted by the legislature.

3. Taxation—clerk's fees—constitutional law.

A statute requiring payment of fees upon property coming before the probate court in proportion to the value of the estate, which are to be turned into the county treasury, and become part of the public funds, provides a tax on property within the meaning of a constitutional provision that the rate shall be equal and uniform.

4. Statutes—entitling.

A title, An Act Relating to Fees of Officers, Witnesses, and Jurors, will not cover a provision exacting an ad valorem charge or tax from the property of estates coming before the probate courts.

(July 14, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of relator in a proceeding to compel defendant to receive and file papers for the administration of partnership estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Kenneth Mackintosh and Ernest B. Herald, for appellant:

The legislature has absolute power to determine the amount and reasonableness of an official fee.

Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 44 L. ed. 725, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633.

The fees herein complained of are reasonable.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 294; 2 Bl. Com. 211.

The legislature may give or take away the whole of an estate, or may distribute it as it sees fit.

Mixter's Estate, 28 W. N. C. 182.

The rule of equality and uniformity, even in cases of taxation of property, does not forbid a liberal classification.

State v. Clark, 30 Wash. 447, 71 Pac. 20; State v. Sharpless, 31 Wash. 196, 96 Am. St. Rep. 803, 71 Pac. 737; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 808.

Messrs. Allen, Allen, & Stratton, for respondent:

Fees of officers are taxes.

Manning v. Klippel, 9 Or. 369; Harrison v. Willis, 7 Heisk. 35, 19 Am. Rep. 604; State v. Howran, 8 Heisk. 824; Cooley, Taxn 2d ed. p. 31.

This case is ruled by State ex rel. Davidson v. Gorman, 40 Minn. 232, 2 L. R. A. 701, 41 N. W. 948; Faljo v. Pfister, 117 Cal. 83, 48 Pac. 1012.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator applied to the superior court for a writ of mandate directed to the county clerk of King county, requiring him to receive and file certain papers in probate proceedings. An alternative writ was issued. By the demurrer to the petition and alternative writ the following facts are admitted: D. McL. Brown died in King county on the 23d day of January, 1905, he being, at the time of his death, a member of the partnership consisting of himself, W. A. Brown, D. A. Brown, and C. M. Nettleton, doing business under the firm name of Seattle Bridge Company. Thereafter the said Nettleton was duly appointed as administrator of said partnership estate, and he qualified as such. An inventory and appraisement of the estate were duly prepared, the appraisement showing the valuation of the property belonging to the partnership at $127,655.50. The administrator presented the inventory and appraisement to the clerk for filing, whereupon the latter demanded that the administrator should pay the sum of $225 as probate fees, and refused to file the papers until said sum should be paid to him. Thereafter the administrator also prepared a petition for an order to sell certain real estate belonging to the partnership, and thereupon tendered the petition to the clerk for filing, together with filing fees; but the clerk refused to file the same, or to accept the sum tendered otherwise than on account of part payment of said demand of $225. The demurrer challenged the sufficiency of the above-recited facts to authorize the issuance of the writ of mandate, and the same was overruled. The clerk declined to further-

Case Note.—That an ad valorem charge imposed upon an estate in connection with probate proceedings is, in effect, a tax, has also been decided in State ex rel. Sanderson v. Mann, 76 Wis. 469, 45 N. W. 526, 46 N. W. 51, which holds that a percentage of all estates of decedents exceeding $3,000 in value, in counties having more than 150,000 inhabitants, required by chap. 176, Laws of 1889, to be paid to the county treasurer for the use of the county, is a tax within §§ 31, 32, art. 4, Const., prohibiting special laws for assessment or collection of taxes, and providing that general laws for such purposes shall be uniform in their operation throughout the state. The decision rests on the argument that nothing prevented the money so paid from being applied to general public purposes, and that the amount of the exaction was in no way dependent upon the amount or value of the services of the judge or register of probate, but depended entirely upon the valuation of the estate.

But where a fee, although paid into the state or county treasury, is manifestly for the purpose of reimbursing the government at the expense of the persons especially benefited, it is not usually regarded as a tax within the meaning of constitutional provisions relating to taxation.

A fee imposed by statute for each original writ and execution issued out of any court, and for each certificate of record of recorded instruments is intended to reimburse the county for its expenditures in furnishing the office, registration books, etc., and is not a tax within the meaning of the constitutional requirement that all property, etc., shall be taxed ad valorem. See County v. Abrahams, 34 Ark. 166.

Stat. 1885, chap. 85, regulating the fees and compensation of county officers in various counties, does not violate § 20, art. 4, of the Constitution, which prohibits the enactment of local or special laws for the assessment and collection of taxes for state, county, and township purposes. Suen prohibi L.R.A. (N.S.)

tion "was only intended to apply to laws regulating the method of assessing and collecting taxes for the purpose of general revenue." State ex rel. Williams v. Fogus, 19 Nev. 247, 9 Pac. 123.

Nor is such provision violated by an act allowing larger fees to officers in one county than are allowed by the general statutes. Comstock Mill & Min. Co. v. Allen, 21 Nev. 325, 31 Pac. 434.

The act of February 8, 1850, providing for the payment, to a board of land commissioners appointed to investigate and report to the legislature upon titles based upon Spanish grants, of certain fees by those who should avail themselves of its provisions, does not levy a tax within the meaning of § 27, art. 7, Constitution of 1845, which provides that all taxation shall be uniform and equal. Baldwin v. Goldfrank, 88 Tex. 249, 31 S. W. 1064, Affirming 9 Tex. Civ. App. 269, 26 S. W. 155.

Inspection fees are regarded as an exercise, not of the taxing, but of the police, power, as a mode of making a business contribute to the expense of its proper police regulation.

It is accordingly held, in Willis v. Standard Oil Co. 50 Minn. 290, 52 N. W. 652, that the fees imposed by chap. 90, Laws 1876, as amended by chap. 246, Laws of 1889, for the inspection of mineral illuminating oils, which provides that the fee for inspecting oil in tanks shall, for each 50 gallons, be the same as prescribed for each barrel, which fees are collected by the inspector, and paid into the state treasury, are not taxes within the constitutional provision requiring taxes to be as near equal as may be, and to be levied on a cash valuation.

Act No. 37 of the extra session of 1877, empowering the board of health in New Orleans to collect a fee of $\frac{1}{4}$ of a cent a gallon and $12\frac{1}{2}$ cents per barrel for inspecting illuminating oils, does not contravene the provision of art. 118 of the Constitution, that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state." forbidding specific-answer, and it was thereupon ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate should issue, commanding him to immediately file the papers mentioned. From said order he has appealed.

The appeal involves the constitutionality of an act of the legislature of 1903 relating to the fees of state and county officers, witnesses, and jurors. See Sess. Laws 1903, chap. 151, p. 290. That portion of the act particularly involved here relates to the charges in probate proceedings, and will be found at pages 293, 294, of said Session Laws. The trial court held the said provisions to be unconstitutional. It will be observed that the statute requires the payment of $5 in probate proceedings at the time the first paper therein shall be filed. In addition to the above amount, a graduated schedule of fees is provided. Increased amounts are chargeable to estates of $1,000 or more. The sum to be paid increases according to the value of the estate involved, the amount to be determined by the appraisement returned into court. When the amount of the estate is $1,000 or more, and less than $2,000, the additional sum required is $25. The amount is thereafter increased, based upon stated estate values, until the valuation reaches $50,000 or more, and less than $100,000, in which case the sum of $125 shall be paid. It is then provided that estates exceeding $100,000 shall pay in addition to the said $125 the sum of $50 for each additional taxation, and requiring that all property shall be taxed ad valorem. Clarke v. Board of Health, 30 La. Ann. 1351.

And the view is sometimes taken that constitutional requirements that taxation shall be uniform and equal, or by valuation, are intended to apply only to the taxation of property, and not to fees.

So, § 26, chap. 22, General Statutes of 1873, providing for the payment, upon the commencement of any suit in the supreme court, of the sum of $10, which is ultimately remitted to the state treasurer, is not obnoxious to § 1, art. 9, of the Constitution, providing that the mode of levying taxes shall be by valuation. State ex rel. Atchinson & N. R. Co. v. Lancaster County, 4 Neb. 537, 19 Am. Rep. 641.

Nor is such provision contravened by an act providing that the fees of certain county officers in excess of certain amounts shall be paid into the county treasury. State ex rel. Hamilton County v. Ream, 16 Neb. 681, 21 N. W. 398.

A stenographer's fee required by § 6, chap. 189, Laws of 1885, to be paid into the county treasury in each case in the district court in any county in which a stenographer shall be appointed, which is applicable whether any stenographer's services are required or not, is not a tax within the purview of § 1, art. 11, of the Constitution, which provides that the legislature shall provide for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, "it not being a burden imposed upon property, to raise money for public purposes." Beebe v. Wells, 37 Kan. 472, 15 Pac. 565.

In direct opposition to the view that a fee imposed for the purpose of providing a fund from which the salary of the officer whose services are required may be paid is not a tax is the case of Manning v. Klippel, 9 Or. 367, which holds that the act of October 25, 1880, establishing a table of fees for services performed by the salaried sheriff and clerks of certain counties, different from that established for other counties, which fees are paid into the county treasury, contravenes the provision of subd. 10, art. 23, of the Constitution, that the legislative assembly shall not pass local or special laws for the assessment and collection of taxes for state, county, township or road purposes. The court argues that the services of these officers are public services, performed at the command of the state; that since their salaries were formerly paid out of funds raised by general taxation, the raising of money for the same purpose in another way is, of necessity, an exercise of the taxing power. The authority of this case, as is remarked in State ex rel. Bell v. Frazier, 36 Or. 178, 59 Pac. 5, is very much impaired by subsequent decisions.

One of these is Northern Counties Trust v. Sears, 30 Or. 388, 35 L. R. A. 188, 41 Pac. 931, in which it was said apropos of a constitutional requirement that acts for raising revenue must originate in the lower house: "A law which requires a fee to be paid to an officer, and finally covered into the treasury, of a county, for which the party paying the fee receives some equivalent in return, other than the benefit of a good government, which is enjoyed by the whole community, and which the party may pay and obtain the benefits under the law, or let it alone, as he chooses, does not come within the category of an act for raising revenue."

In State ex rel. Bell v. Frazier, 36 Or. 178, 59 Pac. 5, it is held that the constitutional provision referred to in Manning v. Klippel, 9 Or. 367, is not violated by an act (Law 1889, p. 140) providing for the payment of certain court fees to certain officers in all counties having more than a stated population, which fees are turned into the county treasury. It is distinguished from Manning v. Klippel on the ground that the act makes no provision, either directly or by implication, as to the disposition of the fees required to be paid, except that they shall be paid into the county fund, and, as a consequence, become a part of the general assets of the county,—thus placing the decision that such a fee is not a tax on the very ground on which other courts have been inclined to hold that it is one.

$20,000 valuation above $100,000. The estate at bar, as we have seen, is valued somewhat in excess of $127,000, and the fee demanded by the clerk was $225. Whether the amount demanded is excessive, even under the terms of the statute, we shall neither discuss nor decide, since that matter is not discussed by counsel. The constitutionality of the statute is alone considered in the briefs.

The increased fees provided by the statute are based upon an ad valorem theory, and regulated according to the amount of property owned by an estate. It was the view of the trial court that charges so exacted amount to a property tax, and that the statute therefore violates our state constitutional provisions with respect to the uniformity of property taxation. Section 1 of article 7 of the Constitution provides that "all property in the state, not exempt under the laws of the United States or under this Constitution shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law." Section 2 of the same article also requires that "the legislature shall provide by law a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation on all property in the state, according to its value in money, and shall prescribe such regulations by general law as shall secure a uniform valuation for taxation of all property, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her, or its property." Section 9 of the same article also contains the following: "For all corporate purposes, all municipal corporations may be vested with authority to assess and collect taxes, and such taxes shall be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body levying the same." It does not appear that the property of the estate at bar is exempt from taxation under the first constitutional provision above quoted, but it is subject to the burden thereof, and must be taxed uniformly with other property, according to its value. If, therefore, the charges imposed by the statute in question are in the nature of a tax upon the property, they would seem to impose a burden thereon in addition to that borne by property in general. Appellant argues that, even in cases of taxation, the rule of equality and uniformity does not forbid a liberal classification, and that, since this law classifies estates according to their value, all in each particular class are affected alike. He cites State v. Clark, 30 Wash. 439, 71 Pac. 20, and State v. Sharpless, 31 Wash. 191, 96 Am. St. Rep. 893, 71 Pac. 737. Neither of said cases relates to property taxation. The first discusses the inheritance-tax law, and expressly holds that such a tax is not a property tax, but is a mere charge for the privilege of succession to the ownership and enjoyment of property; following Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594, which expressly distinguished such a charge from property taxes, which must be uniform and equal under the state Constitutions. The second case cited discusses a license or occupation-tax statute. Such statutes do not provide for property taxes, but are usually based upon the necessity for police regulation. It is true such statutes usually contain revenue features, and some may be entirely for revenue purposes, and not for regulation; yet the exaction of revenue is not a property tax, but is in the nature of an occupation tax for the privilege of conducting a particular business. No authority has been called to our attention which holds that property itself may be so classified that it shall bear a burden greater than that of other property of like value within the same assessment jurisdiction.

If, then, the exactions from estates required by this statute amount to property taxes, we think the statute cannot be upheld. It is provided that the money thus collected shall be paid into the county treasury, and it thus becomes a part of the public funds, like that derived from ordinary taxation. Appellant further argues that the same is true of the ordinary fees collected by the clerk for services rendered; that the charge in question here may be regarded, not as a tax upon property, but as a fee for services rendered; and that the legislature has the right to fix the amount of such fee. It is true the statute calls the charge a "fee," but if it is apparent upon the face of the statute that the charge is in fact not based upon actual and necessary services rendered or to be rendered, but is based entirely upon a property valuation, thereby partaking of the nature of a tax, it would seem to be wholly immaterial by what name the statute may designate it. The statute in terms shows that the charge is based upon the value of the estate; and shall we conclude that the legislature intended to say, in effect, that the amount of actual and required services varies according to the value of the estate only? If the legislature intended to so declare, it cannot be said that the declaration is supported by experience. Can the legislature arbitrarily say that greater service is required in the settlement of an estate valued at $1,000 than one valued at $999.99? We think not, and yet such is the exact effect of this statute if it shall be held that these charges are fees for services only. It seems apparent to us that the legislature cannot arbitrarily adopt such a standard for measurement of the value of the services of the clerk in probate proceedings. It is true our statutes fix the compensation of an administrator according to the value of the estates which comes into his hands, but such a measurement of value, we apprehend, is chiefly founded upon the degree of responsibility assumed,—an element of proper consideration in fixing the value of an administrator's services. No such element exists in the case of the clerk. His services in the premises are purely clerical, and the amount thereof depends upon the filings and records of each particular case, which can in no reasonable sense be said to depend in each given case upon the value of the estate. It seems clear, therefore, that this statute exacts payments regulated by property valuations alone, and that it must therefore be a tax upon property. Taxes are defined to be "burdens or charges imposed by legislative authority on persons or property, to raise money for public purposes, or, more briefly, 'an imposition for the supply of the public treasury.'" 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 578. The charges here discussed, and which are imposed by the statute in question, seem to include every element comprehended in the above definition.

Appellant has not called our attention to any decided cases bearing directly upon legislation of a character similar to that here under examination. Respondent, upon the other hand, cites decisions from two jurisdictions which are adverse to such statutes. A statute essentially similar to ours was passed in Minnesota. By the terms of that statute a charge of $10 was exacted when the inventory valuation of the estate exceeded $2,000, and did not exceed $5,000. A charge of $25 was required when the valuation exceeded $5,000, and did not exceed $10,000; and by similar increase the charges were greater for greater valuations. The supreme court of Minnesota held that the statute was unconstitutional in State ex rel. Davidson v. Gorman, 40 Minn. 232, 2 L. R. A. 701, 41 N. W. 948. The court reasoned as follows: "But the sums required by this act to be paid into the county treasury must be regarded as taxes in the ordinary sense of that word and as it is used in the Constitution. They are not, in any proper sense, fees or costs assessed impartially, or with regard to the expense occasioned or services performed. The amounts are regulated wholly, but arbitrarily, with regard to the value of the estate. They have no proximate relation to the amount of the compensation to be paid to the probate judge, nor to the other expenses of the court, nor to the nature or extent of the services which may become necessary in the proceedings. There is no necessary, natural, or even probable correspondence between the sums to be paid

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(widely different in amounts with respect to estates of different values) and the nature of the proceedings, or the character or extent of the services, which may be required in the probate court. It cannot be assumed upon any ground of probability that the proceedings or services will be different or greater in the case of an estate of the value of more than $500,000 than in one of the value from $35,000 to $50,000, yet, in the former case $5,000 must be paid; in the latter $100. . . . The purpose for which such payments are required is strictly public in its nature, being directly 'for the use and benefit of the county,' as the law declares, and indirectly for the support of a court established by the Constitution, with exclusive original jurisdiction in certain matters of great and general public concern. Nor is it practically optional with executors or administrators, or those interested in the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, as to whether they will pay these exactions or not. If the law is valid, payment is practically necessary in the great majority of cases; and the mode adopted by the statute of securing payment by making that a condition precedent to the exercise of the functions of the probate court is as really compulsory, and perhaps as effectual in general, as the means generally employed to enforce the payment of taxes. In 1895 the legislature of California enacted a similar statute. It was provided that a fee of $5 should first be paid by all estates and an additional fee of $1 for each additional $1,000 in excess of $3,000 of valuation. In Fatjo v. Pfister, 117 Cal. 83, 48 Pac. 1012, the statute was held unconstitutional. The court said: "It is perfectly plain that the legislature has attempted by that portion of § 1 above quoted to levy a property tax upon all estates of decedents, infants, and incompetents. The ad valorem charge for filing the inventory is in no sense a fee or compensation for the services of the officer, which are the same, as respects this matter, in every estate, large or small. To call it a fee is a transparent evasion. And it is not merely an inheritance tax, or at all analogous to an inheritance tax, as counsel would contend; for, in the first place, it applies not only to the estates of decedents, but also to the estates of minors and incompetents under guardianship; and as to the estates of decedents, it applies not to the distributable residue after payment of debts and expenses of administration, but to the whole body of the estate, and would be collectible, if the law were valid, from an insolvent estate as well as from one of equal appraised value and with no liabilities. As an attempt to levy a property tax, the act is, in this particular, ined for several reasons: (1) It violates § of article 13 of the Constitution in imposing an extraordinary tax upon the property to which it applies, in addition to the equal and uniform tax to which alone all property in the state is liable. (2) The object of the act is not expressed in its title, and is in no wise germane thereto,—violation of § 24 of article 4 of the Constitution, which requires that every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." It will be observed from the closing words of the above quotation that the California statute was also held invalid for the further reason that the subject was not mentioned in its title. The title was essentially similar to that of our own statute, and was as follows: "An Act to Establish the Fees of County, Township, and other Officers, and of Jurors and Witnesses in This State." The title of our statute is as follows: "An Act in Relation to the Fees of State and County Officers, Witnesses and Jurors, and Repealing an Act Entitled 'An Act in Relation to the Fees of State and County Officers, Witnesses and Jurors, and Amending § 2086 of the Code of Washington of 1881,' the Same Being Approved March 15, 1893." Laws 1893, chap. 130, p. 421. By no reasonable exercise of the imagination can it be inferred from the above title that the act treats of the subject of exacting an ad valorem charge or tax from the property of estates. It therefore violates § 19 of article 2 of our state Constitution, which requires that "no bill shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title."

For the reasons hereinbefore assigned, and also upon authority of decisions cited, we believe the act in question is unconstitutional in the particular here involved, and that the conclusion of the lower court was right. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Mount, Ch. J., and Fullerton, Crow, and Rudkin, JJ., concur.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

C. Y. WALKER et al., Appts.,

v.

W. J. MILLER.

(.... N. C.)

1. Deed—to partnership.

Naming as grantee in a deed of real estate a partnership the members of which have

Case Note.—The proposition that a deed naming a partnership as grantee, instead of the partners by their individual names, is not for that reason void, but presents a latent ambiguity which may be explained by parol, is based on the broad rule that parol evidence is admissible when, there being no defect on the face of a written instrument, died, but the name of which has been perpetuated, and the property kept together by consent of all parties interested, after a sale of the business to strangers, for the purpose of collecting the accounts and settling up the partnership affairs, does not render the conveyance void.

2. Evidence—parol to explain deed to partnership.

Parol evidence is admissible to identify the true owners of property granted by a deed in which a partnership is named as grantee.

3. Ejectment—on equitable title.

An equitable title will support an action of ejectment.

4. Parties—bringing in necessary.

Parties necessary to the administration of substantial justice may be directed to be brought in at any time, either before or after judgment.

(November 7, 1905.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Orange County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the value of certain crops alleged to have been converted by defendant to his own use. Reversed.

Statement by Connor, J.:

Civil action for the recovery of crops, instituted in justice court, brought by appeal to the superior court, and heard by his honor, Judge Peebles, who, by consent, found the facts respecting the title to the land upon which the crops were grown. For some time prior to 1893, Jas. Webb, Jr., and Jos. C. Webb were engaged in mercantile business as copartners, under the firm name and style of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. Jos. C. Webb died in the year 1893, leaving a last will and testament, properly executed and proven to pass real and personal estate, naming Jas. Webb, Jr., executor, who duly qualified. He bequeathed and devised his entire estate to his widow, Alice Webb. With the full knowledge and consent of said Alice Webb, the surviving partner and executor continued to conduct the said mercantile business under the same name and style. Mrs. Webb did not become a member of the firm, but permitted and consented that the executor should use her husband's estate to carry on the business as it was done prior to his death. James Webb, Jr., died in February, 1904, intestate, leaving as his heirs at law and distributees Mary Webb, his widow, and Brown R. Webb and J. C. Webb, his sons.

The estate of Jos. C. Webb was not settled at the time of the death of said Jas. Webb, Jr. A. J. Ruffin and H. W. Webb were appointed and duly qualified as administrators of Jas. Webb, Jr., deceased. T. N. Webb and J. Cheshire Webb were appointed administrators with the will annexed of Jos. C. Webb, deceased. On the 15th day of February, 1904, the said administrators joined in the publication of a notice to debtors of the firm of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. to make prompt payment, concluding: "We take great pleasure in assuring the old friends and patrons of this firm that the business is to be continued indefinitely under the same style and management, and we earnestly solicit the continuance of your valued patronage, promising to give you at all times the best possible values, together with the most courteous treatment." Neither of the administrators put any money into the business, nor did they intend to form a new firm, but did intend to give notice that the business would be continued, under the firm name and style of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro., with the funds belonging to the estates of the deceased partners, which had been invested in said business. This action was taken with the full knowledge and consent of the heirs, distributees, devisees, and legatees of both of said deceased partners. On July 18, 1904, the property and assets of the firm of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. were sold to H. W.

and J. C. Webb. The old firm was continued for the sole purpose of collecting the debts and settling the business. J. Cox Webb was appointed agent to collect the debts due the firm. Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. held a judgment against defendant, Miller, duly docketed in Orange county. D. S. Miller held a mortgage on the lands of defendant, W. J. Miller, which he duly foreclosed under power of sale therein. The crops in controversy were growing on the lands at the time of the sale. J. Cox Webb became the purchaser at the sale, paying the purchase price from money collected by him on account of the debts due Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro., and took deed therefor to Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. Soon thereafter Alice H. Webb, widow of Jos. C. Webb, and B. R. Webb, J. Cox Webb, children, and Mary B. Webb, widow, of Jas. Webb, Jr., executed a deed for said land to plaintiffs. The land brought at said sale an amount in excess of the mortgage debt. In an action brought by defendant, W. J. Miller, the administrators of Jas. Webb, Jr., and Jos. C. Webb intervened. The said Miller claimed and recovered, on account of his homestead interest in said land, $112.75; the balance, $55, being applied to the judgment held by said administrators. His honor was of the opinion, upon the foregoing facts, that, as the title to the land did not pass by the deed from D. S. Miller to Jas. Webb, Jr., and Bro., the plaintiffs acquired none by it becomes necessary to fit the description to the person or thing therein intended. Instances of its application are found in cases cited in WALKER v. MILLER, where parol evidence was held admissible to identify parties, as follows: In North Carolina Institute v. Norwood, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 65, the legatee named in a will; in Lowe v. Carter, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 383, the subject of a bequest; in Wakefield v. Brown, 38 Minn. 361, 8 Am. St. Rep. 671, 37 N. W. 788, and Ryan v. Martin, 91 N. C. 464, the grantor in a deed; and in Simmons v. Allison, 118 N. C. 776, 24 S. E. 716, the grantee.

The case of Murray v. Blackledge, 71 N. C. 492, cited in WALKER v. MILLER, is also cited in Grabbs v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Assn. 125 N. C. 389, 34 S. E. 503, an action for the recovery of insurance, which was resisted on the ground that plaintiffs were without insurable interests in the property, the deed to which stood in the name of an unincorporated association. Parol evidence was admitted to show that plaintiffs were members of and composed said association.

Morse v. Carpenter, 19 Vt. 614, quoted from in WALKER v. MILLER, has also been cited in Wakefield v. Brown, 38 Minn. 361, 8 Am. St. Rep. 671, 37 N. W. 788; Menage v. Burke, 43 Minn. 211, 19 Am. St. Rep. 235, 45 N. W. 155; Fisk v. Hollander, MacArthur 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

& M. 360, holding extrinsic evidence admissible to identify assignees of a patent named in the assignment by surnames only, which constituted their firm name; Woodward v. McAdam, 101 Cal. 440, 35 Pac. 1016, sustaining a mortgage to Shoober, Beale, & Co., on the ground that the description of the mortgagees was not inherently uncertain, but merely imperfect, and susceptible of completion by resort to extraneous facts. Cole v. Mette, 65 Ark. 506, 67 Am. St. Rep. 945, 47 S. W. 407, which holds parol evidence admissible to identify the grantees in a deed to a firm, the name of which consisted of a union of their surnames; and Lindsay v. Hoke, 21 Ala. 542, in which the court said that though the question was not raised in such a way that it was called upon to decide it, it would probably have come to the conclusion that a deed to a firm may be aided by parol proof, showing the particular individuals of which the partnership was composed.

Menage v. Burke, supra, cited in the Walker Case, is also cited in A. J. Dwyer Pine Land Co. v. Whiteman, 92 Minn. 57, 99 N. W. 302, which holds that a deed to a co-partnership, designated by the surnames of the copartners, may be reformed by supplying their Christian names.

deed of Mrs. Alice Webb and others. He rendered judgment dismissing the action. The plaintiffs excepted and appealed.

Mr. John W. Graham, for appellants:

A deed to a copartnership vests the property in the concern, and not the individual members.

Donaldson v. State Bank, 16 N. C. (1 v. Eq.) 103; Murray v. Blackledge, 71 N. C. 494; Charlotte Twp. v. Piedmont Realty Co., 134 N. C. 49, 46 S. E. 723; Simmons v. Blison, 118 N. C. 776, 24 S. E. 716; Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 215, 29 L. ed. 863, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, 710; Lowe v. Carter, 55 N. C. 2 Jones, Eq.) 383; Ryan v. Martin, 91 N. C. 464; Smith v. Gray, 116 N. C. 311, 21 S. E. 200; Taylor v. Heggie, 83 N. C. 244; Tate v. Green, 100 N. C. 422, 5 S. E. 422; Moore v. Hill, 85 N. C. 218; Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 624, 26 L. ed. 590; Franklyn v. Sprague, 121 U. S. 216, 30 L. d. 337, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 951.

Connor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

His honor was of the opinion that there was no such person or partnership in existence as Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. at the time of the sale of the land, and upon the elementary proposition that, to constitute a valid deed of conveyance, there must be a grantor, grantee, and thing granted, the deed or paper writing having the form of a deed was inoperative. It is, of course, common learning that the death of a partner in the absence of any stipulation in the articles of copartnership to the contrary, works an immediate dissolution; that the title to the assets vests in the surviving partner, impressed with a trust to close up the partnership business, pay the debts, and turn over to his personal representative the share of the deceased partner. We speak only of the personality in this connection. The facts found by his honor show that, upon the death of Jos. C. Webb, his widow, sole legatee, permitted the surviving partner, who was also executor of her husband, to continue the business under the name of the old or original firm. This condition, with her consent, continued for nine years. The only persons interested in the assets, other than creditors, were Jas. Webb, Jr., and Mrs. Alice Webb. His honor finds that Mrs. Alice Webb did not become a member of said firm, so as to be personally responsible for debts incurred after her husband's death. We do not see how this is material to the questions presented upon this appeal, and we do not express any opinion regarding her liability to creditors, notwithstanding her purpose or intention. Certainly she and the executor were the real, beneficial, and only owners, of the property and the profits accruing from the business. Upon the death of Jas. Webb, Jr., the same arrangement was made and continued by all of the parties in interest. They were all sui juris, and we can see no reason why, inter sese, it was not competent for them to permit their property, with the consent and co-operation of the administrators, to remain in common and be used for their joint benefit, adopting any name or style agreeable to them for more easily and conveniently carrying out their purpose. The fact that they chose to carry on the business under the name of the old firm does not change their rights. They could, if they had so preferred, have selected any other name. Of course, the old firm, as originally constituted, was dissolved by death of the partners. Whether the parties so intended or not, the legal effect of what they did was to create a new and original arrangement for carrying on business, the capital of which was contributed by the beneficial owners of the property. The fact that they selected the administrators of the deceased partners to manage the business, so far as the questions presented upon this record, is immaterial. It may be that, if debts were contracted, liabilities not contemplated would have attached.

For the purpose of this appeal, the transaction consisted of an arrangement between the distributees and legatees, with the approval of the administrators, to use the property for a joint and common benefit. The widows and children of the deceased partners were the owners, and the administrators were their agents. Viewed from this standpoint, we have parties conducting business in a manner which, in a limited, if not absolute, sense, constituted a partnership adopting a name which, by a reason of being well known and enjoying the confidence of its customers, was valuable to them. It was entirely proper, and not unusual, that they should do so. There was no concealment of the personal status of the parties. They gave notice of the death of the original partners. It is not uncommon for a business which, by reason of the credit and reputation for integrity of the founders, possesses value, to be conducted after their death under its original name. In such cases it is the business of the living owners, and contracts made by or with them, under the name adopted, have all the force and effect as if made in the names of the individuals to whom it belongs. A man, if he chooses, may carry on business in a name other than his own, or, as is said by Erle, Ch. J., in Maugham v. Sharpe, 17 C. B. N. S. 443: "It is clear that individuals may carry on business under any name and style which they may choose to adopt." That a deed to a partnership, in which the partners are not named, is valid, is abundantly established by this and many other courts. In Murray v. Blackledge, 71 N. C. 492, the deed was made to "Murray, Ferris & Co." To the objection that the deed was inoperative, because there was no grantee, Rodman, J., said: "But a deed for land is not for that reason void any more than a bond for the payment of money is. It is a latent ambiguity, which may be explained by parol." North Carolina Institute v. Norwood, 45 N. C. (Busbee Eq.) 65. In Morse v. Carpenter, 19 Vt. 614, the mortgage was made to "Morse & Houghton, of Bakersfield." Parol evidence was received to show that two persons were doing business in Bakersfield under that firm name. Royce, Ch. J., referring to descriptions ambiguities patens, said: "There is, however, an important difference between a description which is inherently uncertain and indeterminate and one which is merely imperfect, and capable, on that account, of different applications. To correct the one is, in effect, to add new terms to the instrument; while to complete the other is only to ascertain and fix the application of terms already contained in it." The distinction between a patent and a latent ambiguity is pointed out with his usual clearness by Pearson, Ch. J., in North Carolina Institute v. Norwood, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 65. In Wakefield v. Brown, 38 Minn. 361, 8 Am. St. Rep. 671, 37 N. W. 788, it is said: "If the true owner conveys by any name, the conveyance, as between the grantor and grantee, will transfer title, and in all cases evidence aliunde the instrument is admissible to identify the actual grantor. The admission of such evidence does not change the written instrument or add new terms to it, but merely fixes and applies terms already contained in it." The same principle controls when the uncertainty or ambiguity is regarding the grantee. The same is held in Blanchard v. Floyd, 93 Ala. 53, 9 So. 418, Coleman, J., saying: "If the proof shows that Blanchard & Burrus, a partnership, were the purchasers of the land, . . . they owned, as tenants in common, an equitable interest in the land." In Menage v. Burke, 43 Minn. 211, 19 Am. St. Rep. 235, 45 N. W. 155, a mortgage to "Farnham & Lovejoy" was held valid, Dickinson, J., saying: "While it is necessary to the legal validity of such instruments that there be a grantee having a legal existence, capable of taking and certainly designated, or so designated that his identity can be certainly ascertained, these conditions are complied with in this 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) case; resort being had, as may be done, to facts beyond the instrument for the purpose of applying the description or designation of the persons named to the persons so described." 1 Jones, Conv. 244. In Maugham v. Sharpe, 17 C. B. N. S. 462, the deed was executed to "The City Investment & Advance Company." It was objected that as there was no such corporation, the deed was void. Erle, Ch. J., said: "The bill of sale under which the defendants claim purports to convey the property to the City Investment & Advance Company, and not to the defendants by name; and it was contended for the plaintiff that the goods could not pass to Sharpe & Baker. . . . It is clear that individuals may carry on business under any name and style which they may choose to adopt, and I see no reason why the defendants may not do so under the name of the City Investment & Advance Company. . . . A company are Sharpe & Baker, and consequently the conveyance in question is a conveyance to those individuals. I cannot, therefore, say that the deed was inoperative on this ground." Williams, J., said: "In this case I apprehend the meaning of the grant is plain. The deed purports and intends to convey the goods to those persons who use the style and firm of the City Investment & Advance Company. They may or may not be a corporation; but, when it is ascertained that those who carry on business under that name are the defendants, the deed operates to convey the property to them." Shep. Touch. 236.

His honor, in his judgment, cites the case of Neal v. Nelson, 117 N. C. 393, 53 Am. St. Rep. 590, 23 S. E. 428, in which it is held that a deed to "A. and his heirs." A being dead, is void. This decision is put upon the ground that "heirs" is a word of limitation, and not of purchase. It is said that a deed to "A. or his heirs" would be good, A. being dead, if his heirs could be ascertained. It is well settled that a deed to "A. and his children" is valid to vest the title in them as tenants in common. His honor was of the opinion that "after July 18, 1904, when the goods and store were sold to H. W. Webb and J. C. Webb, no one constituted the old firm of Jas. Webb, Jr. & Co. It then ceased to exist." He therefore concluded that the deed from D. L. Miller conveyed nothing, leaving the legal title in Miller in trust for the administrators. If it be conceded, as his honor concluded, that the old firm ceased to exist, certainly the assets belonged to some one. Jos. C. Webb was appointed agent to collect them. There were no debts to pay. The assets then belonged to the legatees and distributors of the deceased partners. When J. Cox Webb, in executing the trust reposed in him to collect the assets, purchased the land with the money of his principals, and directed title to be made in the name of the old firm, it is manifest that it was his purpose to put the title in the persons who paid the purchase money. They ratified his act, treating the land as theirs by selling to the plaintiffs. The defendant, W. J. Miller, recognized the status of the title by suing for and receiving from the purchase money his homestead interest. We can perceive no reason why, both upon reason and authority, in the light of the fact found by his honor, the latent ambiguity in the description of the parties in the deed is not removed and the true owners ascertained to be the grantors of the plaintiffs. Lowe v. Carter, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 383; Ryan v. Martin, 91 N. C. 484; Simmons v. Allison, 118 N. C. 776, 24 S. E. 716. It is sometimes said that only an equitable title is conveyed in such cases. The better view, we think, is that which we find sustained by the authorities cited, — that the ambiguity is latent and open to explanation by which the real party is disclosed and the deed treated as if the same were inserted. If, however, the other view be adopted, the same result would follow in this case. It is well settled, under our judicial system, that a party may recover in ejectment upon an equitable title. Clark's Code, § 177, and cases cited at page 102. The mortgagee, D. S. Miller, has sold under the power and received the purchase money, more than sufficient to pay the mortgage debt. The mortgagor, W. J. Miller, has received his interest in the surplus. The administrators turned over the assets of the late firm of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. to J. C. Webb to collect for the benefit of the owners. He has, in the discharge of his agency, applied their money to the purchase of the land, and procured a deed to be made, as he understood and intended, to them. They, acting upon the belief that the land was theirs, have sold for a valuable consideration to the plaintiffs. We cannot see how a more perfect equitable title could vest in the plaintiffs. If, as the learned judge thought, the naked legal title still remained in D. S. Miller, certainly no one, save the plaintiffs, can call for it.

There are no unadjusted questions between the administrators and the grantors of the plaintiffs, or between W. J. Miller and either of the parties to the transactions. He does not suggest any reason why the plaintiffs should not recover, save that they are not the real parties in interest. We think that they are the real and only parties in interest, and are entitled to recover the crops. If, however, D. S. Miller was a necessary party, we can see no reason why he should not be brought in now to perfect the record. The action should not have been dismissed. The court may at any time, before or after judgment, direct other persons to be made parties, to the end that substantial justice be done. While it is true that a justice has no power to administer an equity, the owner of an equitable title may sue in the justice's court. Lutz v. Thompson, 87 N. C. 334. Many of the difficulties which obstructed the courts in the administration of justice and necessitated the dismissal of suits because of a divided jurisdiction between courts of law and courts of equity, or the failure to sue out the writ applicable to the right to be enforced, are avoided by the reformed Codes of Procedure. Courts now seek to ascertain the facts, and administer the right to the real party in interest. Amendments are liberally made to enable the court to so mold the judgment that substantial justice is administered.

Upon the facts found by His Honor, judgment should have been entered that the plaintiffs are the owners of the crops in controversy. Judgment will be entered accordingly in the superior court of Orange.

Error.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

CHATFIELD LEONARD, Receiver, etc., of Curtis A. Barnum, Appt.,

v.

CARLTON B. PIERCE, Impleaded, etc.,
Resp't.

(182 N. Y. 431.)

Pleading—action against trustee.

Naming defendant individually in the title, and stating a cause of action against him as trustee, render the complaint demurrable.

(Werner and Bartlett, JJ., dissent.)

(October 3, 1905.)

Case Note.—The case of First Nat. Bank v. Shuler, 153 N. Y. 163, 60 Am. St. Rep. 601, 47 N. E. 262, is relied upon as an authority for the doctrine that a complaint is demurrable if it states a cause of action against the defendant in a representative capacity, and describes him in the summons in his individual capacity. This case involved a judgment creditor's action against the debtor, his wife, and his assignee, to set aside certain conveyances as fraudulent; pending the action the debtor died, and a supplemental complaint was served, alleging the death of the debtor APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing a judgment of a Special Term for New York County which overruled a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to compel an accounting by an alleged trustee. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Clarence L. Barber, for appellant:

The complaint alleges a good cause of action against Pierce as trustee.

Soldiers' Home v. Sage, 11 Misc. 159, 33 N. Y. Supp. 549; Berolzheimer v. Strauss, 19 Jones & S. 90.

In determining whether a party sues or is sued individually, the court will consider both the title and the allegations.

Collins v. Steuart, 2 App. Div. 278, 37 N. Y. Supp. 891; Stilwell v. Carpenter, 62 N. Y. 639; Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 297; First Nat. Bank v. Shuler, 153 N. Y. 173, 60 Am. St. Rep. 601, 47 N. E. 202; Genet v. De Graaf, 27 App. Div. 238, 50 N. Y. Supp. 442; Patterson v. Copeland, 52 How. Pr. 460; Kley v. Higgins, 33 Misc. 367, 68 N. Y. Supp. 453; Wise v. Williams, 72 Cal. 547, 14 Pac. 204; State use of Worth County v. Patton, 42 Mo. 530; Collins v. Lightle, 50 Ark. 101, 6 S. W. 596; Bryant v. Southern R. Co. 137 Ala. 491, 34 So. 562.

If a complaint alleges a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff or against the defendant individually, but he is described in the title "as executor," those words will be rejected.

and the appointment of his wife as executrix; but no order was entered continuing the action against her in her representative capacity. The court held the judgment fatally defective for an omission to bring in the wife in her representative capacity as a party defendant. There are some points of difference between this case and the case of LEONARD v. PIERCE. In the former a cause of action existed against the defendant in her individual capacity, and after her appointment as administratrix another existed against her in her representative capacity. On the other hand, in LEONARD v. PIERCE, it did not appear that any other cause of action existed against the defendant except in the capacity in which he was described in the complaint. The case of First Nat. Bank v. Shuler, 153 N. Y. 173, 60 Am. St. Rep. 601, 47 N. E. 202, has been cited frequently in other cases, but on questions unlike that involved in LEONARD v. PIERCE.

There is no dispute as to the right to consider the pleadings and title together to ascertain the true nature of a cause of action, or to determine the legal character of the party suing or sued. This proposition is sustained in Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292, and other cases of a similar kind, cited 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Litchfield v. Flint, 104 N. Y. 550, 11 N. Y. 58; Wick v. Jewett, 26 N. Y. Week. Dig. 529 N. Y. S. R. 477; Knox v. Metropolis Elev. R. Co. 58 Hun, 519, 12 N. Y. Supp. 848; Murray v. Church, 1 Hun, 50, Affirmed 58 N. Y. 621; Lehman v. Koch, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 301, 30 N. Y. S. R. 224, N. Y. Supp. 302; Berford v. Barnes, 45 Hun 255; Albany Brewing Co. v. Barclay, 4 App. Div. 342, 59 N. Y. Supp. 65.

Mr. Carlton B. Pierce, in propria person

Haight, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The cause of action as alleged in the complaint was that Pierce, as trustee, be compelled to render an account of the trust funds in his hands, that he be enjoined from making improper investments, and that he be compelled to make restitution of such of the trust funds as had been lost through his fault. In the summons and in the title of the complaint he is named only in his individual capacity, and it is conceded that no cause of action is alleged against him in that capacity. The demurrer is "that there is a defect of parties, in that Carlton B. Pierce, as trustee under the will of Abijah Barnum, deceased, is a necessary defendant," and again, "that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." It has been repeatedly held that persons suing or being sued in their official or representative capacity are, in contemplation of law, distinct persons, and strangers to any right or liaby the court in LEONARD v. PIERCE. The court in the Beers Case said: "That though there be naught in the title of the process or the complaint to give a representative character to the plaintiff, that the facts and averments and scope of the complaint may be such as to affix to him such character and standing in the litigation."

The rule as to fixing the legal character of the party suing is recognized in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Trammell, 93 Ala. 352, 9 So. 870. The complaint in this case was in the name of the plaintiff as administratrix, etc., but the body of the complaint did not expressly state that she was such, although the facts alleged stated a cause of action for the death of "plaintiff's intestate," which, under the statute, could accrue to the plaintiff only in her capacity as personal representative of the deceased. The court sustained the right to recover, because it did sufficiently appear from the complaint that the plaintiff sued as personal representative of the deceased.

In Adams v. Re Qua, 22 Fla. 253, 1 Am. St. Rep. 191, the rule stated in Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292, is applied with approval. The court allowed the record to be amended so as to show that the defendant was sued and judgment rendered ity as an individual; and consequently former judgment concludes a party only the character in which he was sued. If the judgment was for or against an executor, administrator, assignee, or trustee, it could not preclude him, in an action affecting him personally, from disputing the findings or judgment, although the same questions are involved. Collins v. Hydorn, 135 N. Y. 320, 32 N. E. 69; Landon v. Townsend, 112 N. Y. 93-99, 8 Am. St. Rep. 712, 9 N. E. 424; Rathbone v. Hooney, 58 N. Y. 463-467. The defendant Pierce individually, being, in contemplation of law, a distinct party from that of Pierce as trustee under the will of Barnum, deceased, I think adopted the correct practice to relieve himself from liability personally by interposing the demurrer to the complaint. The Code of Civil Procedure provides that an action is commenced by the service of a summons; but the summons must contain the title of the action, specifying the names of the parties to the action. Sections 416, 417. It further provides that the defendant may demur when there is defect of parties plaintiff or defendant and when the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Section 488. It thus appears that the action was commenced by the service of the summons in which the defendant was named a party individually, and that no cause of action was stated in the complaint against him in that capacity. The defendant, therefore, brings himself squarely within the express provisions of the Code in interposing his demurrer. This practice imposes no unjust hardship upon the plaintiff. He is only called upon to determine the nature of his own cause of action, as to whether it is against the person in his individual capacity or in his representative capacity.

It is true that there are cases in which it has been said that the title and pleading may be considered together to ascertain the true nature of the action, and the cases of Stilwell v. Carpenter, 62 N. Y. 639; Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292; Litchfield v. Flint, 104 N. Y. 543, 11 N. E. 58, and Knox v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 58 Hun, 517, 12 N. Y. Supp. 848, Affirmed in 128 N. Y. 625, 28 N. E. 485, are relied upon to sustain the plaintiff's position. But these cases are not in conflict with our views upon this subject. In the case of Stilwell v. Carpenter the action was entitled "Charlotte Stilwell, Executrix, etc." Upon the trial the defendant moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the action was brought by the plaintiff in her representative capacity as an executrix. It was held that the motion was properly denied, for the reason that it did not appear that the action was brought by the plaintiff as executrix, nor did it appear what estate she was executrix of. Therefore the words "Executrix, etc." were merely descriptio personæ. In the case of Beers v. Shannon it was claimed that the action was not brought by the plaintiff in his representative character. The plaintiff gave his name, and following it the words "executor of, etc., of against him as administrator, etc., although he was described in the title and complaint by adding after his name, "administrator, etc." The court held that there was no question but that the complaint disclosed an action against the administrator in his representative capacity.

In Burrell v. Kern, 34 Or. 503, 56 Pac. 809, the court overruled a demurrer to a complaint in which the plaintiffs were styled "executors" in the title, and which set forth a cause of action in their individual capacity.

Boyles, Code Pleading & Practice, pp. 146, 147, states that if the complaint shows by appropriate averments that the action is brought by or against a person in a representative capacity, any defect in the title will be cured. The title and the rest of the pleading may be considered together to ascertain the true nature of the action, and that the action will be treated as brought in an individual or in a representative capacity, as determined from an inspection of the entire pleading. Citing Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292; Jennings v. Wright, 54 Cal. 537; and Stilwell v. Carpenter, 2 Abb. N. C. 238.

Some other cases not cited in LEONARD v. PIERCE, or referred to in the authorities there mentioned, and which also pass on the I.L.R.A. (N.S.)

right to construe the title and context together to fix the legal title of the parties, are the following:

In Lucas v. Pittman, 94 Ala. 619, 10 So. 603, the court said that where the words in the caption are mere words of description, yet, if in the body of the complaint there is a sufficient statement or averment to show that the suit by plaintiff is in his representative character, the body of the complaint must govern the caption.

And in Evans v. Evans, 23 N. J. Eq. 75, the court said that when a bill, in its body, sets forth fully facts which give the complainant a right as executor, or make the defendant liable as such, so that the court, upon these allegations, can give the relief required, it is mere form, and useless form, to require that either party should be so styled in the commencement or conclusion of the bill.

In McNeil's Succession, 9 La. Ann. 113, the court held that when an administrator sues as such, his allegation in another capacity may be treated as surplusage.

In Collins v. Lightle, 50 Ark. 101, 6 S. W. 596, it was held that when a name clearly appears in the body of the complaint as that of the party plaintiff, it is not essential that it should also appear in the caption.

John Beers, deceased." He omitted the word "as" before executor. It will be observed that the Beers Case differs from that of Stilwell v. Carpenter, for in the Beers Case the estate of which he was executor is given. It was held that while without the word "as" it had frequently been held that the addition to the name of the party was descriptio personæ, yet, in view of the allegations of the complaint, it was apparent that he intended to sue in his representative capacity, and that the description of him was sufficient for that purpose. In the case of Litchfield v. Flint, the title was "Electus B. Litchfield, Executor, etc." The complaint alleged a cause of action in his favor in his individual capacity, and not as a representative. In the complaint there was an allegation that he was an executor of the will of a deceased person, naming him. It was held that the words "executor, etc." were merely descriptio personæ. In the case of Knox v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. it was contended that the plaintiffs could not maintain the action, because, in the caption of their complaint they styled themselves "as executors," and not "as trustees," of the last will and testament of Richard Smith Clark. In the body of the complaint, however, they set forth the testator's will, and allege the devise of the property in question to his executors in trust. Under the circumstances it was held that the plaintiffs had the right to describe themselves as "executors," and that the action was properly brought.

It will readily be seen that none of these cases reach the question involved in this case. All of these cases were considered in the case of First Nat. Bank v. Shuler, 153 N. Y. 163, 60 Am. St. Rep. 601, 47 N. E. 202, in which it appears to us the question involved in this case was decided and disposed of. That case was a creditor's action to set aside a general assignment and certain transfers of property as in fraud of the rights of creditors. The action was brought against one Waldron as assignee, and against Elizabeth N. Shuler individually, to whom it was claimed certain transfers of property had been made. After the action had been brought, Isaac C. Shuler, the judgment debtor, died, leaving a will in which Elizabeth N. Shuler was appointed his executrix. Subsequently, upon the application of the plaintiff, the court made an order permitting the plaintiff to serve a supplemental complaint alleging the death of Shuler and the appointment of his executrix, etc. But no order was made continuing the action against her as executrix, or directing that she be brought in and made a party in her representative capacity. Andrews, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion of the court. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.):

says: "We think the proceedings and judgment in this case are fatally defective for the omission of the plaintiff to bring in and make the defendant Elizabeth N. Shuler a party defendant in the action in her capacity as executrix of the original defendant, Isaac C. Shuler. . . . Cases are cited to support the contention that the defendant Elizabeth N. Shuler, having been in fact a party to the action in her individual name, should be regarded as a party in her representative character also." Then he refers to the cases above alluded to, and continues "But a suit against one sued as an individual does not bind him as trustee, and, conversely, judgment against one sued in his representative capacity does not conclude him in a subsequent action brought by or against him as an individual, although the same identical issue is involved and the decision in the first action was upon the merits." The defendant Pierce may be liable as trustee, but is not liable individually. But, if he is not permitted to interpose a demurrer, how can he shield himself from the entry of a judgment against him personally? Must he appear and serve an answer? If so, what is he to answer? He may not be able to truthfully deny the allegations against him as trustee, and no fact has been alleged against him individually which call for an answer. But, assuming that he may answer and go to trial, and upon the trial, procure a ruling to the effect that he is not liable personally, it would be the adoption of a cumbersome and expensive practice, reaching a result in a roundabout way when the Code authorizes a simple remedy by demurrer.

The judgment of the Appellate Division should be affirmed, with costs.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Gray and Vann, JJ. concur.

Werner, J., dissenting:

After many vicissitudes, in the course of which there have been several demurrers amended complaints, and a severance of inconsistent causes of action, the complaint in its present form has reached this court upon a demurrer that was overruled on a special term, but sustained at the appellate division. Of the five specifications in the demurrer only two need be noticed, and they are (1) that there is a defect of parties, in that persons described in paragraph 5 of the complaint as "other devisees there named" are necessary defendants in the action, and (2) that there is a defect of parties defendant, in that Carlton B. Pierce as trustee under the will of Abijah Barnum deceased, is a necessary defendant. The plaintiff is receiver under several judgments covered against one Curtis A. Barnum. He latter is the contingent remainderman under his father's will, subject to his mother's life estate, of certain premises in Otsego county, which have been sold. The proceeds of the sale are now in the hands of the defendant Pierce as trustee under that will, who pays the income to the life tenant. This action is brought to compel the trustee to render an account, to enjoin him from continuing or making unauthorized investments of the trust fund, and to make restitution of such part thereof as may have been lost through his fault. All this is upon the theory, of course that the receiver as a present qualified interest in the trust estate that may ripen into an unqualified title and right of possession upon the death of the cestui que vie. That portion of the complaint which sets forth the interest of the judgment debtor in the estate of his deceased father is to the effect that a certain house and premises in Otsego county were devised to the judgment debtor in fee simple, subject to the life use of his mother, Laura Barnum. This devise was subject to the further contingency that, if the judgment debtor and all of his descendants should die before his mother, the property devised to him should pass to other devisees named in the will. One of the questions now to be decided is whether these "other devisees" are necessary parties to this action.

It is to be observed that this complaint is not singular, in that it prays for several forms of relief which are not justified by its allegations. That is a common fault in equity pleading. It contains one statement, however, that qualifies all its allegations and limits the relief sought. In the seventeenth paragraph the pleader says that "no relief is prayed for . . . which shall affect the custody of said fund or the income thereof during the continuance of the trust estate." This allegation practically eliminates the prayer that the accounts of the trustee be judicially settled, as well as every other that is inconsistent with the main purpose of the action; and, when the complaint is viewed in that light, it is evident that what the plaintiff really wants is to have the trust fund accounted for and properly invested under the direction of the court. The present custody of the fund is not sought to be disturbed, and no direction is prayed for concerning its ultimate disposition. In short, the complaint, fairly construed, seeks nothing more than an intermediate or interlocutory accounting respecting a fund in which the plaintiff has now a contingent interest, and in which the "other devisees" mentioned can have no interest, unless the interest of the plaintiff is annihilated by the death of the judgment debtor and his descendants pending the continuance of the trust estate. A decree directing the trustee to disclose his proceedings, and restricting his investments to legitimate channels, cannot detrimentally affect the interests of these "other devisees," and it is therefore not apparent that they are necessary parties to this action. They may be proper parties, and, if so, the supreme court may, in its discretion, direct them to be brought in. But that result is not to be accomplished by demurrer. "Necessary parties, when the term is accurately used, are those without whom no decree at all can be effectively made determining the principal issues in the cause. Proper parties are those without whom a substantial decree may be made, but not a decree which shall completely settle all the questions which may be involved in the controversy, and conclude the rights of all the persons who have any interest in the subject-matter of the litigation." Pomeroy's Remedies and Remedial Rights, § 329. "If the person is a necessary defendant, a demurrer for defect of parties on account of his nonjoinder will be sustained; and, conversely, if the demurrer will be sustained, the person is a necessary party. If the person is merely a proper party, such a demurrer will not be sustained on account of his nonjoinder, although the court may undoubtedly, in the exercise of its discretion, order him to be brought in." Id. § 330. In determining who are necessary parties and who are merely proper parties to an action for an accounting, it should be borne in mind that there is a well-recognized distinction between the rendering of an account and its final settlement. 2 Woerner, Am. Law of Administration, 2d ed. §§ 501, 502; Remington v. Walker, 21 Hun, 322; Westervelt v. Gregg, 1 Barb. Ch. 469. This distinction was applied in Wood v. Brown, 34 N. Y. 337, where it was held that creditors, legatees, and next of kin are not necessary parties, except in cases of final accounting. This court there said: "The case at bar was a proper one to call on the defendant to render an account of his proceedings. If a final settlement was not contemplated, it was not necessary to make the other legatees parties. The decree does not affect them. If further proceedings are taken upon the basis of the decree, they may be brought in, if necessary. And in Re Robinson, 37 N. Y. 261, where the question was whether the cestuis que trustent were necessary parties upon an application for the appointment of a trustee, it was held that disposition of such applications rests largely upon considerations of convenience, as to which the court will exercise its sound discretion. In the course of the discussion in that case the court quoted certain passages from Judge Story that are quite applicable in the case at bar. The rule relating to parties in equitable actions and proceedings, says Judge Story, "does not seem to be founded on any positive and uniform principle, and therefore it does not admit of being expounded by the application of any universal theorem as a test. . . . It is a rule founded partly in artificial reasoning partly in considerations of convenience, partly in the solicitude of courts of equity to suppress multifarious litigation, and partly in the dictates of natural justice that the rights of persons ought not to be affected in any suit without giving them an opportunity to defend them." This doctrine was approved in Harvey v. Harvey, 4 Beav. 215, Birdsong v. Birdsong, 2 Head, 289, and Wiser v. Blachly, 1 Johns. Ch. 438; and from it there would seem to flow the logical conclusion that the persons who may be entitled to the fund here in question, in the event of the death of the judgment debtor and all of his descendants during the life of the cestui que vie, are not necessary parties to this action, for nothing is really asked in the complaint, and nothing can properly be done by the court, that will affect their interests. The cases of Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 479, and Re Gall, 182 N. Y. 270, 74 N. E. 875, are not in conflict with these views. Neither of those cases came up on demurrer, and in each of them there was an effort to compel distribution of a portion of the estate.

The substance of the second ground of demurrer is that the defendant Pierce is named only in his individual capacity, while the only cause of action alleged is against him as trustee. It is true that in the title he is named without any officia designata, and that the complaint does not allege any cause of action against him as an individual; but it is equally true that it contains an undoubted cause of action against him as trustee, and no other. We think that the case falls within the rule laid down in Stilwell v. Carpenter, 62 N. Y. 639, Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292, Litchfield v. Flint, 104 N. Y. 543, 11 N. E. 58, and Knox v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 58 Hun, 517, 12 N. Y. Supp. 848, Affirmed in 128 N. Y. 625, 28 N. E. 485, to the effect that the title of the action must be read in connection with the allegations of the complaint in order to determine the capacity in which a party sues or is sued. Thus, if the pleading clearly shows that the cause of action is for a against a party in his representative capacity, the mere failure to add the official designation to the name in the title may be disregarded by the court or corrected by amendment (Code Civ. Proc. § 723); and conversely, if a party is designated as representative when the cause of action is for or against him as an individual, the affidavit to his name may be treated as surplusage. This is thoroughly consonant with the liberal rules of pleading and practice enjoined by the Code of Civil Procedure and supported by numerous decisions in the supreme court. It is undoubtedly the better practice to designate in the title of the action the capacity in which a party sues or is sued, but we do not think a failure to do so renders a pleading bad on demurrer, if its context clearly and definitely fixes the legal character of the party suing or sued. There are many instances, of course, in which the neglect to properly denominate a party may prove fatal. That is the usual result when the pleading does not supply the defect in the title. The case of First Nat. Bank v. Shuler, 153 N. Y. 163, 60 Am. St. Rep. 601, 47 N. E. 262, is an illustration in point. That was a judgment creditor's action to set aside a general assignment, as well as certain specific transfers alleged to have been fraudulent. The debtor died pending the action. His widow was appointed his executrix. She had originally been made an individual party defendant in the creditor's action. After her husband's death the plaintiff obtained leave to serve an amended complaint, setting forth the fact of the debtor's death and his widow's appointment as his executrix; but no attempt was made to bring in the executrix as a defendant in her official capacity. The case proceeded to judgment in favor of the creditor, but was reversed in this court on the ground that the executrix had not been made a party in her representative capacity, and therefore was not bound by the judgment. The reason for the decision is readily discernible in the following brief extract from the opinion of Chief Judge Andrews. He said: "The fact that the defendant Elizabeth N. Shuler was a party defendant in her individual character does not obviate the objection. She had a separate individual interest in the litigation, which was instituted in part to avoid transfers made to her by the debtor and it was during his lifetime that she was joined as defendant in the action and answered the complaint. By his death and her appointment as executrix she was invested with a new character as the representative of her husband and his creditors and of his estate." In another part of his opinion the learned chief judge made it clear that the pleadings did not show that the executrix had been made a party in that capacity, or that her interest as such had been considered or determined. The case at bar is the complete antithesis of that case. Here the defendant Pierce is simply named in the title as a party defendant, while every line of the complaint discloses that he is sued as trustee, and in no other capacity.

It is suggested, however, that if the practice pursued by plaintiff herein is sustained, a judgment by default may be entered against a defendant in one capacity, while he may regard himself as having been sued in another. That is one of the possibilities of such a situation. But similar dangers are incurred by every defendant who fails to appear when he is sued. In every such case a plaintiff may obtain greater or different relief than he may be entitled to, but that does not make the complaint demurrable. If it should be held, for instance, that this complaint does not state a cause of action against the defendant Pierce as an individual, and the title of the action should then be amended, so as to conform to the allegations of the complaint, a personal judgment might still be rendered against him if he failed to appear. Of course, the plaintiff would have no legal right to such a judgment; but the mere fact that it was physically possible for him to obtain it would not render the complaint demurrable. We think the complaint clearly and unmistakably shows that the defendant Pierce is sued in his capacity of trustee, and no other. Therefore the mere omission to designate him as trustee in the title to the action is not such a defect of pleading as to render the complaint bad on demurrer.

We shall not discuss at length the respondent's contention that the appeal should be dismissed in accordance with the practice endorsed by a majority of this court in Abbey v. Wheeler, 170 N. Y. 122, 62 N. E. 1074. It is enough to say that, since it does not affirmatively appear that the final judgment herein was not entered in the appellate division, we shall assume that it was so entered; and hence there was no occasion for a second appeal to that tribunal before coming to this court.

For these reasons I dissent from the judgment about to be rendered, and advise that the judgment of the appellate division should be reversed, and that of the special term affirmed, with costs to the appellant in all the courts.

Bartlett, J., concurs with Werner, J.
O'Brien, J., not voting.
ILL. (N.S.)

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF KANSAS

v.

JOHN D. JACK, Appt.

(69 Kan. 387.)

1. Anti-trust law—testimony—due process.

A proceeding before the district court, or judge thereof, upon the written application of the county attorney or attorney general, under chap. 265 § 10, b, 485, Laws 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7873), to subpoena witnesses to testify of their knowledge of violations of provisions of the act known as the "Anti-Trust Law," is of the nature of an investigation, or preliminary proceeding, and is a valid exercise of judicial power, the procedure being "due process of law," within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

2. Witness—constitutional privilege.

The exemption provided by § 10, of the Bill of Rights (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 92), that "no person shall be a witness against himself," cannot be claimed by a witness when, by the terms of a statute, the immunity afforded is coextensive with the constitutional privilege of silence.

3. Same—immunity in anti-trust law.

The immunity afforded by § 10 of the anti-trust law of 1897, to a witness subpoenaed in a proceeding or inquiry, to testify of his knowledge of violations of that law, is coextensive with the constitutional privilege that "no person shall be a witness against himself."

4. Same—refusal to testify.

A witness subpoenaed in a proceeding or inquiry to testify of his knowledge of violations of the anti-trust law cannot refuse to give his evidence on the ground that the immunity provided by § 10 of the act does Headnotes by ATKINSON, J.

Case Note.—In a number of the early cases it was declared that a witness might be compelled to testify, notwithstanding the constitutional guaranty against self-incrimination, where the subsequent use of his testimony in any case against him was prohibited. Ex parte Buskett, 106 Mo. 602, 14 L. R. A. 407, 27 Am. St. Rep. 378, 17 S. W. 753; La Fontaine v. Southern Underwriters' Asso. 83 N. C. 132; Higdon v. Heard, 14 Ga. 255; Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 184; State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307; Wilkins v. Malone, 14 Ind. 153.

People ex rel. Hackley v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74, even went so far as to decide that the constitutional provision that no person should "be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself," applied only in a criminal case in which the person sought to be made a witness was also a party defendant; and that, therefore, a statute making the giving of testimony compulsory, but providing that the testimony so given should not be used in any not afford protection against the use of his evidence in a prosecution against him for violations of the Federal anti-trust law.

5. Anti-trust law—prohibition of continued business.

The provision of § 5 of the anti-trust law of 1897, that every person, company, or corporation violating any of the provisions of the act be denied the right of, and prohibited from, doing any business within the state, contemplates the prohibiting of the continuance of, or the engagement in, business, only when such business is in violation of the act.

6. Same—defense—violation of act by prosecutor.

The provision of § 7 of the anti-trust law of 1897, that in any civil action there may be pleaded in defense that the plaintiff, or any person interested in the prosecution, has, within one year, been guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of the act, contemplates only civil actions relating to, and growing out of, transactions prohibited by the act.

7. Same—Federal Constitution.

The anti-trust law of 1897 is held not to be in contravention of the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, but to be a valid exercise of legislative power.

(May 7, 1904.)

prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the witness, was sufficient protection. But this was overruled in People ex rel. Lewisohn v. O'Brien, 176 N. Y. 253, 68 N. E. 353.

In other cases it was held that, before the constitutional privilege of silence could be taken away by the legislature, there must be absolute indemnity provided; that nothing short of a complete amnesty to the witness—an absolute wiping out of the offense so that he could no longer be prosecuted for it—would furnish that indemnity; and that a provision merely that the testimony of a witness should not be used in evidence against him did not secure such absolute immunity. Cullen v. Com. 24 Gratt. 624; Emery's Case, 107 Mass. 172, 9 Am. Rep. 22; State v. Nowell, 58 N. H. 314.

The rule declared in these cases was reinforced by the decision in Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195, where, after an extensive review of the earlier authorities, it was decided that nothing short of absolute immunity from prosecution could satisfy the constitutional guaranty, and that a statute declaring that no evidence obtained from a witness should be given in evidence, or in any manner used, against him or his property or estate, in any court of the United States, in any criminal proceeding, or for the enforcement of any penalty or forfeiture, did not supply a complete protection from all the perils which the constitutional guaranty was designed to guard, since it would not prevent APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Shawnee County convicting him of contempt of court Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. T. Pringle, R. B. Gillingly, and Rossington, Smith, & Histed, for appellant.

The court erred in denying to the plaintiff the protection claimed under § 10 of the Bill of Rights.

Stat. Edw. II., 1307-1326; Re Nickell, 4 Kan. 734, 27 Am. St. Rep. 315, 23 Pac. 1076; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Emery's Case 107 Mass. 184, 9 Am. Rep. 22; State v. Faulkner, 175 Mo. 546, 75 S. W. 116; Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 631, 29 L. ed. 751, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524; Brown v. Walker 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

The immunity furnished by the statute is insufficient to withdraw the protection claimed by the witnesses under the Bill of Rights.

Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Levy v. Superior Court, 29 L. R. A. 813, note, 105 Cal. 600, 38 Pac. 965; 1 Greenl. Ev. Lewis's ed. § 453; John- the use of his testimony to search out other testimony to be used against him or his property.

This ruling is, of course, binding on the Federal courts, which have since followed it (Re Scott, 95 Fed. 815; Re Roaser, 96 Fed. 305; Re Feldstein, 103 Fed. 269; Re Walsh, 104 Fed. 518; Foot v. Buchanan, 113 Fed. 150; Re Shera, 114 Fed. 207; Re Nachman, 114 Fed. 995), except in the case of Mackel v. Rochester, 42 C. C. A. 427, 106 Fed. 314, where it was held that the provision of § 7 of the bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898, that no testimony given by a witness should be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding, was sufficient to satisfy the constitutional guaranty against self-incrimination. But this decision seems to be based on a misconception of the case of Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

The rule laid down in Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195, was also adopted in Ex parte Carter, 106 Mo. 604, 57 L. R. A. 654, 66 S. W. 540; Larson v. Boyden, 160 Ill. 613, 43 N. E. 751; People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349; Ex parte Clarke, 103 Cal. 352, 37 Pac. 230; and People ex rel. Lewisohn v. O'Brien, 176 N. Y. 253, 68 N. E. 353.

Even where absolute immunity from punishment is provided, it was held, in United States v. James, 26 L. R. A. 418, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 578, 60 Fed. 257, that a witness a v. Donaldson, 18 Blatchf. 287, 3 Fed. Cl. 108; Newgold v. American Electrical Novelty Mfg. Co. 108 Fed. 342; Snow v. Mast, 63 Md. 623; Boyd v. United States, 110 U. S. 11, 29 L. ed. 751, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524; Maryland use of Washington County v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 3 How. 552, 11 L. ed. 2; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 1 Kan. 15; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431.

The witness was further protected from answering because his testimony might subject him to a criminal prosecution and to the forfeitures and penalties prescribed by the Federal anti-trust act, as to which the immunity granted by § 10 is entirely unavailing.

The commodity dealt in by these mine operators, being the subject of interstate, as well as domestic, trade, is within the operation of the Federal statutes.

Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Chesapeake & O. Fuel Co. v. United States, 53 C. C. A. 256, 115 Fed. 310.

The rule which declares that no man is compelled to accuse himself would most obviously be infringed by compelling a witness to disclose a fact which might complete the testimony against himself.

1 Burr's Trial, 245; People ex rel. Taylor v. Forbes, 143 N. Y. 219, 38 N. E. 303; Stevens v. State, 50 Kan. 712, 32 Pac. 350; Foot v. Buchanan, 113 Fed. 161; Emery's Case, 107 Mass. 181, 9 Am. Rep. 22; Re Nickell, 47 Kan. 737, 27 Am. St. Rep. 315, 28 Pac. 1076.

The denial of the claim of immunity, interposed by the witnesses, was in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and deprived them of their liberty without due process of law.

Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 350, 21 L. ed. 959; Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 416, 42 L. ed. 220, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841; Capel v. Child, 2 Crompt. & J. 574; Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 23 L. ed. 914; Hallinger v. Davis, 146 U. S. 320, 36 L. ed. 989, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 276, 15 L. ed. 373; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 244, 4 L. ed. 561; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 581, 4 L. ed. 645; Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 289, 27 L. ed. 562, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 481, 23 L. ed. 479.

Messrs. C. C. Coleman, Attorney General, cannot be deprived of the protection of the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, the court declaring that the privilege conferred by that amendment was intended to make the secrets of memory, so far as they brought one's former acts within the definition of crime, inviolate as against judicial probe or disclosure. But this case is overthrown by the ruling in the subsequent case of Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644, where it is held that exempting a witness from any prosecution, or any penalty or forfeiture, on account of any transaction to which he may testify sufficiently satisfies the guaranty against self-incrimination. The court said that the fact that a witness cannot be shielded from the personal disgrace attaching to the exposure of his crime does not render a statute exempting him from prosecution therefor unconstitutional.

In People ex rel. Lewisohn v. O'Brien, 176 N. Y. 253, 68 N. E. 353, which was a proceeding for contempt in refusing to answer certain questions as a witness in proceedings against another as a common gambler, § 342 of the Penal Code, which provided that no person should be excused from giving testimony upon any investigation or proceeding for a violation of the chapter (relating to gambling) upon the ground that such testimony might tend to convict him of a crime; but that such testimony should not be received against him upon any criminal investigation or proceeding,—was held not to afford the witness the protection contemplated by N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 6, as to self-incrimination. The court disapproved of the ruling in People ex rel. Hackley v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74, and followed Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 316, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195.

Subsequently the Code provision was amended to provide that no person so testifying should be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction concerning which he might testify or produce evidence; and that no evidence so given or produced should be received against him upon any criminal investigation or proceeding. And in People ex rel. Lewisohn v. Court of General Sessions, 96 App. Div. 201, 89 N. Y. Supp. 364, Affirmed without opinion in 179 N. Y. 594, 72 N. E. 1148, this provision was held to satisfy the constitutional guaranty against self-incrimination.

And in People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 1 Am. St. Rep. 851, 14 N. E. 319, a section of the Penal Code providing that a person may be compelled to testify as a witness in a prosecution for bribery, but that testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against him; and that the fact of so testifying may be pleaded in bar of an indictment or prosecution against him,—was held constitutional.

A Code provision that no person shall be excused on any prosecution from testifying touching any unlawful gambling done by himself or others, but that no discovery made Otis E. Hungate, Edwin A. Austin, and Thomson, Springer, & Price for the State.

Atkinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by John D. Jack from a judgment of imprisonment for contempt by the district court of Shawnee county. Appellant, as a witness, refused to answer certain questions in a proceeding, or investigation, in that court concerning the existence of unlawful combinations of coal operators, and was adjudged guilty of contempt.

On September 3, 1903, the attorney general and the county attorney of Shawnee county, proceeding under § 10, chap. 265, Laws 1897 (Gen. Stat., 1901, § 7873), filed in the district court of Shawnee county their verified application, informing the court of the existence of unlawful combinations of persons engaged in the operation of coal mines in Osage county, for the purpose of fixing the price of coal at the mines and the price to be charged to purchasers. It was therein averred that the members of these combinations met monthly in the county of Shawnee, and fixed minimum prices to be charged for coal and agreed that they would not sell it for less than such minimum prices, and that these agreements were carried out and executed by the members. Among others named in said application as having knowledge of the existence of these combinations was appellant, and for him it was therein asked that a subpoena issue. The district judge awarded subpoenas upon the application.

The court denied the motion of appellant to quash the subpoena issued, and he thereupon appeared in court as a witness, and was asked the following questions:

Q. Do you know of any meetings of the operators of Osage county being held in this city (Topeka) at intervals during the last year?

by the witness upon such examination shall be used against him in any penal or criminal prosecution, and that he shall be altogether pardoned of the offense so done or participated in by him, was also held, in Re Briggs, 135 N. C. 118, 47 S. E. 403, not to violate the constitutional guaranty against being compelled to give evidence against oneself.

So, a provision that no testimony given by a witness "shall, in any prosecution, be used as evidence, either directly or indirectly, against him; nor shall he be thereafter prosecuted for any offense so disclosed by him,"—was held, in State v. Nowell, 58 N. H. 314, to secure him against all liability to future prosecution as effectually as if he were wholly innocent; and he was, therefore, held to have, under the statute, all the protection that the constitutional privilege would give him.

And a provision that any witness giving evidence either before the grand jury or the court, in a prosecution for unlawful gaming, shall never be proceeded against for any offense of unlawful gaming committed by him at the time and place indicated in such prosecution; and that in a criminal prosecution other than for perjury, or an action on a penal statute, evidence shall not be given against the accused of any statement made by him as a witness upon legal examination,—was held, in Kendrick v. Com. 78 Va. 493, to secure to the witness the absolute immunity from punishment held necessary by the case of Cullen v. Com. 24 Gratt. 624.

An anti-trust act which required the making of an affidavit under oath by the officers of a corporation, upon demand of the secretary of state, as to whether or not it has all or any part of its business or interest in or with any trust, combination, or association, in violation of the act; but providing that no corporation, firm, or individual should be subject to any criminal prosecution by reason of anything truthfully disclosed by the affidavit, or truthfully disclosed in any testimony elicited in the execution thereof,—was held to afford a sufficient protection to satisfy the constitutional guaranty, in People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349.

In Ex parte Cohen, 104 Cal. 524, 26 L. R. A. 423, 43 Am. St. Rep. 127, 38 Pac. 364, it is held that the constitutional provision against compelling a person to be a witness against himself in a criminal action is not violated by requiring him to give testimony on the prosecution of another person, which may show that he has himself been guilty of a crime, where the statute declares that he shall not be liable to indictment or presentment by information, nor to prosecution or punishment "for an offense with reference to which his testimony was given."

That a witness who is exempted by statute from liability for any offense of which he is compelled to give evidence cannot invoke the constitutional privilege of silence, was decided in Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 215, and State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 743, 45 S. E. 1033.

The latest ruling of the Federal Supreme Court on the subject is contained in the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 48 L. ed. 860, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563, which simply follows the case of Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644, in declaring that the immunity extended by the interstate commerce act from prosecution or forfeiture of estate because of testimony given in pursuance of the requirements of the law, satisfies the guaranty of the 5th Amendment.

Q. I will ask you if you have any knowledge of a combine or an agreement being entered into by operators in coal of Osage county for the purpose of fixing the price of coal sold to residents and citizens of Kansas?

Q. Have you any knowledge of any meetings of coal operators of Osage county, Kansas, being held in this city on the last Saturday night of each month during the last year, the purpose of which was to fix the price of coal which was to be charged to citizens of Kansas?

Q. Do you know of any agreements having been entered into within this county within the last year between the operators in coal who operate in Osage county, Kansas, by which they attempted to fix and settle the price of coal between themselves and citizens of Kansas?

Appellant refused to answer each of the foregoing questions, assigning the following as his reason therefor: "I am engaged in operating a coal mine in Osage county, Kansas, and in dealing in the output of said mines, and am one of the persons named in the application for subpoenas in this proceeding. The product of the mines of Osage county is the subject of both domestic and interstate commerce. I respectfully decline to answer the questions, or to testify with reference to the subject of this inquiry, for the reason that, in answering the questions, and in submitting myself to an examination as a witness, I may incriminate myself, and give information as to the details of the said alleged combination and agreement, and the names of parties and witnesses which might supply the means of convicting me of a crime, and of subjecting me to imprisonment, fines, forfeitures, and penalties; and I therefore claim the privilege and immunity of § 10 of the Bill of Rights."

The anti-trust law (Laws 1897, chap. 265; Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874) is vigorously assailed. It is charged that the act is in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, in that it deprives a person of liberty and property without due process of law, and denies him the equal protection of the law. It is also charged that the requiring of appellant to answer these questions (his refusal so to do being the cause of his imprisonment for contempt) deprives him of the rights, privileges, and immunities guaranteed by § 10 of the Bill of Rights (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 92). The motion to quash the subpoena raised the question whether the proceedings upon the application, and the issuing of subpoenas thereunder, as provided by § 10 of the act of 1897, were "due process of law," 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Said section reads: "The several district courts of this state and the judges thereof shall have jurisdiction, and it shall be their duty, upon good cause shown and upon written application of the county attorney or the attorney general, to cause to be issued by the clerk of said court subpoenas for such witnesses as may be named in the application of a county attorney or the attorney general, and to cause the same to be served by the sheriff of the county where such subpoena is issued; and such witnesses shall be compelled to appear before such court or judge at the time and place set forth in the subpoena, and shall be compelled to testify as to any knowledge they may have of the violations of any of the provisions of this act, and any witness who fails or refuses to attend and testify shall be punished as for contempt, as provided by law. Any person subpoenaed and examined shall not be liable to criminal prosecution for any violation of this act about which he may testify. Neither shall the evidence of any such witness be used against him in any criminal proceeding. The evidence of all witnesses so subpoenaed shall be taken down by the reporter of said court, and shall be transcribed and placed in the hands of the county attorney or the attorney general, and he shall, in the proper courts, at once prosecute such violator or violators of this act as the testimony so taken shall disclose. Witnesses subpoenaed as provided for in this section shall be compelled to attend from any county in the state."

It is urged by appellant that the proceeding provided by this section is not judicial in its character, and is not "due process of law," in that it is not founded upon complaint, information, or indictment. District courts are expressly created by the Constitution, and therein given such jurisdiction as may be provided by law (Const. art. 3 § 6), its extent and practice being left to the legislature. Judges of the district courts are expressly created by the Constitution, and therein given such jurisdiction at chambers as may be provided by law (Const. art. 3, § 16), its extent being left to the legislature.

The wide scope given to the states in the matter of their judicial tribunals and the character of their procedure as recognized by the Federal government, was clearly set forth in the opinion by Mr. Justice Brewer, in the case of Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 44 L. ed. 119, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77, where it was said: "The state has full control over the procedure in its courts, both in civil and criminal cases, subject only to the qualification that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights, or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of the Federal Constitution. Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 20 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 186 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581. 'The 14th Amendment does not profess to secure to all persons in the United States the benefit of the same laws and the same remedies. Great diversities in these respects may exist in two states separated only by an imaginary line. On one side of this line, there may be a right of trial by jury, and, on the other side, no such right. Each state prescribes its own modes of judicial proceeding.' Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis) 101 U. S. 22, 31, 25 L. ed. 989, 992. . . . A perfectly satisfactory definition of due process may, perhaps, not be easily stated. In Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 537, 28 L. ed. 232, 239, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 121, 292, Mr. Justice Matthews, after reviewing previous declarations, said: 'It follows that any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age and custom, or newly devised, in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law.' In Leeper v. Texas, 130 U. S. 462, 468, 35 L. ed. 225, 227, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577, 570, Chief Justice Fuller declared 'that law, in its regular course of administration through courts of justice, is due process; and, when secured by the law of the state, the constitutional requirement is satisfied.'"

Section 1923, Gen. Stat. 1901, gives to district courts general original jurisdiction of all matters, both civil and criminal, not otherwise provided by law. Section 1924 provides that district judges "shall have and exercise such power in vacation or at chambers as may be provided by law, and shall also have power . . . to punish for contempt in open court or at chambers." The right of the district courts and district judges to punish for contempt, without a jury, is well recognized. Re Millington, 24 Kan. 214; State ex rel. Curtis v. Durein, 46 Kan. 695, 27 Pac. 148; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 66; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125. By § 10 of the act of 1897 the legislature conferred upon district courts and judges thereof the power to order the issue of subpoenas for witnesses, upon written application, and to compel them to attend and testify, with authority to punish as for contempt upon a refusal so to do. In 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125, supra, the court upheld a somewhat analogous provision of the interstate commerce act, wherein the circuit court is given power to entertain an application of the commission, issue subpoenas, examine witnesses, and commit for contempt when a witness refuses to testify. The procedure under § 10 is an investigation, or preliminary proceeding, and can result in no final judgment, except in a proceeding for contempt against a recalcitrant witness, unless it be the result of a regular judicial trial, conducted in the manner provided by statute. It is a valid exercise of judicial power, and the procedure is "due process of law."

The case of State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 67 L. R. A. 903, 69 Pac. 199, was an appeal from a judgment of conviction for a violation of this law. It was there charged that the act imposed such limitations upon freedom of contract as to constitute a deprivation of the right of property, contrary to the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. This court held that it did not conflict with the right to acquire property by lawful contract, the guaranty of which is secured by the Federal Constitution, and that the forbiddance of membership in combinations in restraint of trade was a valid exercise of legislative power. It is contended by appellant that compliance with the requirement to answer the foregoing questions would have deprived him of the privileges and immunities guaranteed to him by § 10 of the Bill of Rights, which provides that "no person shall be a witness against himself." This is not only a constitutional right, but it is also a fundamental principle of the common law, embodied in the maxim that "no man can be compelled to criminate himself." This proceeding before the district court was of the nature of an investigation to inquire whether there had been criminal violations of the anti-trust law. If appellant were guilty of any of the offenses of which inquiry was made by the questions which he refused to answer, he was liable to criminal prosecution under this law. He assigned as a reason for his refusal to answer the questions that in doing so he might criminate himself under the anti-trust law, he being an operator of coal mines in the state, and dealing in their output. The legislature, by § 10 of the act of 1897, provided immunity to witnesses subpoenaed to testify concerning violations of the act in the following language: "Any person subpoenaed and examined shall not be liable to criminal prosecution for any violation of this act about which he may testify. Neither shall the evidence of any such witness be used against him in any criminal proceeding."

Was appellant, as a witness upon this investigation, entitled to invoke the protection of § 10 of the Bill of Rights? Was he entitled to plead the privilege of silence? If the immunity against prosecution, provided for by § 10 of the anti-trust law, afforded the witness upon such investigation the protection against future prosecutions that is guaranteed to him by § 10 of the Bill of Rights, then appellant was not entitled to invoke the protection of the latter provision; nor was he entitled to plead the privilege of silence. Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

It is well settled that legislative bodies possess the power to grant amnesty to witnesses, and compel them to give testimony against themselves. This power has been recognized as a public necessity in the enforcement of laws. Congress and the legislatures of many states have enacted immunity statutes for the purpose of securing convictions for such offenses as gambling, bribery, the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors, usury, combinations in restraint of trade, and like offenses, in which two or more persons participate to constitute the crime, the necessities of the case and the difficulty of obtaining witnesses to establish the offense, punish the offenders, and suppress the crime being deemed sufficient to warrant the extending of immunity to a participant in order to constitute him a competent witness against the other offenders. The constitutional privilege that a person shall not be required to be a witness against himself is of great value to the citizen accused. However, the authorities, state and Federal, recognize the rule that when the testimony sought cannot, by reason of an immunity statute, be used as a basis for, or in aid of, a prosecution which might result in fine or imprisonment, or involve a penalty or forfeiture, the privilege cannot be claimed. Immunity statutes must be given a reasonable construction,—not a strained and artificial one; and, when it is apparent to the court that a person is fully protected from the effect of his testimony, he should be required to testify, even though it may show him guilty of a criminal offense.

It is claimed, however, that the immunity afforded by § 10 of the anti-trust law is not sufficient to constitute a substitute for the privilege of silence, guaranteed the witness by § 10 of the Bill of Rights. The 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) legislature determines what acts of the individual shall constitute a crime against the state, and what shall constitute the punishment of an offender, upon conviction. It determines within what period a prosecution for the commission of an offense shall be commenced, and may determine, within constitutional limitation, what shall and what shall not constitute evidence competent to be used upon the trial of an offender. The protection afforded the witness by the Constitution is that of not being a witness against himself. If the act of which inquiry is made does not constitute a crime, or, if made a crime, it has no punishment prescribed for its violation, or is no longer punishable; or if the act is barred by the statute of limitations, with no action pending, or the law has been repealed; or if the witness has been tried for the offense and acquitted, or convicted and satisfied the sentence imposed by the law,—he can claim no exemption from answering questions relating thereto. Likewise, the witness is deprived of claiming this exemption from testifying if the legislature, by the enactment of an immunity statute, has provided that he shall not be liable to criminal prosecution for any violation of the act about which he may testify, nor his evidence used against him in any criminal proceeding. As to prosecutions for those crimes to which his evidence relates, under the immunity act the witness is in the same position, in so far as there is a possibility of using his evidence against him, as though there were no such crimes provided by statute.

It is urged that the amnesty provided by § 10 is not complete, as it affords no immunity to a stockholder in any such corporation. There is nothing in the record disclosing appellant to be a stockholder, an officer, or an agent, or otherwise connected with any corporation that might, in any manner, be affected or suffer, as the result of his disclosure as a witness. The constitutional provision was intended for the protection of the witness; "the hurt must be to himself;" he himself must be included in the terms of the law before he can have just grounds for complaint. State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 67 L. R. A. 903, 69 Pac. 199 supra. However, it was never intended that the immunity afforded the witness by this act should extend to, and protect, the stockholders, officers, and agents of a corporation, as such; the immunity extends to the witness alone; it was not contemplated that it would be made use of as a pretext for securing immunity to others. That the immunity afforded the witness, to be complete, must extend to the officers, agents, and stockholders of a corporation, as contended by appellant, is too remote.

Section 5 provides, as a punishment for one convicted of a violation of the act, a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and confinement for not less than thirty days nor more than six months. Sections 5 and 6 provide a penalty of $100 per day for each and every day such violation shall continue after conviction. It is further provided, by § 5, that every person, company, or corporation, who shall violate any of the provisions of the act, be denied the right of, and be prohibited from, doing any business within this state. The last provision contemplates the prohibiting of the continuance of, or engagement in, business in the state, only when such business is in violation of the act; it was not intended thereby to prohibit persons from continuing or engaging in any lawful business in the state, not conducted or carried on in violation of the act. Viewed in the light of the interpretation thus given it, the provision is a valid exercise of legislative power, and is not open to the charge made against it by appellant that it constitutes, in effect, banishment from the state.

The provisions of § 7, that in any civil action there may be pleaded in defense that the plaintiff, or any person interested in the prosecution, has within one year been guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of the act, as held in Barton v. Mulvane, 59 Kan. 313, 52 Pac. 883, under a very similar provision of the anti-trust act of 1889 (Laws 1889, chap. 257), contemplates only civil actions relating to, and growing out of, transactions prohibited by the act. It was not intended by the legislature to deprive the litigant of the right to resort to the courts for the protection of property rights and interests not connected with such combinations or trusts. Thus interpreted, the provision is a valid exercise of legislative power, and is not open to the charge of appellant that it constitutes outlawry.

It was the intention of the legislature, by § 10 of the act, to afford the witness complete immunity against criminal prosecution, fines, imprisonment, penalties, and forfeitures, for any violation of the act about which the witness might give evidence upon a proceeding or investigation by the state to acquire information as to violations of the act; and also to afford the witness complete immunity against such testimony's being used against him in any proceeding of a criminal nature. The immunity afforded by the act is coextensive with the constitutional privilege. A statute providing such immunity is sufficient; a witness, thus protected, cannot invoke the constitutional privilege of silence. Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Intern. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195, supra; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Intern. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644, supra; People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349; Bradley v. Clark, 133 Cal. 196, 65 Pac. 395.

Appellant assigned as a further reason why he should not answer the questions propounded to him that the immunity afforded does not protect him against criminal prosecution, fines, and forfeitures for violations of the Federal anti-trust law: that the proceeding before the district court was an investigation to inquire whether there had been a violation of the state anti-trust law; that appellant, as a witness in the district court upon the inquiry, stated that the product of the mines of Osage county was the subject of both domestic and interstate commerce.

If the product of the mines of Osage county were the subject of interstate commerce, as stated, and appellant, as an operator of these mines, violated the provisions of the Federal anti-trust law, and thereby became liable to criminal prosecution, fines, and forfeitures thereunder, could he, in an investigation in the state courts to inquire if there had been violations of the state anti-trust law, refuse to testify, if the immunity provided did not protect him against the possibility of criminal prosecutions, fines, and forfeitures for violations of the Federal anti-trust law? It is not to be presumed that the examination, upon inquiry, will go beyond violations of the state law. If such examination be confined to its legitimate scope, it will not include, but will exclude, all acts which might connect it with interstate commerce, in violation of the Federal anti-trust law. Under its power to regulate interstate commerce, the United States may legislate upon the subject of private contracts relating to such commerce, and prohibit combinations, pools and trusts, so far as they relate to interstate commerce, but it has no jurisdiction over combinations, pools and trusts, relating to commerce wholly within the state; nor does the United States acquire jurisdiction over that part of a combination or agreement relating wholly to commerce within a state, by reason of the fact that the combination covers and regulates commerce, which is interstate. In so far as such combinations interfere with interstate commerce, they are under the control of the United States; in so far as they interfere with commerce wholly within the state, they are subject only to the jurisdiction of the state. Addys-on Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96. There two governments like the United States and a state exercise their authority within the same territory, and over the same citizens, the legislation of that which, as to certain subjects, is subordinate should be construed with reference to the powers and authority of the superior government, and not be deemed as invading them, unless such construction be absolutely demanded. Com. v. Gagne, 153 Mass. 205, 10 L. R. A. 42, 26 N. E. 449.

In the case of Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 96, 40 L. ed. 821, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 377, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644, supra, Brown, who was auditor of the Alleghany Railway Company, was subpoenaed as a witness to give testimony before a Federal grand jury upon an investigation concerning alleged violations of the interstate commerce act by the railway company. He refused to testify, claiming that to answer the questions would tend to accuse and criminate him. He was adjudged to be in contempt. Proceedings in habeas corpus were instituted in the United States circuit court and he was remanded to the custody of the marshal. An appeal was had to the United States Supreme Court. It was claimed there by appellant that the immunity provided by the interstate commerce act was insufficient to satisfy the constitutional guaranty of protection against being compelled to be a witness against himself. The immunity provided by the act was, by the court, held sufficient. Mr. Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion of the court, with reference to the construction of the immunity clause of the act said: "It can only be said, in general, that the clause should be construed, as it was doubtless designed, to effect a practical and beneficent purpose,—not necessarily to protect witnesses against every possible detriment which might happen to them from their testimony, nor to unduly impede, hinder, or obstruct the administration of criminal justice. That the statute should be upheld, if it can be construed in harmony with the fundamental law, will be admitted. Instead of seeking for excuses for holding acts of the legislative power to be void by reason of their conflict with the Constitution, or with certain supposed fundamental principles of civil liberty, the effort should be to reconcile them, if possible, and not to hold the law invalid, unless, as was observed by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 128, 3 L. ed. 162, 175, 'the opposition between the Constitution and the law be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other.'"

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It was further claimed, in this same case, that the amnesty provided by the interstate commerce act, though sufficient to grant immunity from prosecution by the Federal courts, did not afford immunity against prosecution in the state courts. In treating the proposition and the improbability of being subjected to the criminal laws of another sovereignty, after having quoted extensively, with approval, from the opinion of Lord Chief Justice Cockburn upon that subject, Mr. Justice Brown said:

"But, even granting that there was still a bare possibility that, by his disclosure, he might be subjected to the criminal laws of some other sovereignty, that, as Chief Justice Cockburn said, in Queen v. Boyes, 1 Best & S. 311, in reply to the argument that the witness was not protected by his pardon against an impeachment by the House of Commons, is not a real and probable danger, with reference to the ordinary operations of the law in the ordinary courts, but 'a danger of an imaginary and unsubstantial character, having reference to some extraordinary and barely possible contingency, so improbable that no reasonable man would suffer it to influence his conduct.' Such dangers it was never the object of the provision to obviate. The same answer may be made to the suggestion that the witness is imperfectly protected by reason of the fact that he may still be prosecuted and put to the annoyance and expense of pleading his immunity by way of confession and avoidance. This is a detriment which the law does not recognize. There is a possibility that any citizen, however innocent, may be subjected to a civil or criminal prosecution, and put to the expense of defending himself; but, unless such prosecution be malicious he is remediless, except so far as a recovery of costs may partially indemnify him. He may even be convicted of a crime, and suffer imprisonment or other punishment before his innocence is discovered; but that gives him no claim to indemnity against the state, or even against the prosecutor, if the action of the latter was taken in good faith, and in a reasonable belief that he was justified in so doing."

The anti-trust act in Illinois requires corporations doing business in the state to make and file annually with the secretary of state a verified statement which is termed an "anti-trust affidavit." In People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 749, a proceeding to recover the penalty of $50 per day for failure to make and file such affidavit, as a defense to such action it was charged that the requirement of the making of the affidavit was a violation of the constitutional provision of the state, that "no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to give evidence against himself." The act provides immunity against criminal prosecutions for truthful disclosures of matters required to be shown by the affidavit; and, by the affidavit, a disclosure of any connection of the corporation with any combination, pools, trusts, and the like combines, in restraint of trade or commerce, was required. It was urged that the immunity was not coextensive with the constitutional privilege, and that it did not cover prosecutions under laws of other states or under laws of the United States. In passing upon the validity of the act, it was held that, while it might be broad enough to include trusts, pools, and combines formed with parties outside the state, yet, in construing the act, the court must consider it as relating to trusts, pools, and combines formed within the state. As to the sufficiency of the immunity provision challenged, it was held that it was complete as against prosecution by the Federal authorities or by the authorities of other states, as the affidavit required, to the making of which immunity was extended, need relate only to trusts, pools, and combines within the state. In making reference to the sufficiency of the immunity afforded by the act, as applied to violations of the Federal law, the court said: "The possibility that the affidavit required by § 7a of the anti-trust act of 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 90) might contain disclosures tending to show a violation of the anti-trust law of some other state or of the United States, is not a real and probable danger of criminal prosecution within the constitutional privilege against giving self-incriminating evidence."

The anti-trust law is a valid exercise of legislative power, and is not violative of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, as claimed by appellant. Section 10 of the act contemplates that, in the proceeding or investigation before the district court or the judge thereof, to discover if there have been violations of the state anti-trust law, the inquiry will be confined to violations of that law. The record discloses that the examination of appellant was confined to its legitimate scope, within which the immunity afford him by § 10 was coextensive with the constitutional privilege invoked for his protection. The possibility that his answers to the inquiries might disclose violations of the Federal law, and the evidence thus given be used against him in a criminal prosecution for a violation of that law, was not a real and probable danger.

Appellant should have answered the 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

questions asked him upon the inquiry. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States, November 27, 1905.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH T. DONOVAN, Appt.,
v.

JULIA PURTELL.

(216 Ill. 629.)

1. Agent—acting as corporation—personal liabilities.

A person who, upon receiving a security for collection and reinvestment, uses the money for his own purposes, and delivers to his customer a worthless obligation of a corporation of which he is president, and which he organized for the transaction of his personal business, is personally liable to return the amount so received.

2. Promise to pay another's debt.

A promise by one who has given the obligation of a corporation of which he is president, for his own debt, to pay the same, is not void under the statute of frauds, as a promise to pay the debt of another.

3. Fraud—evidence of confidence—of business methods.

In an action to compel the restoration of money by one to whom it was taken for investment, and who gave therefor worthless obligations of a corporation of which he was president, evidence is admissible of the confidence which the customer had in him and of his method of transacting business in the name of corporations to avoid his personal obligations.

4. Pleading—common counts.

A recovery under the common counts may be had against one to whom money has been delivered for investment, and who, after using it for his own benefit, delivers to the customer worthless obligations of a corporation of which he is president.

(October 24, 1905.)

Case Note.—The court in the DONOVAN CASE, in ignoring the corporate existence of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, applied a rule which has received the recognition of text writers and the courts. In Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, § 7e, it is said that a corporation cannot be formed for the purpose of accomplishing a fraud or other illegal act under the guise of the fiction that a corporation is a legal entity, separate and distinct from its members. When this is attempted, the fiction will be disregarded by the courts, and the acts of the real parties dealt with as though no corporation had been formed.

In Morawetz on Private Corporations

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Fourth District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court of St. Clair County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover money delivered to defendant for investment. Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is an action in assumpsit, begun by appellee against appellant on November 24, 1903, by attachment in the circuit court of St. Clair county. The writ of attachment was levied on appellant's interest in certain land situated in that county. Before the trial, to wit, on March 23, 1904, by agreement of the parties, an order was entered releasing the real estate levied upon under the writ of attachment upon the execution and filing by appellant of an indemnity bond. The declaration consists of the common counts for money lent by appellee to defendant at his request, for money paid out and expended by appellee for the use of appellant at his request, for money received by appellant for the use of appellee, for money for interest on divers sums of money forborne by appellee to appellant at his request, etc. A bill of particulars was filed, which, besides the items for money loaned and due in 1901, contains items for money lent by appellee to appellant in the name of the Fidelity Realty Company in 1901, and for money lent to appellant by appellee, and promised to be paid by him in the name of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, in 1901. The general issue was that, in § 1, the author, in discussing a corporation as a separate or distinct entity or person, says: "In most cases, this is a just as well as convenient means of working out the rights of the real persons interested; however, it is essential to a clear understanding of many important branches of the law of corporations to bear in mind distinctly that the existence of a corporation independently of its shareholders is a fiction; and that the rights and duties of an incorporated association are in reality the rights and duties of the persons who compose it, and not of an imaginary being." In § 227 of the same work, it is said: "In equity the conception of a corporate entity is used merely as a formula for working out the rights and equities of the real parties in interest; while at law this figurative conception takes the shape of a dogma, and is often applied rigorously, without regard to its true purpose and meaning. In equity, the relationship between the shareholders is recognized whenever this becomes necessary to the attainment of justice."

The case of First Nat. Bank v. F. C. Trebein, Co. 59 Ohio St. 316, 52 N. E. 834, which was cited by the court in the DONOVAN CASE, was one where a failing debtor formed a corporation consisting of himself and members of his family, and conveyed all his property to the corporation in exchange for stock issued to him, which stock he immediately placed with his creditors as collateral security for his claims, while he retained control of the property, and managed it as president of the company. The court held the conveyance fraudulent; and, in addition to the language quoted in the DONOVAN CASE, said: "The transaction cannot be likened to a conveyance to a third person for a valuable consideration,—considered in the light of the facts, it was no more than a conveyance from himself to himself. The corporation was, in substance, another F. C. Trebein."

In Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Miller, 91 Mich. 166, 51 N. W. 981, it was held that the railroad company and its incorporator were one and the same person. In that case it appeared that the receiver of two separate corporations, seeing the opportunity for constructing a connecting line, organized a company for that purpose, and was the only contributor to its capital stock; and then entered into a contract with it, by which it took all its bonds and stock and agreed to construct the railroad and bridges, but no provision was made for side tracks, turntables, station houses, etc. He also agreed, in case the company did not procure its right of way, to acquire the same at a stipulated price per mile. Subsequently the railroad company was consolidated with the two other lines referred to, and the incorporator presented a claim for securing the right of way and constructing the portion of the road not included in the contract. The court restrained his assignees from enforcing the claim, on the ground that he was the company, and that the contract which he entered into with the company, and by which he took all the property the company had, could not be enforced without the perpetration of a fraud.

In Buffalo Loan, Trust, & S. D. Co. v. Medina Gas & E. L. Co. 12 App. Div. 199, 42 N. Y. Supp. 781, a corporation was held liable upon a loan made to one who was an officer of a corporation which he practically owned, where he deposited bonds of the company as collateral security, although he further secured the debt by his individual note. The court said that in view of the circumstances of the case and the fact that the corporation was virtually the private property of the borrower, it "must not carry too far the legal conception that a corporation is to be regarded as a legal entity, existing separate and apart from the natural persons composing it."

A corporation taking a conveyance of land from its directors and only stockholders, who were also its promoters and organizers, takes it charged with the same equities as existed against its grantors. Franklin Min. Co. v. O'Brien, 22 Colo. 129, 55 Am. St. Rep. 118, 43 Pac. 1016. In so holding, the court said: "The grantors acted not solely for themselves as individ-filed to the declaration. A trial was had before the court and jury, resulting in a verdict in favor of appellee against appellant for the sum of $1,430, from which the plaintiff remitted the sum of $71.80, making the amount of the verdict $1,358.20, which remittitur was approved by the court. Motion for new trial was overruled, and judgment rendered on the verdict in favor of appellee against appellant for $1,358.20 and costs. An appeal was taken to the appellate court, where the judgment has been affirmed. The present appeal is prosecuted from such judgment of affirmance. Upon the trial of the cause, at the close of the evidence of appellee, plaintiff below, plaintiff's counsel tendered to the defendant the notes and trust deed, dated January 19, 1901, hereinafter referred to, and also the written guaranty hereinafter described, which counsel for the defendant refused to accept. The notes, trust deed, and guaranty were then tendered into the care of the court for the use of the appellant, the defendant below. At the close of the appellee's evidence the appellant asked the court to give a written instruction to the jury to find the issues for the defendant below, which instruction the court refused, and such refusal was excepted to. At the close of all the evidence the defendant below again asked of the court a written instruction to the jury to find the issues for the defendant, which instruction was refused, and such refusal was excepted to.

The facts of this case, as stated by the appellate court in their opinion, are as follows:

"Appellee for many years worked for he living in St. Louis, Missouri, doing house work. Some time prior to this suit, having accumulated the sum of $1,200, she placed it at interest on real estate security, and the note representing the loan came due in January, 1901. At that time appellant was engaged in the real estate and loan business in the city of St. Louis. He was president of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, of which his son, Joseph M. Donovan, was vice president. The latter was also president of the Fidelity Realty Company, which did business in the same ways, but also for the corporation whose capital stock they owned, and the transaction should be regarded as one in which the same parties are grantors and grantees."

Likewise, a corporation organized by a director of another corporation, and who takes most of its shares, is not a bona fide purchaser of land conveyed to it by such person, where he had purchased it of the corporation of which he was director, improperly and in violation of his trust. This is upon the ground that the organizer of the corporation and the corporation are one and the same person, and that, in conveying the property to the corporation, he was but conveying it to himself. Hoffman Steam Coal Co. v. Cumberland Coal & I. Co. 16 Md. 456, 77 Am. Dec. 311.

In Evans v. Kingston Coal Co. 6 Kulp, 351, it was held that the question whether a corporation is also in fact the owner of a certain store, operated in the name of its principal stockholders, within the meaning of a statute forbidding mining companies to operate "company stores," is a question of fact for the jury.

In Pott v. Schmucker, 84 Md. 535, 35 L. R. A. 392, 37 Am. St. Rep. 415, 36 Atl. 592, where the stock of an insolvent corporation was entirely owned by one member of a firm to which the corporation was indebted, the corporation and such member of the partnership were treated as one and the same person, and the partnership denied the right to share in the assets of the corporation until after its creditors had been paid.

In State ex rel. Watson v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 15 L. R. A. 145, 34 Am. St. Rep. 541, 30 N. E. 279, the Standard Oil Company was held to be regarded as a party, in its corporate capacity, to an illegal 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

agreement entered into between its stockholders and the stockholders of other companies, so as to subject the corporation to proceedings in quo warranto, and that the legal fiction whereby a corporation is to be regarded as a legal entity, existing separately and apart from the natural persons composing it, is not applicable.

Where a railroad company having power to transact a general telegraph business organizes a small telegraph company, and becomes its sole stockholder, it is liable on a judgment subsequently entered against such telegraph company, where such railroad company sells out its telegraph system and leaves the telegraph company without assets. Interstate Telegr. Co. v. Baltimore & O. Telegr. Co. 51 Fed. 49.

In Brundred v. Rice, 49 Ohio St. 640, 3 Am. St. Rep. 589, 32 N. E. 169, an illegal contract had been entered into between the defendants and a railroad company, whereby the latter agreed to charge all shippers of petroleum a specified rate, and pay over one-half of the same to the defendants. The action was brought by the shipper to recover moneys so collected by the railroad company, and paid over to the defendants. The defendants contended that they had not received the money, but that it had been paid over to a corporation to which they had assigned their interest in the contract. The court held the defendants liable even though the money had been paid to such corporation, as the jury had found that the corporation was organized by the defendants simply for the purpose of consummating the illegal agreement.

In the following cases the rule has been applied where corporations were organized for the purpose of performing acts which the incorporators or principal stockholders room with the other company, and in which appellant was likewise interested. Shortly after her note became due, appellee took it, and the trust deed by which it was secured, to appellant's place of business, for the purpose of having him collect the money due, and reinvest it for her; but at the office she made arrangements to that end with Joseph M. Donovan, whom, she testified, she considered a clerk. In June, 1901, she left the city and did not return until the following October. In the meantime she made arrangements with a friend, Miss Slaterly, to attend to her business. During her absence the note owned by her was collected, and a new one for a like amount, secured by deed of trust, was given Miss Slaterly, who afterwards turned the papers over to appellee. The new note was made by the Fidelity Realty Company, by J. M. Donovan, its president, and was payable to the order of George M. Cooper, a clerk in appellant's office, who indorsed the same without recourse. It was secured by a deed of trust upon a 25-foot lot on San Francisco avenue, in the city of St. Louis, made by the Fidelity Realty Company to appellant, as trustee. The note and trust deed were dated January 19, 1901, but were not delivered to Miss Slaterly until the following August. With these papers there was also delivered to Miss Slaterly a written guaranty, executed by J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, by J. T. Donovan, its president, which, after reciting the assignment to appellee of the note and securities in question, proceeded as follows: 'And whereas, there is being erected on said lot of ground certain improvements, which may not yet be fully completed and paid for: Now, therefore, in consideration of said sum of $1,200, we hereby promise and agree to cause said improvements to be fully completed and paid for, and to hold the said Miss Julia Purtell harmless from all loss or damage on account of mechanics' liens, or on account of the failure of the said Fidelity Realty Company to fully complete said improvements, and to pay for the same. For the consideration aforesaid, we further obligate ourselves to hold Miss Julia Purtell and her assigns harmless from all loss had contracted not to do, and the corporation was a mere cover by which they intended to violate their contracts.

In Beal v. Chase, 31 Mich. 490, the corporation was restrained from carrying on a particular business in violation of a contract entered into by one who subsequently became its principal stockholder and president and business manager, by the terms of which contract, such stockholder, in selling his printing and publishing establishment, agreed not to engage in the business in the state so long as the vendee should continue in business at the place of sale. The vendor took one-half of the stock in the new corporation. Some of the stockholders had known for a long time of the contract in question. The stock was in the hands of the original subscribers when the injury to the complainant was committed. The court held the corporation liable to the complainant to the full extent that the stockholder would have been. The Beal Case was distinguished in American Preservers' Co. v. Norris, 43 Fed. 711. In this case, a manufacturing corporation sold one branch of its business to its principal stockholder, and thereupon discontinued such branch of the business. Subsequently the purchasing stockholder sold such branch of the business to a third person, and entered into an agreement not to enter into the same business, directly or indirectly. The court held that the corporation was not bound by the agreement. The court distinguished the Beal Case largely upon the ground that the corporation there involved was organized after the agreement was made, and for the purpose of violating it; while, in the case at bar, the corporation was a going concern, and doing an extensive business when the agreement was made. The Beal Case was also distinguished in Moore & H. Hardware Co. v. Towers Hardware Co. 87 Ala. 206, 13 Am. St. Rep. 23, 6 So. 41, where the court, while recognizing the existence of the rule, refused to apply it so as to restrain a corporation from violating a contract entered into before incorporation by its principal corporators and stockholders, where it was not averred or shown that the corporation was organized fraudulently, or as a device to evade the personal obligation of the contractors.
L.R.A.(N.S.)

In A. Booth & Co. v. Seibold, 37 Misc. 101, 74 N. Y. Supp. 776, the vendor, in selling his business, made a valid contract not to continue in the business, but subsequently he formed a corporation with other persons, who knew of the sale, and the court restrained the corporation from violating the contract. This case cited the Beal Case as its authority.

In LePage Co. v. Russia Cement Co. 17 L. R. A. 354, 2 C. C. A. 555, 5 U. S. App. 112, 51 Fed. 941, it was held that where one has conveyed his business, trademarks, and good will, a corporation subsequently formed, and of which the vendor, his wife and attorney, are the original incorporators, and which he subsequently controls and manages, stands in his shoes, and has no greater right than such vendor to use his name in such business.

A corporation organized by defendants, and to which they turned over land which they had bought for a lumber plant, was held to have been organized for the purpose of evading a contract by which the corporators had made the plaintiffs the sole selling agents for lumber manufactured by them. Hagy v. McGuire, 147 Pa. 187, 23 Atl. 806.

on account of said investment, principal or interest.' The guaranty also contains an undertaking on the part of the maker to pay the interest notes in case of default in the payment thereof for a longer period than thirty days, and to purchase the principal at its face value, with interest added, within six months after default in the payment of the same. Some time after appellee received the last named papers she ascertained that the lot described in the deed of trust was vacant, that no improvements were being made, and that it was worth only about $150. She thereupon called upon J. M. Donovan, the president of the Fidelity Realty Company, who offered to give her in exchange other securities, which on examination, she found to be entirely inadequate to properly secure the debt. She then made a similar demand of appellant, and he offered her to substitute some other piece of property for that which appellee had; but, upon an examination of the properties named, appellee refused to accept any of them on the ground that the security was wholly insufficient. While negotiations were pending, two of the interest notes were paid by appellant. Appellee testified that, when she asked appellant what security he could give on said notes, he said he could not give her money, but offered to pay her in eighteen months, and told her she would not be at any loss; but this appellant denies. Afterwards negotiations ceased, and this suit was brought. Upon the trial the appellant . . . introduced the evidence of himself and Joseph M. Donovan. . . . These witnesses were corroborated to some extent by the securities held by appellee, purporting to have been executed by the two corporations above named. On the contrary, appellee . . . testified that she dealt with appellant on account of the confidence she had in him; that his boys, several of whom were in the office, acted just as other clerks. She said: 'I paid all the confidence to Mr. Donovan I could. I would not pay as much to my brothers as I did to Mr. Donovan, because he was a Catholic and a member of my church and a good living man as I supposed.' The manner of transacting business at the Donovan office was fully explained by Lydia M. Cooper, who was appellant's stenographer and typewriter from October, 1897, to April, 1903. She testified that the office was a long, narrow room, about 20 feet wide and 60 to 75 feet long; that there was a partition in the front, like a banking counter, and in the rear there was a place about ten feet square, where a number of different companies, known as the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, the Fidelity Realty Company, the Cunliff Realty Company, the Fenimore & L.R.A. (N.S.)

Realty Company, the Cappa Realty Company, and the McKinley Company, had headquarters; that the different corporations had different presidents, but that appellant was really the man who ran the whole thing; that there were three sons of appellant in the office, and several other clerks; that J. T. Donovan controlled the business of the Fidelity Realty Company; that there was a bookkeeper and cashier in the office; that over the door there was the sign, 'J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company'; that J. M. Donovan 'never made any transaction without J. T. Donovan sanctioned it'; that the Fidelity Realty Company did not have any financial standing, but was simply gotten up to keep the property out of judgment, so that the property could be sold and transferred without the judgment being paid off; that she had heard appellant say so himself; that he said there were judgments against these different companies, and he would get up another company and put the property in the name of the new company in order that it could be transferred, so that there would be no judgment against it; that he used the property of the companies indiscriminately; that he would settle the debts of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company with those properties, no matter to which company they belonged; and that the stock of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company was all held by members of the family; that Mr. Donovan got the property named in the deed of trust in question for $325, and put a $1,200 loan on it. Joseph M. Donovan, when placed upon the witness stand, denied some of the statements made by Miss Cooper; but appellant, when placed upon the stand, did not see fit to deny any of them."

Messrs. Louden & Crow for appellant.

Messrs. James M. Dill and W. F. Smith for appellee.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The salient facts of this case are that the appellee had a note and trust deed for $1,200 against a man named Hayden; that they became due in January, 1901, and she took them to the office of the appellant, with directions to him, or to his son in the same office with him, to collect them for her and reinvest the money; that the money was collected by appellant, or some one of his sons in the office with him, either in his own name or in the name of one of the corporations doing business in his office, and which he controlled and managed. The evidence tends to show that the $1,200 belonging to appellee went into appellant's hands, or into the hands of some one or more of his sons or clerks. Appellee's money, therefore, was had and received by the appellant. Appellant turned over to Miss Slaterly, appellee's agent and friend, acting for her while she was out of the city, a note for $1,200, payable in three years, together with certain interest notes, and a trust deed securing the same upon a 25-foot lot in St. Louis. These notes and trust deeds bore date January 19, 1901. The evidence tends strongly to show that at that time the lot was not worth more than $125 to $150, or from $5 to $6 per front foot. The principal note for $1,200, and the interest notes, dated January 19, 1901, were signed by the Fidelity Realty Company, by J. M. Donovan, president. They were payable to the order of George N. Cooper, a clerk in appellant's office, who indorsed them without recourse. The trust deed securing them was made to appellant, as trustee. The evidence tends to show that appellant controlled and managed the Fidelity Realty Company, and, the trust deed being made to himself as trustee and the notes being made to the order of his clerk, the conclusion is almost irresistible, in the light of the facts set forth in the statement preceding this opinion, that the papers thus prepared were really the papers of the appellant, though nominally those of a corporation in this office and under his control.

The written deed of guaranty, dated January 22, 1901, was signed by the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, by J. T. Donovan, president. It begins as follows: "Witnesseth, that for and in consideration of the sum of $1,200, paid to us by Miss Julia Purtell, we have assigned and transferred to her certain notes of Fidelity Realty Company, dated January 19, 1901, secured by a deed of trust," etc. Appellant signed this indenture, and in it recites that the sum of $1,200, belonging to Miss Purtell, was paid to "us," meaning thereby the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, of which he was president. In this guaranty he also recites that "we have assigned and transferred to her certain notes," etc. The notes were indorsed without recourse by this clerk, Cooper; but, in view of the recital thus quoted, Cooper merely acted for the appellant or his company, the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company. Miss Cooper swears that she drew all the deeds of trust and notes and guaranties that were executed while she was in appellant's employment from October 15, 1897, to April 7, 1903. She also swears that she drew up these notes and trust deed and the deed of guaranty, and that they were in her handwriting. She says that she drew them up at the direction of the appellant; that is to say, the appellant directed her to draw the notes to be signed by the Fidelity Realty Company, payable to the order of his clerk Cooper, and also the trust deed to be executed to himself, as trustee. She says that she did not deliver those papers, but merely turned them over to be signed. It is quite evident that these notes and this trust deed represented no consideration whatever; that is to say, there was no note for $1,200, owned by Cooper, but the notes and the trust deed were merely drawn up to be given to appellee in return for her $1,200. The transaction did not by any means represent a purchase of securities amounting to $1,200 from Cooper, the payee in the note. The fact that they were drawn up by Miss Cooper, under the direction of the appellant and at his dictation, shows that the transaction was under his control and management. The written guaranty stated that certain improvements were then in course of erection upon the property described in the trust deed of January 19, 1901; but the proof shows conclusively that this statement was false. No improvements were then in course of erection upon the premises, nor were any ever made upon the premises. The evidence also tends to show that there were judgments then existing against the Fidelity Realty Company, and that it had no financial standing whatever, but that it was, as is said by one of the witnesses, "gotten up to keep the property out of judgment." The proof shows that none of these corporations controlled by appellant paid their debts. One of the witnesses swears that, "when any adjustment was to be made, Mr. Donovan would use the property of these companies to make it, indiscriminately. He would settle the debts of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company with these properties, no matter to which company it [they] belonged."

When the appellee discovered that the notes and trust deed which had been turned over to her were worthless, the appellant began to offer her other property in place of that described in the trust deed, and promised he would pay her in eighteen months, and told her that she should lose nothing. If the debt was not his, but was really and bona fide the debt of the Fidelity Realty Company, it is difficult to understand why he should thus seek to substitute other securities for those held by the appellee, and promise to pay the indebtedness himself. The promise to pay the indebtedness was made as though the debt was his own, and not as though it was the indebtedness of a third person, to wit, the Fidelity Realty Company. The evidence tends to show that, although the appellant and his sons turned over to appellee these worthless securities in exchange for her money, yet that appellant himself received the money and used it for his own private purposes, and sought to escape personal liability by covering up the transaction in the name of a corporation, which was entirely under his own control. This being so, the trial court committed no error in refusing to instruct the jury to find the issues for the defendant. It would have been improper to give such instruction, in view of the fact that the evidence tended to prove that the appellant received the money and declined to pay it over. This suit is not brought upon the notes executed by the Fidelity Realty Company. Those notes and the trust deed securing them were tendered back to the appellant upon the trial, and, upon his refusal to receive them, placed in the custody of the court for the use and benefit of appellant. The object of the suit is to recover, under the common counts, the money actually received by the appellant. The instructions given by the court to the jury on behalf of the appellee submitted to the jury the question of fact whether the affairs of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company and the Fidelity Realty Company were controlled by J. T. Donovan for the transaction of his private business, and whether or not he personally controlled both of these corporations when they received the appellee's money, and whether or not her money was received for appellant's own private individual uses and purposes. The instructions also left it to the jury to find whether or not the appellant was conducting his business in the name of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, and through that company received appellee's money, and appropriated the same to his own use, and gave her, in payment of it, the worthless securities above referred to. The judgments of the lower courts, finding for the appellee, settle these questions of fact, so far as we are concerned, against the appellant.

Appellant was president of the J. T. Donovan Real Estate Company, and his son, Joseph M. Donovan was the vice president of that company, and Joseph M. Donovan, the appellant's son, was the president of the Fidelity Realty Company. Both of these concerns were controlled, managed, and dominated by the appellant, J. T. Donovan. The officer or controlling manager of a corporation cannot use it and its name for the transaction of his own private business, and to escape personal liability on his part. The theory upon which the appellant defends this suit is that the liability to appellee was not his liability, but that of the corporation known as the Fidelity Realty Company. In Hoffman v. Reichert, 147 Ill. 274, 37 Am. St. Rep. 210, 35 N. E. 527, it 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was held that the directors of a private corporation have no right, under any circumstances, to use their official position for their own individual benefit. In the case of First Nat. Bank v. F. C. Trebein Co. 59 Ohio St. 316, 52 N. E. 834, it was said: "The fiction by which an ideal legal entity is attributed to a duly formed incorporated company, existing separate and apart from the individuals composing it, is of such general utility and application as frequently to induce the belief that it must be universal, and be in all cases adhered to, although the greatest frauds may thereby be perpetrated under the fiction as a shield. But modern cases, sustained by the best text writers, confine the fiction to the purposes for which it was adopted,—convenience in the transaction of business and in suing and being sued in its corporate name, and the continuance of its rights and liabilities, unaffected by changes in its corporate members; and have repudiated it in all cases where it has been insisted on as a protection to fraud or any other illegal transaction." In Cook on Corporations, vol. 2, 5th ed. § 663, it is said: "A corporation is often organized to act as a 'cloak' for fraud. Such cases as these are becoming common, and the courts are becoming more and more inclined to ignore the corporate existence, when necessary, in order to circumvent the fraud." See, also, Lachman v. Martin, 139 Ill. 450, 28 N. E. 795. In 1 Morse on Banks and Banking, 4th ed. § 128, it is said: "If bank directors do not manage the affairs and business of the bank according to the directions of the charter, and in good faith, they will be liable to make good all losses which their misconduct may inflict upon either stockholders or creditors, or both. . . . They may be held to account to an injured party in a court of chancery, or to any or any of their number, who shared in the wrongdoing, may be sued at law for damages." So, in the case at bar, appellant, as an officer of one or more of the corporations here involved, was guilty of such a fraud in transferring to appellee these worthless securities in payment of the money which he owed her that he can be held liable personally for the loss inflicted upon her. Even if the corporation be regarded as the real debtor, and the appellant as only its agent, yet, inasmuch as he was guilty of the fraud perpetrated upon appellee, the law will hold him liable. In 1 American and English Encyclopedia of Law, 2d ed. p. 1135, it is said: "An agent will be held personally liable to third persons for all damages sustained by them in consequence of any fraudulent or malicious act committed by him on behalf of his principal, and in an action against the agent for fraud the fact that he derived no personal profit or benefit therefrom is immaterial." In Reed v. Peterson, 91 Ill. 288, it is said: "In an action at law for damages, the fact that a defendant acted throughout in the capacity of agent in a fraud perpetrated by him will afford him no excuse." See, also, Seddon v. Connell, 10 Sim. 86; Windram v. French, 151 Mass. 549, 8 L. R. A. 750, 24 N. E. 914.

It is claimed, on the part of the appellant, that the court below erred in permitting appellee to prove that the appellant promised to repay the money to her. It is said that this was a promise to pay the debt of a third person, to wit, of the Fidelity Realty Company; and that, under the statute of frauds, the promise to pay the debt of a third person must be in writing. The statute of the state of Missouri in relation to the statute of frauds upon this subject, which is almost identical with our own, was introduced in evidence over the objection of appellee. It was not pleaded as a defense; and the general rule is that, where the statute of another state is relied upon as a defense, it must be pleaded as set out, at least in substance, and must be proved on the trial, and, if it is not pleaded, it is error to permit it to be proved. Palmer v. Marshall, 60 Ill. 289. But whether or not this rule applies here, where the declaration contained merely the common counts, and did not set up any contract, makes no difference under the circumstances of this case, because the proof tends to show that, when appellant received appellee's money, he was not conducting business under a bona fide corporate organization, but was using a corporate entity for the transaction of his private business, and, as he was, therefore, personally liable to the appellee for the repayment of her money, his promise was to pay his own debt, and not the debt of a third person.

It is said that the court erred in the admission of certain testimony introduced by the appellee. We are satisfied with the following statement upon this subject, made by the appellate court in their opinion deciding this case, to wit: "Appellant also claims that the court erred in permitting appellee to show the course of business pursued by him, his exercise of control over the various companies in the same office, and the indiscriminate manner in which he used the money of said companies, and in admitting evidence tending to show the reason why appellee had special confidence in him. In our opinion this evidence was all proper, as bearing upon the question whether the appellant was really conducting his own business under the name of the several corporations for his own benefit, and also whether he took advantage of appellee's special confidence in him to use her money and give her securities which were practically worthless."

The objection is made that a recovery cannot be had in this kind of case under the common counts. We are unable to concur in this contention. In Wilson v. Turner, 164 Ill. 398, 403, 45 N. E. 820, 821, this court said: "An action for money had and received will lie whenever one person has received money which, in justice, belongs to another, and which, in justice and right, should be returned. . . . When, therefore, according to this rule, one person obtains the money of another which it is inequitable or unjust for him to retain, the person entitled to it may maintain an action for money had and received for its recovery." Inasmuch as, in the case at bar, there was evidence tending to show that appellant had obtained money from appellee which it was unjust and inequitable for him to retain, she is entitled to maintain the present action for the recovery of such money. In First Nat. Bank v. Gatton, 172 Ill. 625, 50 N. E. 121, this court said, quoting from other cases therein referred to (page 627 of 172 Ill., page 121 of 50 N. E.): "It is the well recognized doctrine that the action for money had and received may be maintained whenever the defendant has obtained money of the plaintiff which, in equity and conscience, he has no right to retain. . . . When money has been thus received, the law implies a promise to pay, notwithstanding there was no privity between the parties. . . . In an action of assumpsit for money had and received, the main inquiry is whether the defendant holds money which, ex æquo et bono, belongs to the plaintiff." See, also, Belden v. Perkins, 78 Ill. 449; Allen v. Stenger, 74 Ill. 119; Seeburger v. McCormick, 178 Ill. 404, 53 N. E. 340. In Elgin v. Joslyn, 136 Ill. 525, 532, 26 N. E. 1090, 1092, it was said: "The act of the city may have been tortious, but the plaintiff had the right to waive the tort and sue in assumpsit, as the city applied the property to its own use and benefit. Where one wrongfully takes the goods of another and applies them to his own use, the owner may waive the tort, and charge the wrongdoer in assumpsit on the common counts as for goods sold, or money received. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Chew, 67 Ill. 378." In Moore v. Shields, 121 Ind. 268, 23 N. E. 89, it was held that, "where a party is induced by fraudulent representations to purchase worthless township warrants, he can recover the money paid by him to those knowingly making such representations in an action for money had and received." In McQueen v. State Bank, 2 Ind. 413, it was held that "an action for money had and received will lie where one man has obtained money from another through the medium of oppression, imposition, extortion, or deceit; and the law implies a promise from such person to return it to the lawful owner."

For the reasons above stated, we are of the opinion that the judgments of the lower courts were correct. Accordingly, the judgment of the Appellate Court, affirming that of the Circuit Court, is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Ex parte CHARLES E. HAYDEN.

(.... Cal.)

Constitutional law—marking fruit.

The marking of fruit packed for shipment, with the locality in which it is grown, cannot be required under the police power of the state.

(September 6. 1905.)

APPPLICATION by petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from custody to which he had been committed for alleged violation of a statute requiring the marking of fruit packages. Petitioner discharged.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wright & Wright for petitioner.
Mr. Benjamin K. Knight for the sheriff.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Petitioner was convicted and sentenced

Case note.—The invalidity of a police regulation requiring the labeling or branding of an article of commerce, because its operation would render trade therein "so onerous, complicated, and expensive as seriously to imperil its existence," seems to be determined for the first time in EX PARTE HAYDEN. There appears a dictum, however, in Dorsey v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 532, 40 L. R. A. 203, 70 Am. St. Rep. 762, 44 S. W. 514, where the court says: "A great many articles of food are mixed and combined together, and such combinations are not only harmless, but are healthy as articles of food; and to require all such articles to be labeled so as to show the constituent elements composing the same, it occurs to us, is extremely onerous legislation."

That such labeling or branding cannot be used to enhance the value of a commodity made or grown in a particular locality, or the product of a certain kind of labor, and correspondingly to depreciate the value of its competitors, is expressly held in the prevailing opinion in People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 1, 42 L. R. A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257, cited in support of the holding in EX PARTE HAYDEN. But the unconstitutionality of the act there in question, upon 1 L. R. A. (N. S.)

to punishment for a violation of the provisions of a state statute which provides as follows: "All fruit, green or dried, contained in boxes, barrels, or packages, which shall hereafter be shipped or offered for shipment in this state by any person, firm or corporation, shall have stamped, branded, stenciled, or labeled in a conspicuous place on the outside of every such box, barrel or package, in clearly legible letters, at least $\frac{1}{4}$ of an inch in height, a statement truly and correctly designating the count and immediate locality in which such fruit was grown." Stat. 1903, p. 338, chap. 251 § 1. For a violation of this act he was sentenced to pay a fine of \$300, with the alternative of imprisonment, and sued for an obtained a writ of habeas corpus.

He contends that the penal statute in question is violative of § 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and of article 1, § 1, of the Constitution of this state, and that the statute in question works an unwarranted invasion of his liberty. It has come to be well recognized that the liberty and the pursuit of happiness, in which the individual is protected by the Constitution of the United States and of the state, apply as fully to his right of contract, his right to follow a legitimate vocation untrammelled by unnecessary regulations, as it does to the freedom of arrest or restraint of his person. This subject has received recent consideration by this court, and it is unnecessary to do more than refer to Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L. R. A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 such ground, seems to have had the support only of the writer of the opinion; three of the judges having upheld the constitutionality of the act, and the others having concurred in the opinion to affirm upon the ground only that the law was repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution. In that case a statute of the state of New York required all goods made by convicts in any prison or penitentiary to be branded or labeled "Convict Made." The defendant was indicted for selling a scrub-brush made by convict labor in another state, and not labeled as the statute required. In holding the statute unconstitutional because it deprived the citizen of his property without due process of law, the limit to which the police power of the state may be exercised in respect to the regulation of trade in a harmless article of commerce is clearly set forth by O'Brien, J., as follows "A law which interferes with property by depriving the owner of the profitable and free use of it, or hampers him in the application of it for the purposes of trade or commerce, or imposes conditions upon the right to hold or sell it, may seriously impair its value, against which the Constitution is a protection. The fact that legislation hostile to

Pac. 924. Putting out of contemplation, therefore, the fundamental right of the government to subject private property to taxation, and to take such property in time of public calamity and peril, the right of the state to impose burdens upon such property where the business is legitimate and innocuous—in other words, to regulate harmless vocations—is found in the police power alone. Young v. Com. 101 Va. 853, 45 S. E. 327; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383. The police power, deriving its existence from the rule that the safety of the people is the supreme law, justifies legislation upon matters pertaining to the public welfare, the public health, or the public morals. Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 837; Ruhstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 49 L. R. A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, 57 N. E. 41.

But the legislature, under the guise of police regulations, cannot enact laws which do not pertain to one or the other of these objects, and which impose onerous and unnecessary burdens upon business and property. By this court it has been said (Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152, 32 Pac. 870): "But it is not true that, when this power is exerted for the purpose of regulating a business or occupation which in itself is recognized as innocent and useful to the community, the legislature is the exclusive judge as to what is a reasonable and just restraint upon the constitutional right of the citizen to pursue such business or profession. As the right of a citizen to engage in such a business or follow such a profession is protected by the Constitution, it is always a judicial question whether any particular regulation of such right is a valid exercise of legislative power. . . . This principle is stated very forcibly in the case of Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 31 L. ed. 210, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, in the following language: 'The courts are not bound by mere forms, nor are they to be misled by mere pretenses. They are at liberty—indeed, are under a solemn duty—to look at the substance of things whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the legislature has transcended the limits of its authority. If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of the rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution.' "

The propositions here enunciated have received the sanction of all the courts, and may not be gainsaid. Indeed, respondent upon this appeal does not dispute them, but undertakes to show that the act in question is a legitimate exercise of the police power, in that its object and purpose is to preserve and promote public health and public welfare. His reasoning in this regard is that from time to time the legislature has passed and this court has approved statutes providing for the quarantining of infected fruit, for the destruction of diseased fruit and fruit trees, and for the com-the rights of property assumes the guise of a health law or a labor law will not save it from judicial scrutiny, since the courts cannot permit that to be done by indirection which cannot be done directly. The guaranty against depriving the citizen of his liberty comprehends much more than the exemption of his person from all unlawful restraint. It includes the right to engage in any lawful business, and to exercise his faculties in all lawful ways in any lawful trade, profession, or vocation. All laws, therefore, which impair or trammel these rights, or impose arbitrary conditions upon his right to earn a living in the pursuit of a lawful business, are infringements upon his fundamental rights of liberty, which are under constitutional protection." Although this statement can be regarded only as the individual opinion of the judge announcing it, it is fully sustained by the authorities. The only difference of opinion is as to its application to particular statutes.

As indicating the general principle on this subject the courts have declared that the free use and enjoyment and disposal of all of one's acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the law of the land, is not only the natural but the constitutional right of citizenship; and all laws which impair or trammel this right, except as they may be necessary to safeguard the welfare of society, are invalid. Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652.

It is said in McKinster v. Sager, 163 Ind. 671, 68 L. R. A. 273, 106 Am. St. Rep. 268, 72 N. E. 854: "The effect of the guaranty of due process of law and of the equal protection of the laws is to prevent the state from exercising, by any of its departments, arbitrary and capricious power over persons or property,"—citing Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383.

The limitations upon the exercise of the police power in respect to articles of food are stated in People v. Biesecker, 169 N. Y. 53, 57 L. R. A. 178, 88 Am. St. Rep. 534, pulsory care and preservation against disease of orchards; and it quotes this court's statement in Los Angeles County v. Spenger, 126 Cal. 673, 77 Am. St. Rep. 217, 59 Pac. 203, 385, to the following effect: "It is known that the existence of the fruit industry in the state depends upon the suppression and destruction of the pests mentioned in the statute. The act in question is, therefore, a proper exercise of the police power, which the legislature has, under § 1, art. 19, of the Constitution, to subject private property to such reasonable restraints and burdens as will secure and maintain the general welfare and prosperity of the state." From this respondent argues that the effect of the act is (e. g.) that when apples are shipped to the markets of this state, properly labeled, "Apples Grown in Santa Cruz County," because of their known cleanliness and freedom from disease, such apples are permitted to pass local boards of commissioners, while at the same time, if apples are shipped from San Mateo county into Santa Cruz county bearing the label the county of Santa Cruz can protect itself against the diseased fruit from the neighboring county. Still further, it is argued that the act would prevent the false labeling of fruit, and that the prevention of a general fraud is legitimately within the scope of the police power.

But the difficulty with this argument is that the act clearly is not designed to accomplish any of these purposes, and is wholly inadequate to their accomplishment. The scope, the meaning, and the intent of an act must be gathered from its title and from its body. There is nothing in either the title or the body of this act which deals or pretends to deal, with many of the difficulties which respondent mentions. If it is a question, as respondent contends, of the shipping of diseased apples, it would be simple enough for the legislature, and quite within its powers, to regulate or prohibit the transportation of such diseased fruit. If it were a question merely of deception in

61 N. E. 990, as follows: "(1) That the legislature cannot forbid or wholly prevent the sale of a wholesome article of food. (2) That legislation intended and reasonably adapted to prevent an article being manufactured in imitation or semblance of a well-known article in common use, and thus imposing upon consumers or purchasers, is valid. (3) That, in the interest of public health, the legislature may declare articles of food not complying with a specified standard unwholesome, and forbid their sale."

Inspection or quarantine laws affecting articles of commerce are generally upheld as within the police power; and the diversity of subjects to which the power has been applied, as well as the variety of methods by which it has been exercised, is shown in a valuable note to the case of Turner v. Maryland, 107 U. S. 38, 51, 27 L. ed. 370, 375, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44. It is there shown that not only the size and character of the box, cask, or barrel containing articles for shipment have been the subject of legislation, but that laws requiring the marking or branding of the receptacle have not been uncommon. In the Turner Case a Maryland statute required tobacco to be packed in hogsheads of a stated dimension, and these to be weighed, numbered, and marked with the name and address of the owner. In upholding the validity of this statute, Mr. Justice Blatchford says: "Fixing the identity and weight of tobacco alleged to have been grown in the state, and thus preserving the reputation of the article in markets outside of the state, is a legitimate part of inspection laws; and the means prescribed therefor in the statutes in question naturally conduce to that end. Such provisions, as parts of inspection laws, are as proper as provisions for inspecting quality; and it cannot be said that the absence of the 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) latter provisions, in respect to any particular class of tobacco, necessarily causes the laws containing the former provisions to cease to be inspection laws."

A statute requiring fertilizers manufactured in or imported into the state, to be inspected, stamped, and certified to, is upheld in Woods v. Armstrong, 54 Ala. 150, 25 Am. Rep. 671; Renfro v. Loyd, 64 Ala. 94. Likewise a statute requiring that there shall be attached to each package of fertilizer a tag, to be furnished by the agricultural commissioner of the state, is valid. Campbell v. Segars, 81 Ala. 259, 1 So. 714.

The adulteration of food has become a prolific subject of police legislation in recent years; and where the purpose of such statutes is to prevent fraud and deception, or to promote health, they are generally held to be a reasonable exercise of the power. The requirement that the counterfeit article shall be branded or labeled in such case is obviously a proper means of protecting persons seeking the genuine article.

A prohibition against the sale of any article as lard, "which contains any ingredient but the pure fat of healthy swine," unless labeled "compound lard," with the name and proportion of the ingredients, is not an unwarranted interference with trade, nor does it constitute a violation of the constitutional provision as to due process of law. State v. Snow, 81 Iowa, 642, 11 L. R. A. 355, 47 N. W. 777. To the same effect are State v. Aslesen, 50 Minn. 5, 36 Am. St. Rep. 620, 52 N. W. 220, and State v. Hanson, 84 Minn. 42, 54 L. R. A. 468, 86 N. W. 768.

Manufacturers of baking powder containing alum may be required so to mark their product as to indicate that fact. Stolz v. Thompson, 44 Minn. 271, 46 N. W. 410; State a label, the direct and efficacious method would be for the legislature to prohibit false labeling. None of these things, as we have said, does this act do or pretend to do. It requires merely that every shipment of every package of fruit, whether it be from small farmers with few trees or vines, whether it be from the large producer, must in every instance bear a label naming the county and immediate locality in which the fruit was grown. It is a matter of common knowledge that this requirement would work the absolute destruction of certain important branches of industry. Dried fruit, such as prunes, peaches, and apricots, are gathered in establishments, in enormous quantities, from the state over. These fruits, when dried, are assorted by grade and quality, and, thus assorted and packed, are shipped to the uttermost parts of the earth. It would absolutely prohibit this industry, if these fruit driers were compelled to label each package with the names of the localities from which the fruit came, and, if it did not absolutely prohibit it, it would render their business so onerous complicated, and expensive, as seriously to imperil its existence. It is plain, therefore, that the act was not designed to prevent either false labeling or the shipping of diseased fruit, and, if so designed, it is both meaningless for this purpose and burdensome for all others. It seems quite apparent that the true purpose of the act was to obtain for the fruit raisers of some well-advertised and favored localities an advantage in the disposition of their own fruit. But this, for reasons well and elaborately set forth in People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 1, 42 L. R. A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257, forms no part of the police power, and is wholly beyond the prerogative of the legislature.

It follows, therefore, that the act in question works an unconstitutional invasion of the prisoner's liberty; and it is ordered that he be discharged.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Lorigan, J.; Angellotti, J.; Van Dyke J.; Shaw, J.

Larson, 160 Mo. 474, 62 L. R. A. 163, 83 Am. St. Rep. 437, 61 S. W. 171.

And in Dorsey v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 47, 40 L. R. A. 201, 70 Am. St. Rep. 762, 44 S. W. 514, a statute making criminal the mixing of any articles of food without labeling the product, is held invalid because too general, and the lengths to which courts have gone in upholding legislation under the police power is deprecated. However, the court holds that, when wholesome and nutritious foods are intermingled, the legislature may require that the product be labeled so as to show the component elements thereof, and punish a failure to so label, but that the statute should designate the particular article the adulteration of which is prohibited.

Statutes regulating or prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine have been upheld in many of the states. To protect the public against deception the law may require oleomargarine to be colored pink, or given some other distinguishing brand. State v. Marshall, 64 N. H. 549, 1 L. R. A. 51, 15 Atl. 210; State v. Myers, 42 W. Va. 822, 35 L. R. A. 844, 57 Am. St. Rep. 887, 26 S. E. 539; Pierce v. State, 63 Md. 592; Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 69, 1 Am. St. Rep. 38, 30 N. W. 308; State ex rel. Weideman v. Horgan, 55 Minn. 183, 56 N. W. 688; Com. v. Gray, 150 Mass. 327, 23 N. E. 47; State, Waterbury, Prosecutor, v. Newton, 50 N. J. L. 535, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 63, 14 Atl. 604; State, Bayles, Prosecutor, v. Newton, 50 N. J. L. 549, 18 Atl. 77.

Upon the right to require such coloring, it is said in Armour Packing Co. v. Snyder, 54 Fed. 126, by Judge Lochren: "The state has undoubtedly the power of inspection and of confiscation in respect to articles of food put upon the market which are deleterious."

And unwholesome. And I think it may go further in respect to articles of food, and take efficient measures to prevent the people from being deceived and imposed upon, not only by requiring the packages containing an imitation article of food to be so marked as to disclose its character, but may also require that the article itself shall in a designated way be so marked for the same purpose."

When oleomargarine is made to resemble butter, the state may prohibit its manufacture and sale, "unless it is done under its true name, and each vessel, package, roll, or parcel of such substance has distinctly and durably painted, stamped, stenciled, or marked thereon, the true name of such substance in ordinary bold-faced capital letters not less than five-line pica in size." In upholding the validity of such statute, the supreme court of Ohio says: "Conceding that where the pursuit rests upon natural right, and the product is not harmful, this power may not be exercised in a way which will result practically in inhibition, though under the guise of regulation, and in fostering the interests of a rival product, yet where the manufacture is conducted in such way as is calculated to deceive, lead the buyer to suppose he is purchasing an article of food which is everywhere recognized as wholesome, and especially where the article sought to be regulated may easily be manufactured so as to be harmful, and thus result in fraud upon and injury to the public, the police power is properly exercised in the regulation of the manufacture and sale of such article by such requirements as will tend to insure the public against fraud and injury." State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Capital City Dairy Co. 62 Ohio St. 350, 57 L. R. A. 181, 57 N. E. 62.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

BETTIE FORD

v.

H. C. BROWN et al.

and

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NASHVILLE, Appt.

(.... Tenn.)

Indorsement by trustee—notice of trust.

The indorsement by a trustee, describing himself as such, of interest-bearing certificates of deposit payable to him as trustee, prima facie and presumptively fixes a purchaser with actual knowledge of the trustee's want of authority to dispose of the paper for his own benefit, within the meaning of the section of the negotiable instruments law which provides that, to constitute notice of infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title, there must be actual knowledge of such infirmity or defect,—at least where the certificates are not due, and the interest is payable only at maturity.

(March 31, 1905.)

APPEAL by the defendant bank from a decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals, which affirmed a decree of the Chancery Court for Davidson County in favor of complainant in a suit to enjoin the payment of certain certificates of deposit. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Case Note.—Some confusion has existed between the question of the effect of the use of the word "trustee," in describing the payee or holder of an instrument, upon its negotiability, and the other question of the effect of the use of that word to give notice to subsequent takers of the trust character of the instrument and of the rights of the beneficiaries. In some of the treatises on the subjects of trusts and of negotiable instruments there has been a failure to distinguish between these quite different questions. The question of the effect of describing a payee as a "trustee" upon the negotiability of the instrument relates to the defenses of the makers or obligors as against those to whom the trustee has transferred the instrument, while the other question relates to the rights of the beneficiaries as against such transferees.

As an authority for the proposition that the use of the word "trustee," in describing the payee of an instrument, defeats its negotiability, the case of Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 304, has been repeatedly cited, and has been relied upon in some of the treatises as establishing this doctrine. But, in fact, it is not strictly an authority in support of that proposition, although the court did say: "We do not think the note in question is within the class of paper known as commercial paper. Although like it in general form, the fact that it is payable to the order of Watkins, trustee, restricts its free circula-

Mr. Walter Stokes, for the appellant bank:

Possession of a negotiable bill or note payable to bearer, or indorsed in blank, to the holder especially, is prima facie evidence of title; and the holder of such instrument is presumed to have taken it in good faith for value before maturity, in the usual course of business, and without notice.

Bearden v. Moses, 7 Lea, 459; Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank, 102 S. 14, 26 L. ed. 61; Cheney v. Stone, 29 N. H. 885; Wyman v. Colorado Nat. Bank, Colo. 30, 40 Am. Rep. 133; Haywood v. Lewis, 65 Ga. 221; Cook v. Norwood, 1 Ill. 558; Tescher v. Merea, 118 Ind. 586; N. E. 316; McDowell v. Goldsmith, 6 N. H. 319, 61 Am. Dec. 605; 4 Am. & Eng. Law, p. 318.

Although a negotiable instrument is in circulation through fraudulent or illegal means, a bona fide holder of such instrument without notice may recover thereon.

Long Island Loan & T. Co. v. Columbia C. & I. C. R. Co. 65 Fed. 455; Young v. Ward, 21 Ill. 223; Riggs v. Trees, 13 Ind. 402, 5 L. R. A. 696, 22 N. E. 254; Koh v. Watkins, 26 Kan. 691, 40 Am. Rep. 336; Fearing v. Clark, 16 Gray, 74, 77 Am. Dec. 394; 7 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 943, 946.

A party dealing with commercial paper and excepts it from some of the rules governing commercial paper." The question at issue, however, was not the negotiability of the instrument, strictly speaking, but the right of the beneficiaries to protection. The action was instituted by the equitable owner of the note to restrain its collection by a party to whom the trustee had transferred it wrongfully, and, while the attorneys for the respective parties argued the question as if it were one of the negotiability of the instrument and the court made the declaration above quoted on that point, this was really obiter. The real question decided was that respecting the protection of the beneficiary, and on this the court said: "The doctrine is better settled than that a trustee has no power to sell and dispose of trust property for his own use and at his own mere will. One who obtains it from him, although him, with actual or constructive notice of the trust, can acquire no title, and it may be recovered by suitable proceeding for the benefit of the cestui que trust." In the case of the present note it cannot be read understandingly without seeing upon its face that it is connected with the trust and is part of the trust fund. It was the duty of the bank, before purchasing it, to have made inquiry into the right of the trustee to dispose of it. But this it wholly failed to do, and, as it turns out he was disposing of the note in fraud of his trust, the bank must suffer the consequences of the risk it assumed."

Another case that has been cited by some is the right to assume that the relations of every party whose name appears upon are precisely what they appear to be.

Fifth Ward Sav. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 5 N. J. L. 513, 7 Atl. 318; Cheever v. Pittsburgh, S. & L. E. R. Co. 150 N. Y. 59, 4 L. R. A. 69, 55 Am. St. Rep. 646, 44 N. E. 701; Hoge v. Lansing, 35 N. Y. 136; Woodwin v. American Nat. Bank, 48 Conn. 550.

The word "trustee," following the name of the payee on a negotiable instrument, does not necessarily put the purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, in usual course of trade and before maturity, upon inquiry.

Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Looney, 99 Tenn. 290, 38 L. R. A. 837, 63 Am. St. Rep. 830, 42 S. W. 149; Fox v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 35 L. R. A. 678, 37 S. W. 1102.

Messrs. Wheeler & Trimble and James A. Ryan for other appellants.

Mr. John Ruhm, for appellee:

When a party is about to perform an act which he has reason to believe may affect the rights of third persons, an inquiry as to the facts is a moral duty, and diligence, an act of justice.

Angle v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 92 U. S. 342, 23 L. ed. 560; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 759a; Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 138, 34 Am. Dec. 304; Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 1 Am. Rep. 115, 97 Am. Dec. 107; Sturtevant v. Jaques, 14

Allen, 523; Bancroft v. Consen, 13 Allen. 50; Baxter v. First Nat. Bank, 85 Tenn. 33, 1 S. W. 501; Caulkins v. Memphis Gaslight Co. 85 Tenn. 683, 4 Am. St. Rep. 786, 4 S. W. 287; Duncan v. Jaudon, 15 Wall. 175, 21 L. ed. 145; Hazeltine v. Keenan, 54 W. Va. 600, 102 Am. St. Rep. 953, 46 S. E. 609; Alexander v. Alexander, 7 Baxt. 403; Covington v. Anderson, 16 Lea, 311; Smith v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 91 Tenn. 222, 18 S. W. 546.

The negotiable instrument law has made no change in the law as it stood when enacted by the legislature.

Wilson v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 145, 17 Am. St. Rep. 625, 24 N. E. 384; Crawford's Anno. Neg. Instrument Law, p. 47; Thurber v. Cecil Nat. Bank, 52 Fed. 513; Lee v. Chillicothe Branch Bank, 1 Bond, 387, Fed. Cas. No. 8,186, 1 Biss. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 8,187; Germania Safety-Vault & T. Co. v. Boynton, 19 C. C. A. 118, 37 U. S. App. 602, 71 Fed. 797; Jackson v. Davis, MacArth & M. 334; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. § 271, p. 287; Langdon v. Baxter Nat. Bank, 57 Vt. 1, 52 Am. Rep. 113; Strong v. Strauss, 40 Ohio St. 87; Fowler v. Brantly, 14 Pet. 320, 10 L. ed. 475; Merchants' Exch. Nat. Bank v. Bergen County, 115 U. S. 391, 29 L. ed. 432, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88; Payne v. Flournoy, 29 Ark. 500; Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Brugger, 196 Ill. 96, 63 N. E. 637; Prather v. Weissiger, 10 Bush, 117.

of the text writers as if it were an authority against the negotiability of an instrument payable to a trustee is Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 1 Am. Rep. 115, 97 Am. Dec. 107, but this, also, was a case which did not involve that question. It was a case of an action by the equitable owner of certificates of stock which a trustee had indorsed and transferred as collateral security for a check of a firm of brokers to which he belonged, and the action was against this firm of brokers, as well as the payee of the check given by the firm and the corporation itself. The court said that, unless the word "trustee" be regarded as mere descriptio personarum, and rejected as a nullity, there was plain and actual notice of the existence of a trust of some description, and, that the mere use of the word "trustee" in the assignment of a mortgage and note had been held to import the existence of a trust, and to give notice thereof to all into whose hands the instrument might come, had been expressly decided by the court; citing Sturtevant v. Jaques, 14 Allen, 523. The court added that, "where one known to be a trustee is found pledging that which is known to be trust property to secure a debt due from a firm of which he is a member, the act is one prima facie unauthorized and unlawful, and it is the duty of him who takes such security to ascertain whether the trustee has a right to give it." 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

An authority directly in point on this question, and which explicitly holds that the negotiability of an instrument is not destroyed by adding the word "trustee" to the name of the payee, is the case of Fox v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 35 L. R. A. 678, 37 S. W. 1102. The opinion in the Fox Case cites the Lange Case, but says: "We take it that the decided weight of authority, and it seems to us of sound reason, supports the position that the addition of the word 'trustee' to the name of the payee of a note, of itself, does not destroy its negotiability." This conclusion as to the weight of authority on the question is unquestionably correct, as shown by Davis v. Garr, 6 N. Y. 124, 55 Am. Dec. 387; Downer v. Read, 17 Minn. 493, Gil. 470; Bush v. Peckard, 3 Harr. (Del.) 385; Westmoreland v. Foster, 60 Ala. 448; Chadsey v. McCreery, 27 Ill. 253.

In Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Looney, 99 Tenn. 278, 38 L. R. A. 841, 63 Am. St. Rep. 830, 42 S. W. 149, which was a case involving the defenses of the maker of an instrument made payable to a person as "trustee" and indorsed by him, the court says that, while the rule is that he who takes a security from a trustee with his fiduciary character displayed upon its face is bound to inquire as to his right to dispose of it, "if, Anything appearing on the face of the paper, which shows that the rights of the parties are not absolute, puts a purchaser on notice.

Isom v. First Nat. Bank, 52 Miss. 902; Renshaw v. Wills, 38 Mo. 201; Ranney v. Brooks, 20 Mo. 105; Powell v. Morrison, 35 Mo. 244; McBain v. Seligman, 58 Mich. 204, 25 N. W. 197; Wolfe v. State, 79 Ala. 201, 58 Am. Rep. 590; Central Bank v. Hammett, 50 N. Y. 158; Norton, Bills & Notes, § 127, p. 304; Colson v. Arnot, 57 N. Y. 253, 15 Am. Rep. 496; Angle v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 92 U. S. 342, 23 L. ed. 556; Freeman's Nat. Bank v. Savery, 127 Mass. 75, 34 Am. Rep. 345; Wisconsin Yearly Meeting v. Babler, 115 Wis. 289, 91 N. W. 678; Dunn v. National Bank, 15 S. D. 454, 90 N. W. 1045; Pelton v. Spider Lake Sawmill & Lumber Co. 117 Wis. 569, 98 Am. St. Rep. 946, 94 N. W. 293; West St. Louis Sav. Bank v. Shawnee County Bank, 95 U. S. 557, 24 L. ed. 490; First Nat. Bank v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 2 Herdman (Neb.) 104, 95 N. W. 1062.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Complainant exhibited this bill against the defendants, Henry C. Brown, Fred La tenberger, and Jesse Trinum, as individuals and as a partnership using the firm name of H. C. Brown & Company, against the First National Bank of Nashville, Tennessee, and the Chattanooga Savings Bank. The principal object of the bill was to enjoin the Chattanooga Savings Bank against the payment of two certificates of deposit which that bank had issued to Woodworth a trustee for complainant Betty Ford, and which certificates of deposit had been indorsed and transferred by Woodworth to H. C. Brown & Company, in payment of gambling indebtedness. H. C. Brown & Company indorsed said certificates of deposit to the First National Bank of Nashville, and that bank had forwarded the certificates to Chattanooga, and was seeking to collect them from the Chattanooga Savings Bank at the time the original bill herein was filed. It is alleged that these two certificates of deposit represented the earnings of the complainant Betty Ford as a domestic in the family of D. Woodworth, Jr., of Chattanooga, during a period of eighteen or twenty years. D. Woodworth, Jr., had died.

on inquiry, it is found that there is no restriction upon the trustee's power of disposition, or . . . there is nothing in the nature of the transaction to indicate any abuse of his trust, then the title of a purchaser in good faith, for value and before maturing, will be protected."

The question of the rights of beneficiaries in an instrument which is payable to a person named as trustee, and indorsed by him, is a question quite distinct from that involved in the preceding cases. On this question the doctrine is well stated in 1 Perry on Trusts, § 225, as follows: "If a purchaser takes securities from a trustee with the word 'trustee' upon their face, . . . the sale may be avoided by the cestui que trust, or the purchaser may be held as a trustee." This doctrine is expressly approved in the case of Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Looney, 99 Tenn. 278, 38 L. R. A. 841, 63 Am. St. Rep. 830, 42 S. W. 149.

In Eaton & Gilbert on Commercial Paper, § 75d, p. 370, it is said: "The fact that the instrument, on its face, is made payable to a person in his fiduciary capacity, is notice that the payee is acting in such capacity, and that he can only give title or deal with such instrument for the benefit of the person whom he represents."

Substantially the same doctrine is stated by Tiedeman on Commercial Paper, § 300, p. 578.

This doctrine, which is clearly stated in Ford v. Brown and the leading cases cited in the opinion, is well supported by other authorities.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the case of the use of the word "trustee" in certificates of stock substantially the same doctrine is applied to protect the rights of beneficiaries where transfers are made by the trustee. Among the cases of this kind are Duncan v. Jaudon, 15 Wall. 165, 21 L. ed. 142; Geyser-Marion Gold Min. Co. v. Stark, 53 L. R. A. 684, 45 C. C. A. 467, 106 Fed. 558; Peck v. Bank of America, 16 R. I. 710, 7 L. R. A. 826, 19 Atl. 369; Marbury v. Ehlen, 72 Md. 206, 20 Am. St. Rep. 467, 19 Atl. 648.

In Lang v. Metzger, 86 Ill. App. 117, 124, it is held that, where the word "trustee" is added to the name of the payee of a note, the form of the note itself is sufficient notice that the note is part of a trust fund.

In Duckett v. National Mechanics' Bank, 86 Md. 400, 39 L. R. A. 84, 63 Am. St. Rep. 513, 38 Atl. 983, it was held that a check stating that it is for deposit to the credit of the person named, with the word "trustee" added to his name, is an explicit notice to the bank in which he deposits it that he is not an actual owner of the money, and that, if the bank credits it to his individual account, and loss ensues to the trust estate by reason of his drawing out the fund by checks on his personal account, the bank is liable for participation in the breach of trust.

In Sturtevant v. Jaques, 14 Allen, 523, it is said that the assignment of a mortgage, and a note secured thereby, to a person as trustee, and the indorsement of the note by him as such, were notice that he took the note and mortgage in trust.

and the certificates of deposit which had been issued to him were changed, and issued in the name of C. N. Woodworth, trustee.

These certificates of deposit were as follows:

Chattanooga Savings Bank.
No. 13,493. Chattanooga, Tenn.,
Oct. 7th, 1902.

C. N. Woodworth, trustee, has deposited in this bank $994.97, payable to the order of same, twelve months after date, with interest to maturity only at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, upon the return of his certificate properly indorsed. Not subject to check. R. W. Barr, Cashier.

Chattanooga Savings Bank.
No. 13,704. Chattanooga, Tenn.,
March 21st, 1903.

C. N. Woodworth, trustee for Betty Ford, has deposited in this bank thirteen hundred and seventy-five & 55/100 dollars ($1,375.55), payable to the order of same twelve months after date, with interest to maturity only at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum upon the return of this certificate properly indorsed. Not subject to check.

R. W. Barr, Cashier.

The Chattanooga Savings Bank answered the bill, and averred that it had issued the certificates, but had refused to pay the same, because they were not due, and because it had received notice from Betty Ford not to pay them; that it had no interest in the controversy, but was willing to pay the certificates to whomsoever the court might adjudicate they should belong.

The defendants H. C. Brown & Company also answered the bill, denying all of its material allegations.

The First National Bank of Nashville also answered, denying all knowledge upon its part of the gambling transactions, and all knowledge of the relations between Woodworth and Betty Ford, and denied any knowledge that its codefendants had conducted any gambling establishment or rooms; denied all knowledge of the intoxication of Woodworth, or of his transaction with H. C. Brown & Company with regard to said certificate. It admitted, however, that on April 24, 1903, these certificates of deposit were presented by H. C. Brown & Company, to the First National Bank at Nashville for discount, and avers that it purchased said certificates from H. C. Brown & Company, and paid their face value in cash, and then sent the certificates to Chattanooga for collection. It avers that it took these certificates in due course of trade for a valuable consideration, and without any notice of the rights and equities of Betty Ford, or of anyone else, and avers that it is an innocent holder for value in due course of trade and without notice.

The court of chancery appeals finds that C. N. Woodworth, having possession of those certificates, brought them to Nashville, Tennessee, and on or about the 22d or 23d, or, possibly, the 24th or 25th, of April, 1903, he went to the gambling house located over the Climax saloon on Cherry street, in Nashville, Tennessee, and there engaged in gambling. It is shown he drank heavily and lost large sums. While thus drinking and gambling, he not only lost a large amount of his own money, but he also indorsed and transferred these certificates of deposit belonging to the complainant, upon which he obtained money and chips to be used in gambling. He lost and gambled away all of the money and chips so obtained, except about the sum of $600 or $700, which the gamblers in charge of the place offered to repay him, but which he at the time declined.

That court further finds that H. C. Brown & Company came into possession of these certificates, and on the 25th of April, 1903, took them to the First National Bank of Nashville, and there sold and disposed of them to the First National Bank for cash. The bank, overlooking the fact that the certificates were not due, took them for cash, as H. C. Brown & Company were among their regular customers. They paid cash for them, and sent them to Chattanooga, through their correspondent at that place, for collection. In the meantime, C. N. Woodworth, having become to some extent rational, telegraphed the Chattanooga Savings Bank at Chattanooga not to pay these certificates. The bank at once notified the mother of C. N. Woodworth and Betty Ford, who immediately advised the bank not to pay or recognize these certificates.

It further appears that when these certificates were first presented to the First National Bank, they bore the indorsement of complainant C. N. Woodworth and the indorsement of H. C. Brown & Company, but at that time the First National Bank refused to take the certificates, because one of them was not properly indorsed; that is to say, it was simply indorsed by C. N. Woodworth, when it should have been indorsed, as it was payable on its face, by "C. N. Woodworth, Trustee for Betty Ford." Thereupon H. C. Brown & Company took the certificates back, and returned with them in a short time properly indorsed.

The court of chancery appeals finds as a matter of fact that this new indorsement was made by C. N. Woodworth. After the indorsement was corrected, the certificates were taken back to the First National Bank, and on the 25th of April the teller of the bank bought the certificates in question from H. C. Brown or H. C. Brown & Company, paying cash therefor, overlooking the fact that the certificates were not due. The officers of the First National Bank denied all knowledge as to how H. C. Brown & Company acquired these certificates, and all knowledge of the transaction between Woodworth and H. C. Brown & Company and their employees, or of any person who obtained these certificates of C. N. Woodworth, and the court of chancery appeals finds there is nothing in the record to indicate that these officers had any knowledge of the transactions mentioned.

The court of chancery appeals further finds there is no evidence in the record from which we are justified in finding that the officers of the bank had any knowledge in regard to the gambling carried on over the Climax saloon.

The court of chancery appeals finds that H. C. Brown & Company was affected with full notice and had knowledge of this embezzlement on the part of Mr. Woodworth, and of this violation of his trust, and had full knowledge of his want of legal right and capacity to transfer this property. They must have known, and did know, that they were taking the certificates in violation of this trust, and taking funds which Woodworth was practically embezzling. As to the First National Bank, there is no proof to show that the officers of the bank had any knowledge of these transactions, or even that H. C. Brown & Company conducted gambling rooms over the Climax saloon, and hence the rights of the First National Bank must depend upon the facts disclosed upon the face of the paper itself and the indorsements thereon.

As already stated, one of these certificates was payable to C. N. Woodworth, trustee for Betty Ford, and the other simply to C. N. Woodworth, trustee. One of them was dated March 21, 1903, due twelve months after date, and the other was dated October 7, 1902, and due twelve months after that date. Each of them bears interest to maturity only at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum. It is disclosed on the face of each certificate that it is not subject to check, but is an interest-bearing certificate of deposit. The first certificate, which was made payable to C. N. Woodworth, Trustee for Betty Ford, was indorsed by C. N. Woodworth, Trustee, and afterwards the words, "for Betty Ford" were added by him. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The other certificate was simply indorsed "C. N. Woodworth, Trustee."

That court further finds that these certificates were sold and transferred by H. C. Brown to the First National Bank of Nashville on the 25th day of April, 1903. On the 24th of April, 1903, at 7:45 A. M., C. N. Woodworth had telegraphed the cashier of the Chattanooga Savings Bank, which had issued these certificates, not to pay them. So when the certificates were sent to Chattanooga for collection, the Chattanooga Savings Bank refused to pay them, on the ground that they were not due, and on the further ground that Betty Ford contested the right of the First National Bank to them. It appears, therefore, that, before the First National Bank took these certificates, all the authority which C. N. Woodworth had, if any, to transfer them had been revoked by Mrs. Ford. It does not, of course, appear that he ever had authority to transfer them, especially for his own benefit.

The court of chancery appeals was of opinion that these certificates, not being due, and being made payable to C. N. Woodworth, Trustee, in the one instance, and to C. N. Woodworth, Trustee for Betty Ford, in the other, and so indorsed, destroyed the negotiability of the paper to the extent of giving notice that they constituted trust funds, and that the purchaser must inquire into the right of the trustee to dispose of them.

We have no doubt of the correctness of the conclusion of law reached by the court of chancery appeals upon the predicate of facts found by them.

In the case of Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Looney, 99 Tenn. 278, 38 L. R. A. 837, 61 Am. St. Rep. 830, 42 S. W. 149, this question was considered by this court, and it was said by the chief justice, who delivered the opinion, that, in a controversy between a beneficiary of a trust fund and the holder of a paper disposed of by a trustee in violation of his trust, the word "trustee," appearing upon the face of the paper, is sufficient to put any taker upon notice. The court in that case referred to the authority of Duncan v. Jaudon, 15 Wall. 175, 21 L. ed. 145, in which it was held that the word "trustee" gave notice of the existence of a trust, and that the party taking the paper was charged with the duty of ascertaining what, if any, restrictions were imposed upon the trustee.

The court also cited the case of Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 304.

This court further remarked that the correctness of these holdings is now conceded by the courts with practical unanimity. The effect of them is that, if the trustee, Sykes, disposed of this paper in violation of his trust, then the word "trustee" would convert anyone who so obtained it into a constructive trustee at the instance of the cæui que trust.

To the same effect is Fox v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co., decided by the court of chancery appeals, and reported in 35 L. R. A. 678, 37 S. W. 1102, in which Judge Wilson stated as follows: "In a contest between the beneficiaries of these notes assuming that Anderson was not their real owner, and the transferee of Anderson, the fact that the notes appeared on their face, to be payable to him as trustee, would put the transferee on notice, and the claim of the beneficiaries would be superior." Alexander v. Alderson, 7 Baxt. 403; Covington v. Anderson, 16 Lea, 310; Caulkins v. Memphis Gaslight Co. 85 Tenn. 684, 4 Am. St. Rep. 786, 4 S. W. 287.

It is insisted, however, on behalf of the appellants, that the rule announced in Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Looney and the other Tennessee cases on this subject has been modified and entirely superseded by what is known as the "negotiable instrument law," which provides, in § 56, as follows: "To constitute notice of an infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating the same, the person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith." Acts 1899, chap. 94, p. 150.

This section of the negotiable instrument law was construed by this court in the case of Unaka Nat. Bank v. Butler, 113 Tenn. 574, 83 S. W. 655. The court held that the effect of this section of the statute was to embody the majority rule upon the subject of notice as it has been held and administered by the courts of New York and other states and the Federal courts for many years, and to discard the doctrine of constructive notice, which had prevailed for many years in this state. The rule as administered in this state was that, if a purchaser of negotiable paper had implied notice of prior equities or infirmities of any nature whatever in the title of the holder from whom he purchased,—that is, if anything appeared upon the face of the paper, or from the facts and circumstances attending its possession or sale, which would put one of ordinary prudence upon inquiry that would lead to actual knowledge of the equities or infirmities,—he was bound to pursue such inquiries, and was charged with notice of the facts he could have learned; citing the Tennessee cases on the subject. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is then stated in the opinion that the rule of constructive or implied notice had been abrogated by the negotiable instrument law, enacted in April, 1899, and what may be called the majority rule was adopted by the enactment of § 56, which has already been quoted.

It will be observed that this section provides that a party "must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith."

In Unaka Nat. Bank v. Butler, 113 Tenn. 574, 83 S. W. 655, the court was dealing with a check which did not carry on its face any notice of defective title, but notice of the infirmity was sought to be fixed by the surrounding facts and circumstances. It will be observed that in the present case each of these certificates of deposit was indorsed by C. N. Woodworth as trustee, and we are of opinion that such an indorsement prima facie and presumptively fixed the purchaser with actual knowledge of want of authority in the trustee to dispose of the paper for his own benefit.

In Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 304, the note was payable to a trustee, and indorsed in the same style by the trustee. The court said: "In the case of the present note, it cannot be read understandingly without seeing upon its face that it is connected with a trust and is part of a trust fund. It was the duty of the bank before purchasing it to have made inquiry into the right of the trustee to dispose of it. But this it wholly failed to do, and, as it turns out he was disposing of the note in fraud of his trust, the bank must suffer the consequences of the risk it assumed."

In Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115, the court, in speaking of the effect of the word "trustee," says it means trustee for someone whose name is not disclosed; and there is no greater reason for assuming that a trustee is authorized to pledge for his own debt the property of an unnamed cæui que trust than the property of one who is known. In either case it is highly improbable that the right to do so exists. The apparent difference between the two springs from the erroneous assumption that the word "trustee" alone has no meaning or legal effect.

It has already been seen that one of the certificates of deposit in the case at bar was payable to C. N. Woodworth, Trustee for Betty Ford, and indorsed in the same style, but actual notice to a purchaser of the fiduciary character of a paper is no more effective in the one case than in the other.

In the case of Swift v. Smith, 102 U. S. 442, 26 L. ed. 193, it is said: "There is nothing in the case to show that Smith's purchase was not in good faith. There was nothing upon the note nor anything in the indorsement thereon to notify him that it did not belong to Jackson both legally and equitably. It was mercantile paper, and not due. . . . It is true that, if the bill or note be so marked on its face as to show that it belongs to some other person than the one who offers to negotiate it, the purchaser will be presumed to have knowledge of the true owner, and his purchase will not be held to be bona fide."

These authorities sustain our position that the word "trustee" in an indorsement of this character is express notice to a purchaser that there is a cestui que trust or beneficiary, and that his rights may not be sacrificed by the trustee in the sale or pledge of the note for his own benefit; in other words, our holding distinctly is that such an indorsement is actual knowledge to the purchaser of such paper, within the meaning of § 56 of the negotiable instrument law, supra.

Now it is very true, as said by Mr. Perry in his work on Trusts (vol. 1. § 225): "The mere fact that the word 'trustee' is on the face of the securities cannot put a purchaser to any inquiry beyond ascertaining whether the trustee has power to vary the securities. If he has such power, a purchaser in good faith will be protected, although the trustee use the money for his private purposes. But if a purchaser takes securities from a trustee with the word 'trustee' upon their face, in payment of a private debt due from the trustee, the sale may be avoided by the cestui que trust, or the purchaser may be held as a trustee."

As stated in Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Looney, 99 Tenn. 278, 38 L. R. A. 837, 63 Am. St. Rep. 830, 42 S. W. 149, the rule is that he who takes a security from a trustee with the fiduciary character displayed upon its face is bound to inquire of his right to dispose of it; but if, upon inquiry, it is found that there is no restriction upon the trustee's power of disposition, or, it may be added, there is nothing in the nature of the transaction to indicate any abuse of his trust, then the title of a purchaser in good faith for value and before maturity will be protected.

It appears that our negotiable instrument law is a substantial reproduction of a similar law enacted by the state of New York in the year 1896. In the year 1903, with that law on the statute books, the court of appeals of New York decided the case of Cohn- feld v. Tanenbaum, 176 N. Y. 126, 98 Am. St. Rep. 653, 68 N. E. 141. The court said, in the midst of the opinion, that the signature to the check, "Isidore Cohnfeld, Guardian," gave the defendant notice that presumptively the funds being paid to him were not those either of the Cohnfeld Manufacturing Company or of Isidore Cohnfeld personally, and he was put upon inquiry to ascertain the authority of Cohnfeld to apply the money in payment of the company's debts. This proposition is conceded by both the courts below. Had he made the inquiry, he would have learned the facts which have already been stated. He is therefore chargeable with all that those facts import, or which is fairly to be inferred from them.

Again, in West Virginia, where a negotiable instrument law similar to our own prevails, the supreme court of that state held, in the case of Hazeltine v. Keenan, 54 W. Va. 600, 102 Am. St. Rep. 953, 46 S. E. 609, that a negotiable note, payable on its face to a payee, with the word "attorney" suffixed to his name, indicates an interest in other parties, and puts the purchaser upon inquiry as to their rights and the right of the payee to sell the note.

In addition to all this, the certificates show on their face that they bear interest at maturity only at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, and further, that they are not subject to check, but are interest-bearing certificates of deposit; one of them having almost twelve months to run and the other six months at the time they were transferred. It is admitted by the officers of the First National Bank that they overlooked this fact when they bought these certificates for cash, but we agree with the court of chancery appeals that the fact that the bank overlooked these things will not relieve them of responsibility as to any notice the paper itself gives.

All these facts disclosed on the face of the paper, including the express indorsement of C. N. Woodworth, Trustee, etc., gave actual notice to the bank that this paper represented a trust fund, and obliged the bank to inquire into the right of the trustee to dispose of it. If the bank had made such inquiry, it could easily have ascertained that the paper had been embezzled and the money lost in a gambling transaction by the trustee; and further, the bank would have discovered that, before the paper had been purchased by it, all right and authority of the trustee to act had been withdrawn.

We are therefore of opinion that the indorsements and recitals of these certificates communicated actual knowledge to the bank that they represented a trust fund, and, even under the negotiable instrument act, no title was acquired by the bank to the paper.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

NATIONAL TUBE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
GEORGE O. SMITH.

(..... W. Va.)

1. Exemption law of other state.

The exemption law of another state pertains to remedy, and will not be enforced in this state.

2. Injunction—garnishment—nonresident.

Injunction does not lie against a garnishment in an action before a justice, of money owing by the garnishee to a nonresident debtor, on the ground that such money is exempt by the law of the state of residence of such debtor.

3. Injunction—multiplicity of suits.

The fact that a person is sued or garnished by different persons on distinct and separate demands having no connection, or the fact that the same question of law may arise in all the cases, does not give equity jurisdiction to enjoin the suits on the principle that equity takes jurisdiction to avoid multiplicity of suits.

4. Disqualification of justice.

Equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin a justice of the peace from acting in an action before him, because of his interest in the result.

5. Injunction—pendency of other suit.

Injunction will not lie to restrain the prosecution of a garnishment in an action for debt before a justice of this state on the ground that, in another state, an injunction is later sued out, and is pending, enjoining the garnishee from paying the money under any judgment of such justice.

(February 14, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ohio County in favor of defendant in a suit to enjoin the prosecution of certain garnishment proceedings. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William H. Hearne for appellant.

Mr. Henry M. Russell, for appellee:

There was no equitable jurisdiction.

Evans v. Taylor, 28 W. Va. 184; Shay v. Nolan, 46 W. Va. 209, 33 S. E. 225; Null v. Elliott, 52 W. Va. 229, 43 S. E. 173.

A debt is merely an obligation or liability of the debtor. It can hardly be properly but the question in the latter case was merely as to the jurisdiction in garnishment, and not as to the law governing exemption. The Drake Case is also referred to in 2 Parmele's Wharton on Conflict of Laws, § 791a, as contrary to the weight of authority which the text declares is to the effect that exemptions pertain to the remedy, and that the exemption granted by the law of the debtor's domicile, or by the substantive law of the contract or other transaction out of which the claim arises, will not be allowed by the court of another jurisdiction, unless a statute of the latter jurisdiction expressly so provides. Many cases are cited in support of the text, including, among others, Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 83 Ala. 402, 3 Am. St. Rep. 755, 3 So. 852; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Hollenbeck, 161 Ind. 452, 69 N. E. 136; Lyon v. Callopy, 87 Iowa, 567, 43 Am. St. Rep. 396, 54 N. W. 476; Stewart v. Thomson, 97 Ky. 575, 36 L. R. A. 582, 53 Am. St. Rep. 431, 31 S. W. 133; Balk v. Harris, 122 N. C. 64, 45 L. R. A. 257, 30 S. E. 318; Carson v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 646, 8 L. R. A. 412, 17 Am. St. Rep. 921, 13 S. W. 588; La Selle v. Woolery, 11 Wash. 337, 32 L. R. A. 73, 39 Pac. 663.

The question as to the law by which the right to exemption is to be determined has frequently arisen in connection with the question as to the situs of a debt for purposes of garnishment, which, it will be observed, is an entirely distinct question.

Headnotes by BRANNON, P.

Case Note.—The case of Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 168, 13 Am. St. Rep. 382, 37 N. W. 70, which is cited in the opinion in the NATIONAL TUBE COMPANY CASE as opposed to the position taken in the latter case, that exemption laws pertain to the remedy, and that the exemption law of one state will not be enforced in another, was cited with apparent approval in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Sharitt, 43 Kan. 375, 8 L. R. A. 385, 19 Am. St. Rep. 143, 23 Pac. 430. In the latter case, however, the debt sought to be garnished was exempt both according to the foreign law and the law of the forum, and that was also true in Kestler v. Kern, 2 Ind. App. 488, 28 N. E. 726, which cites the Drake Case with apparent approval. The Drake Case was disapproved in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Maggard, 6 Colo. App. 55, 39 Pac. 985, holding that the exemption laws of a state have no extraterritorial force; and the court, in Wabash R. Co. v. Dougan, 142 Ill. 248, 34 Am. St. Rep. 74, 31 N. E. 594, declined to follow the authority of the Drake Case in a case arising before the passage of Ill. act July 1, 1891, the 3d section of which in effect allows a nonresident debtor the exemption of wages to which he would be entitled by the law of the state of his residence. The Drake Case is referred to with approval in Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. McDonald, 112 Ill. App. 20, but this case was governed by the statute just referred to. The position of the Drake Case on this point was referred to in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Moore, 31 Neb. 629, 28 Am. St. Rep. 534, 48 N. W. 475, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

said that the debt itself has a situs. The debtor owes the debt. The creditor can proceed against him wherever he may be found and wherever he can be reached by judicial process. If he is personally in this state, although he may not reside here, the creditor may institute an action against him, and may compel him, through the court, to pay the debt. If the creditor has assigned the debt to some other person, the assignee may take like proceedings against the debtor.

If the creditor owes the debt to another in this state, and if the creditor is a non-resident of the state, and if the debtor comes into the state, the person in this state to whom the creditor owes the debt can institute attachment proceedings and attach the debt by garnishee process against the debtor.

Mahany v. Kephart, 15 W. Va. 609; Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450, 62 L. R. A. 178, 44 S. E. 300; Rece v. Newport News & M. Valley Co. 32 W. Va. 164, 3 L. R. A. 572, 9 S. E. 212; Mooney v. Buford & G. Mfg. Co. 18 C. C. A. 421, 34 U. S. App. 581, 72 Fed. 32; Moshassuck Felt Mill v. Blanding, 17 R. I. 297, 21 Atl. 538.

Messrs. Stentz & Hitchins also for appellee.

Brannon, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

The National Tube Company filed a bill in equity in Ohio county against George O. Smith, stating that it is a New Jersey corporation doing business in this state in the manufacture of steel and iron tubing, and employing many thousands of men in this and other states; that said Smith, a resident of West Virginia, had brought 142 suits before justices of the peace of Ohio county against employees of the company residing in Pennsylvania on claims assigned to Smith, contracted in Pennsylvania with residents of Pennsylvania and still residing in it; that no process in the suits had been served on the nonresident debtors, but that attachments had been issued in them and served on the company as garnishee; that said suits were a great burden and annoyance to the company; that Smith had been long engaged in the pretended buying of claims arising in other states against employees of foreign corporations, and suing on them in Ohio county, and garnishing foreign corporations doing business there, either paying small value for claims, or on agreement for half the recovery; that the claims thus purchased were debts against persons who became debtors in Pennsylvania, and that they, as employees of said company, had earned wages in that state for which the company was garnished, and 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the purpose of said assignment and suit in West Virginia was to evade the statute of Pennsylvania which entitled those employees to exempt such wages from subjection to the debts sued on; that not only were those employees entitled to the exemption but a Pennsylvania statute made the assignments of the claim illegal and void. The bill charged that the purchase of the claims by Smith was champertous; also, that an arrangement had been made between Smith and the justices that no justices' fees were to be charged Smith unless the company should answer that it had funds of the debtors, and that this is contrary to public policy; that one of the debtors sued before the justice (Javens) had obtained from a court in Pennsylvania an injunction restraining the company from paying Smith the money owed by the company to Javens, and that others were about to enjoin; that, if judgments should be given by the justices in Ohio county, the company would likely be sued for the same money in Pennsylvania, and be compelled to pay over again these same debts, and thus lose a large sum. The bill asked an injunction against Smith to forbid him from prosecuting said pending suits or instituting other suits on like claims, and injunction was awarded, but afterwards on demurrer the bill was dismissed and the injunction dissolved, and the company appealed.

The defendant contests the jurisdiction of equity to entertain this suit. One ground on which the plaintiff rests such jurisdiction is that the debts due from the defendant are for wages of laboring men in the service of the company, and that those laborers earned the wages in the state of Pennsylvania, and reside there, and by its laws such wages are exempt from the debts to which it is sought by the garnishment of the defendant in this state to subject them to debts there made, and that those debts were assigned and sued upon in this state with purpose to evade the exemption law of Pennsylvania. To sustain this ground for jurisdiction we must practically enforce the law of another state, in contradiction of the rule that the laws of a state have no force beyond its territorial limits, and therefore exemption laws of another state, which pertain to remedy merely, will not be enforced in this state. Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 78. But we are told that jurisdiction under this head is sustained by 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 80, saying "that the rule of comity between states will not permit a creditor residing in one state, or his assignee, to avail himself of the process of the courts of another state for the purpose of evading the exemption laws of his own state, and, if he attempts to do so, such laws should be recognized, and effect given to them." It may be safely asserted that this is not the sound rule, as appears from the same volume (p. 78). We find in that volume (p. 256): "It may be regarded as settled that a court of equity has jurisdiction to enjoin a resident creditor from instituting or prosecuting an action or proceeding in another state for the purpose of evading the exemption laws of his state, and of collecting his claim by subjecting to its satisfaction property or credits which the debtor could claim as exempt if the action or proceeding were brought within the state. And in such a case an injunction should generally be granted."

This means that injunction lies in one state to enforce its own exemption law. It means that an injunction will go against a person resident in a state, to operate in person on him, to prevent his suing in another state, to subject in that other state wages exempt in favor of a person residing in the former state, which would be exempt if he were sued there. This is not enforcing the law of another state. It seems both creditor and debtor must reside in the same state for such injunction. The case of Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Cunningham, 7 Kan. App. 47, 51 Pac. 972, holds that Kansas will execute the exemption law of another state, and protect wages of employees earned in another, exempt by its laws. Say the same of Missouri P. R. Co. v. Maltby, 34 Kan. 125, 8 Pac. 235. Without disregarding Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450, and the current of authority, we cannot so hold. I add that the Maltby Case says that the wages were exempt under the exemption law of both states. Further, they were not injunctions. They were contests in the garnishee cases. They do not aid equity jurisdiction. Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 168, 13 Am. St. Rep. 382, 37 N. W. 70, was not injunction, but appeal in garnishment case. It holds that assignment of a debt to assist the creditor to evade the exemption law of a state by suit in another state is invalid. That is a matter contestable in the garnishment suit. So with the holding that such wages cannot be attached. These cases are not our question, which is equity jurisdiction in this case. Wright v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 19 Neb. 175, 56 Am. Rep. 747, 27 N. W. 90, only holds that Nebraska's exemption law applies to nonresidents. It was in the same action, also, and does not touch jurisdiction of equity. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Moore, 31 Neb. 629, 28 Am. St. Rep. 534, 48 N. W. 475, does not touch our question, because it simply holds that a valid judgment on garnishment is good in Ill. R. A. (N.S.) another state, and payment of it protects the garnishee. Wabash R. Co. v. Dougan, 142 Ill. 248, 34 Am. St. Rep. 74, 31 N. E. 594, involved the right to garnish in another state, the right being tried in same suit. It does touch equity jurisdiction. Pierce v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 283, touches what the garnishee must do in defense, the force of a judgment against him, and the presumption that the exemption laws of the two states are the same. Martin v. Central Vermont R. Co. 50 Hun, 347, 3 N. Y. Supp. 82, is upon the force of a judgment on garnishment in another state, arising in an action to compel payment over again of wages, in which, also, it was said it seems such wages are not attachable. It does not touch equity jurisdiction. The law above last quoted does not mean, for illustration, that injunction lies in West Virginia to enjoin garnishment here of wages earned in another state, payable there to a person there resident, though exempt by the law of that other state.

Pennsylvania could thus enjoin the owners of debts there resident from suing in West Virginia to subject wages going to persons resident in Pennsylvania and exempt by its law. Injunction is given in the case above supposed, where it lies, as there is no other remedy, as the state where the suit is will not enforce the law of the other state under which exemption is claimed. I think the cases will show this to be the case. Allen v. Buchanan, 97 Ala. 399, 38 Am. St. Rep. 187, 11 So. 777; Mumper v. Wilson, 72 Iowa, 163, 2 Am. St. Rep. 238, and note, 33 N. W. 449; Stewart v. Thomson, 97 Ky. 575, 36 L. R. A. 582, 53 Am. St. Rep. 431, 31 S. W. 133; Keyser v. Rice, 47 Md. 203, 28 Am. Rep. 448; Freeman, Executions, § 209. Injunction can prevent one in a state from carrying on a suit in another state. State v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932, 43 S. E. 163.

Jurisdiction in equity cannot be on the ground of avoiding multiplicity of suits. These demands are in favor of different persons, against different persons, having no connection with each other, not at all upon a common demand, the demand resting on and involving different facts. The mere fact that the garnishment is of one debtor will not give jurisdiction, though there is a legal question common to all,—that is, whether wages earned in Pennsylvania by persons resident there, payable there, exempt by its laws, can be assigned or garnished in West Virginia at all against a foreign corporation. There is no fund common to, or in contest between, divers persons,—no community of interest. The statement of equity jurisdiction to avoid multiplicity of suits in Hogg's Equity Principles, 469, will not justify this case: "Injunction will not lie to prevent multiplicity of suits which would lie between different parties, though the issue in each case must be determined on the same state of facts." "Equity will not stay a creditor in his efforts to secure the money which his debtor owes him, from the fact that there are many other creditors pursuing the same debtor, and that therefore there will be a multiplicity of suits. Attachment creditors, whose debts are distinct, and arise out of separate transactions, who had no common interests, cannot be joined by the debtor in one suit in equity, in order to avoid multiplicity of suits. And generally actions by different persons on distinct and separate grounds do not constitute a multiplicity of suits which a court of equity will enjoin." Beach, Inj. § 539; High, Inj. § 65. The fact that the same question of law arises as to the several debts does not give such jurisdiction. Murphy v. Wilmington, 6 Houst. (Del.) 108, 22 Am. St. Rep. 345; Tribette v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 Miss. 182, 19 L. R. A. 660, 35 Am. St. Rep. 642, 12 So. 32.

Equity jurisdiction cannot stand on the theory that the justices have an illegal arrangement with Smith touching fees. If the justices have such interest as renders them unjust, partial judges, the remedy is not injunction, but prohibition. 16 Enc. Pl. & Prac. p. 1124; Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, 54 W. Va. 210, 46 S. E. 238.

Equity jurisdiction cannot be sustained on the ground that injunctions are, or will be, instituted in Pennsylvania against payment to Smith under a West Virginia recovery against the company. The plea of another suit pending will not be good if the suit is pending in a court of another state. 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 36; Fletcher, Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 258; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 983; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Brune (Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Harris) 96 U. S. 588, 24 L. ed. 737; Davis v. Morriss, 76 Va. 27. It is true that there is an exception to the above rule, namely, that when there is garnishment in one state, and an action in another state for the same debt garnished, the garnishment suit, if prior in date, may be pleaded to abate or suspend the latter suit, because the garnishment fastens the debt, and the garnishee may be compelled to pay the debt twice, if the action is not abated or suspended until the decision of the garnishment suit. 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 37; 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 857. But the two suits must involve the recovery of the same demand. The Pennsylvania suit is not to recover the debt, but is only an injunction prohibiting the company from paying under the garnishment, and, besides is later in date. 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 38. Rather might we say that the West Virginia suit could be pleaded in the Pennsylvania suit. The law adverted to would say that the pendency of the garnishment could be pleaded in an action at law by the creditor to recover the debt garnished from the garnishee; but this state of things is not before us. It is claimed that we issue an injunction.

There being no jurisdiction in equity, we do not discuss the assignability of the demands on which the actions before the justices were brought, whether the claims were assigned, whether there was jurisdiction in the justices to garnish the plaintiff company, whether the assignment was void or any question involved in the merits. Those questions are cognizable in the actions before the justices and on appeal.

Therefore, we affirm the decree simply for want of jurisdiction for the injunction.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

CAMERON MILL & ELEVATOR COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

F. M. ANDERSON, by Next Friend.

(.... TEX.)

1. Contractor's negligence—highway excavation.

Letting work which involves a dangerous excavation in a public highway to an independent contractor will not absolve the principal from liability for injuries to a traveler, caused by the contractor's negligence in failing to maintain proper guards and lights.

2. Evidence—of character of injured person.

Evidence that a boy injured by another's negligence was obedient and economical is admissible upon the question of damages, in an action by him to recover for the injuries.

(June 13, 1904.)

Case Note.—Thompson on Negligence, p. 1290, states that in actions for wrongfully causing death the jury may take into consideration the decedent's habits of industry and sobriety. And Pierce, Railroads, p. 396, states that evidence of his habits of industry, sobriety, and economy has been admitted upon the question of measure of damages. These are the principal authorities relied upon in CAMERON MILL & ELEVATOR CO. v. ANDERSON to show that ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Second Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Tarrant County in a plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. W. Flournoy and George Thompson, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant was not liable for the acts of the independent contractor.

Taylor v. Dunn, 80 Tex. 652, 16 S. W. 332; Fulton County Street R. Co. v. McConnell, 87 Ga. 756, 13 S. E. 828; Independence v. Slack, 134 Mo. 66, 34 S. W. 1094; Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590; Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48; 65 Am. Dec. 304; Chartiers Valley Gas Co. v. Waters, 123 Pa. 220, 16 Atl. 423; Ryan v. Curran, 64 Ind. 345, 31 Am. Rep. 123; Eby v. Lebanon County, 166 Pa. 632, 31 Atl. 332; Fuller v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 15 Fed. 575; Kepperly v. Ramsden, 83 Ill. 354; DuPratt v. Lick, 38 Cal. 691; O'Hale v. Sacramento, 48 Cal. 212; Blumb v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 112, 54 Am. Rep. 87; Clapp v. Kemp, 122 Mass. 481; Carter v. Berlin

Mills Co. 58 N. H. 52, 42 Am. Rep. 572; Tibbetts v. Knox & L. R. Co. 62 Ma. 437.

Recovery for injuries to develop or continue in the future should not be left to the speculation of the jury, induced by the evidence, but should be limited to the results reasonably certain to ensue according to the ordinary course of nature, and the common experience of mankind.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 77, 12 S. W. 810; Strohm v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 96 N. Y. 306; Smith v. Milwaukee Builders' & T. Exchange, 91 Wis. 360, 30 L. R. A. 504, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912, 64 N. W. 1041; Raymond v. Keseberg, 91 Wis. 191, 64 N. W. 861; Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 264, 54 Am. Rep. 312, 3 N. E. 836; Heddles v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 77 Wis. 228, 20 Am. St. Rep. 106, 46 N. W. 115.

In a suit for personal injuries, testimony as to the moral qualities of the injured person is inadmissible, and tends to mislead and confuse the jury; it is speculative and remote, and prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

Lipscomb v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 95 Tex. 5, 55 L. R. A. 869, 93 Am. St. Rep. 804, 64 S. W. 923; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v.

such evidence is admissible in favor of a person suing for personal injuries to himself. The statements of those text-books are based upon a long line of authorities of which those in point hold that, in an action for death, evidence of the habits of the deceased may be considered.—Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Woodward, 4 Colo. 1; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Lundin, 3 Colo. 94; Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 18 Iowa, 280, 87 Am. Dec. 391; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Butler, 57 Pa. 335; Kealer v. Smith, 66 N. C. 154; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Neell, 32 Gratt. 394; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman, 29 Gratt. 431, 26 Am. Rep. 384; Macon & W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 38 Ga. 410; that in such cases the industry of decedent may be considered.—David v. Southwestern R. Co. 41 Ga. 223; Burton v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 82 N. C. 505; that his habits of industry and sobriety may be considered.—Chicago v. Scholten, 75 Ill. 472; and that his habits of sobriety and economy may be considered.—Taylor v. Western P. R. Co. 45 Cal. 323; the court in the latter case stating that it tends to prove that his earnings, if he had lived, would have been more valuable to his family than if he had been a drunken spendthrift.

On the other hand, Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Prince, 2 Heisk. 580, cited by the text writers, holds that in such an action evidence may be considered that decedent was a drunken and worthless man.

The case of Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Conner, 57 Tex. 304, also relied upon by 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CAMERON MILL & ELEVATOR CO. v. ANDERSON, was also an action for damages for injuries resulting in death; but that case was cited, and its rule followed, in the subsequent case of Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Douglas, 73 Tex. 330, 11 S. W. 333, which held that such evidence was admissible in actions by the person injured for his own benefit; the court stating: We can see no reason why they should not be considered in a case like the present to enable the jury to determine the pecuniary loss, if any, sustained by injuries not resulting in death.

In distinction from the above cases admitting evidence of character of the person killed, to show the amount of damages caused by his death, it is held, in Lipscomb v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 95 Tex. 5, 55 L. R. A. 869, 93 Am. St. Rep. 804, 64 S. W. 923, that in such a case evidence that deceased was a member of the church, and did not use profane language, was too remote to be of value in determining the pecuniary loss resulting from his death.

The Pennsylvania case unsuccessfully relied on by defendant to show that, in case of actions by persons injured, such evidence was not admissible in their own favor, does not seem to have been cited upon the point in question in any subsequent case. Although in Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. McEnery, 37 Phila. Leg. Int. 28, the case was cited as authority for the proposition that habits of carelessness on the part of one killed by accident, shortly before his death, might be admitted in an action brought to recover damages for his death.

Hannig, 91 Tex. 347, 43 S. W. 508; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harrington, 62 Tex. 597; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lyde, 57 Tex. 505; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Books, 57 Pa. 339, 98 Am. Dec. 229.

Messrs. W. R. Parker, Capps & Canty, and Theodore Mack for defendant in error.

Gaines, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The following statement of this case is taken from the opinion of the court of civil appeals: "By permission of the city council, appellant caused to be dug in one of the streets of the city of Ft. Worth, adjacent to its elevator plant, a hole some 34 feet long, 28 feet wide, and 12 or 14 feet deep. The excavation was made for the purpose of putting in some underground storage tanks for fuel oil. Into this pit appellee, a boy of thirteen years, fell, and was seriously injured. The accident occurred about 9 o'clock at night, at a time when none of the workmen engaged in digging the pit were in or about the place. There were no lights or barricades or signals about it, and the street was dark. Appellee, who had no previous notice of the excavation, had either just mounted, or was in the act of mounting, his bicycle, to proceed up the street, when he was precipitated into the pit and injured as aforesaid. The actual work of making the excavation was being done by one McFadden under a contract with appellant by the terms of which he had exclusive control of the work. Appellant did not know that the pit was not guarded or protected at night, and had never given the contractor any instructions upon that point, but understood that the contractor was competent and experienced, and took it for granted that he would do what was necessary to make the work safe. The appellee had a judgment for $10,500, from which this appeal is prosecuted." [78 S. W. 8.]

The question which goes to the foundation of the action is, Was the defendant company liable, under the circumstances, for the acts and omissions of McFadden, whom it had employed to do the work under an independent contract? We were of the opinion when we granted the writ of error that the company was liable for McFadden's negligence, and that the court of civil appeals did not err in so holding. We are still of that opinion. The question is ably discussed in the opinion of Mr. Justice Speer, who spoke for the court in the case, and the conclusion is amply supported by the numerous authorities cited by him. It would therefore be a profitless task to enter upon any extended discussion of the question. As we understand, the general rule is that one who is having a piece of work done by an independent contractor is not liable for the negligence of the latter, but to this rule there is a well-marked exception. So far as we have seen, the limitation of the rule has been by no means better expressed than by Judge Dillon. He says: "The general rule is stated in the preceding section, but it is important to bear in mind that it does not apply when the contract directly requires the performance of a work intrinsically dangerous however skilfully performed. In such a case the party authorizing the work is justly regarded as the author of the mischief resulting from it, whether he does the work himself or lets it out by contract." 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. ¶ 1029. In our opinion, the present case falls strictly within the exception.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

During the course of the trial, the court over the objection of the defendant, permitted the introduction of testimony on behalf of the plaintiff to the effect that he was an industrious boy, was obedient to his mother, did not use tobacco or intoxicating liquors, and was industrious and economical in his habits. It was for the admission of the testimony as to his obedience to his mother and his habit of economy that we granted the writ of error. But we now think we erred in so doing. In the case of Houster & T. C. R. Co. v. Cowser, 57 Tex. 293, which was a suit to recover damages for injuries resulting in death, the court states the rule in regard to the proper evidence to be introduced to show the amount of damages as follows: "The damages being for the pecuniary loss only, the party claiming them should then, as a general rule, at least be required to prove such facts and circumstances as will enable the jury to return a verdict, based upon this evidence, which would approximate reasonable certainty, and the court to pass advisedly, in reviewing this evidence, upon motion for a new trial. This testimony would include the circumstances of the deceased; his occupation, age, health, habits of industry, sobriety, and economy; his skill and capacity for business; the amount of his property; his annual earnings; and the probable duration of life;" citing Pierce, Railroads, 396; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1290. If this be a correct rule as applied to such a case, for a stronger reason it should also be applicable to the ordinary action for personal injuries, when permanent in their nature; for, in cases of the former class, the beneficiaries are not entitled to recover all that the deceased might have earned, had he lived, but only so much thereof as they would probably have received, whereas, in cases of the latter class, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for all that he has probably been deprived of earning by the infliction of the injury. If the plaintiff be afflicted in mind or body, or if he be indolent, drunken, and thriftless, the defendant ought to be permitted to prove the fact, so as to show that his earning capacity is not that of a person of ordinary endowments, mental or physical, and of ordinary habits. So, if he be strong of mind and body, and sober, industrious, and economical in the use of his money, these facts throw light upon his earning capacity, and he ought to be allowed to establish them by evidence. It may be true that the proof of like facts in case of a boy thirteen years of age may not be so potent as in case of a man, but that should affect the weight, and not the character, of the evidence. It is a difference of degree, and not of kind. We may be unwilling to follow the poet who said, "The child is father to the man," yet no one would venture to assert that the characteristics developed by a boy thirteen years old are not some evidence of what his character as a man will probably be.

As to proof of habits of economy, it seems to us they tend in some degree to show additional earning capacity. As a rule, a careful business man would employ a man of economical habits, rather than a spendthrift. Besides, an economical man may add to the direct earnings from his labor by a profitable use of his savings. Why should not this be considered in estimating his damage in a case of this character? The fact that the plaintiff was obedient to his mother is a shade more remote, but it seems to us that the testimony is not wholly without value as tending to throw some light upon his probable earning capacity after he should arrive at manhood. Let us suppose that this boy had applied for employment, and brought testimonials showing that he was an industrious, obedient, and economical boy. Can it be said that either of these elements of character would not have had some weight with the person to whom application was made, in determining the question whether he should be given the place? If not, then it follows that each bears upon the question of his earning capacity. Therefore why should not a jury be permitted to look to these facts in determining what the future earning capacity of an injured boy would probably have been, had the injury not been inflicted? It is the only light that can be thrown upon the question.

We have held that it was improper, in a death case, to permit the plaintiff to introduce evidence to prove that the deceased was a member of a church, and did not use profane language. Lipscomb v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 95 Tex. 5, 55 L. R. A. 869, 93 Am. St. Rep. 804, 64 S. W. 923. And also, in a personal injury case, it was held (following other cases in our court) that it was error to admit testimony on behalf of the plaintiff that he was a married man, and that his wife had no means of support except her own labor. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hannig, 91 Tex. 347, 43 S. W. 508. We think the questions there decided are different from that presented in the case before us.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In support of their assignments upon the introduction of the evidence in question, counsel for the plaintiff in error cite the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Books, 57 Pa. 339, 98 Am. Dec. 229, and quote as follows from the opinion in that case: "It is difficult, also, to see what bearing the plaintiff's habits, industry, and economy could legitimately have on the damages. . . . In an action by the injured party himself, they were irrelevant, and tended only to excite feelings of commiseration and sympathy in the breasts of the jurors." That habits of industry may be proved is the established rule in this court, and is a rule very generally recognized. So that in one respect, at least, the proposition stated in the opinion is too broad. It seems to us that the question was not very carefully considered by the able court who made that ruling. It is not without significance that the able counsel, who have expended great industry and research in briefing this case, have cited no other case which sustains their position.

The other points in the case were, in our opinion, properly disposed of by the court of civil appeals, and require no discussion by us.

We are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is accordingly so ordered.

Petition for rehearing denied.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

W. B. WINFREE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

M. B. JONES.

(.... Va.)

1. Bankruptcy—unliquidated liability.

A discharge in bankruptcy does not release an unliquidated liability for damages for abandoning a leased house without locking the doors, so that it was entered and injured by a stranger.

2. Proximate cause—of loss by fire.

Abandoning a leased house without locking the doors is not the proximate cause of its destruction by fire two or three weeks later by a trespasser,—at least where the owner is notified of the condition of affairs, and takes no steps to protect his property.

(June 15, 1905.)

ERROR to the Corporation Court of Newport News to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the destruction of plaintiff's property, which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Friend, for plaintiff in error:

The declaration does not allege a wilful and malicious injury. In fact no such allegation is justified, unless the injury was wilful and malicious, and the plea of discharge in bankruptcy was a complete bar to it.

Bailey, Master's Liability for Injuries to Servant, 415; Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128, 44 Am. Rep. 152.

The plea of discharge in bankruptcy was a bar to any other than a malicious and wilful act.

Bankruptcy Act 1898, § 17, ¶¶ 2, 4; Morse & Rogers v. Kaufman, 100 Va. 218, 40 S. E. 916.

At common law, a tenant, in the absence of a covenant or agreement, is not liable for the accidental and incendiary burning of the rented premises; and no such covenant or agreement was pretended to have been made by the defendant.

Maggott v. Hansbarger, 8 Leigh, 532; Taylor, Land. & T. § 688; 2 Rob. New Pr.

631; 2 Minor, Inst. 4th and last ed. 113, 197, 617, 618.

Neither the declaration nor the proceedings tend to show that the negligence of Winfree was the proximate cause of the burning of the house.

Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Sparrow, 8 Va. 641, 37 S. E. 302.

Messrs. Charles C. Berkeley and C. O. Mitchell, for defendant in error:

As to the proximate cause of the injury and resulting damage, each case must rest on its own merits, to a great extent, and it is a question for the jury.

Moses v. Old Dominion Iron & Nail Works Co. 75 Va. 103; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 3d ed. pp. 67, 68.

The jury have determined, from all the evidence, that Winfree's conduct in failing properly to care for the premises was negligent and unreasonable, and that, by reason of such negligence and lack of reasonable care of the premises, the house was destroyed. This is conclusive.

In an action on the case the reversioner, or remainder-man in fee, for life or for years, may recover damages, against either the tenant or a stranger, for an injury to the reversion.

Taylor, Land. & T. § 687; Moses v. Old Dominion Iron & Nail Works Co. 75 Va. 95; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 247.

The tenant must use reasonable care in the use of the premises.

Consolidated Coal Co. v. Savitz, 57 Ill. App. 659; Carlin v. Ritter, 68 Md. 473; 6 Am. St. Rep. 467, 13 Atl. 370, 16 Atl. 301; Chalmers v. Smith, 152 Mass. 561, 11 L. R. A. 769, 26 N. E. 95; Warder v. Henry, 117

Case Note.—The principal authority upon which WINFREE v. JONES rests is Re Hirschman, 104 Fed. 69. That case has been cited with approval in McDonald v. Brown, 23 R. I. 552, 58 L. R. A. 768, 91 Am. St. Rep. 659, 51 Atl. 213, holding that liability for publication of a libel is not released by bankruptcy proceedings; in Re Bemis, 104 Fed. 672, refusing to discharge because of concealment of property; in Re Yates, 114 Fed. 365, to the effect that the object of subdivision b of the statutes was simply to provide that only unliquidated claims which fall within the scope of subdivision a are to be brought into the proceedings; also in Re Marcus, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 19, and Re Yates, 8 Am. Bankr. Rep. 71, which apply the same rule; and in Crawford v. Burke, 195 U. S. 176, 49 L. ed. 147, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 9, holding that an unliquidated claim of a principal against his broker for fraudulently selling stocks carried on margin is not within the exception of § 17 of the act of 1898. Re Hirschman is also cited in Brandenburg on Bankruptcy, § 1005, to the effect that a creditor who has 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

been permitted to rescind a sale on account of fraud on the part of the bankrupt in the purchase, and has secured a return of the goods not sold, may have his claim for the proceeds of the goods sold liquidated and proved the same as a debt, and the author cites, in addition, the case of Re Heinsfurter, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 113; Loveland on Law and Proceedings in Bankruptcy, § 118, also relies on the Hirschman Case and states that a claim arising ex delicto, and also of such a character as to constitute a claim on the theory of a quasi contract, is provable under § 63, cl. 4, and, for this point, also cites Re Filer, 125 Fed. 262; Re Hildebrandt, 10 Am. Bankr. Rep. 184; Collier on Bankruptcy, 4th ed. p. 443; also relying on the Hirschman Case, states that it would seem that liabilities for torts per se, and not merely those provable on the theory of a quasi contract, may now be liquidated and proved and allowed. The case has also been approved by other decisions, which have no bearing upon the point in controversy in WINFREE v. JONES.

a. 530, 23 S. W. 776; Powell v. Dayton, 4 G. R. Co. 16 Or. 33, 8 Am. St. Rep. 257, 1 Pac. 863; Southern Oil Works v. Bickard, 14 Lea, 651.

And is liable for the negligent destruction of the buildings.

Moses v. Old Dominion Iron & Nail Works, 75 Va. 95; Duer v. Allen, 96 Iowa, 1, 64 N. W. 682; Carter v. George, 30 Kan. 1, 1 Pac. 58; Machen v. Hooper, 73 Md. 12, 21 Atl. 67; Wilcox v. Cate, 65 Vt. 478, 1 Atl. 1105; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 17: 2 Minor, Inst. pp. 619 et seq.; Tiedeman, Real Prop. 2d ed. §§ 78, 79.

The 2d subdivision of § 63 of the bankruptcy act does not add to the debts provable under subdivision a, but merely provides for the liquidation of such as are unliquidated.

Brandenburg, Bankr. p. 598, ¶ 26; Re Hirschman, 104 Fed. 69; Re Yates, 114 Fed. 65; Re Marcus, 104 Fed. 331.

Subdivision 2 does not except from the operation of a discharge claims created by fraud, or by obtaining property by false statements, or by wilful or malicious injury to the person or property of another.

Morse & Rogers v. Kaufman, 100 Va. 218, 10 S. E. 910; Re Hirschman, 104 Fed. 69.

Jones could not have waived the tort and sued ex contractu. There was no contract of renting and covenant thereunder upon which he could base an action ex contractu. 2 Minor, Inst. p. 634.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

M. B. Jones, the plaintiff in the court below, brought this action to recover damages of the defendant, W. B. Winfree, for having, as alleged, negligently permitted a certain house to be burned while it was in his possession as tenant to the plaintiff, by abandoning it and leaving it unlocked, so that it was wrongfully entered, burned, and destroyed. There was a verdict of $300 for the plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered by the lower court, and thereupon this writ of error was awarded.

The first error assigned is the action of the lower court in rejecting a plea of bankruptcy tendered by the defendant. The discharge, which was obtained October 23, 1903, on its face releases the defendant from liability for all claims which are made provable by the acts of Congress relating to bankruptcy. The question presented, therefore, is whether the claim here asserted was provable under the acts of Congress relating to bankruptcy. It is to be observed that the claim is for unliquidated damages, and arises ex delicto. The act of Congress (Act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 544, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3418) has been interpreted by the Supreme Court (11 U. S. 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000).

construed, with respect to such claims, by the Federal courts, adversely to the right to prove them. Beers v. Hanlin, 99 Fed. 695; Re Hirschman, 104 Fed. 69.

In the case last cited, after a well-considered discussion of the entire subject, pointing out the several classes of claims that are provable under the act of Congress, the court says: "The care used to particularize various provable debts in subsection a [§ 63, 30 Stat. at L. 562, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3447] negatives the extended construction of subsection b urged by petitioners. If the latter subsection authorizes the liquidation and subsequent proof of damages ex delicto, the whole subject could have been covered in very general language. Assuming petitioners' construction of § 63, subsec. b, it would embrace claims arising from any tort. There is no language in the section which can be held to include some, and not all, torts. Yet the general policy of bankrupt acts has been not to include in provable debts claims for damages for personal wrongs. It is hardly possible, if Congress had intended such a departure from the history of bankrupt legislation, that it should not have expressed the intent unmistakably." After showing the necessity for the petitioners bringing themselves under § 63, subsec. b, in order to prove their claims, the court says: "Section 63, subsec. a, does not authorize the proof of any claim arising ex delicto, unless a recovery may be had quasi ex contractu."

This case is conclusive of the question at bar. The plaintiff could not have waived the tort and sued ex contractu. His claim rested entirely in tort. There was no contract of renting with covenant thereunder upon which he could have based an action ex contractu.

In the view we take of the merits of this case, the only remaining assignment of error necessary to be considered is that which relates to the action of the court in refusing to set aside the verdict of the jury as contrary to the law and the evidence.

It appears from the record that early in July, 1901, the plaintiff rented the house in question, situated in a negro community known as "Klondike," to the defendant for one year from July 10, 1901; that the defendant remained in the house until the 8th or 9th of December, 1901, when he moved out, leaving the door of the upstairs, which opened on a porch connected by steps with the street below, unlocked and insecure; that, when the defendant moved out, the plaintiff, on the 10th of December, 1901, sued out an attachment against him, and recovered, December 26, 1901, judgment for $280 and costs, covering the rent to accrue for the whole year up to July 10, 1902, which judgment was subsequently paid by the defendant; that on the 30th or 31st of December, 1901, about midnight, the house was burned and totally destroyed, the fire breaking out in the rear part of the second floor of the building, the entrance to which was through the door opening on the upper porch, which had been left unlocked. It was agreed that two negroes would testify that several times prior to the fire a negro known as "Big Jim" was seen passing in and out of the upstairs of the house, and loafing about a barroom on the opposite side of the street during the afternoon of the day preceding the fire; that one witness would testify that a large man—whether white or black, not known—was seen running down the steps from the upstairs of the house just after the fire appeared in the part of the building where the door and windows entered. It is proper to say that that record furnishes no pretense or suggestion that the defendant had anything to do with the burning of the building, other than the alleged negligence of leaving the door unlocked. The record shows that the plaintiff knew that the defendant had abandoned the house. Indeed, as already seen, he took steps the next day to recover the rent for the entire year. So that the case presented by the plaintiff is that it was negligent in the defendant to leave the upstairs door of the house unlocked when he abandoned it on the 8th or 9th of December, 1901, thereby making it possible for anyone to enter the house and set it on fire, and that for such negligence the defendant must respond in damages for the loss of the house by fire on the 30th or 31st of December, 1901.

In considering the liability of the defendant under the circumstances mentioned, the question arises upon the threshold of that inquiry, Was the act of the defendant in leaving the door of the house unlocked on the 9th of December the proximate cause of the fire which destroyed the house on the 30th of that month?

"The rule of law excluding a recovery for remote consequences has been attributed by some to the 'difficulty of unraveling a combination of causes, and of tracing each result, as a matter of fact, to its true, real, and efficient cause.' It has also been said that the law considers only proximate causes, for the reason that remote or speculative considerations would not afford a sufficient degree of certainty for judicial action. But in addition to this, considerations of fairness and justice require that no one should be held liable for the consequences of an act innocent in itself, and conceived without mischievous intent, which, by the concurrence of some event that could not by any possibility have been foreseen, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) has produced hurtful consequences to another." Watson, Damages for Personal Injuries, § 35.

The same author says that the injury must have been the proximate and natural consequence of such act, and that in this connection the term "proximate" excludes the notion of the intervention of any other culpable and efficient agency between the defendant's dereliction and the loss. Section 33 of the same work is as follows: "A natural consequence is one which has followed from the original act complained of, in the usual, ordinary, and experienced course of events, a result, therefore, which might reasonably have been anticipated or expected. Natural consequences, however, do not necessarily include all such as, upon a calculation of chances, would be found possible of occurrence, or such as extreme prudence might anticipate, but only those which ensue from the original act, without any such extraordinary coincidence or conjunction of circumstances as that the usual course of nature should seem to have been departed from."

These principles have been fully sustained and applied by this court. Connell v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 93 Va. 57, 32 L. R. A. 792, 57 Am. St. Rep. 786, 24 S. E. 467; Fowlkes v. Southern R. Co. 96 Va. 742, 3 S. E. 464; Watts v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. 100 Va. 45, 40 S. E. 107; Standard Oil Co. v. Wakefield, 102 Va. 824, 66 L. R. A. 792, 47 S. E. 830.

In Connell v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 93 Va. 57, 32 L. R. A. 792, 57 Am. St. Rep. 786, 24 S. E. 467, it is said (quoting from an opinion of Justice Miller of the supreme court) that, "to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances."

And in the case of Fowlkes v. Southern R. Co. 96 Va. 742, 32 S. E. 464, where the subject is quite fully considered, this court says: "It is not only requisite that damage actual or inferential, should be suffered, but this damage must be the legitimate sequence of the thing amiss. The maxim of the law here applicable is that in law the immediate, and not the remote, cause of any event is regarded. . . . In other words, the law always refers the injury to the proximate, not to the remote, cause. . . . If an injury has resulted in consequence of a certain wrongful act or omission, but only through or by means of some intervening cause, from which last cause the injury followed as a direct and immediate conse-nence, the law will refer the damage to the most proximate cause, and refuse to trace it to that which was more remote. . . . On the proximate cause we may usually trace the consequences with some degree of assurance, but beyond that we enter a field of conjecture, where the uncertainty renders any attempt at exact conclusions futile.

. . . If the wrong and the resulting damages are not known by common experience to be naturally and usually in sequence, and the damage does not, according to the ordinary course of events, follow from the wrong, then the wrong and the damage are not sufficiently conjoined or concatenated as cause and effect to support an action."

The case at bar comes clearly within the influence of the principles to which we have adverted, and, when they are applied to the facts here shown, it would seem to be manifest that the alleged negligence and the damage complained of are not sufficiently conjoined to support the plaintiff's action. To the credit of the civilization in which we live, it cannot be maintained that the natural and expected result of leaving the upstairs door of an empty house unlocked is that someone who has no legal right there will enter the house and burn it, even though the house be located in a negro community. The house was entered and burned by someone unknown to the plaintiff three weeks after it was vacated,—a result which cannot be said to have followed the act of alleged negligence, in the usual, ordinary, and experienced course of events. On the contrary, such a result could not reasonably have been anticipated or expected.

This act was clearly the culpable and efficient intervening and proximate cause of the damage, and such damage cannot be said to be the legitimate sequence of the alleged negligence of the defendant. The injury complained of was the direct and immediate consequence of the act of the unknown party in setting fire to the house, and the damage cannot, under the law, be traced to the remote negligence of leaving the door unlocked. Considerations of fairness and justice required that no one should be held liable for the consequences of an act innocent in itself, and committed without malicious intent, which, by the concurrence of some event that could not reasonably have been anticipated, has produced hurtful consequences to another.

It is often difficult to determine what damages should be considered as flowing, in a natural and continuous sequence, from an act of negligence, and where there is doubt it is a question for the jury. In the case at bar, however, the question is so entirely free from doubt that the court can, as a matter of law, declare that the negligence alleged was not the proximate cause of the injury, reparation for which is here sought in damages. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the instructions and the questions discussed in connection therewith, for under no instructions would a recovery by the plaintiff be justified under the facts of this case.

For these reasons, the judgment complained of must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for further proceedings not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

JOHN W. KENNEY, Appt.,

v.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

(.... Md.)

Enticement—hiring boy without father's consent.

Hiring, at his own request, without notice of the father's objection, a minor who has been hired out by the father to work for another, for wages which the father is to receive, will not support an action for enticing the minor out of the father's service.

(June 20, 1905.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Washington County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongfully enticing plaintiff's son out of his service. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. S. Cochran, for appellant:

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company knew that the boy was a minor, and that fact put the company upon inquiry as to all the facts concerning his relationship to his father.

Wade, Notice, § 11.

Whatever induces the child to leave the Case Note.—The court, in holding, in the above case, that there must be some affirmative act of solicitation on the part of the defendant in order to render him liable, cited a group of cases which are generally relied upon by text-books and the courts as representing the law on the question. Of these cases, the Butterfield, Caughey, and Stuart Cases are all cited by Wood on Master and Servant, p. 24, where that author lays down the rule that, in order to maintain an action for enticing away, the burden is upon the father to show that the child was really induced to leave the service or control at the request of the de-parent, or, after leaving, to remain away from him, may, in law, constitute enticement.

Hare v. Dean, 90 Me. 308, 38 Atl. 228.

The very act of defendant in employing the boy was, under the circumstances, the exertion of an improper influence over him, by which he was induced to quit his father's work, and, if the father was injured by this course of conduct an action will lie.

Loomis v. Deets (Md.) 30 Atl. 613; Ferguson v. Tucker, 2 Harr. & G. 190; Blake v. Lanyon, 6 T. R. 221.

Mr. A. J. Long also for appellant.

Messrs. John G. Wilson and Pearre & Lewis, for appellee:

In order to support this suit, the plaintiff must prove: (1) Actual subsisting state of service by the son to the father to the knowledge of defendant; (2) actual solicitation of the minor, by the defendant, to leave that service; (3) wrongful intent, in said solicitation, to deprive the father of parental control, and of the son's services.

Caughy v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 244; Ferguson v. Tucker, 2 Harr. & G. 182; Loomis v. Deets (Md.) 30 Atl. 613; Butterfield v. Ashley, 6 Cush, 249, 2 Gray, 254; Nash v. Douglass, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 187; Stuart v.

defendant; and that, if he left voluntarily or of his own accord, the action will not lie. An examination of these cases, together with other cases which have cited them, shows that:

In Butterfield v. Ashley, 6 Cush. 249, the action, like that in KENNEY v. BALTIMORE & O. R. Co., was one brought by the father for enticing away his son from service, and the court there held that defendant was not liable, unless he knew, at the time of enticing or employing the son, that he was the servant of the plaintiff, or he afterward had notice thereof, and continued to employ him after such notice. In this case the son left his father's service in another state without his father's consent, and offered his services to the defendant, who, knowing him to be a minor, at first refused to employ him, and did employ him only at his urgent solicitation, and upon his representation that he had his father's consent. The court there said that the gist of the action is, "that the defendant has enticed away a man who stood in the relation of servant to the plaintiff;" and cited Fawcett v. Beavres, 2 Lev. 63; Blake v. Lanyon, 6 T. R. 221; Sherwood v. Hall, 3 Sumn. 127, Fed. Cas. No. 12,777; Ferguson v. Tucker, 2 Harr. & G. 182; Conant v. Raymond, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 243; Fores v. Wilson, Peake, N. P. Cas. 55; Hart v. Aldrige, 1 Cowp. 54, 56. The court, in defining the word "entice," said: "So far as we know, the word 'entice' has no technical meaning. But, in a declaration like that in this case, it must mean something quite different from a reluctant employment of another's servant, under a Simpson, 1 Wend. 378; Sargent v. Matheson, 38 N. H. 57.

Mere employment, by a railroad company of a minor without the consent of his parents, gives them no right of action against the company.

Arnold v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 100 Mo. App. 470, 74 S. W. 5.

Mr. J. Clarence Lane also for appellee.

Schmucker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant sued the appellee in the circuit court for Allegany county for damages for an alleged enticement out of his services of his minor son, George R. Kenney. The declaration contained two counts, of which the first was for fraudulently and maliciously enticing the son away from the service of the father, and the second was for so enticing the son, who was inexperienced in working on machinery, and employing him, "in the face of the objection of the father, as a helper in repairing engines and machinery in a roundhouse or machine shop, where he was crushed between an engine and the roundhouse door jamb, and killed whereby the plaintiff lost his son and the services thereof, as well as his heir." The belief that the master has consented to that employment." The Butterfield Case has been cited to the proposition that the defendant must have had knowledge that the person employed or harbored was a servant of the plaintiff, in Cutting v. Seabury, 1 Sprague, 522, Fed. Cas. No. 3,521, where it was held that a father could not maintain an action for the loss of the services of his son, who went to a port and shipped, as of full age, for a whaling voyage, where the person who shipped him did not know that he was a minor. It was also cited in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Redeker, 67 Tex. 190, 60 Am. Rep. 20, 2 S. W. 527, where it was also held that the defendant is not liable, unless he knew of the minority of the servant. It was also cited in Hare v. Dean, 90 Me. 308, 38 Atl. 227, where the court, in overruling a demurrer to the declaration, held that it is immaterial that, at the time of the alleged wrongful act of the defendant, the child was not actually a member of the parents' household, provided they had a right to recall her to their custody and service. The question as to the defendant's knowledge was not involved.

In Caughy v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 244, it was held that the defendant was not liable for enticing the plaintiff's son from service where it appeared that the son had deserted his father's home and service several days before seeing or communicating with the defendant, so that the desertion was the act of the son, and was not induced or solicited by the defendant. Folger, J., writing the opinion, cited in support of the opinion, Butterfield v. Ashley, 6 Cush. 249, and defendant pleaded non cul. to the first count, and demurred to the second, and the court sustained the demurrer. The case was then moved, on the affidavit of the defendant, to be circuit court for Washington county, where the issue made upon the first count of the declaration was tried before a jury. At the trial of the case the defendant, at the close of the plaintiff's testimony, presented no prayers, asking the court to instruct the jury that the plaintiff had offered no legally sufficient evidence to entitle him to recover in the case, and that their verdict must be for the defendant. The court granted the prayers, and, the verdict and judgment being for the defendant, the plaintiff appealed. There is but one exception in the record, and that is to the granting of these prayers.

The action of the lower court in granting the defendant's prayers was clearly correct, as the record furnishes no evidence of the practice of any solicitation, persuasion, or enticement by the defendant or its agents upon the plaintiff's son. It appears from the record that the son had, several years prior to the time of the alleged enticement, been in the defendant's employment with the consent of the father, who had himself procured the situation for the son. The son left his first situation with the defendant, and went along with his father into the employment of the West Virginia Central Railroad Company, where they were engaged in repairing railway tracks in the state of West Virginia. The father subsequently gave up the railway service and went to farming for an occupation, leaving the son in the employ of the West Virginia Central Railroad Company, where he continued to perform the same kind of labor for about a year longer. During this time the son gave the checks which he received in payment for his work to his father, who supported him. Some time prior to September 3, 1902, the son, together with a friend who was working with him, abandoned the work on the railroad track in West Virginia, and went to the home of his brother, who resided in Cumberland, Maryland. Both the son and his friend, about September 3, 1902, made application to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at Cumberland for work, and were employed by that company and put to work repairing engines and machinery in the roundhouse, where they continued to labor together until the appellant's son was fatally injured on the 25th of September, 1902. The friend, who was working with the appellant's son, was a relative of the brother's wife, and they boarded together at the brother's house in Cumberland. The Blake v. Lanyon, 6 T. R. 221. The Caughey Case was cited to the proposition that, to entitle the plaintiff to recover, the moving cause of the desertion must have been the inducement held out by the defendant, in Reynolds v. Everett, 67 Hun, 302, 22 N. Y. Supp. 306, but that question was not directly passed upon, as the only question before the court was whether the remedy of the employer was by injunction or action for damages; the court holding that an action at law for damages was the proper remedy.

In Stuart v. Simpson, 1 Wend. 376, which was an action for enticing and harboring apprentices, it was held that the defendant was not liable, unless he knew the boys to be the plaintiff's apprentices, and he actually solicited their services. There was no evidence in the case that the defendant knew that the boys were apprentices of the plaintiff. The plaintiff was a cabinet maker, and the boys were employed by the defendant as supernumeraries at his theater. The court held that the youthful appearance of the boys, and the fact that mahogany dust was plainly visible on their clothing at the time they went to the dressing room of the defendant, were not sufficient to send the case to the jury on the question of knowledge.

In Nash v. Douglass, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 187, which was an action against the Children's Aid Society, by the parents of a boy who had deceived the society by giving a false name and representing that he was an orphan, and who had been sent to a home in the west by the society, the court held that the society had not been guilty of an unlawful enticing or solicitation, and was not liable.

In Arnold v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 100 Mo. App. 470, 74 S. W. 5, it was held that the defendant did not solicit her son to leave his mother's service, and was not liable, where, from the facts, it appeared that the son, with his mother's consent, had started for a neighboring town to look for work, but, instead of going there, met an acquaintance, who told him of a man getting up a gang of men to go away to work, and the son joined the gang and went with them.

In Loomis v. Deets (Md.) 30 Atl. 612, which was an action by the father for depriving him of the services of his son, from the facts of the case it appeared that the father had hired the son to the defendant; that on one occasion, when he went to the defendant to get some money due the son, he was told that he paid the money to the son, whereupon the father commanded the boy to go home with him, and the latter refused. The defendant refused to allow the plaintiff to go into the house to get the boy's money and clothes, and the boy subsequently disappeared. The boy testified that the defendant never advised him to go away, or as to how he should act with regard to his father. It was held that the defendant was not guilty of harboring, or of intending to deprive the father of the services of, his son.

appellant's son, when applying for a place in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, as a condition of his employment, signed a formal written application for membership in the relief association of that company, such as is usually signed by minors, containing a clause of assent, to be signed by his father. He was given the application to procure his father's signature to the assent, and in the meantime was permitted to go to work. He sent the application to his father, who declined to sign it, and sent it back to him; but that fact was not disclosed to the railroad company, nor does it appear that the appellant ever declared or intimated to that company that he had any objection to the employment by it of his son, or even informed it that his son was, or had been, employed on his behalf by the West Virginia Railroad Company. The record thus completely fails to show any of the essential elements of an actionable enticement by the appellee of the appellant's son; for it does not appear that at the time of his employment there was an actual subsisting state of service by him to his father of which the appellee had knowledge, or that the appellee or its agents persuaded, procured, or enticed him to leave any service at all. To maintain this action, the evidence must show an actual service of the parent by the minor child, and some active or affirmative effort by the defendant to detract the child from that service. It is not enough to show that the child has left the father's service without the father's consent and entered into the employment of the defendant. There must be some affirmative solicitation by act or conduct by the latter, in order to make him liable in an action like the present one. After the child has voluntarily left the father's service, and is out of it, he cannot be induced from it. Butterfield v. Ashley, 6 Cush. 249; Stuart v. Simpson, 1 Wend. 379; Caughy v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 249, 250; Loomis v. Deets (Md.) 30 Atl. 613; Nash v. Douglass, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 190; Arnold v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 100 Mo. App. 470, 74 S. W. 5.

No notice was taken on the briefs, or in the argument in this court, of the action of the circuit court for Allegany county upon the demurrer to the second count of the declaration, and we therefore deem it unnecessary to notice that action, further than to say that we find no error in the court's ruling upon that pleading. No error appearing in the rulings of the court below, the judgment will be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

E. J. NASH, Respt.,

v.

LEE CLARK et al., Appts.

(27 Utah, 158)

Eminent domain—for irrigation.

The reclamation of land by irrigation is such a public purpose that the legislature may rightfully authorize the condemnation of rights of way over private property, or through the ditches of private individuals, to convey water for that purpose onto land belonging to a private individual.

(Baskin, Ch. J., dissents.)

(January 23, 1904.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Utah County in plaintiff's favor in a proceeding to condemn a right of way for the carriage of water. Affirmed.

Statement by McCarty, J.:

Plaintiff brought this action to condemn a right of way in a ditch owned by the defendants. The provisions of the statute upon which he bases his right of action, so far as material to this case, are as follows: Rev. Stat. 1898, § 3588, in part provides: "Subject to the provisions of this chapter, the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of the following public uses: . . . (5) Reservoirs, dams, water gates, canals, ditches, flumes, tunnels, aqueducts, and pipes for supplying persons, mines, mills, smelters, or other works for the reduction of ores, with water for domestic or other uses, or for irrigating purposes, or for draining and reclaiming lands, or for floating logs and lumber on streams not navigable. (6) Roads, railroads, tram-

Case Note.—NASH v. CLARK pushes the doctrine of the right to exercise the power of eminent domain for the benefit of a private individual further than it has ever before been pushed for the purpose of draining or irrigating private property. The court upholds a statute providing that any person shall have a right of way across any private lands for the construction of necessary ditches for conveying water for irrigation or drainage upon payment of just compensation therefor. The decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, 198 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 1985, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676. In that court the defendant contended that no individual had the right to condemn land for the purpose of conveying water in ditches across his neighbor's land for the purpose of irrigating his land alone. The court said, in some states, probably in most of them, the proposition contended for would be sound. But the ways, tunnels, ditches, flumes, pipes, and dumping places to facilitate the milling, smelting, or other reduction of ores, or the working of mines; outlets, natural or otherwise, for the deposit or conduct of tailings, refuse, or water from mills, smelters, or other works for the reduction of ores, or from mines; milldams: . . . also an occupancy in common by the owners or possessors of different mines, mills, smelters, or other places for the reduction of ores, of any place for the flow, deposit, or conduct of tailings or refuse matter. . . .

(10) Canals, reservoirs, dams, ditches, flumes, aqueducts, and pipes for supplying and storing water for the operation of machinery for the purpose of generating and transmitting electricity for power, light, or court says: "Where the use is asserted to be public, and the right of the individual to condemn land for the purpose of exercising such use is founded upon, or is the result of, some peculiar condition of the soil or climate, or other peculiarity of the state where the right of condemnation is asserted under a state statute, we are always, where it can fairly be done, strongly inclined to hold with the state courts when they uphold a state statute providing for such condemnation." Further on in the opinion the court says: "We do not desire to be understood by this decision as approving of the broad proposition that private property may be taken in all cases where the taking may promote the public interest and tend to develop the natural resources of the state;" and then suggests that other landowners might share in the use of the water by taking the benefit of the proceeding which the plaintiff had undertaken; and that, to hold the use a public one, it was not necessary that all should join in the proceeding at one time. This latter suggestion would appear to place a forced interpretation on the statute for the purpose of saving it, which would bring it within sound doctrine, but was entirely unnecessary in view of the position that the court would follow the interpretation as to what is a public use which has been placed by the state court upon its own Constitution and statutes. In view of that attitude by the Supreme Court of the United States, the affirmation of the decision adds little weight to its authority.

Farnham on Waters, § 179, states that the government cannot authorize the construction of a drainage ditch under the power of eminent domain over the land of a private citizen for the benefit of another citizen; nor can it authorize such right of way when it furthers private interests only. The decisions are unanimous to this effect, as appears from the cases cited in that section, and in the note to Re Tuthill, 49 L. R. A. 781.

Farnham on Waters, p. 1964 says, with respect to the condemnation of a right of way for an irrigation ditch, that the power heat." Section 1277, Rev. Stat. 1898, is as follows: "Any person or corporation shall have the right of way across and upon public, private, and corporate lands, or other right of way, for the construction, maintenance, repair, and use of all necessary reservoirs, dams, water gates, canals, ditches, flumes, tunnels, or other means of securing, storing and conveying water for irrigation, or for any necessary public use, or for drainage, upon payment of just compensation therefor; but such right of way shall in all cases be exercised in a manner not to unnecessarily impair the practical use of any other right of way, highway, or public or private road, nor to unnecessarily injure any public or private property. Such right may be acquired in the manner provided by law of eminent domain may be exercised for the irrigation of a single farm if the irrigation of the particular farm is but a part of an entire scheme which will eventually result in the reclamation of all the arid land which can be reclaimed from the source from which the water is taken. "In order to come within this principle, however, the statutory machinery must not be limited to individual landowners, or deal with single farms, but a scheme must be provided which will eventually include all the land which is to be reclaimed from the one source, and then the individuals may be permitted to make use of the machinery as their needs arise."

It will be noticed that the Utah statute does not come within this principle although the Supreme Court of the United States suggests the possibility of its application to the statute for the purpose of saving it from invalidity. The cases relied upon by the Utah court to support its decision are distinguishable, and do not support the decision to its full extent.

Dayton Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394, involved the right to condemn a right of way to a mining claim.

Oury v. Goodwin, 3 Ariz. 255, 26 Pac. 376, was a decision by a territorial court with respect to the statutes of which the application of constitutional provisions is somewhat problematical. Moreover, in that case the ditch was owned by a joint-stock association and was intended to serve about 8,000 acres of land.

Fallbrook Irrig. District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56, involved the right to enforce an assessment under an act incorporating an irrigation district, the assessment being attacked on the ground that the irrigation law was unconstitutional.

The Montana Constitution provided that "the right of way over the lands of others for all ditches necessarily used in connection with the appropriation of water should be held to be a public use." Under this provision, Ellinghouse v. Taylor, 19 Mont. 462, 48 Pac. 757, upheld a proceeding for con-for the taking of private property for public use." Section 1278 provides: "When any person or corporation desires to convey water for irrigation, or for any other beneficial purpose, and there is a canal or ditch already constructed that can be enlarged to convey the required quantity of water, then such person or corporation, or the owner or owners of the lands through which a new canal or ditch would have to be constructed to convey the quantity of water necessary, shall have the right to enlarge said canal or ditch already constructed by compensating the owner of the canal or ditch to be enlarged, for the damage, if any, caused by said enlargement: Provided, that said enlargement is to be done at any time from the 1st day of October to the 1st day of March, or at any other time that may be agreed upon with the owner of said canal or ditch." The complaint herein in substance alleges that plaintiff is the owner of 80 acres of land situated in Utah county, this state, which land, without irrigation, is arid, barren, and unproductive, but with irrigation would produce in abundance hay, grain, and other agricultural crops; that Ft. Canyon creek is a natural stream of water in Utah county, flowing from the mountains north of plaintiff's land in a southerly direction to and near plaintiff's land; that the defendants own a tract of land contiguous to and adjoining plaintiff's land on the north, and are also the owners of a certain ditch leading from Ft. Canyon creek over and across their land to a point within 100 feet of plaintiff's land, which ditch is $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles in length, 18 inches wide, and 12 inches deep; that plaintiff owns water in Ft. Canyon creek sufficient to irrigate his land above mentioned; that there is no other convenient or practicable way in which to divert the waters of said creek and convey the same onto plaintiff's land except by and through the ditch of defendants: that, in order to irrigate his land, it is necessary that plaintiff have a right of way through defendants' ditch; that for plaintiff to enter upon defendants' land to enlarge their ditch will not injure them; that plaintiff requested of defendants that they allow him to go onto their land and enlarge their ditch, and use it for conducting his water to and on his land, and offered to contribute his share of the expense of maintaining the ditch and all damages:

demnation of a right of way across private land for the benefit of a single farm, under the provisions of a statute authorizing such procedure. The case involved a construction of the constitutional provision, rather than the legality of the statute, but, in its opinion, the court said: "What real distinction is there, so far as the term 'public use' is concerned, between the benefit that results to a state from the reclamation, by artificial irrigation, of 160 acres of agricultural land owned by one or two persons, and the reclamation, by the same means, of thousands of acres owned by many different persons living together in one subdivision of the state? We do not think there is any in principle. The reclamation of one small field by means of artificial irrigation promotes the development, and adds to the taxable wealth, of the state, as well as the reclamation by the same means of a number of fields. The only difference is the extent of the benefit." But this distinction which the Montana court fails to perceive is the very one upon which the cases, as indicated above, have turned, in holding that the right of eminent domain cannot be exercised for the benefit of single farms.

In Dayton Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394, the court for the reasons indicated in the portion of the opinion quoted in the NASH CASE, upheld the constitutionality of a statute declaring that mining, milling, smelting, or other reduction of ores is a public use, and that the right of eminent domain may be exercised therefor. The Dayton Case was followed in Overman Silver Min. Co. v. Corcoran, 15 Nev. 147, affirming an order condemning land for the erection of machinery and sinking of a shaft for the development of the petitioner's mine; and in Byrnes v. Douglass, 27 C. C. A. 399, 48 U. S. App. 526, 83 Fed. 45, holding that a mining company might condemn a right of way for a tunnel for the development of its mine; in Butte A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana Union R. Co. 16 Mont. 504, 31 L. R. A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 508, 41 Pac. 232, holding that the connection of mines and ore houses with a market is a public use in Montana which will authorize a railroad company to acquire a right of way for that purpose by right of eminent domain; and was cited in Kansas & T. Coal R. Co. v. Northwestern Coal & Min. Co. 161 Mo. 288, 51 L. R. A. 936, 84 Am. St. Rep. 717, 61 S. W. 684, holding that a regularly organized and chartered railroad company might condemn land for a right of way, notwithstanding the fact that the road was short and built chiefly for the purpose of conveying the product of a coal company composed of substantially the same persons that organized the railroad company. The decision in the last two cases, however, were largely influenced by the consideration that the petitioner was a common carrier and would owe a duty to the public as such, though the actual use of the road would, for the present at least, be confined to the particular mining company. The Dayton Case was also cited with approval in Oury v. Goodwin, 3 Ariz. 255, 26 Pac. 376, referred to in the opinion in the NASH CASE. The Dayton Case was disapproved in Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 33 Wash. 490, 53 L. R. A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964, 74 Pac.

that the defendants refused to permit him to do so. Plaintiff asks that he be permitted to enlarge defendants' ditch to the extent of widening it 1 foot more; that he have a perpetual right of way through said ditch when so widened and constructed for the purpose of diverting and carrying his water from Ft. Canyon creek to his land for irrigation purposes; that the damages for such right of way and use of the ditch by plaintiff be fixed and determined, and that upon payment by the plaintiff of such damages he have such ditch condemned to the extent of and to the use and for the purposes above set forth, and that defendants be enjoined from in any way or manner asserting any right antagonistic to this right of plaintiff; that, if plaintiff is permitted by decree of this court to enlarge and use the ditch as aforesaid, his land can be made productive, and the use of the water to which plaintiff is entitled can and will be put to a beneficial and public use in the irrigation of plaintiff's said land, and for no other purpose. Defendants interposed a general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, alleging that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled. The defendants elected to stand upon their demurrer, and the plaintiff introduced evidence in support of the allegations of his complaint, and the court entered judgment and decree in favor of plaintiff, condemning defendants' land as prayed for in the complaint; and for a reversal of this judgment the defendants have appealed to this court.

Mr. J. W. N. Whitecotton, for appellants:

The court takes the private property of these defendants, and, entirely without their consent, and against their protest, turns it over to the plaintiff in the case. There is not the slightest pretense that anyone else is to make use of whatever the plaintiff gets from the defendants. This is nothing but a private use.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 157.

The Constitution prohibits the taking of private property for private use.

Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540; Nesbitt v. Trumbo, 39 Ill. 110, 89 Am. Dec. 290; Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 151, 25 Am. Dec. 618; Concord R. Co. v. Greely, 17 N. H. 47; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 31 Am. Dec. 313; Beekman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co. 3 Paige, 73, 22 Am.

681, holding that the acquisition of an easement over land for the transportation to market of the logs of a private owner was not a public use justifying the exercise of eminent domain. The court, referring especially to the Dayton Case, said: "It must be conceded, however, that there are quite a number of decisions to the effect that the phrase 'public use' should be construed to be synonymous with 'public benefit,' and that, when it is determined that the use is of great benefit to the public at large, condemnation of private interests should be guaranteed, even though the use is not by the state, or through any of its agencies. . . . It seems to us, however, that this is the announcement of a dangerous doctrine, tending to encroach upon private rights which the Constitution has attempted to safeguard, and to render such rights as uncertain and varying as are the interests of different localities and opinions of different judges on different branches of business." The Dayton Case was also disapproved in Great Western Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Hawkins, 30 Ind. App. 557, 66 N. E. 765, where it is stated that the better reasoned cases hold that land cannot be condemned for use of a private mining corporation. The decision in the last case was to the effect that a right of way cannot be condemned for a gas-pipe line, unless the petition shows that the petitioner is engaged in furnishing gas for public use.

In Ellinghouse v. Taylor, 19 Mont. 462, 48 Pac. 757, cited in NASH v. CLARK, the court distinguished the case of Lorenz v. Jacob, 63 Cal. 73, holding that the right of eminent domain could not be exercised in favor of the owners of mining claims to enable them to obtain water for their own use in working such claims, upon the ground that the California Constitution did not contain the phrase, "other beneficial use," employed in the Montana Constitution; though it said that, even if that phrase had been omitted from the Montana Constitution, it would not have been disposed to follow the California construction, but would have felt justified, by reason of the phrase "appropriation of water for distribution," in declaring the use of water for one or two tracts of land or mines a "public use." The Ellinghouse Case was cited in Helena v. Rogan, 26 Mont. 452, 68 Pac. 798, as authority for the proposition that the use of water to irrigate a farm under the water-right law is a public use, though the point in the latter case was as to the right of a city to appropriate for the public water supply water already appropriated for irrigation purposes. The Ellinghouse Case was cited with approval in Lewis County v. Gordon, 20 Wash. 80, 54 Pac. 770, holding that the construction of ditches for drainage of land, otherwise useless for agricultural purposes, was a public use, and that it was not necessary, in order to justify the exercise of eminent domain, that the public at large should be benefited, but only that part of the public affected by want of proper drainage. In the Lewis County Case, however, the benefit does not seem to have been confined to a single individual or tract of land.

Dec. 679; Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 318, 18 Am. Rep. 287; Hepburn's Case, 3 Bland, Ch. 95; Hoye v. Swan, 5 Md. 237; Dunn v. Charleston, Harp. L. 189; Osborn v. Hart, 24 Wis. 89, 1 Am. Rep. 161; Tyler v. Beach-er, 44 Vt. 648, 8 Am. Rep. 398; Dickey v. Tennyson, 27 Mo. 373; Clack v. White, 2 Swan, 540; Sadler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 311; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Valley City Salt Co. v. Brown, 7 W. Va. 191; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & I. Co. 37 Md. 537; Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 534; Bangor & P. R. Co. v. McComb, 60 Me. 290; McCandless's Appeal, 70 Pa. 210; Embury v. Conner, 3 N. Y. 511, 53 Am. Dec. 325; Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 23 Am. Dec. 756; Robinson v. Swope, 12 Bush, 21; Harding v. Funk, 8 Kan. 315; Jenal v. Green Island Draining Co. 12 Neb. 163, 10 N. W. 547; Waddell's Appeal, 84 Pa. 90; Brown v. Beatty, 34 Miss. 227; Hand Gold Min. Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 419; Dayton Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394; Lorenz v. Jacob, 63 Cal. 73; Re Eureka Basin Warehouse & Mfg. Co. 96 N. Y. 42; McQuillen v. Hatton, 42 Ohio St. 202.

The extent of the taking does not affect the principle.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 657; Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 161, 25 Am. Dec. 618; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Re Eureka Basin Warehouse & Mfg. Co. 96 N. Y. 42; Re Tuthill, 163 N. Y. 133, 49 L. R. A. 781, 79 Am. St. Rep. 574, 57 N. E. 303; Nesbitt v. Trumbo, 39 Ill. 110, 89 Am. Dec. 290; Sholl v. German Coal Co. 118 Ill. 427, 59 Am. Rep. 379, 10 N. E. 199.

There is nothing to compel plaintiff to use the right after it is condemned, and enlargement of a ditch without use inflicts serious injury on the owner.

The reclamation of a private claim is not a public purpose.

Lorenz v. Jacob, 63 Cal. 73; Lindsay Irrig. Co. v. Mehrstens, 97 Cal. 680, 32 Pac. 802; Ellinghouse v. Taylor, 19 Mont. 462, 48 Pac. 757; Prescott Irrig. Co. v. Flathers, 20 Wash. 454, 55 Pac. 635; Cummings v. Hyatt, 54 Neb. 35, 74 N. W. 411; Re Tuthill, 163 N. Y. 133, 49 L. R. A. 781, 79 Am. St. Rep. 574, 57 N. E. 303; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 41 L. ed. 489, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130.

Messrs. Warner, Houtz, Prentiss, & Warner, for respondent:

If the public interest can be in any way promoted by the taking of private property, it must rest in the wisdom of the legislature to determine whether the benefit to the public will be of sufficient importance 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to render it expedient for them to exercise the right of eminent domain, and to authorize an interference with the private right of individuals for that purpose.

2 Cooley, Const. Lim. 532; Hazen v. Essex Co. 12 Cush. 475; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 444; Yunker v. Nichols, 1 Colo. 551; Oury v. Goodwin, Ariz. 255, 26 Pac. 377; Dayton Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 4 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Schilling v. Rominger, 4 Colo. 109.

McCarthy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellants contend that the order of the district court overruling the demurrer was erroneous for the reason that the complaint on its face shows that the use to be made of the property sought to be condemned is strictly private, and in no sense a public use. Both the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of this state provide that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation." This provision is construed to mean that private property can not be taken for strictly a private use which counsel for respondent concede to be the true and proper construction. This brings us to the only question presented by this appeal, to wit: Was the condemnation of appellants' land in this case in law and in fact for a public use? There is no fixed rule of law by which this question can be determined. In other words what is a public use cannot always be determined by the application of purely legal principles. This is evident from the fact that there are two lines of authorities, neither of which attempts to lay down any fixed rule as a guide to be followed in all cases. One class of authorities, in a general way, holds that by public use is meant a use by the public or its agencies, — that is, the public must have the right to the actual use in some way of the property appropriated; whereas the other line of decisions holds that it is a public use without the meaning of the law when the taking is for a use that will promote the public interest, and which use tends to develop the great natural resources of the commonwealth. After a careful examination of the leading cases on this subject, we are of the opinion that the class of decisions last mentioned is more in harmony with enlightened public policy, and the liberal interpretation given the term "public use" which the legislature has, in effect, declared shall be followed in this state, is far more conducive to individual and public advancement than the restricted construction adopted and followed by the line of decisions first referred to.

The question of the manner of appropriation and use of water for domestic, irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes is, and ever since the advent of the early pioneers has been, the most important and vital of all industrial questions with which the people within this arid region have been confronted. Their requirements, and, we might add, their absolute necessities, impelled the legislatures and courts at an early date in the history of the states and territories strictly arid in character to depart from and lay aside as impracticable some legal doctrines and rules relating to the control and use of water which had theretofore been adhered to and followed for ages, and to adopt and put in operation a new system of acquiring title in and to the streams which are within the arid belt, the use of which was found to be indispensable in agricultural pursuits, in mining, in the establishment of industries, and in the general development of the arid states and territories. By an examination of the records of the early cases in this state (then territory) wherein the courts declined to follow and be governed by the common-law doctrine of riparian rights in its entirety, the same arguments were advanced by those claiming title to water under and by virtue of this doctrine as are advanced by appellants in this case, to wit, that fundamental rights were being interfered with, and the property of one citizen was being taken and given to another. We very much doubt whether either advocate or layman, who has witnessed the magnificent results wrought by the change, would now contend that the Constitution was overridden, or any natural or legal right of the citizens invaded, and their property confiscated, when the common-law doctrine of riparian rights was modified for the purposes of irrigation and mining, and a system for appropriating and acquiring title to water adopted that made it possible for populous and flourishing commonwealths to grow up where the country otherwise would have remained a desert, uninhabited, with the possible exception, perhaps, of an occasional cattle or sheep ranch. The question of how to increase the water supply in the arid region has steadily grown in magnitude and importance until it has become national as well as local. Congress, realizing the great public necessity for an increased water supply, and appreciating the great possibilities that may be accomplished in this and other states and territories within the arid belt by conserving and storing the high and surplus waters caused by the melting snows which in the spring months come down from the mountains in torrents, and are either wasted in the deserts or find their way into box canyons, where they can never be made available for irrigation or other useful purposes, by a provision in the enabling act (§ 12) granted to this state 500,000 acres of the public lands lying within the state, with which to create a fund to be used for the purpose of building reservoirs; and later on, by an act known as the "irrigation bill," created a fund from the public revenues, which is swelling into the millions of dollars, for the purpose of aiding in this most important of all enterprises of a public character in the arid west, and upon the success of which its future growth and prosperity largely depend. The large expenditure of public funds in this direction is not to be made for the purpose of enabling the states and territories directly benefited thereby, in their sovereign capacity, to engage in farming and other lines of industry which are dependent upon the water supply, but to ultimately enable the citizens, as individuals, to provide themselves with homes, and to furnish additional opportunities for the further development of the great natural resources with which the arid region abounds. These questions, which are the most important with which the arid states and territories have had to deal, and the successive steps that have been taken in advancing our system of irrigation, are referred to for the purpose of showing the interest that the public have always had, and must of necessity continue to have, in the question of irrigation. The natural physical conditions of this state are such that in the great majority of cases the only possible way the farmer can supply his land with water is by conveying it by means of ditches across his neighbor's lands which intervene between his own and the source from which he obtains his supply. The question before us not only involves the right of the farmer to invoke the law of eminent domain, when necessary, to enable him to convey water to his farm, but that of the miner, manufacturer, and persons engaged in other industrial pursuits to build canals, flumes, and lay pipe lines over adjoining and intervening lands, when necessary for the purpose of conveying water necessary for the successful prosecution of their respective enterprises. The future growth, prosperity, upbuilding, and industrial expansion of the state not only depend upon the storing and holding back the high and surplus waters so they can be used in times of scarcity, but also in a careful and judicious husbandry of the supply now available; and it is entirely within the province of the legislature to enact such laws respecting the appropriation and distribution thereof as will tend to prevent unnecessary loss and waste, so long as vested rights are upheld and maintained. Experience has shown that, the greater the amount of water flowing in a ditch of a given size and grade, the less the percentage of seepage and evaporation. Therefore, as a general rule, the owners of canals and ditches, instead of being damaged by their enlargement and the turning therein of an additional quantity of water, as is proposed in this case, will at least in times of scarcity during the hot summer months, and especially during the periods of protracted drouths, which have become so common of late years in this state, be benefited thereby, besides receiving the market value of the land condemned. In view of the physical and climatic conditions in this state, and in the light of the history of the arid west, which shows the marvelous results accomplished by irrigation, to hold that the use of water for irrigation is not in any sense a public use, and thereby place it within the power of a few individuals to place insurmountable barriers in the way of the future welfare and prosperity of the state, would be giving to the term "public use" altogether too strict and narrow an interpretation, and one we do not think is contemplated by the Constitution.

I.R.A.(N.S.)

The foregoing conclusions are supported by abundant authority. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1064, and cases cited. In the case of Dayton Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394, the plaintiff sought to condemn a right of way over certain lands to a mining claim owned by plaintiff, to be used for the purpose of transporting wood, lumber, timbers, and other material to enable it to conduct and carry on its business of mining. The claim was made in that case, as it is in this, that the statute under which the action was brought was unconstitutional for the same reasons as are urged in the case before us. Mr. Chief Justice Hawley, speaking for the court, says: "That mining is the paramount interest of the state is not questioned. That anything which tends directly to encourage mineral developments and increase the mineral resources of the state is for the benefit of the public, and is calculated to advance the general welfare and prosperity of the people of this state, is a self-evident proposition. Hence it necessarily follows that, if the position contended for by petitioner is correct, and I believe it is, then the act is constitutional, and should be upheld. Although other and weaker reasons have more frequently been assigned, it seems to me that this is the true interpretation upon 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) which courts have really acted in sustaining the right of eminent domain in favor of railroads and other objects, and in several of the decided cases this reason is expressly given. . . . Now, it so happens, or at least is liable to happen, that individuals, by securing a title to the barren lands adjacent to the mines, mills, or works, have it within their power, by unreasonably refusing to part with their lands for a just and fair compensation, . . . to greatly embarrass, if not entirely defeat, the business of mining in such localities. In my opinion, the mineral wealth of this state ought not to be left undeveloped for . . . any quantity of land actually necessary to enable the owner or owners of mines to conduct and carry on the business of mining. Nature has denied to this state many of the advantages which other states possess, but by way of compensation to her citizens has placed at their doors the richest and most extensive silver deposits ever yet discovered. The present prosperity of the state is entirely due to the mining developments already made, and the entire people of the state are directly interested in having the future developments unobstructed by the obstinate action of any individual or individuals." In the case of Oury v. Goodwin, 1 Ariz. 255, 26 Pac. 376, practically the same question was involved as is presented here, and the supreme court of Arizona, in an elaborate and exhaustive opinion, in which many cases are cited and reviewed, held that the use of water for irrigation is a public use, and that an act of the Arizona legislature, providing for the condemnation of lands for canal purposes, was constitutional. De Graffenried v. Savage, 9 Colo. App. 13, 47 Pac. 902; Yunker v. Nichols, 1 Colo. 551; Schilling v. Rominger, 4 Colo. 100. In the case of Fallbrook Irrig. District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56, the court, in the course of the opinion, says: "On the other hand, in a state like California, which confessedly embraces millions of acres of arid lands, an act of the legislature providing for their irrigation might well be regarded as an act devoting the water to a public use, and therefore as a valid exercise of the legislative power. . . . To irrigate, and thus to bring into possible cultivation, these large masses of otherwise worthless lands, would seem to be a public purpose, and a matter of public interest, not confined to the land owners, or even to any one section of the state. The fact that the use of the water is limited to the landowner is not, therefore, a fatal objection to this legislation." In conclusion the court on this point further says: "We have no doubt that the irrigation of really arid lands is a public purpose, and the water thus used is put to a public use." Ellinghouse v. Taylor, 10 Mont. 462, 48 Pac. 757. There are many other well-considered cases which declare the same general doctrine as those referred to, but we deem it unnecessary to make further citations.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed: the costs of this appeal to be taxed against the appellants.

Bartch, J., concurs. Baskin, Ch. J., dissents.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States May 15, 1905.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE W. CHRISTY, Appt.,

v.

PARKER ELLIOTT.

(216 Ill. 31.)

1. Exception to instructions—attacking statute.

Exception to instructions stating the law to be as established by a statute raises the question of the constitutionality of the statute,—at least, if the instructions are expressly challenged on that ground on the motion for new trial.—so as to bring the appeal within the jurisdiction of the court taking cognizance of appeals involving constitutional questions.

2. Limiting speed of automobiles—constitutionality.

That a statute limiting speed on the highways applies only to horseless vehicles does not render it void under a constitutional provision that no one shall be deprived of liberty or property without due process of law, as making an unjust discrimination against the manufacturers and owners of such vehicles.

3. Requiring automobile to stop—title of statute.

A provision of a statute requiring automobiles to come to a stop upon meeting a horse frightened by their presence is within the title "An Act to Regulate the Speed of Automobiles."

4. Stopping automobile for frightened horse—due diligence.

A statutory requirement that the driver of an automobile shall stop it upon approaching a horse which appears to be frightened will apply in case, "by the exercise of reasonable diligence on the part of the driver," it would have appeared that a horse was frightened.

5. Charge to jury—as to wealth or poverty of parties.

The right to consider the wealth or poverty of the parties is not included in an instruction, in an action to recover damages for injuries caused by the fright of a horse called forth a considerable amount of legislation, and a number of judicial decisions with respect to the rights, duties, and liabilities of the owners or users of this class of vehicles. Except so far as these decisions have turned upon statutes or ordinances expressly directed to the use of automobiles, they are the mere results of the application of common-law principles to this novel class of vehicles; and they are not as yet sufficiently numerous, nor sufficiently specific, to form the basis of a distinct code of rules by which the respective rights and duties of the owners or users of automobiles and other persons may be determined without referring to the fundamental common-law principles which have been developed by the cases dealing with other means of locomotion upon the public streets and highways. The particular applications that have been made of these principles in automobile cases are, however, of especial value as precedents for later automobile cases, and this consideration, in connection with the fact that there are quite a number of decisions dealing with the validity, construction, or effect of statutes or ordinances expressly relating to automobiles, suggests the advisability of collecting the decisions that have thus far been rendered with respect to them.

Subject Note.—The law governing automobiles.

II. Regulation and control by public.

a. Registration; numbering; license; tax.

Mass. Stat. 1903, chap. 473, requiring

I. In general, 215.

II. Regulation and control by public.

a. Registration; numbering; license; tax, 215.

b. Regulations as to speed and safety appliances, 219.

c. Prohibited hours and places, 221.

d. Regulation of automobiles used for hire, 222.

e. Restrictions as to transportation of gasoline carried by automobiles, 223.

III. Statutory duty of operator of automobile, 223.

IV. Common-law duty and liability of operator of automobile, 224.

V. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence upon particular state of facts, 228.

VI. Instructions with respect to particular state of facts, 234.

VII. Responsibility of owner when automobile in charge of another, or when put in operation by another, 235.

VIII. Duty and liability to operator of automobile, 237.

IX. Pleading; evidence; judicial notice, 239.

X. Right of owner of garage to a lien, 240.

XI. Miscellaneous, 241.

I. In general.

The increasing use of automobiles has
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by an automobile, to the effect that the jury might, in determining whether defendant was exercising reasonable care and diligence, take into consideration the situation and condition of the parties, where there is no evidence of the financial condition of the parties in the case.

6. Charge as to negligence—question for jury.

The court may explain to the jury what constitutes ordinary care as matter of law, and instruct them that, to recover for alleged negligent injury, plaintiff must show that he was exercising reasonable care and diligence for his own safety, "as explained in the instructions;" and such instruction cannot be regarded as making the question of negligence one of law.

7. Contributory negligence of driver.

That the driver of the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was negligent at a time when plaintiff received personal injuries of which defendant's negligent handling of an automobile was the efficient cause will not defeat an action against defendant to recover for the injury.

8. Damages—for injury to leg.

In fixing the damages for a personal injury, the jury may consider the testimony of plaintiff and some of his witnesses that his leg was injured, although there is evidence in the case that there was no injury to the leg further than an enlargement of glands in the groin.

9. Common-law negligence—as affected by statute.

There may be a recovery for common-law negligence in handling an automobile on a highway if properly pleaded, although the use of such vehicles has become a matter of statutory regulation.

10. Refusal to charge—cured by other charge.

A person cannot complain of the refusal of an instruction, if the court, at his instance, gives another which embodies all that is material in the one refused.

11. Horse frightened by automobile—signal.

No signal from the persons in a carriage drawn by a horse, that the animal is about to be frightened by an approaching automobile, is necessary to charge the driver of the latter with the statutory duty to stop the machine, if it appears that a horse approaching on the highway is about to become frightened by the machine.

automobiles to be registered, and that each have displayed thereon, in Arabic numerals not less than 4 inches long, its registered number and mark, and exacting a registration fee of $2 for each automobile, is not unconstitutional. Com. v. Boyd, 188 Mass. 79, 74 N. E. 255. The court said that there could be no question as to the right of the legislature, in the exercise of the police power, to regulate the driving of automobiles and motor cycles on the public ways of the commonwealth; that they are capable of being driven, and are apt to be driven, at a high rate of speed, and when not properly driven are so dangerous as to make some regulation necessary for the safety of other persons on the public highways. The court further said that the registration fee is plainly a license fee, and not a tax; and that, the act being passed by the general court, it was not necessary to consider whether a similar act can be passed by a city. The case of Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that the act there involved was passed by a city, and not by the legislature.

In People v. MacWilliams, 91 App. Div. 176, 86 N. Y. Supp. 357, § 166 of the New York highway law (as amended by chap. 625 of the laws of 1903), providing for the registration of automobiles by their owners, was attacked as unconstitutional and void, and it was urged that, in consequence, the requirement of § 169a, that a number corresponding to the number of the certificate obtained on registering the automobile shall be conspicuously attached to the rear of the vehicle so as to be plainly visible, is inoperative, and that a failure to comply therewith can constitute no crime. Section 166 was challenged as class legislation violating L.R.A. (N.S.) relative of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution by reason of the provision therein: "This section shall not apply to a person manufacturing or dealing in automobiles or motor vehicles, except those for his own private use, and except those hired out." The court said that it was unnecessary to decide whether it would be competent for the legislature thus to discriminate between dealers and manufacturers on the one hand, and private owners upon the other, in using automobiles and motor vehicles upon the public road, since the statute, properly construed, does not exempt a manufacturer or dealer who wishes to take a vehicle which he has in stock for sale or for repairs or on storage out upon the public street, and operate it by its own power, from the duty of having the same registered and attaching to it a tag with a number corresponding to the certificate.

An automobile is a carriage, within Pa. act April 1, 1868 (P. L. 565, § 7), which empowers the city of Pittsburg "to regulate and license all cars, wagons, drays, coaches, omnibuses, and every description of carriages;" and the city may, therefore, impose a license upon automobiles, notwithstanding that they were unknown when the act was passed. Com. v. Hawkins, 14 Pa. Dist. R. 592.

The power conferred upon the city of Pittsburg by the special act of April 1, 1868 (P. L. 565), to impose a license upon automobiles used in the city streets, was not repealed by the act of April 23, 1903 (P. L. 268), regulating the use of automobiles throughout the state, as the later act contains no repealing clause, and by the provision of the 7th section, to the effect that the amount of license prescribed by the act shall not apply to any city or other mu-

1. Charge on evidence—undue emphasis on part.

The court cannot, in instructing the jury, single out and give undue emphasis to particular evidence upon a matter in controversy, where there is as much testimony on one side of the question as on the other.

3. Taking case from jury.

A case cannot be taken from the jury if there is evidence which would warrant a recovery on the part of plaintiff.

4. Abstract of record—declaration.

An abstract of the declaration is included in a rule of court requiring an appellant to furnish the court with a complete abstract of the record.

(June 23, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Mercer County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is an action of trespass on the case, brought in the circuit court of Mercer county on June 30, 1904, by the appellee against the appellant to recover damages resulting to plaintiff from an injury inflicted upon him by being thrown from a wagon drawn by mules upon a public highway, by reason of said mules becoming frightened and turning over said wagon, because of the alleged negligence of appellant in running an automobile, in which he was riding, in violation of the statute of Illinois in regard to automobiles, and in driving and managing said automobile in a careless, negligent, and improper manner. The plea of the general issue was filed to the declaration, and the case was tried before the court and a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of appellee and against appellant for $1,250. Motion for new trial was made and overruled, and judgment rendered upon the verdict. The present appeal from the judgment so entered by the circuit court is prosecuted to this court upon the ground that the constitutionality or validity of the act herein-after referred to, to regulate the speed of automobiles, etc., is involved in this case. The declaration consists of six counts. The first municipality in which the authorities have imposed a license fee for the same purpose, indicates an intention to preserve to the municipalities any authority previously conferred upon them authorizing the licensing of vehicles. Ibid.

In Com. v. Hawkins, 14 Pa. Dist. R. 592, the court upheld the validity of an ordinance (passed by the city of Pittsburg under the power conferred by the special act of April 1, 1868 [P. L. 565, § 7], to regulate and license every description of carriages) which makes it unlawful for any person to operate, or cause to be operated, upon the streets of the city, an automobile, motor vehicle, or other conveyance or wagon, the motor power of which shall be electricity, steam, gasoline, or any source of energy other than human and animal power, except upon the conditions, inter alia, of the payment by the owner of an annual license fee of $6 if the vehicle is intended to carry one or two persons, and a fee of $10 if intended to carry more than two persons. The court said that the license imposed was not unreasonable, and was uniform upon different kinds of the several classes of vehicles named; and that that was all the law required in that respect.

Pa. act April 23, 1903 (P. L. 268), requiring the registration of automobiles, is not unconstitutional for lack of uniformity, because of the provision of § 13 that the act shall not apply "to any of the motor vehicles which any manufacturer or vendor of automobiles may have in stock for sale, and not for his private use or for hire."

Com. v. Densmore, 29 Pa. Co. Ct. 217.

The provision of Pa. act April 23, 1903 (P. L. 268), requiring the registration of automobiles, is a valid exercise of the police power. Ibid.

11 R.A. (N.S.)

The power conferred upon the city of Detroit by § 170 of its charter to "control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which the highways, streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, and public grounds and spaces within said city shall be used and enjoyed," includes the power to enact an ordinance requiring the registering and numbering of automobiles or other motor vehicles as a condition of their use upon the city streets, and exacting a fee of $1 from the owner to pay the cost of aluminium figures to be furnished by the city to make up the number to be affixed to the automobile. People v. Schneider (Mich.) 12 Det. L. N. 32, 69 L. R. A. 345, 103 N. W. 172. In reply to the objection that the provision for registering and numbering amounts to a license, and that the grant of authority to regulate gave the city no power to license, the court said that the provision, if a license at all, is a license as a mere means of regulation; and, if the speed of automobiles cannot be effectually regulated without licensing them, the grant of the power to regulate confers upon the city the power to license, unless some other provision of law forbids the exercise of that power.

In the last case the court, without approving the decision in Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94, infra, said that the ordinance in question in that case went further than the ordinance in the case at bar.

A provision in a municipal ordinance, requiring one operating an automobile on the city streets to display thereon a number furnished by the municipality corresponding to a number entered upon the record kept by the city, does not provide an unreasonable search within Mich. Constr. art. 6, § 26, forbidding unreasonable searches. Peo- and third counts are based upon the statute prohibiting a greater rate of speed than 15 miles an hour. The second and fourth counts are based upon that provision of the statute which provides that automobiles should come to a full stop when "it shall appear" that any horse or team approaching them in the highway is frightened. The fifth and sixth counts are based on the common-law grounds of negligence.

The material facts are substantially as follows: On June 23, 1904, appellee, in company with one William Parker, who was driving, and three old ladies, to wit, Mary Parker, the mother of William Parker, the driver, and Jane McMullen and Elizabeth McMullen, were driving south upon a highway leading into the village or town of New Windsor, which highway extended in northerly and southerly direction on the line between Mercer and Henry counties. Appellee was riding on the front seat with Parker, the driver, and the three women were sitting on the back seat. The vehicle was an open spring wagon, and was drawn by a team of mules. Appellee and his companions were coming up over the brow of a hill about a mile and a half north of New Windsor, when they first saw the appellant coming north toward them in a seven-horse power gasoline automobile, about 50 rods away. From the point where appellee and his companions first saw appellant to the point where appellant was then approaching them, there was a level road to the south for over 200 rods. North of the place ple v. Schneider (Mich.) 12 Det. L. N. 32, 69 L. R. A. 345, 103 N. W. 172.

A municipal ordinance requiring the registering and numbering of automobiles as a condition of their use upon the city streets, and imposing a pecuniary penalty for its violation, and imprisonment in default of payment, does not violate Mich. Const. art. 6, § 32, providing that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, or be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Ibid.

One must procure a license from the county clerk of each and every county over whose public roads he may desire to run an automobile, and a license granted by the clerk of the county of his residence is of no effect in another county, under Mo. Laws 1903, p. 162, § 4, providing that every person desiring to operate any automobile propelled by steam, gasoline, electricity, or any other motive power, shall obtain a license from the license commissioner, if in a city having such commissioner, or, if desired to operate the same in any county outside the incorporated limits of any such city, or upon any of the public highways, streets, or roads of this state, shall obtain a license from the county clerk of such county. State v. Cobb (Mo. App.) 87 S. W. 551.

It was held in Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94, that an ordinance of the city of Chicago which requires one who uses an automobile for his private business and pleasure only to submit to an examination and to be licensed as an "automobile operator" (if the examining board sees fit to grant him a license) imposes a burden upon one class of citizens in the use of streets not imposed upon the others, and is, therefore, beyond the power of the city council, and void. The court said that, conceding that what is fairly implied is as much granted as what is expressed, nevertheless the charter of a municipal corporation is the measure of its powers, and the enumeration of those powers implies the exclusion of all others. Among other powers enumerated in the 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) charter of the city, are that of regulating the use of streets and the speed of vehicles within the limits of the corporation, and the power to license and regulate certain occupations. The opinion purports to put the decision upon the broad ground that the ordinance wrongfully discriminates between different classes of citizens. The actual decision, however, is upon the ground that the charter does not confer requisite power upon the city council to enact the ordinance.

Defendant, in State v. Cobb (Mo. App.) 87 S. W. 551, attempted to raise a question as to the constitutionality of the automobile act passed in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 162) requiring persons desiring to run automobiles to take out a license; but the court refused to consider the question, because neither the article, nor the section of the Constitution thought to be violated by the act, was pointed out or referred to in the defendant's motions or briefs.

An indictment otherwise substantially following the language of Mo. Laws 1903, p. 162, § 4, requiring every person "desiring" to operate an automobile to obtain a license from the officers therein designated, is not bad because the word "desire" is not used. State v. Cobb (Mo. App.) 87 S. W. 551.

In Com. v. Densmore, 29 Pa. Co. Ct. 217, the court held that the provision of Pa. act April 23, 1903 (P. L. 268), requiring the owners of automobiles to take out licenses, was so uncertain that a conviction for its violation could not be sustained in view of the fact that there is nothing in the act as to what the license shall contain, and that the title of the act refers to the licensing of "operators," and not "owners," of automobiles.

The power of a municipal corporation to classify vehicles for the purpose of a vehicle tax ordinance includes the power to exclude automobiles from its scheme of taxation. Kersey v. Terre Haute, 161 Ind. 471, 68 N. E. 1027.

A municipal corporation may exclude from its scheme of taxation vehicles of non-residents who habitually use the streets of where the accident happened, the view was unobstructed for half a mile, except that there was a small hill opposite what is called in the evidence the "Hoogner place," where there was a depression about 25 rods long. In the automobile were appellant, with his son and daughter, and a friend of theirs, named Spivey. When the automobile came up to where the wagon was, the mules became unmanageable; the wheels of the spring wagon went into a ditch on the right or west side of the road; the mules reared sharply to the east and upset the wagon, throwing the occupants out, and ran away. Appellee's arm was broken by the fall, and it was claimed by him that one of his legs was injured. There is evidence tending to show that, as a result of the breakage of his arm, appellee had an enlarged joint and permanent deformity. When he first fell from the wagon, he was unconscious, and lay in the road an hour, while waiting for a physician, who had been sent for. For some seventeen days he was confined to his bed, and for two and one-half months thereafter could not walk without a cane or chair. There is testimony tending to show that his leg was so severely injured that he could not bear the weight of his body upon it. Although the physicians testify that they could detect no broken bone in the leg, they state that they detected enlarged glands in the groin, but whether this enlargement of the glands in the groin proceeded from the accident, or from some other cause, is a matter about which the witnesses the city, although the vehicles are of the same class as those which are subject to the tax if owned by residents. Ibid.

The class of vehicles in question in the last case was not automobiles, but the rule laid down doubtless applies to automobiles.

b. Regulations as to speed and safety appliances.

Various constitutional objections to statutes regulating the speed of automobiles are considered and disposed of in CHRISTY v. ELLIOTT.

A municipal corporation has power to regulate the speed of automobiles, and to require reasonable safety appliances, such as gongs and brakes. Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94.

The power conferred upon the board of park commissioners of the city of Boston by Mass. Stat. 1875, chap. 185, § 3, p. 778, to make rules for the use and government of the parks and streets under their control, includes the right to make a reasonable regulation as to the speed at which a person shall "ride or drive" in such park or street. Com. v. Crowninshield, 187 Mass. 221, 68 L. R. A. 245, 72 N. E. 963.

Regulations by the board of park commissioners of the city of Boston as to the rate of speed of automobiles in parks and streets under their control, were not abrogated by Mass. Stat. 1902, chap. 315, p. 235, limiting the speed of automobiles throughout the state on public highways, streets, and ways. Ibid.

The general power conferred upon townships of the first class by Pa. act April 28, 1899 (P. L. 104), includes the power to enact an ordinance fixing a maximum rate of speed for automobiles and bicycles of 10 miles an hour, and such power is not suspended by act April 23, 1903 (P. L. 268), which provides, inter alia, that no person shall be allowed to operate any motor vehicle upon any of the public highways of the cities or boroughs at a speed greater than 8 miles an hour, and that outside of cities or boroughs the rate of speed shall not exceed 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ceed 1 mile in three minutes, in view of the proviso to the 5th section that nothing in the section shall permit any person to drive an automobile at a greater rate of speed than is reasonable regarding traffic, danger, or injury to property, at any time or at any place. Radnor Twp. v. Bell, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 1.

N. Y. Laws 1893, chap. 625, § 163, providing that no ordinance, rule, or regulation adopted by the authorities of any city in pursuance of such section, or of any other law, shall require an automobile or motor vehicle to travel at a slower rate than 8 miles per hour within the closely built up portions of such city, nor at a slower rate of speed than 15 miles per hour where the houses in such city upon any highway are more than 100 feet apart; and § 169a, providing that any person violating any of the provisions of the statute, or of any speed ordinance adopted pursuant to the statute, shall, upon conviction, in addition to the penalties provided in § 169b, be further punished for a first offense by a suspension of his right to run an automobile for a period of not less than two weeks,—do not fix any rate of speed at which an automobile may be run, nor do they confer upon the municipal authorities power to pass ordinances with reference thereto; on the contrary, they merely limit the right which the authorities now have, under existing laws, to regulate the speed. People v. Ellis, 88 App. Div. 471, 85 N. Y. Supp. 120. It was accordingly held in this case that, as the complaint on which the prosecution was based did not allege any ordinance fixing the rate of speed, it did not state an offense under the statute.

Regulations by the board of park commissioners as to the rate of speed of automobiles and other vehicles upon streets within their control need not, in order to be effective, be posted at the points where the streets under their control join with other streets or roads, under Mass. Stat. 1893, chap. 473, § 14, p. 511, permitting boards of aldermen of cities and selectmen of towns to make special regulations as to the speed differ. The testimony of the appellee tends to show that when Parker, the driver, saw the machine coming, he tried to urge his team forward and around the head of the ditch to the west, so that he could leave the beaten track and get out to the extreme west side of the highway, next to the hedge; that the team began to show signs of fright about as soon as they saw the automobile at the Wilcox place, about 59 rods away; that they began to jump and twist about as the driver tried to urge them on, and when the automobile was about 6 rods away they "flew back" in their harness, and then lunged forward and to one side just as the machine came up to them, throwing the wheels of the vehicle into the ditch. On the other hand, the witnesses of appellant, who were the parties riding in the automobile, say that the team was standing still as the automobile passed them, and showed no signs of fright. After the accident, appellant did not lessen the speed of his automobile, but went on, without taking notice of the fact that the parties were thrown from the wagon, although Gertrude Christy, the daughter of the appellant, who was in the automobile with him, says that she looked back, and "saw the people out of the rig. I did not say anything to anyone about what I had seen. I did not tell my brother, George, that the people were out of the rig." The first count of the declaration alleges that the appellant was negligently and willfully driving and running said automobile upon the highway in a northerly direction at a rate of speed greatly in excess of 15 miles an hour, contrary to the statutes in such cases made and provided. The second count of the declaration alleges that, while the appellant was approaching the vehicle in which the appellee was traveling, it then and there appeared to the appellant that the horses attached to the vehicle were about to become frightened by the approach of the automobile, and that it was the duty of the appellant, as was then and there provided by law, to cause the automobile so driven by the appellant to come to a full stop until the horses had passed it.

On May 13, 1903, the legislature passed an act entitled "An Act to Regulate the Speed of Automobiles and Other Horseless Conveyances upon the Public Streets, Roads, and Highways of the State of Illinois." The 1st section of the act provides as follows: "That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to drive, run, conduct, or propel any automobile or any other conveyance of a similar type or kind used for the purpose of transporting or conveying passengers or freight, or any other purposes, whether said of automobiles and motor cycles, but providing that no such special regulation shall be effective until notice of the same is posted conspicuously at the points where any road affected thereby joins other roads. Com. v. Crowninshield, 187 Mass. 221, 68 L. R. A. 245, 72 N. E. 963.

One in control of the motive power of an automobile may be said to be driving the automobile, within the meaning of a regulation of a board of park commissioners as to the speed at which a person shall "ride or drive" in a park or street within the control of the commissioners. Ibid.

An ordinance of a town of the first class, which provides that all automobiles shall be propelled upon the public highways of the township at a speed not exceeding 10 miles an hour, is not void because insensible in form and wording, as it is manifest that the meaning of the ordinance is that it shall be unlawful to propel an automobile upon the highways of the township at a speed exceeding 10 miles an hour. Radnor Twp. v. Bell, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 1.

It is within the province of a city council to prescribe different rates of speed for automobiles in different portions of the city according to the width of the streets, their use, and the density of population. Chittenden v. Columbus, 26 Ohio C. C. 531.

A rule limiting the speed of vehicles, including automobiles, in streets under control of the park commissioners, to 8 miles an hour, is reasonable. Com. v. Crownin- shield, 187 Mass. 221, 68 L. R. A. 245, 72 N. E. 963.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

An ordinance of a township of the first class, limiting the speed of automobiles to 10 miles an hour, is not unreasonable. Radnor Twp. v. Bell, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 1.

A municipal ordinance which limits the speed of automobiles within certain city limits to seven miles an hour is not so unreasonable as to require the court to hold it invalid. Chittenden v. Columbus, 26 Ohio C. C. 531.

A municipal ordinance limiting the speed of automobiles within certain city limits to 7 miles an hour is not invalid because another ordinance allows street cars to run at a greater rate of speed. Ibid.

A conviction of violating § 666 of the Penal Code, providing that one who drives or operates an automobile or motor vehicle upon a public highway within a city at a greater rate of speed than 8 miles an hour, except where a greater rate of speed is permitted by an ordinance of the city, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined, for the first offense, not exceeding the sum of $50, cannot be sustained under a complaint which merely attempted to charge the defendant with a violation of N. Y. Laws 1903, p. 1418, § 625, for driving an automobile at a greater rate of speed than 8 miles an hour while passing houses less than 100 feet apart. People v. Ellis, 88 App. Div. 471, 85 N. Y. Supp. 120.

A municipal ordinance, whose purpose as stated in the title is to regulate the speed automobile or conveyance or such other vehicle is propelled by steam, gasoline, or electricity,—or any other mechanical power, at a rate of speed in excess of 15 miles per hour upon any road or highway in the state of Illinois 'or any other rate of speed established by ordinance of any city or village of said state, upon any street within such city [or] village.' Provided, that nothing in this section contained shall prohibit or prevent the running of such automobiles, or vehicles at a greater rate of speed than 15 miles per hour upon such streets within incorporated cities or villages, as may be set apart for use of such automobiles and other conveyances, and upon which said cities or villages may, by ordinance, permit a greater or require a less rate of speed than herein specified." The 2nd section of the act is as follows: "Whenever it shall appear that any horse driven or ridden by any person upon any of said streets, roads, or highways is about to become frightened by the approach of any such automobile or vehicle, it shall be the duty of the person driving or conducting such automobile or vehicle to cause the same to come to a full stop until such horse or horses have passed." The 3d section of the act provides that "any person or persons violating the provision of the foregoing section one (1) or two (2) of automobiles, motor cars, and other vehicles, which in its 1st section merely regulates the speed, and in the 2d section provides that automobiles shall carry lighted lamps between sunset and sunrise, and give warning of imminent danger by sounding a bell, whistle, horn, or gong, does not violate a statute providing that no ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, since the provisions of the 2d section are germane to the subject of speed. Chittenden v. Columbus, 26 Ohio C. C. 531. The court said that the purpose of regulating the speed is to reduce the probability of accident in the streets of the city, and that but for the regulation as to lamps and gongs automobiles could run with more impunity at night than in the daytime because in such case their location and speed could not well be observed by the officers of the law. The court relied, in part, upon a decision in Bergman v. St. Louis, 1. M. & S. R. Co. 88 Mo. 678, where it was held that an ordinance purporting to regulate the speed of trains in city limits was not invalidated because the 2d section had reference to their equipment.

It is not essential to a conviction under an information charging the defendant with driving a motor tricycle at a greater speed than was reasonable and proper having regard to traffic, in violation of art. IV. § 1, of the order of 1896, providing that the driver of a light locomotive when used on a highway shall not drive "at any speed shall, upon conviction, be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than twenty-five (25) dollars nor more than two hundred (200) dollars, and may be confined in the county jail not to exceed three (3) months, or both, in the discretion of the court." The 4th section of the act provides that "in any action brought to recover any damages, either to person or property, caused by running such automobiles or vehicles at a greater rate of speed than designated in § one (1), the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be deemed to have made out a prima facie case, by showing the fact of such injury, and that such person or persons driving such automobiles or vehicles was, at the time of the injury, running the same at a speed in excess of that mentioned in § one (1)." Sess. Laws 1903, pp. 301, 302.

Messrs. George Shumway and W. T. Church, for appellant:

The act to regulate the speed of automobiles and other horseless conveyances, approved May 13, 1903, is unconstitutional, as it unjustly discriminates against horseless conveyances in favor of conveyances propelled by horses.

Const. art. 2, § 2; Bailey v. People, 190 Ill. 28, 54 L. R. A. 838, 83 Am. St. Rep. 116, 60 N. E. 98; Gillespie v. People, 188 Ill. 176, that is greater than is reasonable and proper having regard to the traffic on the highway," that the traffic on the highway shall have been interrupted, interfered with, incommoded, or affected by reason of the speed at which the defendant drove his tricycle, as the words "having regard to the traffic on the highway" mean having regard to the traffic on the road, and not having regard to the traffic in the immediate vicinity of the light locomotive. Smith v. Boon, 84 L. T. N. S. 593, 49 Week. Rep. 480.

The presence of passengers on the highway is not necessary to the conviction of the driver of a motor car for driving it at an excessive rate of speed "to the common danger of passengers" contrary to art. IV. § 1, of the light locomotives on highways order of 1896 which provides that the driver of a light locomotive when used on a highway shall not drive "at any speed greater than is reasonable and proper having regard to the traffic on the highway, or so as to endanger the life or limb of any person, or to the common danger of passengers." Mayhew v. Sutton, 71 L. J. K. B. N. S. 46, 86 L. T. N. S. 18, 50 Week. Rep. 216.

c. Prohibited hours and places.

In Ex parte Berry (Cal.) 82 Pac. 44, the court, acting upon its judicial knowledge of the danger to traffic involved in the use of automobiles on country roads, especially in the nighttime, held that, under present conditions, a county ordinance prohibiting 52 L. R. A. 283, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176, 58 N. E. 1007; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206, 35 N. E. 62; Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869, 7 N. E. 631.

Section 2 of the act to regulate the speed of automobiles, approved May 13, 1903, is unconstitutional, as the provisions thereof are not expressed in the title.

Const. art. 4, § 13; Allardt v. People, 197 Ill. 501, 64 N. E. 533.

The verdict rendered in this case is the result of passion and prejudice against automobiles, existing by common knowledge in rural communities, and should, for that reason, be reversed.

Chicago City R. Co. v. Fennimore, 78 Ill. App. 478; Robinson v. Webb, 73 Ill. App. 569.

Messrs. William J. Graham and Henry E. Burgess, for appellee:

The supreme court does not have jurisdiction of this cause for the reason that the question of the constitutionality of the act regulating the speed of automobiles has not been raised in a proper manner.

Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Spring Valley, 65 Ill. App. 580; Pearson v. Zehr, 125 Ill. 576, 18 N. E. 204; Nall v. Wabash, St. L.

& P. R. Co. 97 Mo. 68, 10 S. W. 613; Shepherd v. Sullivan, 166 Ill. 78, 46 N. E. 720; Woodruff v. Kellyville Coal Co. 182 Ill. 480, 55 N. E. 550; Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Compton, 46 Ill. App. 34; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Burgess, 94 Ill. App. 337; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Meech, 163 Ill. 305, 45 N. E. 290; Vane v. Evanston, 150 Ill. 616, 37 N. E. 901; Waidner v. Pauly, 37 Ill. App. 278; Chicago v. Seben, 62 Ill. App. 248; Lechleiter v. Broehl, 17 Ill. App. 490.

If a law is general in its application to a certain class, and there is some reasonable ground for the classification, such a law is not class legislation.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 479-481; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 32, 28 L. ed. 925, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 29, 32 L. ed. 586, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Allen v. Pioneer-Press Co. 40 Minn. 117, 3 L. R. A. 532, 12 Am. St. Rep. 707, 41 N. W. 936; Gartside v. East St. Louis, 43 Ill. 47; Sanitary District v. Bernstein, 175 Ill. 215, 51 N. E. 720; Lasher v. People, 183 Ill. 226, 47 L. R. A. 802, 75 Am. St. Rep. 103, 53 N. E. 663; Nagle v. Augusta, 5 Ga. 546; Brimm v. Jones, 11 Utah, 200, 29 L. R. A. 97, 39 Pac. 825.

Laws regulating the speed of automobiles are valid.

the running of automobiles on country roads between sunset and sunrise is not unreasonable. The court said that if the use of automobiles gradually becomes more common there may come a time when such an ordinance would be unreasonable.

Although plenary power has been conferred on the South Park Commissioners of Chicago over the parks and boulevards, they are not given the right to exclude automobiles by name from the parks and boulevards. People v. Kipley, 18 Nat. Corp. Rep. 874. The court said that the order in question was void in singling out automobiles by name, and placing them under the ban of outlawry, when, as a matter of common observation and scientific knowledge, there is less danger in propelling an automobile than there is in driving a horse and buggy.

A petition for a writ of mandamus to compel a turnpike company to permit the petitioner to operate and use his automobile over its turnpike road must, in any event, show that the petitioner has complied with the requirements essential, under Pa. act April 23, 1903, to the right to use or operate automobiles on the highways. Bertels v. Laurel Run Turnp. Co. 31 Pa. Co. Ct. 129.

As an additional reason for the decision, the court in the last case referred to the fact that no rate of toll for automobiles had been fixed by statute, and that none had been established by rule or regulation of the turnpike company. The court also expressed the opinion that it was proper for the turnpike company, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to exclude automobiles from its road.

d. Regulation of automobiles used for hire.

Electric carriages or automobiles rented for hire, or use in carrying passengers in the city of Washington, are not within the 26th section of the license law of the District of Columbia, passed by the late legislative assembly and approved on August 23, 1871, requiring the proprietors of "hack-cabs, omnibuses, and other vehicles for transporting passengers for hire" to pay annually a certain fee. The decision is upon the ground that the term "other vehicles" was intended manifestly to embrace only such other vehicles as were ejusdem generis with those specifically named, and that at the time of the passage of the act automobiles were not in use. The court said that if they had been known and in use at that time, there would have been good ground for assuming that they were within the terms of the act, although not specifically mentioned therein. Washington Electric Vehicle Transp. Co. v. District of Columbia, 19 App. D. C. 462.

A municipal ordinance making it unlawful for the driver of an omnibus, automobile, or locomobile to refuse to convey any passenger within the city is a reasonable exercise of the power conferred upon the municipality to regulate the business of Thies v. Thomas, 77 N. Y. Supp. 276; Hinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 105 Wm. St. Rep. 249, 77 S. W. 196.

The legislature of a state may enact any and all laws on any and every subject, unless restricted by the delegation of the power to the general government, or its power has been limited by the Federal or state Constitution.

Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrington, 92 Ill. 157; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Reidy, 6 Ill. 43; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. People, 91 Ill. 452; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Peoples, 92 Ill. 101, 34 Am. Rep. 112; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 120 Ill. 67, 12 N. E. 207; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Beaver, 96 Ill. App. 558.

Unless the provisions claimed not to be embraced in the title contain matter incongruous, and have no proper connection or relation to the title, they will not be void as not being embraced therein.

People ex rel. Longenecker v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 565, 27 N. E. 217; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454; Hudnall v. Ham, 172 Ill. 76, 49 N. E. 985; Boehm v. Hertz, 182 Ill. 154, 48 L. R. A. 575, 54 N. E. 973.

The law does not impute to persons riding in a buggy any negligence of which the driver of the buggy is guilty, unless such driving such vehicles. Fonsler v. Atlantic City, 70 N. J. L. 125, 56 Atl. 119.

It is within the power of Atlantic City to pass ordinances regulating the business of driving omnibuses, automobiles, or locomobiles, and fixing the fares to be charged. Ibid. This was a prosecution for the violation of an ordinance passed in the exercise of such power. The defendant seems to have been the driver of an omnibus.

c. Restrictions as to transportation of gasoline carried by automobiles.

It was held in The Texas, 134 Fed. 909, that gasoline contained in the metal tank of an automobile which was transported on a passenger vessel was freight, within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4472 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3050), prohibiting passenger steamers, except in certain cases and under certain restrictions, from carrying as freight the products of petroleum or other like explosive fluids; and it was further held, upon the testimony of experts in the case, that an automobile whose motive power is furnished by a gasoline engine operated by a series of intermittent explosions induced by the passing of an electric spark through a compressed mixture of gasoline and air in the cylinders carries "fire," within the meaning of the provision of that section (as amended by act of February 20, 1901, chap. 386) excepting from its operation gasoline or any of the products of petroleum when carried by I.L.R.A.(N.S.) person is in some manner at fault for such negligence.

Landon v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 92 Ill. App. 216; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dedloff, 92 Ill. App. 547; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wall, 93 Ill. App. 411; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Piper, 165 Ill. 325, 46 N. E. 186; Hebard v. Mabie, 98 Ill. App. 545; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Reidy, 66 Ill. 43.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. It is strenuously insisted by the appellee that this court has no jurisdiction to entertain this cause, and that the appeal from the judgment of the circuit court should have been taken to the appellate court. The ground upon which the cause is brought by the appellant to this court is that the constitutionality of the act regulating the speed of automobiles, etc., set forth in the statement preceding this opinion, is involved in the cause. The appellee contends that, inasmuch as the constitutionality of the act was not challenged or questioned by the appellant upon the trial below, nor until the written reasons were filed in support of the motion for new trial, the record is not in such condition as to present to this court the question of the constitution-ality of a motor vehicle (commonly known as automobiles) using the same as a source of motive power: Provided that all fire, if any, in such vehicles or automobiles be extinguished before entering the vessel, and be not relighted until after the vehicle shall have left the same. The vessel was accordingly held liable to the penalty prescribed by § 4499 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3060), it appearing that the automobile was run on and off from the vessel under its own power.

It is to be noted, with reference to this case, that the scientific testimony of two witnesses was taken on behalf of the government, and none on behalf of the other party; and the decision appears to be founded upon, and therefore to be limited by, the testimony of these experts, which was directed not only to the mode of the operation of the engine, but also to the scientific question whether the mode of operation involved the generation of fire. It is a question, therefore, how far this case would be a precedent for a subsequent case, arising under the same statute, upon a different state of expert testimony.

III. Statutory duty of operator of automobile.

The opinion in CHRISTY v. ELLIOTT contains a valuable discussion of various questions that arise under statutes imposing special duties upon operators of automobiles toward other travelers encountered on the tionality of the act. In the investigation of this subject, we have entertained much doubt as to whether the case is properly here, and think there is much force in the position of appellee.

This court has held that the constitutionality of a statute may be raised by demurrer to the declaration. Shepherd v. Sullivan, 166 Ill. 78, 46 N. E. 720; Woodruff v. Kellyville Coal Co. 182 Ill. 480, 55 N. E. 550. Here, however, no demurrer was filed to the declaration. This court has also held that the constitutionality of a statute may be raised by an objection to evidence offered under it. Pearson v. Zehr, 125 Ill. 573, 18 N. E. 204. Here no objection was made to the introduction of any testimony by the appellant upon the ground that the statute was unconstitutional, so far as the bill of exceptions shows. After the verdict was rendered, however, the appellant made a motion for new trial, and filed fifteen written reasons in support thereof. The fourteenth reason was as follows: "The court erred in the giving of instruction for plaintiff No. 1, as the act of 1903 to regulate the speed of automobiles is void." The fifteenth reason was as follows: "The court erred in the giving of plaintiff's instruction No. 4, as § 2 of the act of 1903 to regulate the speed of automobiles is void." The fifteenth pressed in the title of said act." The position of the appellee is that the question of the constitutionality of the act could not be raised for the first time on motion for new trial, inasmuch as no ruling had been asked of the trial court upon this question during the progress of the trial. Appellant, however, excepted to the giving of instruction numbered 1 and 4 in behalf of the appellee. Instruction numbered 1 told the jury that the statutes of this state provided that it shall be unlawful for any person to drive, run, conduct, or propel any automobile whether propelled by steam, gasoline, or electricity, or any other mechanical power at a rate of speed in excess of 15 miles an hour upon any road or highway in the state unless the same was within some village or city where such speed was allowed by ordinance; and also instructed them that they found from the evidence that, at the time the injuries in question occurred, the defendant was driving an automobile at a rate of speed in excess of 15 miles an hour upon a public highway as described in the declaration, and that, on account of the defendant so driving such automobile, the plaintiff was injured, as alleged in the first count of the declaration, and was then and there exercising reasonable care and caution in that behalf, they should find for the highway. See also Murphy v. Wait, 102 App. Div. 121, 92 N. Y. Supp. 253, infra, V.

Notwithstanding the New York statute (Laws 1890, chap. 568, p. 1206, as amended by Laws 1903, chap. 625, p. 1418) which authorizes the operator of an automobile, in the absence of any signal, to pass a vehicle drawn by a horse, at the rate of 8 miles an hour without stopping, he is, nevertheless, bound to take notice of the conditions before him: and, if it is apparent that by any particular method of proceeding he is liable to work an injury either by frightening the horse or colliding with the vehicle, it is his duty to adopt some other and safer method of proceeding if with reasonable care and prudence he can do so. Davis v. Maxwell, 96 N. Y. Supp. 45.

An automobile coming up behind a vehicle drawn by horses is "approaching" it, within the meaning of Mass. Stat. 1903, chap. 473, § 7, p. 360, requiring the driver of an automobile, approaching any vehicle drawn by a horse or horses, to "operate, manage, and control such automobile . . . in such manner as to exercise every reasonable precaution to prevent the frightening of such horse or horses, and to insure the safety and protection of any person riding or driving the same." Gifford v. Jennings (Mass.) 76 N. E. 233. Section 10 of the foregoing act requires that every automobile shall be provided with a "suitable bell, horn, or other means of signaling." It was further held in this case that the jury were warranted by the evidence in finding that the defendant was negligent in not sounding his horn as he approached from behind the plaintiff's vehicle, and that, by reason of such negligence, he was responsible for the plaintiff's horse kicking and breaking the plaintiff's leg.

IV. Common-law duty and liability of operator of automobile.

The operator of an automobile and a pedestrian have reciprocal rights and duties, and, although each has the right to pass and repass, neither must so negligently exercise that right as to injure the other. Hennessey v. Taylor (Mass.) 76 N. E. 224.

In Mason v. West, 61 App. Div. 40, 70 N. Y. Supp. 478, the court said that the use of the streets must become extended to meet the modern innovations of rapid use, and that it was not meant to suggest that an automobile, or any other of the present means of conveyance, is an unlawful or improper user.

In Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown (Ind.) 74 N. E. 615, the action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries, and injuries to a horse and buggy, alleged to have been the result of defendant's negligence in unreasonably and unnecessarily speeding, and refusing to reduce the speed of his automobile, which approached the plaintiff's rig from the front while the latter was on a narrow approach to a bridge guarded on either side by a railing extending for a distance of 230 feet to a cross street. The accident which gave rise plaintiff, etc. The exception taken to the giving of this instruction raised the question whether the instruction correctly stated the law or not, and, if the act limiting the speed of automobiles to 15 miles an hour was unconstitutional, then the instruction did not state the law correctly. Instruction numbered 4, given in behalf of appellee, told the jury that, if they believed from the evidence that the appellant was driving the automobile along the public highway, and that it appeared to him, or might by the exercise of reasonable diligence on his part have appeared to him, that the team of mules drawing the conveyance in which the plaintiff was riding was about to become frightened; and if they further found that the defendant did not thereupon cause the automobile to come to a full stop until said team had passed, and that plaintiff was himself exercising reasonable care and caution, and was injured by reason of the failure of the defendant to bring the automobile to a full stop,—then the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for the loss and damage sustained by him by reason of such injuries, etc. The exception to the giving of this instruction raised the question whether or not it stated the law correctly, and, if § 2 of the act is unconstitutional for the alleged reason that the subject-matter of the section is not expressed in the title of the act, then instruction numbered 4 did not state the law correctly. If a demurrer to a declaration which sets up the provisions of a statute under which suit is brought raises the question of the constitutionality of such statute, it would seem that exception taken to an instruction based upon the provisions of a statute would also raise the question whether the statute was constitutional or not. We find in the record, among the reasons in favor of the motion for new trial, two reasons which expressly specify the unconstitutionality of the statute as grounds for challenging the correctness of the court's action in giving two of the instructions which were specifically excepted to by the appellant. We are inclined, therefore, to the opinion that the validity of the statute is involved upon the record.

2. The 1st section of the statute is challenged as being unconstitutional, upon the alleged ground that it is class legislation, because, as is insisted, it unjustly discriminates against automobiles and other horseless conveyances, and therefore against manufacturers of the same. In other words, appellant contends that the owners of automobiles or horseless conveyances, and drivers of the same, are entitled to the same rights and privileges under the law as the

to the action occurred in May, 1902, and the complaint alleged, inter alia, that the defendant's automobile was "12 feet long, 5 feet wide, 8½ feet high, had a canopy top, elevated seats for passengers, was painted red, propelled by an exploding gasoline engine, made a great noise, was the first machine of the kind in the community." There were other allegations indicative of the fearsome appearance of the machine, and suggesting that to the mind of the pleader the term "devil wagon" is not inappropriately applied to vehicles of this class. The court thus defined the respective rights and duties of one driving a horse and one operating an automobile who meet on the public highway: "It cannot be said, as matter of law, that appellant was guilty of negligence for using an automobile as a means of conveyance on the public highway. The law does not denounce motor carriages as such on the public ways. For so long as they are constructed and propelled in a manner consistent with the use of highways, and are calculated to subserve the public as a beneficial means of transportation, with reasonable safety to travelers by ordinary modes, they have an equal right with other vehicles in common use to occupy the streets and roads. Because novel and unusual in appearance, and for that reason likely to frighten horses unaccustomed to see them, is no reason for prohibiting their use. In all human activities the law keeps up with improvement and progress brought about by discovery and invention; and, in respect to highways, if the introduction of a new contrivance for transportation purposes, conducted with due care, is met with inconvenience, and even incidental injury, to those using ordinary modes, there can be no recovery, provided the contrivance is compatible with the general use and safety of the road. It is, therefore, the adaptation and use, rather than the form or kind of conveyance, that concerns the courts. It is improper to say that the driver of the horse has rights in the road superior to the driver of the automobile. Both have the right to use the easement, and each is equally restricted in the exercise of his rights by the corresponding rights of the other. Each is required to regulate his own use by the observance of ordinary care and caution to avoid receiving injury, as well as inflicting injury upon the other. And in this the quantum of care required is to be estimated by the exigencies of the particular situation; that is, by the place, presence, or absence of other vehicles and travelers; whether the horse driven is wild or gentle; whether the conveyance and power used are common or new to the road; the known tendency of any feature to frighten animals, etc."

The court, in the last case, quotes with approval the following passages from the opinion of Cooley, Ch. J., in Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 217, 22 Am. Rep. 522, an action to recover for an injury occasioned by a horse taking fright from a traction engine operated on the highway: "A owners or drivers of any other vehicles, and that any law which deprives them of such rights, or that restricts and limits such rights, is unconstitutional, as being in conflict with § 2 of article 2 of the state Constitution, which provides as follows: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." We are of the opinion that the act is not unconstitutional for the reason thus stated. The passage of the act was clearly within the power of the legislature, because it is a police regulation. The legislature is entitled to exercise the police power wherever the public health or comfort, or the safety or welfare of society requires it to do so. We have said: "The state inherently possesses, and the general assembly may lawfully exercise, such power of restraint upon private rights as may be found to be necessary and appropriate to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. This power is known as the police power of the state. In the exercise of this power the general assembly may, by valid enactments—i. e., 'due process of law'—prohibit all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society, even though the prohibition invade the right of liberty or property of an individual." Bailey v. People, 190 Ill. 28, 54 L. R. A. 838, 83 Am. St. Rep. 116, 60 N. E. 98; Booth v. People, 186 Ill. 43, 50 L. R. A. 762, 78 Am. St. Rep. 229, 57 N. E. 798; Ruhstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 49 L. R. A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, 57 N. E. 41.

The act in question was designed to secure the safety of travelers upon the public highway. It is a matter of common knowledge that an automobile is likely to frighten horses. It is propelled by a power within itself, is of unusual shape and form, is capable of a high rate of speed, and produces puffing noise when in motion. All this makes such a horseless vehicle a source of danger to persons traveling upon the highway in vehicles drawn by horses.

Such laws as the act here in question have never been regarded as class legislation simply because they affect one class, and not another, inasmuch as they affect all members of the same class alike, and the classification involved in the law is founded upon a reasonable basis. "If the laws be otherwise unobjectionable, all that can be required in these cases is that they be general in their application to the class or locality to which they apply; and they are then public in character, and of their propriety and policy the legislature must judge." Cooley Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 479-481. In Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 32, 28 L. ed. 925, highway established for the general benefit of passage and traffic must admit of new methods of use whenever it is found that the general benefit requires them."

One operating an automobile on the public highway owes to persons driving horses thereon the duty carefully to control and operate the machine so as to avoid causing needless injury; and this duty requires him to take into account the character of his machine, its general appearance, the noise accompanying its operation, its new use in the vicinity, its tendency to frighten horses, and, from such and all other pertinent considerations, to proceed with that speed and caution which reasonable care requires according to the place and presence of other travelers. Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown (Ind.) 74 N. E. 615.

While automobiles are lawful means of conveyance, and have equal rights upon the public roads with horses and carriages, their use should be accompanied with that degree of prudence in management and consideration for the rights of others which is consistent with their safety. If the operator of an automobile knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care may know, that his machine has so far excited a horse as to render the animal dangerous and unmanageable, it is his duty to stop the automobile, and take such other steps for the safety of those in the vehicle drawn by the horse as ordinary prudence may suggest. Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249, 77 S. W. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

196. This seems to be laid down as the duty of the operator of an automobile at common law. So far as appears, there were no statutory provisions on the subject.

While an automobile is a lawful means of conveyance, and has equal rights upon the road with a horse and carriage, its use cannot be lawfully countenanced, unless accompanied with that degree of prudence in management and consideration for the rights of others which is consistent with safety. Knight v. Lanier, 69 App. Div. 454, 74 N. Y. Supp. 999.

In Murphy v. Wait, 102 App. Div. 121, 92 N. Y. Supp. 253, an action for injuries resulting from the fright of a horse at an automobile, the common-law rule with respect to the right to use the highway was declared as follows: "The rule of the common law is, and always has been, that while a person might travel the highway with a conveyance or a loaded vehicle liable to frighten horses, yet he must, while doing so, exercise reasonable care to avoid accident and injury to others traveling along such highway."

In the last case Williams, J. said "Since the automobile has come into use upon our streets and highways these accidents have been common, and actions to recover damages resulting therefrom have been frequent. These machines may be used on the public highways, but horses will also continue to be used for a time at least. Both may be legally used as a motive power in public travel. Some horses are

5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "Class legislation discriminating against some and favoring others is prohibited, but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment," which amendment referred to by the court is the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "no state shall . . . deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." "Laws public in their objects may be confined to a particular class of persons, if they be general in their application to the class to which they apply, provided the distinction is not arbitrary, but rests upon some reason of public policy growing out of the condition or business of such class." Allen v. Pioneer-Press Co. 40 Minn. 120, 3 L. R. A. 532, 12 Am. St. Rep. 707, 41 N. W. 936. In Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 29, 32 L. ed. 566, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208, it was said: "The concluding clause of the 1st section of the 14th Amendment simply requires that such legislation shall treat alike all persons brought under subjection to it. The equal protection of the law is afforded when this is accomplished. . . . The discriminations which are open to objection,' . . . 'are those where persons engaged in the same business are subjected to different restrictions, or are held entitled to different privileges, under the same conditions. It is only then that the discrimination can be said to impair that equal right which all can claim in the enforcement of the law.'" The statute in controversy in the case at bar certainly applies to all drivers of automobiles, without distinction, and is therefore general as to that class; and, for the reason that such horseless vehicles constitute a source of danger to travelers upon the highway, it cannot be said that the classification is not a reasonable one.

In Garstide v. East St. Louis, 43 Ill. 47, this court, in discussing an ordinance requiring certain teamsters engaged in hauling coal through the city to pay a certain license, said (p. 50): "From the extent and character of his business, these teams must have passed and repassed almost constantly. This then, renders the repair of the streets more expensive and more necessary, from the fact that his vehicles seem to be large and heavy. For the comfort and convenience of the citizens of the place, as well as persons not residing therein, but traveling on its streets, it is necessary that they should be repaired and kept in good condi-frightened when they meet these machines, and it is the duty of persons running the machines to exercise reasonable care to avoid accident when horses become frightened. It is not pleasant to be obliged to slow down these rapid running machines to accommodate persons driving or riding slow country horses that do not readily become accustomed to the innovation. It is more agreeable to send the machine along, and let the horse get on as best he may; but it is well to understand, if this course is adopted, and accident and injury result, that the automobile owner may be called upon to respond in damages for such injuries."

Freedman, J., in a charge to the jury in Thies v. Thomas, 77 N. Y. Supp. 276 (an action to recover damages caused by the death of a boy between six and seven years of age, who was run over by the defendant's automobile), thus defined the duty of the driver of an automobile on a city street: "No owner or operator of an automobile is, therefore, exempt from liability for collision in a public street by simply showing that at the time of the accident he did not run at a rate of speed exceeding the limit allowed by law or the ordinances. On the contrary, . . . he still remains bound to anticipate that he may meet persons at any point in a public street, and he must keep a proper lookout for them, and keep his machine under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with another person also using proper care and caution. If necessary, he shall slow up, and even stop. No blowing of a horn or of a whistle, nor the ringing of a bell or gong, without an attempt to slow the speed, is sufficient, if the circumstances at a given point demand that the speed should be slackened, or the machine be stopped, and such a course is practicable, or, in the exercise of ordinary care and caution proportionate to the circumstances, should have been practicable. The true test is, that he must use all the care and caution which a careful and prudent driver would have exercised under the same circumstances. On the other hand, every such operator of an automobile has the right to assume and to act upon the assumption, that every person whom he meets will also exercise ordinary care and caution according to the circumstances, and will not negligently or recklessly expose himself to danger, but, rather, make an attempt to avoid it. It is only when such an operator has had time to realize, or by the exercise of a proper lookout should have realized, that a person whom he meets is in a somewhat helpless condition, or in a position of disadvantage, and therefore seemingly unable to avoid the coming automobile, that the operator is required to exercise increased exertion to avoid a collision. This applies peculiarly when children of tender years are met."

One, whether an adult or infant, has the right to assume that a person in charge of an automobile will exercise care, and respect the rights of pedestrians, when he has occation." And the ordinance, for the reasons stated, was upheld in that case. In Sanitary District v. Bernstein, 175 Ill. 215, 51 N. E. 720, this court held that a discrimination between different classes of litigants, which was merely arbitrary in its nature, is a denial of the right of litigants to equal protection of the law; but that, if there is a reasonable ground of distinction, the legislature has discretion to impose reasonable conditions or restrictions, which it deems in furtherance of justice. In Lasher v. People, 183 Ill. 226, 47 L. R. A. 802, 75 Am. St. Rep. 103, 55 N. E. 663, it was said by this court (p. 231 of 183 Ill.): "The legislature have power to form classes for the purpose of police regulation, if they do not arbitrarily discriminate between persons in substantially the same situation. The discrimination must rest upon some reasonable ground of difference." In Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 29, 32 L. ed. 586, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "When the calling, or profession, or business is attended with danger, or requires a certain degree of scientific knowledge, upon which others must rely, then legislation properly steps in to impose conditions upon its exercise." It is certainly true that the business of the man who operates and propels an automobile along the public highway, called a "chauffeur," is such a business as is above alluded to. It is attended with danger, and requires a degree of scientific knowledge upon which others must rely. These horseless vehicles are certainly capable of being propelled at a greater rate of speed than any ordinary vehicles known to the traveling public prior to their invention, and, if they may travel at any rate of speed of which they are capable, persons injured would have no remedy, except for such negligence as the common law gives a remedy for.

Statutes regulating the speed of persons traveling upon public highways have been upon the statute books of this state for many years, and have never been regarded as invalid. A statute of this state provides that no person driving any carriage upon any public highway shall run his horses or carriage or permit the same to run, etc. 3 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 1896, 2d ed. p. 3604, chap. 121. A statute of this state provides that it shall not be lawful for the driver of any carriage used for the purpose of conveying passengers for hire to leave the horse attached thereto while passengers remain therein, without making such horses fast, etc. Id. p. 3605, § 157. It is provided by statute in this state that persons traveling with carriages and meeting on any public sion to turn the corner of a street. Due care in the operation of an automobile requires, under such circumstances, that it shall be slowed down and operated with care. At such place the operator is bound to take notice that people will be at the crossing or entering thereon; and this obligation upon the part of the operator is one which the pedestrian has the right to assume will be observed. Buscher v. New York Transp. Co. 106 App. Div. 493, 94 N. Y. Supp. 798.

A guest or visitor of the owner of a private lane, tacitly open to the public use, who is operating an automobile through the lane, owes the duty of exercising reasonable care not to injure a person, who is a licensee, driving a horse and carriage through the lane as a short cut between two highways to his home. Knight v. Lanier, 69 App. Div. 454, 74 N. Y. Supp. 999.

One running an automobile is bound to take notice of a person standing in the roadway, conversing with a friend sitting in a carriage, and to use care not to injure him. Kathmeyer v. Mehl (N. J. L.) 60 Atl. 40.

Plaintiff in an action for injuries occasioned by the fright of the plaintiff's horse at the defendant's automobile as the latter was attempting to pass must show that she used ordinary care to avoid being injured. Nadeau v. Sawyer, 73 N. H. 70, 59 Atl. 369.

It is proper, upon the question of due 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

care on the part of plaintiff, who was injured by reason of her horse taking fright at the defendant's automobile, which approached from behind and attempted to pass her, to read to the jury the provisions of a statute to the effect that, if a person traveling on a highway is informed that another person traveling in the same direction desires to pass him, he shall turn to the right if there is sufficient room to enable him to do so, where there is evidence tending to prove that, as the defendant approached, he gave warning of his presence by sounding a horn, and that the plaintiff drove along the highway for some distance without turning out, although there was sufficient room to the right of the traveled part of the highway to have enabled her to have done so with safety. Ibid.

There is no imperative rule of law requiring a pedestrian, when lawfully using the public ways, to be continuously looking or listening to ascertain if auto cars are approaching, under the penalty that, upon the failure so to do, if he is injured, his own negligence must be conclusively presumed. Hennessey v. Taylor (Mass.) 76 N. E. 224.

V. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence upon particular state of facts.

Whether one operating an automobile on the public highway was guilty of negligence rendering him liable to a person who highway shall turn to the right. Id. p. 3004, ¶ 153. A statute of this state also provides that persons in charge of any steam engine propelled over the highways of the state by steam power shall stop the same whenever they meet persons going in the opposite direction on said highways with horses or other animals, until the latter shall have passed by. Id. p. 3628, ¶ 272. While these enactments may not establish the constitutionality of the law under consideration, they at least show that the legislative department of the government has supposed that such legislation is not inhibited by the fundamental law; and the fact that the validity of such laws has not been questioned for a long series of years is no light consideration in passing upon the validity of a law. Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrington, 92 Ill. 157. This court has recognized the validity of ordinances regulating the speed of trains, and of statutes requiring railroads to fence their tracks, and to bring their trains to a full stop before crossing another railroad. It has been held that "the safety of the traveling community demands that these police regulations shall be enforced." Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. People, 91 Ill. 452; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Peoples, 92 Ill. 97, 34 Am. Rep. 112; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Reidy, 66 Ill. 43; Cairo & St.

L. R. Co. v. Warrington, 92 Ill. 157; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 120 Ill. 687, 12 N. E. 207.

3. Section 2 of the act in question is said to be in conflict with § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution, which provides that "no act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act, which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed." The 2d section provides that the person driving an automobile shall cause the same to come to a full stop whenever it shall appear that any horse driven or ridden by any person upon any street, road, or highway is about to become frightened by the approach of any such automobile, until such horse or horses have passed. The title of the act is "An Act to Regulate the Speed of Automobiles and Other Horseless Conveyances upon the Public Streets, Roads, and Highways of the State of Illinois." It is said that speed means action, and is directly opposed to stopping, which is inaction, and that therefore stopping a machine does not come within the meaning of regulating its speed. The objection is hypercriticism. Section 13 of article 4 of the Constitution was intended to put an end to cerwas injured in consequence of a horse becoming frightened at the automobile and overturning the wagon is a question for the jury, where it appears that the accident occurred after the taking effect of N. Y. Laws 1903, chap. 625, § 3, which provides that every person driving an automobile or motor vehicle shall, at request or signal by putting up the hand from a person driving or riding a restive horse, cause the automobile immediately to stop and to remain stationary, and, upon request, shall stop the running of the engine so long as may be necessary to allow the horse to pass; and the plaintiff's testimony tends to show that when the automobile came in view the horse was afraid, that the plaintiff's husband got out of the wagon, motioned the automobile with his hand to stop, went to the horse's head and took him by the bit, that the automobile stopped once, and then started along towards the horse, that, as it approached him the horse became unmanageable, reared, and plunged, and the plaintiff's husband struggled to control him, and halloed "Whoa" continually, that the automobile nevertheless was kept right along on its course, and passed along near the horse, not turning away from him at all, and that the horse then forced the wagon into the ditch, where it was turned over and the plaintiff thrown out and injured. Murphy v. Wait, 102 App. Div. 121, 92 N. Y. Supp. 253.

Whether the owner of an automobile, having stopped at the request of a driver whose horse was frightened by the approach of the machine, was guilty of negligence in starting up his machine again while the driver was holding the horse by the head, and while the horse was still frightened, is a question for the jury. Knight v. Lanier, 69 App. Div. 454, 74 N. Y. Supp. 909.

In Mason v. West, 61 App. Div. 40, 70 N. Y. Supp. 478, it was held that there was some evidence justifying the conclusion reached by the municipal court of the city of Rochester, that there was negligence on the part of the defendant in operating an automobile upon a street of the city, rendering him liable for injuries caused by the running away of a horse which was frightened at the machine,—the testimony of the plaintiff tending to show that the machine was of somewhat crude and unusual construction, propelled by steam generated by a gasoline burner; that it gave forth a loud puffing noise, and could be heard for two blocks; that the odor was pronounced; that, as the carriage ran along, there was a humming sound from its engine; that steam or smoke issued from the exhaust; that other teams had been frightened by it; that at the time of the accident it was passing the plaintiff's horse at the speed of 10 or 12 miles an hour, and did not slacken until the horse, which was unattended, but fastened by an iron weight, became frightened. It was therefore held that, as there was evidence justifying the conclusion reached by the municipal court, tain vicious legislation, but its design is not to embarrass legislation by making laws unnecessarily restrictive in their scope and operation. People ex rel. Longenecker v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 565, 27 N. E. 217. Limitation of the speed of automobiles upon the public streets, roads, and highways is for the protection of travelers and drivers of horse-drawn vehicles upon such highways. The requirement that the automobile driver shall, under certain circumstances, bring his machine to a full stop, is reasonably connected with the purpose of such protection, as expressed in the title. The cessation of the speed of the automobile altogether, or its reduction to a scarcely perceptible movement, is not incongruous with the title of the act. This provision of the Constitution must receive a liberal construction. Unless the provision in an act contains matter incongruous with the title, or having no proper connection with or relation to the title, it will not be void as not embraced therein. Hudnall v. Ham, 172 Ill. 76, 49 N. E. 985. All matters are properly included in the act which are germane to the title. If all the provisions relate to the one subject, indicated in the title, and are parts of it, or incident to it, or reasonably connected with it, or in some reasonable sense auxiliary to the object in view, then the provision of the Constitution under consideration is obeyed. Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454; Boehm v. Hertz, 182 Ill. 154, 48 L. R. A. 575, 54 N. E. 973. The stopping of an automobile when a horse appears to be frightened, until such horse shall pass, is embraced within the subject of regulating the speed of automobiles, as indicated by the title. It cannot be said that the subject-matter of § 2 is not reasonably connected with the subject mentioned in the title of the act. The stoppage of an automobile until a frightened horse has passed it is certainly, in a reasonable sense, auxiliary to the object of regulating the speed of an automobile upon the public highway. We are of the opinion, therefore, that § 2 is not unconstitutional for the reason insisted upon.

4. Various errors are assigned upon the giving and refusal and modification of instructions by the trial court. In addition to the objection already mentioned to instruction numbered 4 given for appeal, that instruction is said to be erroneous upon the alleged ground that it requires the jury to find whether it "might, by the exercise of reasonable diligence on his part, have appeared to him [the automobile driver] that the team of mules drawing the conveyance in which plaintiff was riding was about to the county court had no power to reverse it as against the weight of evidence,—the judgment of reversal in this case having been rendered before the amendment of § 3063 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The driver of an automobile operated by a gasoline engine was guilty of negligence rendering him liable for injuries resulting from a horse taking fright at the machine and running away, where he drove the automobile towards the plaintiff at the rate of 20 miles an hour as the plaintiff was descending a narrow side-guarded approach to a bridge, whence he could not escape without proceeding forward to a cross street 230 feet distant from the bridge, and, notwithstanding that he saw that the horse was rearing and plunging, refused to stop or slow down so as to enable the plaintiff to reach the cross street. Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown (Ind.) 74 N. E. 615. Counsel for the defendant contended that, since it was not shown by the complaint that the defendant knew the cause of the fright of the plaintiff's horse, it failed to show negligence. Naturally, the court, in view of the circumstances, refused to take such contention seriously.

Whether the driver of a horse attached to plaintiff's cab was guilty of contributory negligence, and whether the act of the defendant's employee in backing an electric cab into the horse constituted negligence merely or a trespass, are for the jury upon evidence that upon the refusal of the driver of the plaintiff's cab to yield an advantageous position in a line of cabs at the demand of the driver of the electric cab, the latter cut in ahead of the plaintiff's cab and backed into the horse. Curley v. Electric Vehicle Co. 68 App. Div. 18, 74 N. Y. Supp. 35.

The questions of negligence and contributory negligence are for the jury, in an action for injuries to a street-car conductor who was struck by an automobile as he stepped from the forward end of his car to pass to the rear of the same, upon evidence that the car, which was bound south, had come to a full stop before the plaintiff alighted; that at that time the automobile was 15 to 18 feet distant, proceeding in a southerly direction at the rate of from 3 to 5 miles an hour, upon a line about 3 feet distant from the track on which the car was standing, with a clear space of from 12 to 15 feet between the track and the curb of the westerly sidewalk; that the operator of the automobile had a clear view ahead of him; and that the plaintiff, as he stepped from the car, looked in the direction in which the car was to proceed. Cesar v. Fifth Ave. Coach Co. 45 Misc. 331, 90 N. Y. Supp. 359. The court said that the plaintiff had a right to rely upon the exercise of reasonable care, on the part of drivers of vehicles, to avoid causing injuries to persons in the street, and that his failure to anticipate the omission of such care did not render him negligent.

A finding of negligence on the part of the driver of an electric cab is not just become frightened." Section 2 of the act says: "Whenever it shall appear that any horse driven or ridden by any person," etc., is about to become frightened, etc. The contention of counsel for appellant is that under the act it must appear to the driver of the automobile that the horse is about to be frightened, and that it was erroneous for the instruction to say if it might so appear "by the exercise of reasonable diligence." The instruction is not erroneous for the reason thus indicated. If it might appear to the driver of the automobile, by the exercise of reasonable diligence on his part, that the horse was about to become frightened, it would be his duty to stop, because otherwise he might shut his eyes, and claim that it did not appear to him that the horse was about to be frightened. The construction contended for would permit the driver of the automobile to wilfully evade the statute, and to take advantage of his own wilfulness or gross negligence. Such a person might purposely refuse to look toward an approaching team, and, when put upon the witness stand, could truthfully say that it did not appear to him to be frightened, because he did not look towards it. He is equally at fault when such circumstance might appear to him if he would exercise reasonable diligence to observe the condition of the team which he is passing. In Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249, 77 S. W. 196, which was an action for injuries sustained by plaintiff by his horse having been frightened by the defendant's automobile, which was alleged to have been running at an excessive rate of speed, the court of appeals of Kentucky said: "While automobiles are a lawful means of conveyance, and have equal rights upon the public roads with horses and carriages, their use should be accompanied with that degree of prudence in management, and consideration for the rights of others, which is consistent with their safety. If, as the jury found by their verdict, appellant knew, or could have known by the exercise of ordinary care, that the machine in his possession and under his control had so far excited appellee's horse as to render him dangerous and unmanageable, it was his duty to have stopped his automobile and taken such other steps for appellee's safety as ordinary prudence might suggest."

Objection is made to an instruction given for appellee because it told the jury "that, in determining the question as to whether the defendant was exercising reasonable care and diligence upon the occasion in question, you have a right to take into consideration the situation and condition of the parties."

fed where it appears that the plaintiff, before leaving the east curb to cross the street, saw the cab coming down on the west side of the street at a moderate pace, that when he reached the easterly street car track he looked south to see if a car was coming, and, seeing none, proceeded and walked or ran into the side of the cab and was thrown down and injured; notwithstanding that there is some evidence tending to show that the cab had changed its course before the plaintiff struck it. West v. New York Transp. Co. 94 N. Y. Supp. 426.

In Davis v. Maxwell, 96 N. Y. Supp. 45, it was held that the jury would not have been justified in finding that the defendant was guilty of negligence rendering him liable for injuries to plaintiff, occasioned by the plaintiff's horse swerving over a bank at the side of the highway as the defendant's automobile passed the plaintiff's vehicle, going in the opposite direction, if they believed the defendant's testimony, which was to the effect that, as he came over a rise in the highway, traveling eastward, he saw the plaintiff approaching from the west, and disconnected his engine from the running gear and ran down the incline by the force of gravity; that he was not going more than 3 or 4 miles an hour when he passed the plaintiff's vehicle; that, as he approached the plaintiff's horse, it exhibited no symptoms of restiveness or fright; that he was given no signal, and saw nothing whatever in the conduct of the driver or of the horse to indicate that the horse was likely to be frightened; that, as he came down the incline, he began to turn to the right a long distance before he came to the horse, and that when he got opposite the horse, he was some 5 or 6 feet north of it; that no exhibition of fear was manifested by the horse until just as the machine got opposite it, and the horse then made a sudden swerve, or jumped to the right. The jury were instructed generally that the sole question in the case was whether the automobile was being propelled at an unreasonable and improper rate of speed, or was being run along the highway with care and prudence, and in such a manner as that the defendant had shown care and given due attention to the rights of the plaintiff; but they were not instructed as to whether they might consider that defendant was running with care and prudence if he ran just as he testified he did. In consequence of such omission, the appellate court was apprehensive that the jury might have found that the defendant's testimony was true, and have rendered a verdict against him on the theory that he was guilty of negligence because he passed the plaintiff without stopping, and at a distance nearer than he need to have done. There was, however, another question in the case, which, in any event, required the reversal of the judgment for the plaintiff.

The questions of negligence and contributory negligence are for the jury, upon evidence that the defendant's automobile was operated at a very rapid rate of speed etc. The objection made to the instruction is its use of the words "the situation and condition of the parties." It is said that this authorized the jury to consider the wealth of the appellant and the poverty of the appellee, in assessing the damages. There is nothing in this point. There was no evidence of the financial condition of the parties on either side. The words used refer to the situation and condition of the parties at the time when the accident occurred, and in connection with the subjects of the exercise of care on the part of appellee, and of negligence on the part of the appellant. In other words, the language used refers to the general surroundings of the parties at the time of the accident. The instruction was based upon the common-law duty of drivers of automobiles upon the highways, and it was proper to authorize the jury to consider the probable effect of the movement of the automobile upon the horses driven upon the highway. Another instruction is objected to because it conditions the action of the jury upon their finding that the appellee "was then exercising reasonable care and diligence for his own safety, as explained in the instructions," etc. It is said that, by the use of the words "as explained in the instructions," the questions of care and diligence and of negligence were taken away from the jury and made questions for the court. Such is not the proper construction of the instruction. All the instructions left it to the jury to determine whether or not the appellee was in the exercise of due care for his own safety, and whether or not the appellant was guilty of negligence. The court has a right to explain to the jury what constitutes ordinary care, as a matter of law. The language in question has reference to such an explanation, and not to a decision by the court upon a question of fact.

Objection is made to an instruction given for the appellee which told the jury "that the negligence of William Parker in driving his team, if you believe from the evidence that he was negligent in that regard, would not amount to negligence upon the part of plaintiff, unless plaintiff was himself at fault, or by his conduct contributed to such negligence." This instruction was merely intended to lay down the rule that, where the injury is the result of the negligence of the defendant and that of a third person, the plaintiff may recover, if the negligence of the defendant was an efficient cause of the injury. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215, 32 N. E. 285. In other words, where a defendant is guilty of negligence which causes an injury, and the plaintiff is free from negligence con-westward on Fortieth street in the city of New York, and that, without slackening speed or giving any signal of its approach, it turned northward into Tenth avenue, and ran over and killed a bright, active boy eight years and three months old; it appearing from the testimony of two witnesses who crossed the street just ahead of the automobile, and who were obliged to hurry to get out of its way, that at that time the boy was about 15 feet north of the corner of Tenth avenue, standing on the sidewalk, and that, as the witnesses crossed the street, their backs were turned toward the automobile, and almost immediately they heard a scream, and turned and saw the rear wheel of the automobile passing over the boy's body, which was about 2 feet distant from the curb. Buscher v. New York Transp. Co. 106 App. Div. 493, 94 N. Y. Supp. 798.

In Polsky v. New York Transp. Co. 96 App. Div. 613, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1024, a judgment in favor of a pedestrian who was struck by an automobile was reversed, upon the ground that the findings that the defendant was negligent, and that the plaintiff was free from contributory negligence, were against the weight of evidence. Two of the judges dissented upon the ground that the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were for the jury. The decision depends so much upon the circumstances of the particular case that it is of little or no value as a precedent, except that the court apparently entirely disregarded as improbable the testimony of some of the witnesses to the effect that the automobile, which at the time of the accident was proceeding down Fifth avenue in New York city between Fifteenth and Fourteenth streets, was running at a rate of 15 miles an hour; it appearing that immediately after the accident the automobile was turned into a pile of dirt, and stopped within 2 or 3 feet of the place where the accident occurred. Presumably, the majority of the court would have held that the case should have been submitted to the jury if the circumstances had not, in their view, precluded the possibility of the correctness of the opinion of the witnesses as to the speed of the automobile.

One was not guilty of contributory negligence, precluding recovery for injuries from being struck by an automobile, because he was standing in the roadway conversing with a person who had stopped his wagon at the point where the accident happened. Kathmeyer v. Mehl (N. J. L.) 60 Atl. 40.

In Turck v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 95 N. Y. Supp. 1100, a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff in an action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's son, who was killed while crossing a railroad track in an automobile, was reversed upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain a finding that the deceased was free from contributory negligence. The only significance of the fact that the deceased was in an automobile at the time of the accident arose from the testimony of a person who Buting thereto, the fact that the negligence of a third party also contributed would relieve the defendant from liability for negligence. Another instruction is objected to as authorizing the jury to consider the effect of the injury upon the use of appellee's arm and leg; it being claimed by appellant that some of the witnesses testified that there was no injury to the leg, except the enlargement of the glands of the groin. There was, however, testimony of some of the witnesses for appellee, and of appellee himself, that his leg was injured by the accident, and the jury had a right to take into consideration such evidence.

The appellant asked the court to instruct the jury as follows: "The court instructs the jury that an owner of an automobile has the right to use the highway of this state, provided in using it he does not violate the law of the state." The court modified this instruction by changing it so that the last clause read as follows: "Provided in using it he uses reasonable care and caution for the safety of others, and does not violate the law of the state." The modification was proper. The declaration was framed upon three theories: First, that the machine was going at a speed in excess of the limit of 15 miles an hour fixed by the statute; second, that it was not brought to a full stop when the team showed fright; and, third, upon the ground of common-law negligence. The instruction, as offered, would tend to make the jury believe that, if there was no infraction of the statute, the appellant would not be liable, whereas, under the fifth and sixth counts, the appellant was liable if he was guilty of common-law negligence, or if he failed to perform his duty under the common law to avoid injury to the appellee. The modification of the instruction simply called attention to this common-law duty, in addition to the duty imposed by the statute.

Complaint is also made that the court refused instruction numbered 21 asked by the appellant. That instruction was as follows: "The court instructs the jury that where witnesses are otherwise equally credible, and their testimony otherwise entitled to equal weight, greater weight and credit should be given to those whose means of information are superior." Certain doctors were called on the part of the appellant as experts to testify that appellee suffered no injury to his leg from the accident, and this instruction was calculated to induce the jury to give greater consideration to the testimony of such experts than to the testimony of other witnesses, who differed with the experts, and who swore that appellee drove across the track just ahead of the automobile, that he saw the train, and thought there was some risk in attempting to cross in front of it, but concluded that it was safer to take the risk as his team was a spirited one; and that, if he had had his other team, he would have waited for the train to pass; and the appellate court's comment that, as the automobile could be stopped quicker and in a shorter space than a team, and when stopped it would stand steadily and in safety, a deliberate attempt on the part of deceased to cross ahead of the train was gross carelessness.

In Spina v. New York Transp. Co. 96 N. Y. Supp. 270 (an action by a father to recover for loss of services of his minor son), the son testified that he was going north on the left side of Fifth avenue in the city of New York; that he looked east, but did not observe any wagons, and that he had taken three steps into 18th street, in order to cross, when he was struck by the defendant's automobile, which, he testified, he did not see until it struck him, and which came north along the right side of the avenue, and swung into 18th street in a westerly direction. It was held that, the case having been fairly presented to the jury, the judgment upon their verdict in favor of the plaintiff would not be disturbed, since it could not, under all the circumstances, be said, as a matter of law, that the boy was, or that the defendant was not, at fault.

In Hennessey v. Taylor (Mass.) 76 N. E. 24, the plaintiff, who was struck by the defendant's automobile as she was crossing the street to take a street car, testified that "she did not see any automobile coming." The defendant contended that her language imported that she had seen the automobile arrive and come to a stop before she attempted to cross. The court, however, said that it was for the jury to interpret her meaning, and also to determine how far any failure by her more fully and carefully to observe the amount or kind of travel in the street was indicative of such want of care as ought to bar her recovery.

In the last case the plaintiff testified that she looked to see if there was any danger, but did not observe the defendant's automobile, nor hear any signal of its approach sounded; a witness, called by her, who stood by her side before she attempted to cross the street, had observed the defendant's machine at some distance; but it was not shown that she communicated such information to the plaintiff. Upon such state of evidence, the court said that no such balancing of probabilities by plaintiff, with a willingness to take the risk of safety getting over before the defendant came up, was shown, as to convict her of contributory negligence as a matter of law; and that, even if she had seen the defendant's machine approaching, and decided it was sufficiently distant to enable her safely to pass, she might have been found by the jury to have exercised due care, though the accident proved her judgment to have been erroneous.

In King v. Consolidated Traction Co. 33-

could not walk for seventeen days, nor after that time without having his hand on a chair, nor subsequently to that time without a cane. But the court gave on behalf of the defendant an instruction, numbered 19, which embodied in it all that was material in the refused instruction numbered 21. Instruction numbered 19 was as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, in determining the credibility of the witnesses, you have a right to take into consideration the means of information of the several witnesses." In regard to this instruction, it is stated in the abstract, "which instruction the court gave of his own motion." This is not true, as the record shows that the instruction was given at the request of the defendant.

It is said that the court erred in refusing instruction numbered 22 asked by the appellant, which told the jury that, if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff knew, or had reason to believe, that the mules driven by Parker were about to become frightened, and that there was danger of their running away, and that plaintiff had time to get out of the vehicle and thus be out of danger, and, instead of doing so, plaintiff concluded to risk the danger and stay in the vehicle, and by remaining in the vehicle he became injured by reason of not using the usual and ordinary care for his safety that an ordinarily reasonable and prudent man would under similar circumstances, then they should find the appellant not guilty. This instruction was embodied in several other instructions given for the appellant, which required the jury to find from the evidence that the plaintiff employed all reasonable means to prevent the injury, and used such care and caution for his own safety, or such care and caution as an ordinarily prudent man would have used under the circumstances. Instruction numbered 11, given for the appellant, told the jury that, if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff might, in the exercise of ordinary care and caution, have seen or have known the danger and avoided it, and his omission to do so contributed in any degree to his accident, then he was guilty of such negligence as would prevent a recovery. Other instructions were given requiring the jury to find appellant not guilty if they found that the appellee could, by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, have avoided the injury. In view of these instructions so given, there was no error in refusing appellant's instruction numbered 22.

It is also said that the court erred in refusing instruction numbered 23 asked by the appellant, which told the jury that, if they Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 138, the court denied plaintiff's motion for a new trial after a verdict for $1 in his favor for the destruction of an automobile which was struck by a traction car, notwithstanding that the undisputed testimony fixed the loss at not less than $1,500, because the verdict for plaintiff was based substantially on a guess both as to the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's contributory negligence. The facts developed at the trial were that the plaintiff, during a misty night, was proceeding in an electric automobile along the tracks of the traction company, that he saw a car approaching several blocks away, and endeavored to get off the tracks, but failed because the rear wheels had settled in a rut along-side the rail and the power was too weak to force them out, that he then ran 60 feet toward the car waving his hands and shouting; there being no evidence as to the speed of the car and none that with reasonable care it could have been stopped within a shorter distance than it was after the motorman saw the automobile.

VI. Instructions with respect to particular state of facts.

The court in CHRISTY v. ELLIOTT passes upon several instructions given by the trial court for the guidance of the jury in determining the questions of negligence and contributory negligence of the operator of an automobile and the driver of a team encountering each other on the highway. See also Nadeau v. Sawyer, 73 N. H. 70 59 Atl. 369, supra, IV.

An instruction that, if defendant was operating an automobile at a high rate of speed, and because of such rate of speed, or because of such rate of speed together with noise emanating from the automobile, the plaintiff's horse became frightened and caused the injury to plaintiff; and if the jury further believed that the act of defendant in operating the automobile at a high rate of speed was an act of negligence on his part, the plaintiff was entitled to recover,—if subject to criticism at all in view of the fact that it was nowhere alleged in the pleading that the horse was frightened by any noise,—was not prejudicial, defendant himself having testified that the operation of the machine was always accompanied by noise. Shinkle v. McLaughlin, 116 Ky. 960, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249, 77 S. W. 196.

An instruction, in an action to recover for injuries received from being struck by an automobile, as to the requisites of gross negligence on the part of the defendant which will support a recovery by the plaintiff, notwithstanding negligence on his own part, should be sufficiently full to enable the jury to know that gross negligence is a wrong materially different in kind from ordinary negligence. Banks v. Braman, 188 Mass. 367, 74 N. E. 594. It was held in this case that the following instruction lacked elieved from all the evidence in the case that the plaintiff or others in the carriage did not indicate to defendant that Parker's mules were about to become frightened, and it did not appear to defendant that they were about to become frightened, it did not become the duty of defendant to stop his automobile. This instruction was properly refused. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the fact that, if the appellee and those with him in the spring wagon did not give a signal to the appellant that Parker's mules were about to become frightened, the appellee failed to exercise due diligence for his own safety. There was evidence tending to show that the mules were frightened, and that the women in the wagon screamed; and, if it appeared to the appellant from these circumstances that the mules were about to become frightened, he was obliged to stop his automobile, under the law, whether any signal was given to him by those in the wagon or not. The refusal of instruction numbered 24, asked by the appellant, was proper, because it singles out and unduly emphasizes particular evidence in regard to the speed of the automobile. The testimony of appellee's witnesses was to the effect that the automobile was traveling at the rate of about 25 miles an hour, while the testimony produced by the appellant tended to show that the automobile was going only from 10 to 12 miles an hour. There was as much testimony on one side of this question as upon the other, and it was a matter for the determination of the jury. We are unable to say that the weight of the evidence is against the finding of the jury upon this question.

5. Appellant claims that the court below erred in refusing to instruct the jury to find the appellant not guilty at the close of appellee's testimony, and again at the close of all the testimony. The contention of the appellant upon this subject is that the evidence does not tend to show negligence on his part. We do not agree with the appellant upon this subject. The evidence of appellee tends to show that the automobile was traveling at the rate of from 20 to 30 miles an hour, while that of appellant tends to show that it was going at the rate of only from 10 to 12 miles an hour. The road was unobstructed, and it is impossible to believe that appellant did not know and could not see the people approaching him in the wagon from the north. The jury were justified in concluding that, if he did not see the team approaching, he could have done so by the exercise of ordinary prudence and care. The evidence is of such a character, too, that the jury were justified something of the fullness necessary to distinguish ordinary from gross negligence: "Gross negligence is great negligence. To make out the proposition of gross negligence, you must be satisfied that the way the machine was operated by . . . [defendant] was reckless,—was careless to the degree of recklessness; that it was run with a reckless disregard of the rights of . . . [plaintiff] in this street. If that is established,—namely, that there was a reckless disregard of the rights of . . . [plaintiff,] in the way this machine was run,—then . . . [plaintiff] is not required to show that he was himself in the exercise of due care. . . . If the manner in which the machine . . . was run on the occasion of this accident was such that it was grossly negligent (that is, careless to such a degree that you can say it was reckless, using your common sense and judgment and applying them to the evidence), then . . . [plaintiff] is not required to show that he was in the exercise of due care, because, if the defendant's carelessness was gross in the sense that has been defined to you, there is an obligation to pay damages independent of the matter of due care."

VII. Responsibility of owner when automobile in charge of another, or when put in operation by another.

The proprietor of an electric cab is liable for damages caused by the act of his employee, who was endeavoring to secure an advantageous position in a line of waiting cabs, in backing the cab against the plaintiff's horse, whether such act was negligent or wilful; since in either case the employee was acting in the course of his employment and for the purpose of furthering his master's business. Curley v. Electric Vehicle Co. 68 App. Div. 18, 74 N. Y. Supp. 35.

The owner of an automobile is not responsible for injuries caused by its negligent operation by a chauffeur who was in his general employment, where the latter, in disobedience of his instructions, had the automobile out for his own pleasure at the time of the accident. Stewart v. Baruch, 103 App. Div. 577, 93 N. Y. Supp. 161.

But the facts that defendant was the owner of the automobile which struck and injured a person, and that the chauffeur in charge at the time was in his employ to operate it, are sufficient to make out a prima facie case that the chauffeur was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident. Ibid.

An automobile company is not responsible for an injury due to the negligence of its general manager and another employee in the management of an automobile, where the general manager was enjoying a day off on the day of the accident, and, having gone out of town on his own business, upon his return telephoned for the other employee to come to the depot for him with an automobile, the accident having occurred as they were returning from the depot. The in believing that the appellant saw that the horses were frightened by the approach of his machine. This being so, it was his duty to stop his automobile. But the evidence is that he did not do so, nor did he slacken its speed, but proceeded upon his way without taking any notice whatever of the parties in the wagon who were injured. The statute does not contemplate that the driver of an automobile can proceed until a team turns over the wagon and runs away, but is intended to prevent such occurrences. The testimony of the appellee is to the effect that, when the machine was 3 or 4 rods from them, the team turned backwards and tried to run, and when the machine was just opposite them their vehicle upset. Parker testifies that the mules were jumping against one another, and when they were about 5 or 6 rods from the machine they lunged forward and upset the vehicle just as the machine was opposite them. Such, substantially, also, is the testimony of at least two of the women who were in the wagon with appellee. Such, also, was the testimony of one Irving Hoogner, who was an entirely disinterested witness. He swears that the team was going south, and that, just as the automobile was even with them, they stuck up their ears and lunged to the west. In view of this evidence, the jury were authorized in finding that the team was frightened by the approach of the automobile. One witness, who was at work in a field 60 rods away, swears that he heard the woman screaming, and yet appellant testifies that he heard nothing. It was for the jury to say who told the truth in reference to the matter.

6. We deem it our duty to call the attention of counsel to the abstract in this case. Rule 14 of this court (168 Ill. 13, 47 N. E. vi) requires the party bringing a cause into this court to "furnish a complete abstract or abridgment of the record referring to the pages of the record by numerals on the margin." The abstract does not state the substance of the declaration, nor make any other reference to it than merely to say that there is a declaration on page 4 of the record. The declaration is a long document, consisting of six counts, and we have been obliged to go to the record to find out what its allegations are; receiving no aid whatever in this respect from the abstract. This is a clear violation of the rule. In addition to this, the abstract in certain respects misrepresents the evidence. For instance, in the abstract, Emma Peterson is represented as giving the following testimony: "I first saw Mr. Christy opposite the big tree 1/2 mile south of the Wilcox place. We were 120 rods north from that tree, and 40 rods from the Wilcox place. We were going at the rate of 4 or 5 miles and hour,—the 40 rods to the Wilcox place. He passed us just as we turned in. He was going about the same rate of speed, I should decision is upon the ground that neither the general manager nor the other employee was engaged in the business of the company at the time of the accident; and it was so held, notwithstanding that it appeared that, while the general manager was away on his own business, he purchased some goods at the request of a coemployee, and had the same charged to the automobile company as a means of paying for the goods. Clark v. Buckmobile Co. 94 N. Y. Supp. 771.

The negligence of a clerk, who is also a son, of a dealer in automobiles, in operating an automobile belonging to the latter, is not imputable to the dealer, where it appears that the clerk, who was enjoying a holiday, took the machine without the defendant's knowledge, and was using it for his own convenience; and the fact that the machine still wore the decorations which had been placed upon it for the purposes of a parade which had taken place earlier in the day, and that it might, on account thereof, attract attention and incidentally advertise the defendant's business, does not justify the jury in finding that the clerk was engaged in the defendant's business at the time of the accident. Reynolds v. Buck (Iowa), 103 N. W. 946.

In Collard v. Beach, 81 App. Div. 582, 81 N. Y. Supp. 619, where it appeared that the defendant's son and his coachman were in the automobile at the time of the accident, but that the son was driving or controlling the machine, it was held error to refuse the following requested instruction: "If the jury find, either that the defendant left the automobile in charge of his son to take it home, or in charge of his son and coachman together to take it home, or in charge of the coachman alone, and the coachman neglected his duty in that regard and allowed the son to run the machine, and by the negligence of the son an accident occurred without contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part, then in either case the defendant is responsible and liable for that negligence and its consequences."

The act of a small boy in pulling the starting lever and putting in motion an electric truck which was standing on the street with the brake on and the current off while the operator was delivering goods to a customer is the proximate cause of a subsequent injury by the collision of the truck and a horse and wagon, and, being the intervening act of a third party, the owner of the truck is not liable. Berman v. Schultz, 40 Misc. 212, 81 N. Y. Supp. 647. So far as the report of the case shows, there was nothing in the circumstance to charge the chauffeur with notice of any probability that the truck would be interfered with while he was absent, or that he was absent for an undue period, or that he was in any way remiss after dis-hink." The witness is thus made to state that the appellant was going about the same rate of speed as she and those riding with her were going, to wit, at the rate of 4 or 5 miles an hour.

The testimony as found in the record is as follows:

Q. Where did he pass you?

A. Just as we drove into the Wilcox place, as we turned in.

Q. Did you notice him as he went past?

A. Yes; I noticed him.

Q. How was his speed as he passed you compared with his speed as he had followed you up the road?

A. About the same, I should think.

The testimony of the witness was that the appellant was going very fast, and that his speed as he passed her was about the same as the speed at which he had been going before he passed her. The witness did not say, by any means, that his speed was about the same as hers, to wit, 4 or 5 miles an hour. Again, the witness Amanda Hoogner, who was with Mrs. Peterson at the time, said, as would appear from the abstract: "Saw Mr. Christy on that occasion. . . . He was traveling fast in an automobile. He was, I should judge, 120 rods back. We drove into the Wilcox place. I should judge we were driving 8 miles an hour. The automobile passed us as we went in. It was going about the same rate of speed." The witness Amanda Hoogner is made to say that she and Mrs. Peterson were driving at the rate of 8 miles an hour, and that appellant, in his automobile, was traveling at the same rate of speed. Amanda Hoogner however, according to the record, did not so testify.

The record is as follows:

Tell in miles how fast you were going.

A. I should judge we would be going at least 8 miles an hour, if not more.

Q. Where did the automobile pass you?

A. It passed us as we went in. We just got in when it went by us.

Q. When it passed you, how was its speed compared with the speed it had back of you?

A. About the same.

Her testimony was that the speed of the automobile was the same when it passed them as it had been before it reached them, and not that the speed of the automobile and the vehicle which the witness was driving or riding in was the same. Such misinterpretation of the testimony of the witnesses, as presented by an abstract, does not commend itself to the favorable consideration of this court.

We find no error in the record which would justify us in reversing this judgment. Accordingly the judgment of the Circuit Court of Mercer County is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

covering that the truck had been put in motion. Upon a new trial upon practically the same testimony in this case, the trial justice gave judgment for the plaintiff upon the ground that the operator of the machine, did not exercise due and proper care before leaving the machine to guard against accident, and that it was not left "in a proper condition to guard against the possibility of its running away." This judgment was reversed by the appellate term (84 N. Y. Supp. 292) for substantially the same reasons given for the reversal of the previous judgment. The appellate term said that it was not the duty of the defendant to chain the machine to a post, or in some way fasten it so that it was impossible for it to be started by the act of a third party; that the law did not impose upon the defendant a degree of care that made the starting of the machine impossible; and that it was his duty only to exercise such care as a person of ordinary care would use under the circumstances, and that such care was used in this case.

In Quigley v. Thompson, 211 Pa. 107, 60 Atl. 506, an action to recover for personal injuries from being struck by a motor car, the defendant's chauffeur, who, at the time of the accident, was operating the car, was called as a witness by the plaintiff, who examined him at length to show that at that time he was in the employ of the defendant, and to identify the car by proof of its number, size, equipments, and general appearance. Upon cross-examination by the defendant, the witness was asked whether, at the time of the accident, he was not using the car for his own purposes and in violation of the orders of the defendant, and, having answered in the affirmative, the trial court entered a compulsory nonsuit. It was urged on appeal from the refusal to take off the nonsuit, that the cross-examination was not proper, and that the witness's answer afforded no proper foundation for a compulsory nonsuit. The supreme court, however, held that, as the whole trend of the examination in chief of the witness was to establish facts and circumstances which would make the defendant answerable on the ground that the negligence alleged was that of his servant acting within the scope of his employment, the cross-examination was competent, and afforded a sufficient foundation for the entering of the nonsuit.

VIII. Duty and liability to operator of automobile.

In Baker v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 53, 72 N. E. 336, the court without, deciding whether roads must be kept in such a state of repair and smoothness that an automo-

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

INDIANA SPRINGS COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
THOMAS BROWN.

(... Ind. ...)

1. Automobile—use of—negligence.

The use of an automobile on a public highway is not negligence as matter of law.

2. Highway—correlative rights in.

The driver of an automobile, and the driver of a horse upon a highway, are each required to regulate his own use by the observance of ordinary care and caution to avoid receiving injury, as well as inflicting injury on another.

3. Automobile—duty to stop.

The driver of an automobile, upon meeting upon the highway a horse which is frightened and in such a situation that its driver cannot extricate himself from danger unless the machine is stopped, is bound to stop, and will be liable for the injuries inflicted by his failure so to do.

(June 1, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fountain County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to bile can go over them with assured safety, under Rev. Law, chap. 51, § 1, which requires highways to be kept in repair "so that the same may be reasonably safe and convenient for travelers with their horses, teams, and carriages at all seasons of the year," held that a person traveling in an automobile could recover for injuries from a defect in the highway which was dangerous to ordinary travel. The court also expressed the opinion, although it does not seem to have expressly so decided, that an automobile was a "carriage" within such statute.

An instruction is proper that, in considering the question whether a person operating an automobile exercised due care in choosing a narrower opening to the right of workmen who were engaged in opening a trench near the middle of the roadway, rather than the wider one to the left, the jury may have in mind the rule of the road, which requires one to turn to the right in meeting another vehicle, although no other vehicles were in sight at the time. Baker v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 53, 72 N. E. 336.

Negligence cannot be predicated of the act of a motorman of one of a line of south-bound stalled cars in calling the attention of the operator of an automobile to a space between his car and the car in front of him of sufficient width to admit the passage of the automobile, where the operator of the automobile looked through the windows of the stalled car and saw a recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James McCabe and Edwin F. McCabe, for appellant:

The evidence fails to establish that the defendant's servant knew the cause of the fright of the horse, or that the horse was under control. This was essential.

Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Juday, 19 Ind. App. 465, 49 N. E. 843; Ellis v. Lynn, 4 B. R. Co. 160 Mass. 341, 35 N. E. 1127; Benjamin v. Holyoke Street R. Co. 16 Mass. 3, 39 Am. St. Rep. 446, 35 N. E. 95.

Appellee voluntarily assumed the risk of injury by putting his horse into a run to meet the auto, or beat it to the cross street, instead of getting out and holding his horse or letting it go.

Salem v. Walker, 16 Ind. App. 637, 48 N. E. 90; Moran v. Leslie, 33 Ind. App. 80, 70 N. E. 162; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Helvie, 22 Ind. App. 515, 53 N. E. 191; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 81 Ind. 270.

No recovery can be had unless there was wanton or malicious disregard for the safety of the driver or other travelers upon the street.

north-bound car approaching it a distance of about 75 feet, but nevertheless put on slow speed and proceeded to pass between the two stalled cars, and was struck by the north-bound car. Hirsch v. Interurban Street R. Co. 94 N. Y. Supp. 330.

In Morris v. Interurban Street R. Co. 100 App. Div. 295, 91 N. Y. Supp. 479, it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate, who was operating an automobile on Seventh avenue between Forty-Third and Forty-Fourth street in the city of New York, was thrown into an excavation, made in the street in the course of construction of the underground railroad and killed, in consequence of his automobile crashing into the fence at the side of the excavation as he turned from the south-bound to the north-bound track of the surface railway. The court held that, even assuming that the inability of the deceased to turn the automobile onto the north track was due to a hole 5 or 6 inches deep, which had existed for some time by the side of a switch connecting the two tracks, the city was not liable for such condition, in view of the fact that the surface of the street was constantly being changed by the contractors for the underground road. The judgment of the lower court in favor of the plaintiff was accordingly reversed upon the ground that there was no evidence to sustain the finding that the city was guilty of negligence, or that the deceased was free from contributory negligence.

Terre Haute Electric R. Co. v. Yant, 21 Ind. App. 489, 69 Am. St. Rep. 376, 51 E. 732.

Persons traveling by means of horses have no superior rights to those traveling upon the highway by improved methods of travel, which are adapted to and consistent with the proper use of the highway.

Holland v. Barch, 120 Ind. 51, 16 Am. St. Rep. 307, 22 N. E. 83; Wabash St. L. P. R. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. St. Rep. 696, 12 N. E. 296; Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 522; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Butts, 28 Ind. App. 89, 62 N. E. 647.

Mr. C. V. McAdams, for appellee:

When a person is in peril of life or limb, caused by the act of another, which peril can be and is observed by such other person, and the cause thereof understood by him, when such person dare not do anything, which he can avoid, which will increase the peril or add to the threatened danger. If he does, it will constitute actionable negligence.

Muncie Street R. Co. v. Maynard, 5 Ind. App. 372, 32 N. E. 343; Marion Street R. Co. v. Carr, 10 Ind. App. 200, 37 N. E. 952; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Lowe, 12 Ind. App. 7, 39 N. E. 165; Keeley Brewing Co. v. Parnin, 13 Ind. App. 588, 41 N. E. 471;

IX. Pleading; evidence; judicial notice.

In Trout Brook Ice & Feed Co. v. Hartford Electric Light Co. 77 Conn. 338, 59 Atl. 405, a judgment for plaintiff in an action to recover damages for injuries to a team of horses which took fright at the defendant's automobile, ran away, and were injured, was reversed because of a variance between the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint and the findings of fact by the trial court, it having been alleged, in effect, that the defendant negligently, carelessly, and with great violence drove the automobile against the horses; whereas the trial court found that, while the automobile was moving at a slow rate of speed and under the control of the man in charge, it approached the horses along a curved course, moving more and more directly towards the place where they stood, and that the operator, then seeing that the horses were frightened and about to run, did not stop the automobile or slacken its speed until it was brought to a standstill at or near the place where the horses stood.

The plaintiff and the party from whom he purchased an automobile are competent to testify as to its value, in an action against a common carrier for damages in transporting the same. Paterson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 103 N. W. 621.

Defendant in an action for damages for injuries to an automobile in transportation

Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Juday, 19 Ind. App. 451, 49 N. E. 843; Dull v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 590, 52 N. E. 1013; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Hamer, 29 Ind. App. 436, 62 N. E. 658, 63 N. E. 778.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a suit by appellee to recover damages for personal injuries and injuries to his horse and buggy, alleged to have been the result of appellant's negligence in unreasonably and unnecessarily speeding and refusing to stop or slow up its automobile, thereby causing the plaintiff's horse to take fright and run away. The complaint is in two paragraphs, alike in all respects, except that one is for personal injuries, and the other for damages to the horse and buggy. A demurrer to each paragraph of the complaint was overruled. Answer, the general denial. Trial by jury. Verdict and judgment for appellee, from which the defendant appeals. The assignment challenges the action of the trial court in overruling the demurrers and the motion for a new trial.

Each paragraph of the complaint is based on two grounds of negligence: (1) Violation of speed ordinance of the town of At-was not injured by evidence as to the feasibility and cost of repairing the automobile, where the jury found the damages materially greater than any witness estimated the cost of repairing, and the defendant offered no evidence as to the value of the automobile either before or after the injury. Ibid.

Proof that an automobile was in good condition when it was delivered to an initial carrier, and in a damaged condition when it was delivered by the last connecting carrier to the consignee, is sufficient to establish prima facie, in an action against the last connecting carrier, that it was received by the defendant in good condition. Ibid.

In White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Phenix Nerve Beverage Co. 188 Mass. 407, 74 N. E. 600, an action to recover the value of an automobile partially destroyed by defendant's negligence while in its possession under a contract of rental with an option of purchase, it appeared that, after the machine had been returned to the plaintiff at Boston, it was sent as freight to Cleveland, and about seven months later was examined by mechanical experts. The defendant excepted to the admission of the depositions of such experts giving an opinion as to the value of the machine, upon the ground that no testimony had been offered by the plaintiff that the condition of the machine remained the same during the intervening period of seven months. The court said, however, that, the plaintiff having shown the state of repair when the tica; and (2) negligence in operating the automobile. The court excluded from the jury the ordinance relied upon, and it is manifest from the record that the case was tried upon the charge of negligence in operating the motor carriage. Among other things, it is alleged that the automobile complained of was 12 feet long, 5 feet wide, 8½ feet high, had a canopy top, elevated seats for passengers, was painted red, propelled by an exploding gasoline engine, made a great noise, was the first machine of the kind in the community, and its appearance and unusually rapid and noisy movement in the highway were calculated to, and did, greatly frighten horses unaccustomed to see the like; that on May 10, 1902, the plaintiff and companion were traveling in a buggy, drawn by one horse, to the city of Attica.

machine was received and shipped, and there being no suggestion by the defendant of any change before the examination, the presumption which might be drawn from the whole evidence that the automobile seen and examined by the experts was in all respects unchanged, presented a question of fact, and that the length of time, the means of transportation used, the improbability of any intermeddling, the correspondence between the description of the experts and similar evidence of defendant's witnesses, were circumstances affecting the force of the presumption, but did not, as a matter of law, require the withdrawal of the question from the jury.

The testimony of the operator of an automobile upon the trial in a justice's court in an action on account for repairs to a buggy damaged by the running away of a horse which was frightened by the automobile, that he considered himself responsible for the accident, is admissible to contradict his testimony that he had not been guilty of any negligence which superinduced the accident, given upon the trial of an action for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff in the same accident. Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249, 77 S. W. 196.

The court may, under a statutory provision that courts take a judicial notice "of the true significance of all English words and phrases," for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of a regulation affecting the use of automobiles, take judicial notice of an automobile and its characteristics and the consequences of its use. Ex parte Berry (Cal.) 82 Pac. 44.

The court may take judicial notice that many automobiles may be driven at a speed of at least 40 miles an hour. People v. Schneider (Mich.) 12 Det. L. N. 32, 69 L. R. A. 345, 103 N. W. 172.

X. Right of owner of garage to a lien.

The owner of a garage has no lien at common law for work and materials furnished in repairing and keeping in condition an automobile which the owner kept at the garage, but operated and enjoyed at his own pleasure. Smith v. O'Brien, 40 Misc. 325, 94 N. Y. Supp. 673.

The horse was gentle and well broken, but had never before met an automobile in the highway. Having passed over the bridge of the Wabash river, and while descending on the approach thereto, which is 20 feet wide, with precipitous banks and guard fence on each side for a distance of 230 feet to a cross street, the defendant, by its servants and agents in charge of said automobile, did approach the plaintiff from the opposite direction, driving said machine along the highway at great speed, to wit, 20 miles an hour, thereby causing it to give forth a loud, whirring, puffing, buzzing noise, that could be heard several hundred yards. As soon as the auto approached within seeing and hearing distance, plaintiff's horse became greatly frightened at the appearance, sound, and approach of the same, and plainnished in repairing and keeping in condition an automobile which the owner kept at the garage, but operated and enjoyed at his own pleasure. Smith v. O'Brien, 40 Misc. 325, 94 N. Y. Supp. 673.

The owner of a garage who performs work and furnishes material for repairing and keeping an automobile in condition is not entitled to a lien thereon under N. Y. lien law, § 70, providing that one who repairs, or in any way enhances the value of, an article of personal property at the request or with the consent of the owner, has a lien on such article while lawfully in his possession, for his reasonable charges for work done and materials furnished, and may retain possession thereof until such charges are paid, where the owner removes the automobile from the garage, and operates and enjoys its use from time to time at his own pleasure. Ibid.

The owner of a garage has no lien for storage as a warehouseman upon an automobile which is being used continuously or occasionally upon the road at its owner's pleasure, although when not in use it is kept at the garage. Ibid.

XI. Miscellaneous.

In Stein v. Lyon, 91 App. Div. 593, 87 N. Y. Supp. 125, the appellate division approved of the finding of the trial court that the maintenance of an automobile station or garage on the boulevard at Rockaway beach in the neighborhood occupied by summer residences did not constitute a common-law nuisance.

A town which fails to maintain a fence or railing, as required by statute, along the side of a road at a point where it is so raised above the adjoining ground as to be unsafe for travel, is liable for injuries to the driver of a horse, occasioned by the horse shying at an automobile, driven with ordinary care and at a reasonable speed, and plunging over the unprotected bank. Upton v. Windham, 75 Conn. 288, 96 Am. St. Rep. 197, 53 Atl. 660. G. H. P.

iff and his companion signaled and called out to them to stop until the plaintiff and his companion could escape on said cross street; that said servants and agents could plainly see, and did see, from the horse's conduct, that he was greatly frightened, and could have stopped the machine before it reached and passed the plaintiff; "but the plaintiff avers said servants so in charge of such automobile wholly disregarded the plaintiff's signals and entreaties to stop, not, on the contrary, negligently, wantonly, and insolently continued to drive the monster machine upon the plaintiff and his horse at the reckless speed and in the reckless and negligent manner aforesaid, and, when the same came up to the plaintiff and his conveyance, his horse became thereby so frenzied with fright caused by the rapid speed, unrightly and unusual appearance of the machine, and the unusual and alarming noises given forth by it, that it became wholly unmanageable and beyond control, and did run away and overturn the buggy, throwing the plaintiff out, whereby," etc.

It cannot be said, as matter of law, that appellant was guilty of negligence for using an automobile as a means of conveyance on the public highway. The law does not denounce motor carriages, as such, on the public ways. For, so long as they are constructed and propelled in a manner consistent with the use of highways, and are calculated to subserve the public as a beneficial means of transportation, with reasonable safety to travelers by ordinary modes, they have an equal right with other vehicles in common use to occupy the streets and roads. Because novel and unusual in appearance, and for that reason likely to frighten horses unaccustomed to see them, is no reason for prohibiting their use. In all human activities the law keeps up with improvement and progress brought about by discovery and invention, and, in respect to highways, if the introduction of a new contrivance for transportation purposes, conducted with due care, is met with inconvenience and even incidental injury to those using ordinary modes, there can be no recovery, provided the contrivance is compatible with the general use and safety of the road. It is, therefore, the adaptation and use, rather than the form or kind of conveyance, that concerns the courts. It is improper to say that the driver of the horse has rights in the road superior to the driver of the automobile. Both have the right to use the easement, and each is equally restricted in the exercise of his rights by the corresponding rights of the other. Each is required to regulate his own use by the observance of ordinary care and caution to avoid receiving injury as well as inflicting injury upon the other. And in this the quantum of care required is to be estimated by the exigencies of the particular situation; that is, by the place, presence, or absence of other vehicles and travelers; whether the horse driven is wild or gentle; whether the conveyance and power used are common or new to the road; the known tendency of any feature to frighten animals, etc. The restrictions which the law imposes upon all modes of travel and traffic on the highways are such as tend to secure to the general public the largest enjoyment of the easement, and must be observed and borne by all alike on the broad ground that all have an equal right to travel in safety; and, when accidents happen as incidents to reasonable use and reasonable care, the law awards no redress. "When the highway is not restricted in its dedication to some particular mode of use," says Cooley, Ch. J., in Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 217, 22 Am. Rep. 522, "it is open to all suitable methods; and it cannot be assumed that these will be the same from age to age, or that new means of making the way useful must be excluded merely because their introduction may tend to the inconvenience, or even to the injury, of those who continue to use the road after the same manner as formerly. A highway established for the general benefit of passage and traffic must admit of new methods of use whenever it is found that the general benefit requires them." Knight v. Lanier, 69 App. Div. 454, 74 N. Y. Supp. 999; Mason v. West, 61 App. Div. 40, 70 N. Y. Supp. 478; Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249, 77 S. W. 196; Elliott, Roads & Streets, § 851; Bogue v. Bennett, 156 Ind. 478, 482, 83 Am. St. Rep. 212, 60 N. E. 143, and cases cited.

Applying the foregoing principles to the facts alleged in the complaint, the appellant, in operating on the highway a novel wheeled conveyance, of uncommon appearance and noise, owed to the plaintiff and other travelers the duty to carefully control and drive the same along so as to avoid causing needless injury. This duty required appellant to take into account the character of their machine, its general appearance, the loud, puffing noise sent forth while going, its new use in the vicinity, its tendency to frighten horses, and from these and all other pertinent considerations proceed with that speed and caution which reasonable care requires, according to the place and presence of other travelers. It is alleged that the defendant drove its automobile towards the plaintiff at the rate of 20 miles an hour; that at the time the plaintiff was descending in his buggy, drawn by a gentle horse, along a narrow, side-guarded approach to the Wabash bridge, whence he could not escape without proceeding forward to a cross street 230 feet from the bridge; that it was impossible for him to escape by said cross street before being met by the on-coming automobile; that the plaintiff's horse became frightened at the noise and appearance of the approaching machine, and plaintiff and his companion called to and signaled the defendant to stop and give them time to escape by said side street, but, although the defendant saw said signals, and the frightened condition of plaintiff's horse, and could have stopped said automobile so as to have enabled the plaintiff to have escaped by said side street, it failed and refused to do so, and, coming up to the plaintiff, his horse became frenzied with fright, unmanageable, and ran away throwing the plaintiff from the buggy, thereby inflicting severe injuries, etc., The conduct of the defendant here averred falls far short of being warrantable under the circumstances described. As drivers about to meet on the road, each owed the other the reciprocal duty to conduct himself and conveyance in a manner to avoid placing the other in jeopardy. And when the defendant saw that the plaintiff's horse had become frightened at the rapid approach of the strange, noisy carriage, and that the plaintiff was in danger, which was reasonably certain to increase by the nearer approach of the motor, and from which it was plain he could not extricate himself, except by defendant stopping or slowing down to enable the plaintiff to reach the cross street, it was the highest moral as well as legal duty of the defendant to stop and remove the plaintiff's peril, rather than increase it by rushing onward. Counsel for appellant argues that, since it is not shown by the complaint that defendant knew the cause of the fright of the plaintiff's horse, it fails to show negligence. Will anyone seriously say that the driver of such an automobile, recently brought to the vicinity, may speed it at 20 miles an hour along the highway, towards approaching harnessed horses, puffing and whirring so as to be heard several hundred yards away, and, seeing a horse in front of him, hitched to a buggy, rearing, plunging, and trying to bolt from the road without any other apparent cause, is justified in maintaining his speed because he does not know what it is that causes the horse's fright? Such contention is not argument. Any reasonable chauffeur, inclined to respond to the simplest offices of humanity, would not think of circumscribing his conduct under such circumstances by the rules of the law, even if such rules lead to the absurd limits suggested. The law of the road does not tolerate any such inconsiderate and reckless disregard of the rights of other travelers on the highway. Cincinnati, I. S. L. & C. R. Co. v. Long, 112 Ind. 166, 172 N. E. 659; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Hamer, 29 Ind. App. 422, 436, 62 N. E. 655; 63 N. E. 778; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Lowe, 12 Ind. App. 47, 54, 39 N. E. 165; Vincent v. Norton & T. Street R. Co. 181 Mass. 104, 61 N. E. 822; Benjamin v. Hoiyoke Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 3, 39 Am. St. Rep. 446, 35 N. E. 95.

Appellant assails divers instructions given by the court in accordance with the view above expressed, and complains of the court in refusing to give others, requested by the defendant expressing a contrary doctrine, a review of which would lead to repetition and serve no useful purpose. A review is therefore omitted. The evidence abundantly supported the verdict. We find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

J. C. HAAS et al., Appts.,
v.

CITIZENS' BANK OF DYERSBURG.

(.... Ala.)

1. Bill of lading—liability of purchaser.

A bank which purchases a draft with bill of lading attached making the goods deliverable to the order of the consignor assumes the obligation of the seller to deliver, according to contract, the property represented by the bill of lading, to the drawee of the draft.

2. Same—effect of payment of draft.

Payment of a draft which is drawn for the price of goods, and attached to the bill

Case Note.—The above case is opposed to the great weight of authority, as shown in the note to Finch v. Gregg, 49 L. R. A. 679. Of the three cases cited as sustaining it, the first (Eufaula Grocery Co. v. Missouri Nat. Bank, 118 Ala. 408, 24 So. 389) holds that a bank, to the order of whose cashier a draft with bill of lading attached is payable "on arrival of car of hay," which indorses such draft for collection for its account, and sends it for collection to a bank in the place where the purchaser lives, cannot deny its ownership of the draft in an action against it for money had and received by the purchaser, after rescinding the contract because of the poor quality of the hay.

The second of the cases cited to sustain HAAS v. CITIZENS' BANK (Finch v. Gregg, 126 N. C. 176, 49 L. R. A. 679, 35 S. E. 251) holds that the assignee of a bill of lading with draft attached, who receives payment of lading, to the bank which has purchased it, does not absolve the bank from its duty to deliver the property represented by the bill of lading.

(June 30, 1905.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County in favor of defendant in an action brought to hold defendant liable for shortage in certain consignments of feed, the drafts for which plaintiffs had paid to defendant. Reversed.

The two principal counts of the complaint were similar, with the exception that one referred to meal and the other to bran, and alleged that plaintiffs ordered the feed from Henry A. Klyce, who filled the order, made out an account of the sales, drew a draft for the amount, secured by bill of lading, payable to his own order, and sold and delivered the draft, bill of lading, and account to defendant; that plaintiffs were compelled to pay the draft before having an oppor-of the draft, is subject to an action for the return of the money if the property covered by the bill does not comply with the contract, and that subsequent consignments to such assignee, covered by bills of lading with drafts attached, are subject to attachment in his hands for loss from failure of the first consignment to comply with the contract. It was based largely on Landa v. Lattin Bros. 19 Tex. Civ. App. 246, 46 S. W. 48, a substantially similar case, which has been overruled by the supreme court in S. Blaisdell, Jr., Co. v. Citizens Nat. Bank. 96 Tex. 626, 62 L. R. A. 968, 97 Am. St. Rep. 944, 75 S. W. 292, cited in HAAS v. CITIZENS' BANK, which holds that a bank does not, by purchasing a draft and bill of lading attached, become substituted for the consignor to such extent as to be responsible to the consignee in case, after he has paid the draft, the bill of lading proves fraudulent, so that the consideration fails; and this decision of the supreme court was subsequently followed in the same case in 76 S. W. 70, by the Texas court of civil appeals of the first district, so that the case of Landa v. Lattin Bros. 19 Tex. Civ. App. 246, 46 S. W. 48, supra, can no longer be considered the law of Texas.

The Finch Case has been cited with approval in Sloan v. Carolina C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 487, 36 S. E. 21, upholding a carrier's right to permit a consignee to inspect the property before delivery, as against an assignee of the bill of lading, inasmuch as, if the consignee had taken it without opportunity of inspection, it might immediately have recovered from such assignee for any deficiency in quality, weight, or otherwise; and cited also in Searles Bros. v. Smith Grain Co. 80 Miss. 688, 32 So. 287; and in HAAS v. CITIZENS' BANK in support of its decision, and further discussed infra.

tunity to inspect the cars, and that, upon inspection, they discovered a shortage, to recover for which they brought this action.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Crum & Weil for appellants.

Messrs. Walker, Tillman, Campbell, & Morrow and Alexander Troy, for appellee: Defendant was not liable.

First Nat. Bank v. Burkham, 32 Mich. 328; Tolerton & S. Co. v. Anglo-California Bank, 112 Iowa, 706, 50 L. R. A. 777, 84 N. W. 930; S. Blaisdell, Jr., Co. v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 96 Tex. 626, 62 L. R. A. 968, 97 Am. St. Rep. 944, 75 S. W. 292; Young v. Lehman, 63 Ala. 519; Kelly v. Lynch, 22 Cal. 661; Robinson v. Reynolds, 2 Q. B. 196; Thiedemann v. Goldschmidt, 1 De G. F. & J. 4; Hoffman v. National City Bank, 12 Wall. 181, 20 L. ed. 366; Goetz v. Bank of Kansas City, 119 U. S. 551, 30 L. ed. 515, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Woods v. Thiedemann, 1 Hurlst. & C. 478; Leather v. Simpson, 40 L. J. Ch. N. S. 177, L. R. 11 Eq. 398.

Mr. Thomas H. Watts also for appellee.

The Finch Case has been distinguished in Perry v. Bank of Smithfield, 131 N. C. 120, 42 S. E. 551, holding that one making a cash sale of cotton, and accepting payment in the check of the buyer, who sells part of the cotton to a third party, and deposits the latter's draft with bill of lading to his credit in the bank on which the check is drawn, which credits such draft to the buyer's account and honors checks by him until his credit is reduced below the amount of the check held by the seller, without knowledge of any agreement that the sale was to be for cash, cannot maintain an action against the bank for the purchase money; and in Willard Mfg. Co. v. Tierney, 133 N. C. 630, 45 S. E. 1026, which holds that where a bank takes an assignment of a bill of lading with draft attached, the consignee of the goods takes them subject to the rights of the holder of the bill of lading for the amount of the draft, and that he cannot retain the price of the goods on account of a debt due him from the consignor,—stating that the principle that the title to the goods vests in the indorsee of a draft with bill of lading attached had been carried to its fullest extent in the case cited.

The Finch Case was disapproved in several cases. Tolerton & S. Co. v. Anglo-California Bank, 112 Iowa, 706, 50 L. R. A. 777, 84 N. W. 930 (cited in HAAS v. CITIZENS' BANK), holds that the purchaser of a draft with bill of lading attached is not liable on a warranty by his assignor of the goods represented by the bill of lading, and that the drawee of such draft, after paying the same, cannot recover back the amount paid on the ground that the payee had received money which it could not equitably retain, because of the breach of the warranty made by the drawer to the drawee, as any equities arising therefrom did not affect the payee

Tyson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question raised by demurrer to the complaint as amended because of misjoinder of counts was eliminated by striking the third count, which was the common count for money had and received. The theory of this demurrer was that the two special counts were in case, for a breach of duty. We do not so construe them. They are each clearly a special declaration in assumpsit, predicated upon a breach of contract, and practically seek a recovery for the money paid by plaintiffs for goods which were never delivered to them. They are, in substance, counts for money had and received, averring specially the facts upon which that claim is predicated. Doubtless the purpose of the pleader in framing them was to have the liability of defendant vel non for the money paid by plaintiffs to it as the owner of the goods determined by demurrer, instead of by objections to evidence or by charges, which latter method would necessarily have been resorted to had the complaint simply contained the common count for money had and received for their use. On the facts averred there can be no doubt of Klyce's liability if he had made no assignment of the bill of lading. Did the defendant, by becoming the owner of the bill of lading and the debt to accrue upon the actual or symbolical delivery of the goods to the plaintiffs, take Klyce's place? In other words, did it, by becoming the owner of the goods while in transit, become responsible for the performance of Klyce's contract? Or is it entirely relieved of all its burdens, and entitled to have and hold the money paid to it for the goods which it never delivered? It will scarcely be doubted that defendant, by becoming the owner of the bill of lading, became the owner of the goods, and the goods continued to be its property until the account assigned by Klyce to it against the plaintiffs, and the draft drawn by Klyce on the plaintiffs, which also became its property, were paid, and the goods delivered. American Nat. Bank v. Henderson, 123 Ala. 612, 82 Am.

after securing an acceptance or payment of the draft. The similar decision in S. Blaisell, Jr., Co. v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 96 Tex. 626, 62 L. R. A. 968, 97 Am. St. Rep. 944, 75 S. W. 292, is given above. Also in Hall v. Keller, 64 Kan. 211, 62 L. R. A. 759, 91 Am. St. Rep. 209, 67 Pac. 518, it was held that neither a bank purchasing a draft for a consignment of grain, with bill of lading attached, nor the payees who indorsed and delivered it to the bank, are liable to the consignees of the grain, who accepted and paid the draft, for failure of title in the drawer to the property shipped, on the ground that the right to the price only was transferred to the bank, stating that the weakness in the case cited was in treating the bank as the purchaser of the grain.

The third case cited in support of HAAS v. CITIZENS' BANK, (Searles Bros. v. Smith Grain Co. 80 Miss. 688, 32 So. 287) holds that a bank buying a draft and bill of lading is placed in the exact situation in which its assignor stood, and that the consignee, after paying the draft and receiving the bill of lading and grain, might subject the draft in the hands of a collecting bank to his demand for damages from shortage in weights and the consignor's failure to deliver all the grain contracted for. It is to be noticed, however, that the decision in this case was also based largely on that of Landa v. Latin Bros. 19 Tex. Civ. App. 246, 46 S. W. 48, which, as stated above, is no longer authority in the state in which it was rendered.

Searles Bros. v. Smith Grain Co. 80 Miss. 688, 32 So. 287 has also been limited in Exchange Nat. Bank v. Searles Bros. 81 Miss. 169, 32 So. 314, which holds that although a bank buying a consignor's draft for the price of grain, and taking an assignment of a bill of lading therefor, may be held liable to the consignee for damages resulting from shortage in weights and defective quality of the particular grain represented by the bill of lading, it cannot be held liable for damages resulting from the consignor's failure to deliver other grain, though there may have been one entire contract of sale.

There are other recent cases involving the same point. Commerce Mill. & Grain Co. v. Morris, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 553, 65 S. W. 1118, and Gregory v. Sturgis Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 71 S. W. 66, hold that a bank receiving for collection a draft with bill of lading attached is not liable to the consignee for any breach in the contract with the consignor. Seattle Nat. Bank v. Powles, 33 Wash. 21, 73 Pac. 887, holds that a bank to which another bank sends for collection a draft with bill of lading attached, purchased by it, acts as the agent of such bank instead of the consignor, in making the collection, and that the drawee, after having made the former bank liable to its principal by surrendering to him the bill of lading on receiving a check from him, and notifying such principal that the draft has been paid, cannot stop payment of such check on subsequently discovering the poor condition of the fruit covered by the bill of lading. Guaranty Trust Co. v. Grottrian, 57 L. R. A. 689, 52 C. C. A. 235, 114 Fed. 453, Affirming 105 Fed. 566, holds that one accepting a draft "against indorsed bills of lading" for flaxseed on a specified vessel, who pays such draft before the arrival of the vessel, may recover back the money so paid, where the bills of lading accompanying the draft were forged, of which fact he had no knowledge, either at the time of acceptance or of payment.

St. Rep. 147, 26 So. 498. Assignments of bills of lading are not governed by the commercial law. The transferee simply acquires the title of the transferor to the goods described in them. Commercial Bank v. Hurt, 99 Ala. 130, 19 L. R. A. 701, 42 Am. St. Rep. 38, 12 So. 568; Jasper Trust Co. v. Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. 99 Ala. 416, 42 Am. St. Rep. 75, 14 So. 546; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 549.

The contract of sale between Klyce and the plaintiffs was merely an executory one. Klyce had agreed to sell and the plaintiffs to pay for the goods upon their delivery. Before this contract was executed between these parties, the defendant became the owner of the goods and of the right to receive pay for them. It undertook the performance of the executory contract by a delivery of the goods to plaintiffs, and received the money agreed to be paid by plaintiffs upon the execution of that contract, and, notwithstanding it was paid for goods which it never delivered, and which it assumed to deliver, it undertakes to avoid its liability by saying that, because it became the owner of the draft which was paid by plaintiffs, it is a bona fide purchaser for value of the goods from Klyce, and therefore not responsible for their delivery. To so hold would be to give effect to only a part of the transaction, —to ignore its ownership of the goods and the account transferred to it by Klyce. By no rule of construction can the averments of the complaint justify the conclusion that the bill of lading was held by defendant as collateral security to the draft, or that defendant was merely Klyce's agent for its collection. The cases relied upon by appellee (reported in S. Blaisdell, Jr., Co. v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 96 Tex. 628, 62 L. R. A. 968, 97 Am. St. Rep. 944, 75 S. W. 292; Tolerton & S. Co. v. Anglo-California Bank, 112 Iowa, 706, 50 L. R. A. 777, 84 N. W. 930, and Schlichting v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 121 Iowa, 502, 96 N. W. 950) proceed upon the theory that the bill of lading was held by the bank as a security for the payment of the draft. The writers of those opinions were influenced to reach that conclusion partly upon the idea that to hold otherwise would impose a hardship upon the bank. The complaint in neither of the cases justified such a construction. And, in order to sustain that conclusion, the court resorted to its common knowledge of usages among banks to discount drafts and to accept a transfer of bills of lading as collateral security, instead of dealing with the transaction as laid in the complaint. In each of the cases it was necessary, to sustain the conclusion reached, that the unqualified ownership by the bank of the bill of lading be gotten rid of; otherwise there was no escaping the conclusion that it was liable. To do this, notwithstanding the complaint alleged a purchase of the draft and the bill of lading by the bank, it became necessary to hold that the transaction in legal effect was a loan of money by the bank, and the transfer of the debt and bill of lading was intended as a security therefor. There is no rule of law or of public policy against a bank becoming the absolute owner of the debt and the bill of lading for the goods, or its undertaking to perform an executory contract for the sale of the goods. And no sound reason exists why it should not be required to perform its contracts as individuals are required to do. Would any court hold that if A. contracted to sell B. a horse, warranting its soundness, for $100, to be paid upon its delivery, and A. should assign the contract to C., and C. should deliver an unsound horse to B., and receive the $100, that C. would not be liable for a breach of the warranty? We think not. The case in hand is not different in principle, unless the fact that plaintiffs paid the draft, which was the property of defendant for the purchase price of the goods, differentiates it. The draft was drawn to the defendant's order, accompanied by the bill of lading and the account, each of which was sold to it. The draft had not been accepted by the plaintiffs before its negotiation to defendant, and until accepted, in the absence of some fact tending to show that defendant was induced, by the conduct of the plaintiffs, to purchase it, they were not bound by it. When it was paid, the purchase price to be paid for the goods as well as the goods themselves belonged to the defendant. The plaintiffs were not parties to the transaction by which it acquired the ownership of the goods and the right to receive payment for them. And when, as here, the defendant became the owner of the debt and the goods, and assumed, necessarily, the responsibility and burden of delivering them to the plaintiffs, it became the seller in fact, and must bear the burden of the transaction. In short, the defendant took the contract of Klyce, the shipper, and stood in his shoes, with the same rights,—no greater, no less. And the payment of the draft by plaintiffs, which merely evidenced the price to be paid for the goods, can no more shield or protect the defendant from liability than its payment would have protected Klyce had he undertaken a delivery of the goods and received the purchase price for them. It would be an anomaly to hold that the defendant is protected as purchaser of the account and bill of lading, because the plaintiffs paid the draft, which also belonged to it in right of its ownership of the goods; or that it held the bill of lading as security for a debt which belonged to it. Just how it could be the unqualified owner of the debt and only a qualified owner of the goods, when it purchased both, we confess our inability to see. When it purchased these papers it was bound to know the nature of the transaction between Klyce and plaintiffs. The bill of lading and the account attached to the draft carried notice on their face that Klyce had contracted to sell the goods represented by the account and bill of lading, and to deliver them at the point of their destination.

To repeat, in a measure: The essence of the agreement between Klyce and plaintiffs was that of a cash transaction, to be consummated in the future; that is, the goods were to remain the property of Klyce until there was an actual or symbolical delivery of them and contemporaneous payment of the price. The distance of the parties from each other necessitated a resort to the usages of trade, whereby the price is paid on a symbolical delivery of the goods by a transfer of the bill of lading. By shipping the goods to his own order Klyce retained the absolute title, and he would have had the title until the goods were at the place of delivery, so that an actual delivery could have been made on and for the payment of the price. But he chose not to do so. He said, in effect, to defendant: "I have agreed to sell and deliver to the plaintiffs at a certain place certain goods at a certain price. Here is a bill of lading for these goods to my order; here is a draft for the price to be paid on delivery of the goods; and here is an account showing the items. I desire the money for these goods now. I propose to sell the contract to you. If you choose to deliver the goods, which you may do actually, or symbolically, by assignment of bill of lading to plaintiffs, you will have the money to be paid for them at the place of delivery; otherwise you will have your goods and an obligation of plaintiffs to take them at the price." Thus far the defendant has dealt only with Klyce. After defendant purchased the contract, it went to plaintiffs, and said: "Here is the bill of lading for the goods Klyce was to deliver to you, but which belong to me. Pay me the price, and you can have the goods." The plaintiffs pay the price, and take an assignment of the bill of lading. It is therefore plain that the symbolical delivery was the defendant's act, and, as it took the place of an actual delivery, it must be as perfect as an actual delivery. If it is false in any respect, there is a liability upon defendant, who made itself a party to the transaction. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The plaintiffs having paid the purchase price to defendant for its goods, it will not be allowed to say to plaintiffs, "You did not deal with me." This conclusion is fully sustained by our own case of Eufaula Grocery Co. v. Missouri Nat. Bank, 118 Ala. 408, 24 So. 389, and the following cases in other jurisdictions: Finch v. Gregg, 126 N. C. 176, 49 L. R. A. 679, 35 S. E. 251, and Searles Bros. v. Smith Grain Co. 80 Miss. 688, 32 So. 287. On the facts averred, if proved, we entertain no doubt of the plaintiffs' right of recovery.

Reversed and remanded.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

JEFFERSON COUNTY SAVINGS BANK, Appt.,
v.

JOHN C. HENDRIX.

(.... Ala.)

1. Banks—collection of check.

Credit, to the depositor, of a check received for collection, followed by negligence in making the collection, so that the rights on the paper are lost, does not make the bank liable for the face of the paper, but only for the amount lost through the neglect.

2. Pleading—negligence in collecting check.

The liability of a bank for negligence in collecting a check deposited for that pur-

Case Note.—The holdings of JEFFERSON COUNTY SAV. BANK v. HENDRIX, that in an action for damages for the neglect of a collecting bank to make due presentment of a check intrusted to it for collection, actual damage must be alleged and proved, is fully sustained by the cases cited and by other authorities. It is the rule that is applied to defaults of agents in general. "It is a good excuse," says Judge Story, "that the misconduct of the agent has been followed by no loss or damage whatsoever to the principal; for then the rule applies, that although it is a wrong, yet it is without any damage; and, to maintain an action, both must concur; for damnum absque injuria and injuria absque damno, are, in general, equally objections to any recovery." Story, Agency, § 236.

It is this relation of mere agency between a collecting bank and its principal, which distinguishes the liability from that imposed in cases of negligence by parties to negotiable paper. As is said in one of the leading works upon commercial paper, the "failure to give notice of dishonor now affords a complete defense to the party entitled to it, without any evidence of injury on his part. And it is not competent for the holder to show that the defendant sustained no injury by reason of the delay or pose cannot be enforced under the common counts.

3. Pleading—action against bank—demurrer.

A complaint seeking to charge a bank with the amount of a check deposited for collection, which is not effected because of its negligence, cannot be upheld against demurrer on the theory that it cannot be deemed bad merely because it makes a claim of damages which is erroneous only as to amount and form, since the only damages to which plaintiff is entitled are those actually suffered by the bank's neglect, and the form of the complaint would authorize a recovery though no such damages were proved.

4. Banks—collection of check—negligence.

Sending a check for collection to the drawee bank is prima facie negligence on the part of the collecting bank; at least, when it is a cashier's check on his own bank.

(April 5, 1905.)

failure to give the proper notice. This rule is subject to modification, however, as between an agent and the principal to whom he has indorsed." 3 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1199.

But the question here is whether proof of actual damage is part of plaintiff's case.

The Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206, cited in support of the holding in JEFFERSON COUNTY SAV. BANK v. HENDRIX, is a well considered case. The contention there was that when the owner of a note has shown the discharge of one of the parties thereto, in consequence of the negligence of the collecting agent, this should, prima facie, be considered sufficient evidence to charge the latter with the amount due by the face of the note. After showing that Allen v. Suydam, 17 Wend. 368, relied upon in support of the above position, is not sustained by Van Wart v. Woolley, 3 Barn. & C. 430, which it cites, the court says: "We cannot bring our judgments to follow the rule settled in New York, as to the ascertainment of the damages. The general rule of evidence certainly is that the affirmative shall be maintained by the party who is presumed to have possession of the necessary information of the fact to be established. The mere production of a paper, with a name signed to it, promising to pay a sum of money, does not import, necessarily, that the paper has any actual value. Its value depends entirely upon the ability of the parties to comply with what they have promised. The knowledge of this ability is to be presumed to be with the person who has an interest in it; and it is difficult to conceive how a mere agent, who is intrusted with the paper only for one specific purpose, in no ways coupled with any interest, can be held to proof of those circumstances on which its value or its worthlessness depend."

Bank of Mobile v. Huggins is cited with approval in Pennington v. Yell, 11 Ark. 212, 223, 52 Am. Dec. 262, an action against an at-

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the City Court of Birmingham in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount of a check deposited with defendant for collection. Reversed.

Plaintiff received a cashier's check on the Shelby County Bank, and deposited it with defendant for collection. The check was sent directly to the drawee bank, which failed without making the payment. The owner then brought this action against defendant to recover the amount of the check, the claim being based upon failure to make the collection. The complaint consisted of eight counts. The first four were the common counts. The fifth alleged a deposit of money with defendant, and failure to repay the same on demand. The sixth alleged a deposit of the check, collection of it, and failure to pay the amount on demand. The seventh and eighth alleged a deposit of the torney for failure, through negligence, to collect a note, wherein it is held that after proof of the attorney's negligence, "the extent of the damages that have resulted must also be affirmatively shown, as, in the case where the amount of a note is alleged to have been lost by his negligence, it must be shown that it is a subsisting debt against the maker, and also that he was solvent. And, unless the latter be shown, he would be liable only for nominal damages, and, under no circumstances, would he be liable for more than the actual damage that the client has sustained by reason of the negligence."

In Hair v. Glover, 14 Ala. 500, 504, it is held that an attorney's receipt for securities placed in his hands for suit is prima facie evidence that they are genuine and just, and distinguishes the case from Bank of Mobile v. Huggins.

In Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, 18 So. 11, also cited in JEFFERSON COUNTY SAV. BANK v. HENDRIX, a complaint by the drawer for damages from the payee's delay in presenting a check for payment was held bad on demurrer because of the failure to aver any damage. It is not, therefore, strictly in point, save to the general proposition that a complaint sounding in damages must aver facts showing the actual damage sustained. The case was subsequently overruled as to the other questions involved.

In Sahlien v. Bank of Lonoke, 90 Tenn. 221, 16 S. W. 373, it is held that the neglect of a collecting bank to notify a drawer of the nonpayment of a draft for ten days after its receipt for collection is not sufficient to impose a liability for the amount of the draft, where the evidence tends to show that the drawee was insolvent at the time the draft was received. The burden being upon the plaintiff in such case to show that the claim was good and collectible.

The only remaining case cited in support of the position in JEFFERSON COUNTY SAV. BANK v. HENDRIX is that of Farmers' Bank check for collection and negligent failure to collect it.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. George Huddleston, for appellant:

The deposit of the check by Hendrix created the relation of principal and agent between the depositor and the deposittee.

Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206; National Commercial Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 168, 54 Am. Rep. 50; Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. 451, 19 L. ed. 209; Dodge v. Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. 93 U. S. 385, 23 L. ed. 922; Cheney v. Libby, 134 U. S. 83, 33 L. ed. 825, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 148 U. S. 58, 37 L. ed. 367, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Old Nat. Bank v. German-American Nat. Bank, 155 U. S. 563, 39 L. ed. 262, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Bank of Montreal v. Ingerson, 105 Iowa, 361, 75 N. W. 361; Branch v. United States Nat. Bank, 50 Neb. 474, 70 N. W. 34; National Bank v. Johnson, 6 N. D. 184, 69 N. W. 49; National Butchers' & D. Bank v. Hubbell, 117 N. Y. 384, 7 L. R. A. 852, 15 Am. St. Rep. 515, 22 N. E. 1031; Arnot v. Bingham, 55

Hun, 553, 9 N. Y. Supp. 68; Freeman's Nat. Bank v. National Tube Works Co. 151 Mass. 413, 8 L. R. A. 42, 21 Am. St. Rep. 461, 24 N. E. 779.

The title to a check deposited for collection does not pass to the collecting agent by reason of his negligent failure to collect.

Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206; Watt v. Gans, 114 Ala. 264, 62 Am. St. Rep. 99, 21 So. 1011; National Commercial Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 168, 54 Am. Rep. 50; Bell v. Somerville, 17 L. R. A. 291, 1 C. C. A. 598, 5 U. S. App. 14, 50 Fed. 647; National Butchers' & D. Bank v. Hubbell, 117 N. Y. 384, 7 L. R. A. 852, 15 Am. St. Rep. 515, 22 N. E. 1031; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 148 U. S. 50, 37 L. ed. 363, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Freeman's Nat. Bank v. National Tube Works Co. 151 Mass. 413, 8 L. R. A. 42, 21 Am. St. Rep. 461, 24 N. E. 779; Old Nat. Bank v. German-American Nat. Bank, 155 U. S. 556, 39 L. ed. 259, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Balbach v. Frelinghuysen, 15 Fed. 675.

For a bank's failure to perform the duties

& T. Co. v. Newland, 97 Ky. 464, 31 S. W. 38, in which a petition alleging damages in the amount of a certificate of deposit for which the defendant accepted in payment a check subsequently dishonored is held defective in part for failure to allege that the bank's negligence had caused the plaintiff to lose his debt against the bank issuing the certificate.

Turning now to cases outside those cited in JEFFERSON COUNTY SAV. BANK v. HENDRIX, we find that a number of authorities of high character support the holding in that case.

Van Wart v. Woolley, 3 Barn. & C. 439, is a leading case. There the plaintiff, residing at Birmingham, having received in payment of certain merchandise a bill drawn in the United States on a party in London, delivered the same to bankers in Birmingham, to get it accepted. The latter's London correspondent held the bill for some sixty days after presentment and refusal to accept, without giving notice of dishonor, and meanwhile the drawer became bankrupt. It appeared, however, that neither at the time the bill was drawn nor at any subsequent time, did the drawer have any funds in the hands of the drawees. The plaintiff claimed damage in two respects: first, by the loss of remedy against Irving & Co., from whom he received the bill; second, by the loss of remedy against Cranston, the drawer of the bill. It was held that the plaintiff not having made the bill his own, he still had his remedy against Irving & Co., and was not entitled to recover on that ground, and that while he was entitled to damages for the loss of remedy against the drawer, yet this might be merely nominal; and, not having been inquired into, the case should be again submitted to a jury.

The last preceding case is cited in Allen 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Suydam, 17 Wend. 368, in support of the position that, in the absence of evidence of actual damage, in an action for damages against a collecting bank for a delay of seventeen days in making presentment of a bill, the jury might find for plaintiff for the amount of the draft, although it appeared that the drawees had no funds, that they were directed by the drawer not to accept, and that the lateness of the presentment had no influence upon the nonacceptance. Upon appeal the above holding of the supreme court of New York was reversed (30 Wend. 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555), and the construction of Van Wart v. Woolley was shown to be erroneous, it being held that, upon the evidence, the jury should have been instructed that the plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages only, or such as they should believe it probable might have been sustained from the delay. The court says: "The case of Van Wart v. Woolley is a direct authority to show that the agent ought not to be charged with the whole amount of the bill unless there is sufficient evidence to render it at least probable that the whole amount of the debt would have been saved if the agent had discharged the duty which his situation imposed upon him." This statement seems to place the case in line with authorities holding that plaintiff must prove actual loss to entitle him to recover; but in Morange v. Mix, 44 N. Y. 315, 322, this is denied to be the proper construction of the opinion.

However, in Lienan v. Dinsmore, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 209, 213, it is held, upon the authority of Allen v. Suydam, supra, that to sustain a recovery for more than nominal damages, by an owner of commercial paper against a collecting agent, the plaintiff must show that he could, in all probability, have collected the amount of the draft, or some aposed upon it by the deposit of a check for collection, it is liable to its depositor principal in an action in case, for the breach of duty, or in assumpsit, for the breach of the contract.

Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206; Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, 18 So. 11; 16 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 911.

The agent is liable for only the actual losses sustained by his principal.

Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206; Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, 18 So. 11; Mardis v. Shackelford, 4 Ala. 33; Bagby v. Harris, 9 Ala. 173; Sablien v. Bank of Lenoche, 90 Tenn. 227, 16 S. W. 73; Farmers' Bank & T. Co. v. Newland, 7 Ky. 464, 31 S. W. 38; Zane, Banks, § 64.

Messrs. Cabanis & Weakley, for appellee:

The measure of damages which the holder is entitled to recover of the bank or other collecting agent who has been guilty of negligence or default in respect to it is the actual loss which has been suffered.

and thereof, from the drawee, if he had received notice of nonpayment, which defendant's duty in the premises required him to give.

And in First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618, the defendant received in payment of a draft held for collection, the drawee's check, which was dishonored through its neglect to present same in proper time. But the evidence showed that defendant caused the drawer to be charged, and secured and preserved against it all the rights and remedies of the plaintiff. There was no evidence as to the solvency of the drawer. Upon this showing, the court, after considering the holdings in Borup v. Nininger, 5 Minn. 523, Gil. 417; Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; and Van Wart v. Woolley, 5 Dowl. & R. 374, 3 Barn. & C. 439, says: "The result is that the plaintiff has recovered against the defendant, as damages, for its negligence, the full amount of the draft. But the draft is not, by this judgment, transferred to the defendant, and it is not subrogated to plaintiff's rights and remedies thereon against the drawer; and the plaintiff still holds the draft, and, for aught that appears in this case, can enforce it, or has enforced it, for the full amount against the drawer. To justify such judgment, the plaintiff should have shown that the draft was wholly worthless, or that, for some reason, the responsibility of the drawer thereon was wholly unavailable to it. The plaintiff is entitled to indemnity, and no more, for the loss caused by the fault of the defendant, and it must show the extent of such loss."

The measure of damages for the neglect of a collecting bank to fix the liability of an indorser by notice of demand and nonpayment is said, in Borup v. Nininger, supra, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.)

This loss is, prima facie, the amount of the check.

1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 2d ed. § 329; Watt v. Gans, 114 Ala. 264, 62 Am. St. Rep. 99, 21 So. 1011; First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 4 Dill. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 4,810; Shipsey v. Bowery Nat. Bank, 59 N. Y. 485; Second Nat. Bank v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 111 Ky. 930, 55 L. R. A. 273, 98 Am. St. Rep. 439, 65 S. W. 4; Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, 18 So. 11, 122 Ala. 580, 82 Am. St. Rep. 95, 25 So. 499; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539, 21 Pac. 714.

The burden is on the defendant to reduce the damages.

1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 329; 3 Sutherland Damages, pp. 18, 19; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 19 Ind. App. 69, 49 N. E. 171; National Revere Bank v. National Bank, 172 N. Y. 102, 64 N. E. 799; First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618; Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; Potter v. Merchants' Bank, 28 N. Y. 641, 86 Am. Dec.

to be the face of the note; but the court adds: "The plaintiff must make out the insolvency of the maker, and the solvency of the indorser, discharged by the act of the defendants. The defendants may mitigate the damages by showing either the solvency of the maker, the insolvency of the indorser, or that the paper was partially or wholly secured, or any other fact that will lessen the actual loss to the plaintiff; the real loss occasioned by the improper conduct of the defendant being the fact for the jury to arrive at in measuring the plaintiff's damages." Citing Sedg. Damages, 340 et seq.; Howard v. Garner, 3 Sandf. 179; Blot v. Boiceau, 3 N. Y. 78, 51 Am. Dec. 345; Allen v. Merchants Bank, 22 Wend. 215, 34 Am. Dec. 289; Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555. To the same effect is West v. St. Paul Nat. Bank, 54 Minn. 466, 56 N. W. 54.

Where, in an action against a collecting bank for damages from failure to give notice of the nonacceptance of drafts, the finding of facts does not cover the issue of damages, the United States Supreme Court will not render judgment for any specific amount of damages, although the complaint alleges that the drawers and indorsers are discharged for want of notice of nonacceptance, and it is found that the drawers were in good credit when the drafts were discounted, and that the drawers and indorsers had become insolvent before notice of nonacceptance was given. Exchange Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 276, 28 L. ed. 722, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141.

A complaint alleging a bank's neglect to collect a draft until it became impossible for plaintiff to collect same, and that by reason of such neglect plaintiff had lost all opportunity to collect same, sufficiently shows that,

273; 3 Sutherland Damages, 3d ed. § 775, p. 2372; West v. St. Paul Nat. Bank, 54 Minn. 466, 56 N. W. 54; Camidge v. Allenby, 6 Barn. & C. 373.

Having sent the check to the drawee, and having given Hendrix no notice in time to protect himself, the bank lost the right to charge off the deposit which it had entered to the credit of Hendrix, and made the paper its own.

Kavanaugh v. Farmers' Bank, 59 Mo. App. 540; First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 4 Dill. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 4,810; Shipsey v. Bowers Nat. Bank, 59 N. Y. 485; Second Nat. Bank v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 111 Ky. 930, 55 L. R. A. 273, 98 Am. St. Rep. 439, 65 S. W. 4; Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, 18 So. 11; Watt v. Gans, 114 Ala. 264, 62 Am. St. Rep. 99, 21 So. 1011; Smith v. Miller, 43 N. Y. 171, 3 Am. Rep. 690; Chouteau v. Rowse, 56 Mo. 65; State ex rel. Clark v. Gates, 67 Mo. 139; National Revere Bank v. National Bank, 172 N. Y. 102, 64 N. E. 799; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539, 21 Pac. 714; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 428, 58 Am. Rep. 728, 2 Atl. 687; Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Packing & Provision Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 355, 7 N. E. 601; First Nat. Bank v. Miller, 37 Neb. 500, 40 Am. St. Rep. 499, 55 N. W. 1064.

McClellan, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Neither the deposit of a check with bank for collection, nor the entry on its books of the amount of the check as deposit of money in favor of the owner of the check, nor yet the negligence of the bank in and about the collection of the check from the drawee bank, whereby there is a failure to collect it, nor all these facts combined, makes such check the property of the collecting bank, nor the owner of the check a depositor of the money entered to his credit, in such sense as gives him right of action for money had and received, or otherwise, for the amount of the face of the check, as money due him from the bank. A bank which receives a check for collection, and enters the face value of it as a deposit credit to its owner, becomes the agent of the owner to collect it. If the collection is made, the relation of depositor and banker is consummated. If the collection is not made, the bank's right to charge off the deposit arises. If the bank fails to collect the check through fault of its own it is liable to the holder for all damages sustained by him through such failure; and defendant's neglect resulted in loss to plaintiff. Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20, 56 N. W. 123.

The damages recoverable for the failure of an attorney to enforce the collection of a note until after it has become barred being dependent upon the value of the note and the probability of its collection, mere proof of the attorney's receipt for the note, and of his failure to take the necessary steps for its collection, is not sufficient to charge him with the amount thereof. Mitchell v. Shuert, 10 Mich. 444.

Some courts and text writers seem to have been misled by the dictum of the court in Allen v. Suydam, supra, that where there is a reasonable probability that the bill would have been accepted and paid if the agent had done his duty; or where, by the negligence of the agent, the liability of a drawer or indorser apparently able to pay has been discharged, "so that the owner of the bill cannot legally recover against such drawer or indorser," the agent is prima facie liable for the whole amount of the bill, with interest as damages. But it is evident that the court means simply this: that where the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case of total loss, the face of the bill is the measure of his damages. Indeed, the decision of the lower court was reversed because the court instructed the jury that, there being no evidence of damage except the amount of the draft, they should find for that amount. Likewise the refusal of the court to sustain the above instruction was the occasion for the dissenting opinion.

Among those who have been misled by the above remark in Allen v. Suydam, supra, is the learned author of Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, vol. 1, 5th ed., § 329, who recognizes the rule that the measure of damages for the default of a collecting agent "is the actual loss which has been suffered;" but adds: "That loss is prima facie the amount of the bill or note placed in its or his hands, but evidence is admissible to reduce it to its nominal sum." The following cases cited by the author do not support the text, as is shown above: Van Wart v. Woolley, 1 Dowl. & R. 374; Allen v. Suydam, 20 West. 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; Borup v. Nininger, 1 Minn. 523, Gil. 417; First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618; Blanc v. New Orleans Mut. Nat. Bank, 28 La. Ann. 921, 26 Am. Rep. 119. The other cases cited are: Livaudais v. Denis, 4 La. Ann. 300; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 19 Ind. App. 69, 49 N. E. 171.

And it is held in Louisiana that, in an action against a collecting bank for damages from failure to give notice, the onus is on the agent to show that the holder sustained no damage by the neglect of the agent to make a proper demand and to give due notice to the other parties to the bill: citing Crawford v. Louisiana State Bank, 1 Mart. N. S. 214; Montillet v. Bank of United States, 1 Mar. N. S. 365.

his liability may be enforced by an action of assumpsit sounding damages for a breach of the bank's implied undertaking to use due care and diligence to collect the check, or by an action in case for damages resulting from negligence of the duties in respect of collection imposed upon it by law upon the fact of its receiving the check for collection. But the damages recoverable are not means necessarily the amount of the check. It by no means follows from the negligent failure of the bank to collect the check, or its negligent failure to give the owner timely notice of the dishonor of the paper, whereby he is denied fruitful opportunity to collect it himself, that the owner loses the demand for which the check was given, or even any part of it. To the contrary, it is frequently, if not generally, true that the owner of the paper secures some part or all of the debt for which it was given in some other way, as by subsequent voluntary payment by or suit against the drawee bank when it is solvent, or by dividends upon its being wound up as an insolvent concern. It will, therefore, not suffice for the owner to hale the collector of the check into court and plead that "you took this check to collect it. You did not do your duty in that regard, and of consequence the check was not collected. Therefore the check is yours, and the amount of it in money is mine, and in your hands for me, and you must pay me that amount." It does not follow from the facts the owner thus puts forward that the bank is liable to the extent he seeks to hold it, or to any extent in fact. The mere failure of collection of the check does not demonstrate the loss to the owner of the demand for which it was given, or any part of such demand. The owner should say to the bank: "You took this check for collection. Certain duties were thereby devolved upon you in respect of efforts to collect, or in respect of notice to me of its dishonor. You failed to perform those duties. From such failure resulted the nonpayment of the check. Because of its nonpayment, I have suffered damages in the sum of so many dollars. For these damages you are liable to me, and must account in this action." In other words, a complaint in the common counts, or for money deposited, or for the amount of the check, averring the bank's unwarranted failure to collect it, or negligence operating to deprive the owner of opportunity to collect it,—averments which, if proved, and this theory of liability were sound, would entitle the plaintiff to recover the full face value of the check, though his demand may have been satisfied in whole or in part from other sources, though he had suffered no damages or only nominal damages from the defendant's derelictions,—would either not, by intendment or expressly, present the facts of this case (which is true of the common counts and of special counts 5 and 6), or claim a recovery of the facts of this case upon an inadmissible theory and in an amount which those facts do not justify (which is true of counts 7 and 8). Hence it is that we deem it unnecessary to discuss rulings below bearing upon the first six counts of the complaint. None of them is supported by the evidence. Hence it is, also, that we hold that the demurrers to counts 7 and 8 should have been sustained. These counts not only claim a sum of money, to wit, the amount of the check, which the plaintiff, by their averments, is not shown to be entitled to; but they are so wanting in averments of damages suffered by plaintiff as to state no cause of action. It will not do to say that they aver facts which warrant a recovery of damages, and that they are not rendered bad by the form and amount of the claim they make, because, if they are held good against the demurrer, a recovery would follow proof of their averments, though no proof of damages should be made, since neither of them contains any allegations that plaintiff has suffered any damages from defendant's failure to collect the check; non constat but that his demand has been otherwise paid, as above suggested, and non constat, but that, though not paid, the demand is collectible in whole or in part out of the assets of the drawee bank. Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206; Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, 18 So. 11; Sahlien v. Bank of Lonoke, 90 Tenn. 227, 16 S. W. 373; Farmers' Bank & T. Co. v. Newland, 97 Ky. 464, 31 S. W. 38; Zane, Banks & Banking, § 184.

ILL. R. A. (N.S.)

The different doctrine which prevails where a creditor receives the check of his debtor to pay the debt may be referable to the distinctive consideration that in such case the creditor, being the payee in the check or unqualified indorser, is the legal holder and owner of it for the purpose of realizing upon it and applying its proceeds to his own debt; and upon this theory the case of Watt v. Gans, 114 Ala. 264, 62 Am. St. Rep. 99, 21 So. 1011, is not opposed to the views above expressed. Abstractly, and prima facie at least, it is negligence in a collecting bank to send the check to be collected by mail or otherwise directly to the drawee bank for payment, especially when the paper is a cashier's check; i. e., drawn officially by the cashier of the drawee bank. Of course, it is the duty of a collecting bank to give the depositor prompt notice of the dishonor of a check deposited for collection.

Reversed and remanded.

Haralson, Dowdell, and Denson, JJ., concur.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

ITALIAN FRUIT & IMPORTING COMPANY OF BALTIMORE CITY, Appt.,

v.

GEORGE DOBBIN PENNIMAN et al., Receivers of City Trust & Banking Company.

(.... Md.)

Banks—special deposit—trust.

Money known to have been deposited by other parties on the day of the failure of the bank cannot be appropriated in repayment of a special fund which had been deposited by a customer to indemnify the bank for its guaranty of the performance of a contract by the one making the deposit.

(June 22, 1905.)

A PPEAL by exceptant from an order of the Circuit Court, No. 2, of Baltimore City overruling exceptions to an audit distributing assets of the City Trust & Banking Company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John J. Hurst for appellant.

Mr. Edward C. Carrington, Jr., for appellee:

A cestui que trust is entitled to no preference over a general creditor in the distribution of the general assets of an insolvent corporation.

Englar v. Offutt, 70 Md. 78, 14 Am. St. Rep. 332, 16 Atl. 497; Drovers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Roller, 85 Md. 495, 36 L. R. A. 707, 60 Am. St. Rep. 344, 37 Atl. 300; Knatchbull v. Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 626; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 256, 11 N. E. 504; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237, 58 N. W. 383; Slater v. Oriental Mills, 19 R. I. 352, 27 Atl. 443; Shields v. Thomas, 71 Miss. 260, 42 Am. St. Rep. 458, 14 So. 84; Ferchen v. Arndt, 26 Or. 121, 29 L. R. A. 604, 46 Am. St. Rep. 603, 37 Pac. 161; Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. Dowd, 3 L. R. A. 480, 38 Fed. 172; Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L. R. A. 570, 23 N. E. 1005.

The criterion is the identification of the original fund, or the result of that origi-

Case Note.—The above case is also supported by Fire & Water Comrs. v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655, 44 L. R. A. 493, 78 N. W. 893, which holds that a receiver of a bank in which a trust fund was deposited cannot be required to repay it in preference to the claims of other creditors, unless the trust fund can be identified, or traced into some other specific fund or property.

And Northern Dakota Elevator Co. v. Clark, 3 N. D. 26, 53 N. W. 175, holds that the mere fact that the proceeds of a draft sent to bankers for use in paying wheat tickets or checks for the sender went to enrich their estate, and increase the general mass of their property, prior to their assignment, does not entitle the sender to priority out of the general assets in the hands of their assignees for creditors, where practically the entire amount was paid out before the assignment, and it is impossible to identify or trace it.

And Jones v. Chesebrough, 105 Iowa, 303, 75 N. W. 97, denies the right of an assignee for creditors to recover, as trust funds, from the assignee of a bank, funds of the estate deposited by him in such bank, where, at the time of its failure, the bank had on hand only a very small amount of cash, and the amount deposited was mingled with other money, and used by it in the usual and ordinary course of business in payment of its debts, and no new loans had been made by the bank, nor property of any kind, nor securities on hand, had been purchased with the money so deposited.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And State v. Bank of Commerce, 54 Neb. 725, 75 N. W. 28, holds that, where a county treasurer wrongfully deposits public funds to his own credit in a bank, which, with knowledge of the facts, uses such deposits in paying off other depositors, and becomes insolvent, the county, although entitled to reclaim, as part of the trust fund, cash left in the vaults of the bank, is not entitled to a preference from the other assets of the bank into which the money cannot be traced.

But People v. City Bank, 96 N. Y. 32, holds that one giving checks to a bank for the amount of notes previously discounted by it for him, which notes are not yet due under the mistaken belief that the bank still holds them, entries being made in its books to the effect that the notes are paid, is entitled, on the appointment of a receiver of its property before the maturity of the notes, to have them paid out of funds coming into his hands. There was no claim in this case however, as explained in Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 256, 11 N. E. 504, that the proceeds of the checks had not gone into the general fund of the bank, or that they had not passed in some form to the receiver.

And Independent District v. King, 50 Iowa, 497, 45 N. W. 908, holds that a bank in which a school district treasurer, contrary to law, deposits in his own name money of the district, notifying the bank that it is school money, holds it in trust for the district; and that, on its becoming insolvent, the district is entitled to priority al fund in the shape of some investment made by the trustee on behalf of his cestui in trust.

Drovers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Roller; Enlar v. Offutt; Cavin v. Gleason; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co.; later v. Oriental Mills; and Little v. Chadwick.—supra; Thompson's Appeal, 22 Pa. 6; Shields v. Thomas; Ferchen v. Arndt; and Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. Dowd,—supra.

If the money which actually came into the hands of the receivers is impressed with a trust, such trust is in favor of those persons who created such fund, and not in favor of the appellant.

Wasson v. Hawkins, 59 Fed. 233; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Indianapolis Nat. Bank, 15 Fed. 690; Beal v. Somerville, 17 L. R. A. 291, 1 C. C. A. 598, 5 U. S. App. 14, 50 Fed. 647; Furber v. Stephens, 35 Fed. 17; Quin v. Earle, 95 Fed. 728; Pott v. Schmucker, 84 Md. 554, 35 L. R. A. 392, 17 Am. St. Rep. 415, 36 Atl. 592.

Boyd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order overruling the exceptions to an audit distributing assets of the City Trust & Banking Company. The appellant chartered the steamship Astrea for five months at $4,001-in funds in the hands of the assignee for creditors, although the money so deposited has been paid out, and cannot be traced into any of the property going into the assignee's hands,—at least, unless it is affirmatively shown that the estate coming into his hands has not been increased thereby.

And Richardson v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co. 52 L. R. A. 67, 42 C. C. A. 619, 102 Fed. 780, holds that a deposit obtained by fraud, when a bank is hopelessly insolvent, creates a trust in favor of the depositor, and can be recovered from a receiver of the company, even if the identical money deposited does not pass into his hands, where the funds received by him are in any event increased by the amount of the deposit.

And Woodhouse v. Crandall, 197 Ill. 104, 38 L. R. A. 385, 64 N. E. 292, holds that, if a bank fails after receiving money to be kept as a trust fund for the benefit of the depositor, it will be presumed that enough of the money in its possession when it closes its doors, to satisfy such fund, belongs to the trust; and that, if the balance on hand is not equal to such fund, the entire balance will be turned over to the beneficiary.

It should be noted, however, that in ITALIAN FRUIT & IMPORTING CO. v. PENNIMAN any presumption which might have existed, that any part of the trust fund went into the assets going to the receivers, was expressly rebutted; and that the amount of

.25 per month, payable semimonthly in advance. The owner demanded security, and the City Trust & Banking Company gave what is spoken of as a "banker's guaranty" for that purpose on March 14, 1903. The appellant company had an account with the banking company previous to that time, and on that date drew a certified check for $15,000 to the order of Wm. F. Wheatley, who was president of the banking company, which was charged to the general account of the appellant. At the time the certified check was given, the appellant apparently did not have the full amount in its account, but it was made good a day or two afterward. The receiving teller testified that the certified check was credited to an account in which the banking company kept "special moneys for disbursements that we were obligated for." There is some controversy between the parties as to the exact status of this fund; but it is shown that, after the check was given, the representative of the steamship was satisfied. An effort was made to get a bonding company as security for the charter party; but that failed. The object was to release the $15,000 so that appellant would have the use of it. An arrangement was made by which the banking company was to pay the semimonthly charges for the vessel out of the $15,000 and some additional deposits such assets was not in any manner increased because of the special trust fund.

That the assets in the hands of the receivers, on which the claim was made, having been deposited in the afternoon of the day on which the receivers were appointed, belonged to those making deposit,—at least, if there was only one depositor,—instead of to the bank, might, it would seem, be set up as another reason for sustaining the holding of the court. Thus, it has been held in Re Commercial Bank, 1 Ohio N. P. 358; Chaffee v. Fort, 2 Lans. 81; and Furber v. Stephens, 35 Fed. 17,—that one depositing money in an insolvent bank on the day of, and a short time before, its closing, may recover the same from the receiver if it has been kept in a separate package.

But Ex parte Clutton, Fonblanque, 187, holds that, where money was paid after office hours, and, on the same evening, one of the partners in the bank made a declaration in insolvency, which was afterwards acquiesced in by the other partner; and the bank never afterwards opened for business, but was adjudicated bankrupt,—the amount so deposited passed to the assignee.

And Re North River Bank, 60 Hun. 91, 14 N. Y. Supp. 261, holds that one making a deposit two hours before the bank closes cannot recover it from the receiver, where it has gone into the general funds of the bank, unless he shows that it has reached the hands of the receiver.

made by appellant which were necessary to meet the charges for five months. It did make some payments, and, on June 6, 1902, there was still a balance of $8,786.48. On that date the banking company was placed in the hands of receivers, who are the appellees, and the appellant filed a petition alleging that said balance was a special fund held in trust for the payment of the hire of the ship, and was not a regular deposit subject to check. The petition asked the court to pass an order requiring the receivers to pay said sum to a trustee to be appointed by the court, to be applied towards the payment of the hire of the ship as it became due. The court passed an order for the receivers to show cause why that should not be done. They answered the petition. Testimony was taken before an examiner, and some before the auditor. An audit was stated, distributing 20 per cent to the general creditors, including the appellant, which filed exceptions because it was not distributed to in full payment of its account. There is some controversy between the parties as to whether the relation of trustee and cestui que trust did not exist between the banking company and the appellant; but, in the view we take of the case, that is immaterial. The contradicted testimony of Mr. Carrington, one of the receivers, shows that on June 6th there appeared by the books of the banking company to be in other banks and on hand $4,485.69, of which amount only $2,062.75 was received by the receivers, in currency and checks. The latter amount was deposited after 12 o'clock on that day, and was in the vault of the company. All moneys received prior to 12 o'clock, it being Saturday, were deposited in one or more of several banks named, as all of the banking company's reserve agents closed their doors at that hour. The receivers never received anything from the apparent balances in the banks, as they were held by the respective banks as credits on amounts due them by the banking company, excepting in one instance, where the balance in a New York trust company was attached. So the only amount that could possibly be claimed by the appellant is the $2,062.75, and, as Mr. Carrington proved that the identical money they received was deposited by depositors with the banking company after 12 o'clock the day the receivers were appointed, it is difficult to understand upon what theory the appellant can claim it, or any part of it.

The cases of Englar v. Offutt, 70 Md. 78, 14 Am. St. Rep. 332, 16 Atl. 497, and Drovers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Roller, 85 Md. 495, 36 L. R. A. 767, 60 Am. St. Rep. 344, 37 Atl. 30, are conclusive of the question, without requiring reference to those else- 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

where. It was said in the former that, as long as a trust fund can be traced, the court will always attribute the ownership thereof to the cestui que trust, and will not allow the right to be defeated by the wrongful act of the trustee or fiduciary in mixing or commingling the trust fund with funds of his own or even those of a third party. The true owner of a fund traced to the possession of another has a right to have it restored, not as a debt due and owing, but because it is his property wrongfully withheld from him. It makes no difference whether the fund be traced into a bank account, into the hands of an individual or firm; if its identity can be established, and no superior rights of innocent parties have intervened, it will be held for the benefit of the cestui que trust. Nor does the fact that it has been changed or altered in its nature or character affect the relation between the cestui que trust and the trustee, or those claiming under him. "The sole question, therefore, in every case where trust property is attempted to be traced, is whether it can or cannot be identified either in its original or altered form." That test disposes of the appellant's claim for priority. This fund is not only not identified as in any way belonging to it, but it is affirmatively shown that it never did. The cases cited above have so fully considered the question, and so clearly explained the position this court has taken, that it would be useless to prolong this opinion by a further discussion of the subject.

The appellant does not claim any of the other money realized by the receivers from the assets of the banking company and distributed in the audit. Mr. Carrington said they received it "from a general recourse against the assets of the City Trust & Banking Company, consisting of bonds, and stock, and collections on notes, and other obligations." No attempt was made to trace the appellant's funds, or any part thereof, into those assets. The order of the court below overruling the exceptions and ratifying the audit will be affirmed.

Order affirmed, the appellant to pay the costs.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

STATE OF MARYLAND, Appt.,
v.

G. HARLAN WILLIAMS, Receiver of Home
Fire Insurance Company.

(.... Md.)

1. Insurance company—insolvency—priority of state.

The state has no preference over other editors for payment of losses and unearned premiums out of the assets in the hands of a receiver of an insolvent insurance company with which it has insured state property.

Costs—against state.

Costs cannot be awarded against the state in civil actions, in the absence of express statutory authority.

(June 23, 1905.)

APPEAL by the state from an order of Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City dismissing a petition to establish priority of assets in the hands of defendant. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William S. Bryan, Jr., Attorney General, for appellant:

The sovereign is never responsible for debts.

Case Note.—The court in the above case relies upon State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 206, 26 Am. Dec. 561, in denying the right of a state to priority over other creditors in the payment of debts arising upon a simple contract claim. This case was referred to with approval in Orem v. Wrightson, 51 Md. 42, 34 Am. Dec. 286, as settling the rule as to the state's priority as a prerogative right derived from the common law, enabling it to be paid first, except where some antecedent lien stands in the way. The case was also cited in State v. Foster, 5 Wro. 210, 29 L. R. A. 226, 63 Am. St. Rep. 47, 33 Pac. 926, in which it was held that the right of the state or a municipality, if any exists, to priority or preference in payment from an insolvent estate, cannot be asserted after a general assignment for creditors which passes the title.

In Parlett v. Dugan, 85 Md. 410, 37 Atl. 36, the state is denied priority of payment of taxes out of the funds in the hands of a trustee for the benefit of creditors, where the taxes are due on property which the trustee refuses to take into his possession. The case of State v. Bank of Maryland was distinguished on the ground that the property primarily liable for the taxes was still in existence and ample for their payment.

But in Middlesex County v. State Bank, 29 N. J. Eq. 273, which also referred to the case of State v. Bank of Maryland, it was held that the state of New Jersey does not possess the common-law prerogative to have its claims paid before the debts of other creditors.

Some other cases not referred to in STATE v. WILLIAMS or cited in the authorities there mentioned, but which also pass on the question of the right of the state to priority of payment of claims, are as follows:

In United States v. State Bank, 6 Pet. 29, 4 L. ed. 308, it was held that the right of the United States to priority of payment of debts due it does not stand upon any sovereign prerogative, but is exclusively founded upon the actual provisions of its statutes. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

State use of Charlotte Hall School v. Greenwell, 4 Gill & J. 408; Stanley v. Schwalby, 162 U. S. 272, 40 L. ed. 966, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754; United States v. Hooe, 3 Cranch, 73, 2 L. ed. 370; United States v. Barker, 2 Wheat. 395, 4 L. ed. 271; The Antelope, 12 Wheat. 546, 6 L. ed. 723; United States v. Ringgold, 8 Pet. 150, 8 L. ed. 899; United States v. Boyd, 5 How. 20, 12 L. ed. 36; United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 489, 25 L. ed. 195; Carlisle v. Cooper, 12 C. C. A. 235, 26 U. S. App. 240, 64 Fed. 472; Marine v. Lyon, 10 C. C. A. 315, 8 U. S. App. 573, 62 Fed. 153; State ex rel. Pollard v. Brewer, 59 Ala. 134; Noyes v. State, 46 Wis. 251, 32 Am. Rep. 710, 1 N. W. 1; Sandberg v. State, 113 Wis. 580, 89 N. W. 504.

The state had a right to a priority in payment over other creditors holding debts of the same class.

In South Carolina it is held that the state is not entitled to priority over other creditors except in cases provided by statute. State v. Cleary, 2 Hill, L. 600.

But in Seay v. Bank of Rome, 66 Ga. 615, the court held that debts due the state have priority in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent over debts due to individuals, without regard to the respective dates of the liens.

In Bent v. Hubbardston, 138 Mass. 99, it was held that taxes collected by a tax collector and unaccounted for become a debt to the town, and a claim against his estate in insolvency, for which the town is entitled to priority.

And in Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. 110 N. Y. 250, 1 L. R. A. 260, 18 N. E. 92, the state was given a paramount right to collect from money in the hands of a receiver taxes due from a railroad corporation, when the railroad was operated by the receiver appointed in a mortgage foreclosure. The same rule as to priority is sustained in Gray v. Logan County, 7 Okla. 324, 54 Pac. 485.

Minnesota v. Central Trust Co. 36 C. C. A. 218, 94 Fed. 248, held that the statutory tax lien on personal property was paramount to every private lien, prior or subsequent.

But in Schenck v. Consumers' Coal Co. 26 Abb. N. C. 356, 14 N. Y. Supp. 343, the court refused to direct a receiver to pay taxes in preference to possible liens for employees' wages.

Baxter v. Baxter, 23 S. C. 114, sustains the state's right to priority of payment in the case of a debt due from a surety on a county treasurer's bond, at the time of his death, for the default of his principal.

But in Ramsey's Appeal, 4 Watts, 71, it was held that a judgment of the state against a decedent ranks with other judgments.

By taking a mortgage security the state does not waive its right to priority. Lenoir v. Winn, 4 Desauss. Eq. 65, 6 Am. Dec. 597.

3 Bl. Com. 420; Davidson v. Clayland, 1 Harr. & J. 549; State v. Baltimore, 10 Md. 504; Green's Estate, 4 Md. Ch. 356; Murray v. Ridley, 3 Harr. & M'H. 171; State v. Rogers, 2 Harr. & M'H. 198; State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 206; 26 Am. Dec. 561; Smith v. State, 5 Gill, 51; Orem v. Wrightson, 51 Md. 42, 34 Am. Rep. 286.

Mr. Charles W. Heusler for appellee.

Pearce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As a result of the great fire in the city of Baltimore on February 7 and 8, 1904, the Home Fire Insurance Company of Baltimore became insolvent, and upon a bill filed in circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore city by Bernard Wiesenfeld, a stockholder, and Lloyd Wilkinson, state insurance commissioner of Maryland, G. Harlan Williams was, with the consent of said company, appointed receiver to settle and close up its business. Subsequently the state of Maryland, by its attorney general, Hon. William S. Bryan, Jr., filed a petition in that cause showing that on April 4, 1902, said insurance company issued a policy of insurance to the state of Maryland insuring certain public buildings described in said policy, in the amounts specified therein, from noon of April 9, 1902, to noon of April 9, 1907, in consideration of a premium of $1,052.80 paid by said state to said company; that among the public buildings so insured were three of the state tobacco warehouses, all of which were destroyed in said fire, and upon which the aggregate insurance under said policy was $17,500; that the state had furnished due proof of loss to said receiver, who had accepted the same; that upon the appointment of said receiver, on the ground of admitted insolvency, all the outstanding policies of insurance issued by said company were rescinded and annulled, and the state of Maryland became entitled to the return to it by said receiver of the unearned premium paid by it upon the policy upon said state tobacco warehouses, and that the amount of said unearned premium was the sum of $661.10; that there was due the state of Maryland from the said company, in addition to the above unearned premium, the sum of $17,500, being the amount insured, aggregating $18,161.10 with interest until paid, for which amount the state was entitled to a preference over any and all creditors of said company; and the prayer of the petition was that the receiver be ordered to pay the same out of the first funds coming into his hands as such receiver. The receiver answered this petition, admitting all the allegations of fact therein, except that he alleged the correct amount of the unearned premium was $747.63, but did not admit that the indebtedness carried interest until paid. It was held that the state was entitled to a preference over any creditor of said company, but submitted these questions to the court. The court, upon consideration, dismissed the petition, with costs, and this appeal is taken from that order.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

An auditor's account was subsequently stated, in which the state was allowed only a pro rata dividend on this claim with other creditors, to the ratification of which account the state excepted; and said account was ratified except as to this dividend. It was held that the question of the state's priority being reserved by the order of ratification, and the receiver having in his hands sufficient funds to pay said claim in full if finally allowed as a preferred claim.

Two questions arise upon this appeal. First. Is the state entitled to the preference claimed? Second. If not so entitled, was it an error to award costs against the state?

We think the case of State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 206, 26 Am. Dec. 561 is decisive against the preference of the state. In that case the general principle upon which the preference or priority of the state over other creditors as against the property of a common debtor were very carefully considered in an elaborate opinion by Chief Justice Buchanan. The Bank of Maryland, being insolvent, conveyed all its property, funds, rights, and credits to trustees for the benefit of its creditors. Before and on the date of this conveyance the treasurer of the Western Shore of the State of Maryland had on deposit in said bank the sum of $50,089.96 of the public money of the state, and after the date of said conveyance filed a bill in equity against the bank and its said trustees, claiming to be preferred in payment of said sum out of the funds in the trustees' hands; but this preference was denied and the bill was dismissed. The court said: "In State v. Rogers, 2 Harr. & M'H. 198; Murray v. Ridley, 3 Harr. & M'H. 171; and Conner v. Chew, 1 Harr. & J. 417, it was held that at common law the state had a preference and a right to be first paid out of the estates of deceased persons, where no law stood in the way. These cases were decided in the late general court, and were not appealed from, but acquiesced in by the parties contesting the right. And in State v. Buchanan, 5 Harr. & J. 317, 9 Am. Dec. 534, and Dashiell v. Atty. Gen. 5 Harr. & J. 392, 9 Am. Dec. 572, it was decided by this court that the common law was adopted by the 3d article of the Bill of Rights, so far at least as it was not inconsistent with the principles of that instrument and the ature of our political institutions.' It is so late, therefore, at this day to deny the state's right at common law to have its debt first paid out of the property of its debtor remaining in his hands, and no lien standing in the way. For notwithstanding all that has been said in disparagement of its right of priority, it is not perceived to be inconsistent with the principles or spirit of our political institutions. It does not, indeed, exist here with all the incidents to the royal prerogative right in England. We have not the writ of protection, nor the extent in chief, or in aid. And the priority of the state is a rule only in the distribution of the property of the debtor, requiring the debt due to the state to be first paid where the individual creditor has no antecedent lien overreaching it." Judge Buchanan then proceeded to inquire whether that was a case in which the state's priority attached, or whether it had been defeated by the act of the bank, and in considering that question said: "The debt due from the bank to the state is a debt on simple contract only, and not a lien, as is, and must be conceded. The state therefore having no lien on the property covered by the deed of trust, but a priority only in the payment of its claim, if that right of priority has been lost, it is subject, claiming under the common-law, to the same common-law rule applicable to the royal prerogative right of priority in England of the same description. That right in England is enforced by the process in the writ of extent in chief, or in aid, according to circumstances, and may be here by proceedings known to our courts. But in either case, to make it available, the proceeding must be resorted to before other vested rights to the property sought to be subjected to the claim are acquired." In support of this statement of the law he cites 2 Tidd's Practice, 1098, 1099, where it is said: "When goods are bona fide sold, or fairly assigned by the King's debtor to the trustees for the benefit of his creditors, before the lapse of the extent, they cannot be taken under it, even though in the latter case the debtor was a trader within the bankrupt laws, and the assignment was an act of bankruptcy;" and Mr. Tidd is sustained by the cases of King ex rel. Braddock v. Watkins, 3 Exch. 6, and Giles v. Grover (H. L. (Ac.) 1 Clark & F. 72, cited and commented on by Judge Buchanan. In the latter case Lord Chief Justice Tindal states the controlling principle thus: "The actual sale of property seized under the writ issued at the suit of the subject forms the dividing line, so that where the sale is complete before the awarding of the Crown process, the property is protected therefrom; but where it is not completed, the property may be seized thereunder." This language is in exact accord with the careful and accurate expression of Judge Buchanan when, in the passage above quoted, he limits the state's priority to "the property of its debtor remaining in his hands," and where in a later passage in the same opinion, he says: "If the property be fairly and bona fide changed, or the right of the individual creditor be completed before the extent, either by sale under fi. fa. or a valid conveyance to him, or to a trustee for his benefit; the extent, coming afterwards, will be unavailing; there being no point of time at which the two rights were in conflict, and nothing for the extent to act upon after the property ceases to be the property of the debtor." There is no conflict or inconsistency between that case and any of the cases cited by the learned attorney general in his argument in this case.

The case of Davidson v. Clayland, 1 Harr. & J. 546, was not a case of preference or priority generally, but a statutory lien, and that lien restricted to the debtor's lands, and not extended to his personal property as well.

In State v. Bank of Maryland, page 230 of 6 Gill & J. 26 Am. Dec. 561, supra, the court points out the futility of attempting to assimilate the condition of the bank in that case, after the execution of the deed, to that of a deceased debtor, where the executor or administrator takes the funds of the deceased to be distributed according to law, subject to such preferences as the law allows.

Nor is there any conflict with the law as stated by Mr. Alexander in his note on page 13 of Alexander's British Statutes, in which he says: "It was an established rule of the common law that, where the King's right and that of a private subject met at one and the same time, the King's should be preferred;" nor with the case of Green's Estate, 4 Md. Ch. 349, in which two judgments were rendered against Green in his lifetime on April 17, 1837, one at the suit of the state, the other at suit of Nicholas Watkins; and the state was held entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of sale of his real estate. The entry of these two judgments on the same day, and while the property remained the property of the common debtor, clearly illustrates what is meant by the meeting of two conflicting rights at the same time.

We do not perceive any reason why any distinction should be made between the effect of such a conveyance as was made in the case of State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 230, 26 Am. Dec. 561, and the decree in this case, passed upon a bill praying the dissolution of an insolvent corporation, in which cases the receivers appointed by a court under § 382 of article 23 of the Code of Public General Laws are vested with all the estate and assets of every kind belonging to such corporation from the time of their qualifying as receivers, and shall be trustees thereof for the benefit of the creditors of such corporation and its stockholders. For the reasons given, we are of opinion the priority of the state was properly denied.

An examination of the authorities has satisfied us that costs cannot properly be awarded against the state in civil actions, in the absence of a statute giving express authority to render such a judgment. State use of Charlotte Hall School v. Greenwell, 4 Gill & J. 407; United States v. Barker, 2 Wheat. 395, 4 L. ed. 271; The Antelope, 12 Wheat. 550, 6 L. ed. 725; Stanley v. Schwalby, 102 U. S. 272, 40 L. ed. 906, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754; Sandberg v. State, 113 Wis. 589, 89 N. W. 504,—declaring that the doubt expressed in Noyes v. State, 46 Wis. 250, 32 Am. Rep. 710, 1 N. W. 1, as to civil actions to be unfounded. We have been referred to State v. Maryland Agri. & Mechanical Asso. 98 Md. 223, 56 Atl. 484, as authority for the allowance of costs against the state. The bill in that case was dismissed by the circuit court without giving costs against the state, and their allowance in this court upon affirming the decree was through inadvertence. This opinion, however, will remove any question as to the propriety of such allowance in future cases.

The order appealed from is modified by striking therefrom the award of costs, and, as so modified, is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES N. BOULDEN, Appt.,

v.

WILLIAM T. STILWELL et al.

(100 Md. 543.)

1. Fraud—misrepresentations to secure sale of stock.

The secretary of a corporation who is also a stockholder cannot maintain an action against the other officers for fraudulent rep-

Case Note.—The court in BOULDEN v. STILWELL discusses the liability of an officer of a corporation for the fraudulent representations which induce another member of the corporation to sell his stock, and cites and discusses with approval the case of McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439. This case was referred to with approval in Cahill v. Apple- 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

resentations upon which he acted, and who were alleged to have been made to induce him to dispose of his stock to them at a loss, where they amount merely to representations that the corporation was going down, that one had bought the other shares and was going to run the business as a family affair, and would depose the secretary, and that this was his last chance to get his money out; and the fact that was not permitted to keep the books down to date, so that he did not know the actual state of the business, is immaterial.

2. Same—measure of damages—future sales.

That stock was resold at a profit several months after it was purchased by one who is alleged to have acted fraudulently is not sufficient to show that it was worth the amount at the time of the alleged fraudulent purchase, for the purpose of forming a basis for damages.

(March 22, 1905.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for alleged fraudulent representations which were alleged to have induced plaintiff to dispose of certain shares of stock at a loss. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. Dodd McFarland and Henry Bryant, for appellant:

A cause of action arises where, in a given case, there is fraud accompanied with damage.

McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 454; Buschman v. Codd, 52 Md. 207; Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 51; Robertson v. Parks, 7 Md. 131, 24 Atl. 411.

Messrs. George R. Gaither and Leon I. Greenbaum, for appellees:

Plaintiff is not entitled to recover if he had at hand the means to ascertain the truth of the alleged false representations or was in as good a position as the appellees to find out the facts, and form his own conclusions.

Buschman v. Codd, 52 Md. 208; Robertson v. Parks, 76 Md. 118, 24 Atl. 411; Weaver v. Shriver, 79 Md. 530, 30 Atl. 111.

Pearce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in this case complains that by means of certain false and fraudulent representations, 98 Md. 493, 56 Atl. 794, which is cited in BOULDEN v. STILWELL. This was a case involving the purchase of stock through the alleged fraudulent representations of the president of the corporation. The court held that an instruction to the jury that if the representations "were either known to be false, or, by the exercise of presentations made to him by the defendants he was induced to sell to Leroux, one of the defendants, certain stock held by the plaintiff in the Structural Iron & Steel Company of Baltimore City, whereby he has sustained damage. The declaration in substance alleges that Stilwell was president and Leroux vice president and general manager of the company, each holding a large number of shares therein; that plaintiff was acting secretary and treasurer, holding 215 shares therein; that defendants, conspiring to obtain from the plaintiff his said shares of stock at a less sum than their real value, entered into a conspiracy, fraudulent combination, and arrangement between them, by which defendant Stilwell would represent to the plaintiff that he had sold his shares of stock in said company to Leroux; that the company was losing money; that it was about to "fall down" meaning thereby that it was about to fail and become insolvent; that he (Stilwell) could not carry it financially much longer; that Leroux should represent to plaintiff that he had bought Stilwell's stock, which would give him a majority of the stock in the company, and would result in removing plaintiff from his employment in the company; that these representations were made to him by the defendants in pursuance of said conspiracy, and by reason thereof he was induced to sell and deliver his 215 shares of stock for $5,625, whereas they were of the value of $21,500, which value was then unknown to him, and of which he had no means of knowledge, though such true value was then known to defendants; that these representations were falsely and fraudulently made, with intent to deceive and defraud him, and did so deceive and defraud him, and that, if the same had not been so made and relied on, he would not have sold his stock; and that by means of the premises he had sustained damage to the extent of $15,850. The general issue plea was filed, and at the close of the plaintiff's testimony the defendants moved the ordinary care (that is, such care as might reasonably be expected of an ordinarily prudent and intelligent bank president under the circumstances), ought, in your judgment, to have been known by him to be false," is error. The case was also referred to in Byrd v. Rautman, 85 Md. 416, 36 Atl. 199, which was also cited in BOULDEN v. STILWELL, and in which it was held that the buyer's false statement as to his purpose in procuring the stock does not constitute fraud which will entitle the seller to rescind. The court said that if the misrepresentations relate to the one in question only in a trivial and unimportant manner, the party complaining will have no right to rely upon them as governing his conduct; his action then, cannot be attributed to the misrepresentations, but to his own folly; and in such case he cannot ask the law to relieve him from the consequences. McAleer v. Horsey was cited in Weaver v. Shriver, 9 Md. 546, 30 Atl. 189, which held that an action for deceit in the sale of stock could not be maintained by a purchaser who had been in the employ of the corporation issuing the stock, and who could have ascertained all the facts.

The court also discusses with approval the case of Robertson v. Parks, 76 Md. 118, 4 Atl. 411. This case was referred to in American Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Bear, 48 Neb. 57, 67 N. W. 500, in which the court denied the right to maintain an action to rescind a contract of subscription to stock, where the only fraud complained of was the statement in a circular regarding the existence of an advisory board. The court said that the mere intention to defraud, without damage, was insufficient; and that the representations relied upon, which related to matters of collateral inducement only, did not afford a ground for rescission. Hall v. Johnson, 41 Mich. 286, 2 N. W. 55, was relied upon 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) for this doctrine. The Robertson Case was also cited with approval in Cahill v. Applegarth and Weaver v. Shriver.

The other authorities relied upon by the court are to the same effect as those already mentioned, and have not been cited in other cases.

Some additional cases which pass upon the liability of an officer of a corporation for misrepresentations which induce the sale or purchase of stock are as follows: The general rule is stated in Crowell v. Jackson, 53 N. J. L. 656, 23 Atl. 426, which holds that an action for deceit will not lie in the purchase or sale of stock if there are no misrepresentations by words or acts, and no active intentional concealment, and no intentional silence when there is a duty to speak.

In Krumbhaar v. Griffiths, 151 Pa. 223, 25 Atl. 64, any confidential or fiduciary relation existing between an officer of the corporation and a person from whom such officer purchases stock is denied. The court held that the sale of stock to the secretary of the corporation, who had no knowledge, at the time of the purchase, of any movement which would increase the value of the stock, could not be avoided on the ground of fraud.

And in Stark v. Soule, 27 N. Y. Week. Dig. 80, 9 N. Y. S. R. 555, it was held that the act of an officer of a corporation in procuring a transfer of stock to himself, by stating that it was worthless, when in fact it was valuable, was not a breach of any fiduciary relation, and, of itself, was not a ground for avoiding a sale.

In Houston v. Thornton, 122 N. C. 365, 65 Am. St. Rep. 699, 29 S. E. 827, bank directors were held liable to one who purchased bank stock relying upon a published statement of the condition of the bank, which was false. In Trimble v. Ward, 97 court to strike out certain evidence which had been admitted subject to exception, which motion was granted, and thereupon the court granted a prayer offered by the defendants that there was no evidence legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and that the verdict must be for defendants. The single exception is to the granting of this motion and prayer, and considering the instruction given, which will be first taken up, we are required to assume the truth of all the plaintiff's evidence, and all inferences fairly deducible from it.

The general principles which must control our judgment in this case have been established in a series of cases in Maryland, the most important of which are McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439; Buschman v. Codd, 52 Md. 202; Robertson v. Parks, 76 Md. 118, 24 Atl. 411, Byrd v. Rautman, 85 Md. 414, 36 Atl. 1099; Cahill v. Applegarth, 98 Md. 493, 56 Atl. 794. When the decision in McAleer v. Horsey was rendered it was there said that we then had for our guidance no express decision of this court upon several points involved; but that decision has ever since been regarded as a notable contribution to the learning upon this subject, and later cases have covered almost every point likely to arise in such action. Most of these decisions have been made in cases where damages were claimed as the result of purchases induced by false or fraudulent representations; but there can be no good reason why sales so induced, as resulting in damage, should not be governed by the same principles, and these have been so applied in this state in Byrd v. Rautman, 85 Md. 414, 36 Atl. 1099. In McAleer v. Horsey, Judge Miller observed that "neither the common law nor any code of human laws seeks to enforce the rule of perfect morality declared by Divine authority, which acknowledges as its one principle the duty of doing to others as we would that others should do to us, and which, by consequence, absolutely excludes and prohibits a cunning and craft or astuteness practiced by anyone for his own exclusive benefit. And it thence follows that a certain amount of selfish cunning passes unrecognized by courts of justice, and that a man may procure to himself, in his dealings with others, some advantages to which he has no moral right, but to which he may succeed in establishing a perfect legal title." In determining Ky. 748, 31 S. W. 864, the same rule was applied to a similar state of facts.

In Windram v. French, 151 Mass. 547, 8 L. R. A. 750, 24 N. E. 914, it was held that officers of a corporation who sign and issue certificates of stock stating upon their faces that the corporation is incorporated according to the laws of a particular state, and that the stock is nonassessable, thereby represent the stock as not invalid because of their acts or omissions, and if such representations are false, the officers will be liable in damages to one who has taken the certificates in good faith, relying upon such representations. And in Rothmiller v. Stein, 143 N. Y. 581, 26 L. R. A. 148, 38 N. E. 718, it was held that directors of a corporation who falsely represent its condition to a stockholder, knowing that he seeks information to guide his decision as to selling his stock, are liable for damages sustained by him on account of their misrepresentations, although they were not made with the purpose of inducing the sale.

In Morgan v. Skiddy, 62 N. Y. 319, the court held that a director of a corporation who knowingly permits the circulation of a prospectus containing false statements concerning the working capital of a corporation is liable to one who purchases stock, relying on the truth of such statements. The court said that the directors of a company are supposed to know the facts touching its condition and property, and their statements in respect to its affairs naturally attract public confidence. The same doctrine is laid down in Cook on Stock and Stockholders, § 145, and in Bigelow on Frauds, vol. 1, p. 346.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Bigelow on Frauds, vol. 1, p. 544, states that it is sufficient if the representations were relied upon by the plaintiff as constituting one of the substantial inducements to his action; citing McAleer v. Horsey. And in Cook on Corporations, vol. 1, § 14 it is stated that mere matters of opinion as to whether the enterprise can be completed or when it will be completed, or the prospects of profits, cannot be misrepresentations; citing Robertson v. Parks, 76 Md. 118, 24 Atl. 411; Shattuck v. Robbins, 1 N. H. 565, 44 Atl. 694; and Jefferson Hewitt, 95 Cal. 535, 30 Pac. 772.

Mechem on Sales, vol. 2, §§ 836, states that representations concerning the worth of an article, or the amount for which it may be sold, are usually nothing more than the mere expression of an opinion respecting a subject upon which either party may easily acquaint himself. Where, however, one party has peculiar means of knowledge, not open to the other, or where a special confidence is reposed by one party in the opinion of the other, the rule is different, and it is equally well settled that false representations as to value, intended to deceive, and accomplishing that result, are to be regarded as fraud, and entitle the defrauded party to his remedy; citing Wright v. Shriver, 79 Md. 546, 30 Atl. 189; McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439; and Merrill v. Philadelphia Land & Improv. Co. 8 C. C. A. 444, U. S. App. 649, 60 Fed. 17. Benjamin on Sales, vol. 1, pp. 555, 556, and Cook on Torts, pp. 560, 567, lay down the same rule and cite the same cases.

ing in each case whether the fraud complained of is one which falls within the class above described, or within that other class which courts of justice will recognize and redress "by stepping in and annulling what has been done, or rectifying the wrong by sustaining an action for the deceit," we must be governed by certain precedents and rules which have been established as the result of all the cases, and which, in general terms, may be stated as follows: The foundation of the action is actual fraud, and nothing short of this will suffice. Consequently, a misrepresentation, believed by the speaker to be true, though induced by his ignorance or negligence, will not sustain an action for deceit. There must be either knowledge of the falsity of the representation, or such reckless indifference to truth in making it as is held equivalent to actual knowledge. The fraud must be material: by which is meant that without it the transaction would not have been made. It must be a statement of an alleged existing fact or facts, and not merely of some future or contingent event, or an expression of opinion as to the subject of the statement. The party to whom it is made must rely upon its truth, and must have the right, as a person of ordinary business prudence, to rely upon it, "otherwise it is his own folly or fault, for the consequences of which he cannot ask relief of the law;" and, finally, there must be damage directly resulting from the fraud. Nearly all the Maryland cases, and a number of the leading English cases, have been carefully considered in the recent case of Cahill v. Applegarth, 98 Md. 493, 56 Atl. 794. and there is no occasion to review them here. Keeping in view the principles stated above, we will now briefly consider the testimony upon which this case was withdrawn from the jury.

In support of the averments of the narrative, a summary of which we have given, the plaintiff testified that in June, 1900, while he was employed by the receivers of the Columbian Dry Dock & Ironworks Company, having been with that company for twenty-four years previously, Stilwell proposed to him to go with a company which he and Leroux were about to reorganize as the Structural Iron & Steel Company, and said, if he would go with them, they would appoint him secretary and treasurer at the same salary they received; "each one of the three also to share and share alike in all profits, emoluments," etc.; that he accepted the offer, and a written agreement was entered into between them covering the offer, and assuring him the position for five years at a salary of $50 per week; that he put $5,000 in the company, representing 50 shares of preferred stock at par, with which he received, as a bonus, 165 shares of common stock; that the company had quite a number of government contracts, and things went on pretty well until the spring of 1901, when Stilwell and Leroux had several quarrels in his presence, in which each threatened to get out of the company, and which he then thought real quarrels, but which he afterwards learned were mock, or feigned, quarrels, intended to deceive and frighten him into getting out of the company; that in April, 1901, Stilwell told him that he was going to sell out to Leroux; that the company was going "to fall down;" and that, as he had gotten him into the company, and was his friend, he did not want him to remain in a company that was going "to fall down;" and handed him a letter, signed by himself, and addressed to plaintiff, informing him that he had sold his stock to Leroux on the terms stated in his proposition of April 12th, and he then repeated his advice to plaintiff to get out. Plaintiff then saw Leroux who said he had agreed to buy Stilwell's stock, which would give him a controlling interest; that the business was not productive enough to pay three salaried officers, and that he intended to run it as a family company. He told plaintiff this was his last opportunity to accept his offer, and that in reliance upon these statements he accepted the offer, and got out, receiving from Leroux for his 215 shares of stock $5,650 in cash, of which $5,000 was the par value of his 50 shares of preferred stock and $650 was to compensate him for loss to that amount in the sale of some houses which he had sold to raise the money to pay for his stock when he took it, the 165 shares of common stock not being reckoned as of any value, and going with the 50 shares, as he had received it; that he subsequently learned that Stilwell never sold out to Leroux, but had furnished Leroux the money paid him for his stock; and that after this sale Stilwell and Leroux continued to be, respectively, president and vice president, and added to their salaries each one half of the salary he had received. The damage of which he complained was the loss of four years' salary under his contract at $2,600 per annum, and $24 per share on his 165 shares of common stock sold by Stilwell and Leroux to Keith some five or six months later; besides one third interest in the sale of the other stock, though it is difficult to understand the last item, as he claimed all the price of the 165 shares, and actually received all the price of the 50 preferred shares. In reply to the direct question from his counsel, "What induced you to sell your stock?" he replied: "The representations made to me at that meeting that the company was going to fall down, and that Mr. Stilwell was going to get out, and the presentation of that paper, and the advice of Mr. Stilwell to get out while I could, and the offer of Mr. Leroux, and the conditions which would exist if Mr. Stilwell sold his stock to Leroux, giving Leroux controlling interest, and his telling me then and there he would vote me out. 'Now is your chance. Take your money, or we will put you out, and leave your money in the company. You can do as you please.'" Plaintiff also testified that Stilwell and Leroux would not permit him to open a set of books for the new company until six months after it was in operation, and that when opened they were required to be three months in arrears, and by reason of this he did not know and could not ascertain the condition of the company. He admitted on cross-examination that the agreement mentioned was canceled by mutual agreement when he sold his stock, and that was induced by the same reasons which caused him to sell his stock. Mr. Baker and Mr. Ochse, who were respectively the assistant and principal bookkeepers during 1901, testified that Stilwell and Leroux continued to be respectively president and vice president of the company until January, 1903, and that their salaries were increased as before stated after plaintiff got out. George C. Gantz testified that he owned 50 shares of preferred and 30 shares of the common stock, which he sold in July, 1901, through Stilwell, for $5,050 cash, but did not know who bought them, and that he sold because Stilwell alarmed him by saying the company was losing money. He also said Stilwell told him he and Leroux had feigned quarrels in plaintiff's presence for the purpose of inducing him to sell his stock and get out of the company, and that he furnished Leroux the money paid him for his stock. Minor C. Keith testified that some time in the fall of 1901 he purchased from Stilwell and Leroux a large block of both preferred and common stock of the company, and through them all the residue of both kinds of stock, paying par for the preferred and about $24 per share for the common; that they always spoke favorably as to the financial condition and future business of the company, and represented that its assets were sufficient to cover the total issue of preferred stock, and something, but not very much, on the common stock; that they furnished him a number of written statements, showing that the assets and liabilities were about even, but there were many bad debts, and that he understood afterwards there was a deficit; that some of the representations made to him afterwards proved not to be true, but he thought they were misled in making them. When the representations which plaintiff states caused him to cancel his contract and sell his stock are analyzed, it will be seen that none of them measured up to the requirements of the law. The representation that the company was going to fall down is not a statement of existing insolvency, but a prediction of future insolvency, and comes directly within the ruling in Robertson v. Parks, 76 Md. 135, 2 Atl. 411, where it was held that representations concerning the future value or profitability of the business should be excluded by the jury as a basis of recovery, and, as defendants' counsel well said in this brief in this case, "caveat venditor" is a sound a rule of law as "caveat emptor," though less frequently invoked. So Stilwell's declaration that he was going to get out, and that Leroux would vote Boulle out, are but declarations of future purpose subject to change of mind; and the advice of Stilwell and Leroux to accept the chance to get his money was but "buyer's talk," which in Byrd v. Rautman, 85 Md. 414, 36 Atl. 1009, it was said should not be regarded. Even Stilwell's letter, stating he had sold his stock to Leroux, so much relied on as a statement of an existing fact, comes within the category upon which plaintiff was not authorized to rely as the basis of an action for deceit; since in Cahill v. Applegarth, 98 Md. 493, 56 Atl. 794, it was said that a false representation merely as to the ownership of stock would not justify a recovery. It should have been obvious to the plaintiff that if Leroux could with safety not only hold his own stock, but also purchase Stilwell's at par, he could at least with equal safety hold his stock, and that he could not blindly accept Stilwell's prediction that the company was about to fail. Nor is it material whether the money paid him for his stock was supplied by Stilwell or Leroux. In either event he was selling his stock at a premium in a company which his purchaser predicted was about to fail. He was secretary and treasurer of the company, and had at least equal means of knowledge as to its condition and prospects, and, although the books were not up to date, this was a disadvantage common to all three of the parties, and it must be held his own lack of business prudence and business courage which caused him to cancel his contract and sell his stock under the circumstances stated.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Buschman v. Codd, 52 Md. 202, the case of Vernon v. Keys, 12 East, 632, was cited with approval upon the point that where parties have equal means of knowledge as to the truth of representations relating to value or quality of the thing sold. An action for deceit will lie; and again, in Lyrd v. Rautman it was cited to show that a false representation as to a future event could not sustain an action. In Vernon the defendant represented to the plaintiff, his partner, that he was about to form a partnership with other persons, whom he could not disclose, and that they desired to buy the plaintiff's interest in the existing business, but that his intended partners would not give more than a certain sum, which the plaintiff, in reliance upon this statement, accepted; whereas the new partners had not refused to give more than that sum, but had authorized defendant to make the best terms he could, and he had in fact charged them a much higher sum than plaintiff had received. Lord Ellenborough held that the buyer was not liable in an action of deceit for thus misrepresenting the seller's chance of sale, or the probability of his getting a better price than that offered by the buyer, and that it was the seller's indiscretion to rely upon such statement. That case seems to be quite conclusive of the present as to the reliance to be placed upon the representations here made. But there are other objections to the plaintiff's recovery, touching the proof of the damage sustained. There is no proof that the defendants knew, at the time plaintiff sold his stock, that the common stock could be sold to Keith, or to anyone, for anything worth consideration, or even that the preferred stock could be sold for what they paid for it; for proof of value in September is no proof of equal value in the preceding April. In this aspect of the case plaintiff's claim for damages is merely a claim for future contingent profits on the common stock, and, as was said in Smith v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 33 L. ed. 279, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39, which was an action for deceit, "Liability does not include the expected fruits of an unrealized speculation."

In the view we take of this case, the result would not be altered if the testimony which was stricken out had remained in; and it is therefore unnecessary to consider the ruling upon the motion to strike out. This case is a practical illustration of the instances referred to by Judge Miller in which a man "may succeed in establishing a perfect legal title to advantages to which he has no moral right," if the testimony at this stage of the case is assumed to be true, as it must be.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs to the appellees above and below.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

CONSOLIDATED GAS COMPANY OF BALTIMORE CITY, Appt.,

v.

MAYOR, ETC., OF BALTIMORE et al.

(.... Md.)

1. Taxation—franchise in street.

The easement acquired by the laying of pipes in the streets of a city under the franchise of a gas company is property distinct from the franchise, which may become the subject of taxation separate from the tax on the capital stock, which is intended to include the value of the franchise.

2. Same—bond debt of corporation.

The bonded indebtedness of a corporation cannot be included in the assessment of its property for taxation where the statutes provide for the assessment of such indebtedness to the holders of the obligations.

3. Same—valuation—review by court.

The court may review the valuation placed on property for taxation where the record shows that it was imposed in a whimsical, capricious, or unwarrantable way, instead of by the exercise of judgment, since such valuation would be no assessment.

4. Same—arbitrary valuation.

A valuation, for taxation, of the property of a corporation, which is arrived at by arbitrary manipulation of figures to reach a preconceived result, is void.

5. Same—assessment—presumption.

There can be no presumption in favor of an assessment for taxation which is arrived at, not by an exercise of judgment, but by an arbitrary manipulation of figures.

(June 22, 1905.)

Case Note.—As an authority for the doctrine that easements acquired by a corporation through the use of its franchise, by laying gas pipes in the public streets, may be assessed and taxed as real estate independent of the capital stock, which includes the value of the franchise, the court chiefly relies on the case of Appeal Tax Court v. Union R. Co. 50 Md. 274. This case had been cited by the courts frequently and with approval, but on questions differing from those decided in the case of CONSOLIDATED GAS CO. v. BALTIMORE. The case was, however, referred to in Desty on Taxation, § 63, in which it is stated that an easement enjoyed on the bed of a public street may be assessed and taxed as real estate.

The court also cites Providence Gas Co. v. Thurber, 2 R. I. 21, 55 Am. Dec. 621, in which it was held that the grant to a corporation of the right to lay gas pipes in the streets creates an easement, and the pipes so placed are taxable as real estate, relying on the case of Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston, 9 Met. 202, to sustain the proposition.

Providence Gas Co. v. Thurber, 2 R. I. 21,

A PPEAL from an order of the Baltimore City Court sustaining an assessment of appellant's property for taxation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edgar H. Gans and W. Calvin Chestnut, for appellant:

The intangible right or franchise of the gas company to lay its mains under the public streets of the city is not a subject of taxation by the appeal tax court of Baltimore city under a proper construction of the tax laws of the state of Maryland. This right of the gas company to lay its mains in the public streets is a franchise.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 4; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 660, 29 L. ed. 523, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Brooklyn v. Jourdan, 7 Abb. N. C. 23; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Cincinnati Gaslight & Coke Co. 18 Ohio St. 262; Jersey City Gas Co. v. Dwight, 29 N. J. Eq. 242; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 401, 402.

Whether a franchise or easement, it is an incorporeal, intangible right. No authority is found where such intangible, incorporeal rights or franchises of corporations have ever been taxed, except by taxation of the stock.

Baltimore v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 6 Gill 288, 48 Am. Dec. 531; State v. Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. 45 Md. 361, 24 Am. Rep. 511; Gordon v. Baltimore, 5 Gill, 231; Tax Cases, 12 Gill & J. 117; Frederick County v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 48 Md. 117; Anne Arundel County v. Annapolis & E. Ridge R. Co. 47 Md. 592; State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 48 Md. 49.

You cannot tax both the real estate and the stock at their full value.

State v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. 40 Md. 52.

Wherever the attempt to tax franchises or easements has arisen in the manner here pursued, under corporate taxation statutes like ours, the exercise of the power has been held invalid.

Alexandria Canal R. & Bridge Co. v. Dis-

55 Am. Dec. 621, is referred to in the following cases:

In Paris v. Norway Water Co. 85 Me. 333, 21 L. R. A. 525, 35 Am. St. Rep. 371, 27 Atl. 143, and in Warwick & C. Water Co. v. Carr, 24 R. I. 231, 52 Atl. 1030, both of which sustain the taxation of water mains as real estate.

In Newark v. State Bd. of Taxation, 66 N. J. L. 469, 49 Atl. 525, in which it was held that the interest which a street railway company has in a highway over which it passes is an easement taxable as real estate. But, with reference to the taxation of the franchise of the railway company, the court said that the distinction between the taxation of the franchise and the property acquired by the corporation to enable it to enjoy its franchise must not be overlooked.

The court also cites the case of People ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 174 N. Y. 441, 63 L. R. A. 884, 105 Am. St. Rep. 674, 67 N. E. 69, as authority for the proposition that the use derived from property through the enjoyment of a franchise is an element to be considered in placing a value on the easement for purposes of taxation.

This case was affirmed in 199 U. S. 1, 50 L. ed. 65, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705, on writ of error, but the only questions considered were in respect to constitutional rights, i. e., whether the statute imposing a special franchise tax impaired the obligation of the contract by which the state granted the right to operate street railways in New York city in consideration of the payment of a gross sum, or an annual payment of a fixed amount or fixed percentage of earnings; or whether it deprived the corporation of the process of law, or denied it the equal protection of the laws.

Other cases citing the authorities mentioned in 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tioned in the case of CONSOLIDATED GAS CO. v. BALTIMORE, and sustaining substantially the same doctrine as to taxation of easements, are Shelbyville Water Co. v. People, 140 Ill. 545, 16 L. R. A. 505, 30 N. E. 678; State ex rel. St. Paul City R. Co. v. District Court, 31 Minn. 354, 17 N. W. 954; and Northern P. R. Co. v. Carland, 5 Mont. 146, 3 Pac. 134.

Some cases, not referred to in the case of CONSOLIDATED GAS CO. v. BALTIMORE, and which do not cite the authorities there mentioned, but which pass on the question as to what is real property for the purpose of taxation, are as follows:

In Tide Water Pipe Line Co. v. Berry, 57 N. J. L. 212, 21 Atl. 490, a pipe line for carrying petroleum, laid under the ground by virtue of a grant, was held to be taxable as real estate.

In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, 9 Barr 509, 40 Am. Rep. 99, a telegraph line was held to be taxable as realty.

In Capital City Gaslight Co. v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 51 Iowa, 31, 50 N. W. 579, the court held that mains and pipes of a gas company are mere appurtenances of the realty, and are to be assessed as part of it.

But in People ex rel. Citizens' Gaslight Co. v. Board of Assessors, 39 N. Y. 81, gas mains under city streets were held not to be taxable as realty under the statutory meaning of the word "land."

In New Haven v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 38 Conn. 422, 9 Am. Rep. 399, the rails and sleepers, ties and spikes, of a street railway company, attached to the soil, were held to be real estate for purposes of assessment.

In People ex rel. New York & H. R. Co. v. Tax & A. Comrs. 101 N. Y. 322, 4 N. E. 127, tunnels, tracks, and viaducts of a railroad in New York city were held to be taxable as land.

ct of Columbia, 5 Mackey, 376; State v. Wulth Gas & Water Co. 76 Minn. 96, 57 R. A. 63, 78 N. W. 1032; People ex rel. Keystone Gas Co. v. Martin, 48 Hun, 193, 5 N. Y. S. R. 461; People ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 74 N. Y. 417, 63 L. R. A. 888, 105 Am. t. Rep. 674, 67 N. E. 69; State ex rel. Bee Hdg. Co. v. Savage, 65 Neb. 714, 91 N. W. 16; People ex rel. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Clapp, 152 N. Y. 490, 39 L. R. A. 37, 46 N. E. 842.

The assessment was purely arbitrary. People ex rel. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Clapp, 152 N. Y. 490, 39 L. R. A. 237, 46 N. E. 842; People ex rel. Panama R. Co. v. Tax Comrs. 104 N. Y. 240, 10 N. E. 437; People ex rel. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Stanley, 29 N. Y. S. R. 131, 8 N. Y. Supp. 63.

Messrs. Sylvan H. Lauchheimer and W. Abell Bruce for appellees.

McSherry, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Consolidated Gas Company of Baltimore is a corporation duly formed under the laws of Maryland. In the year 1904 it was assessed by the appeal tax court of Baltimore city, for the purposes of taxation, with sundry parcels of real estate, valued at $2,697,791; with 79,000 services, at $158; and with 455½ miles of gas mains, at $1,131,640; making a total of $3,987,431. This total was increased for 1905 to $4,026,097. On September 23, 1904, the following notice was sent to the company by the appeal tax court: "This is to notify you that it is the purpose of the appeal tax court to increase the assessment on your mains, pipes, and other construction located in, on, under, or over the public highways of Baltimore city, so as to include the value of the easement enjoyed by you in said highways, and that on Thursday, September 29, 1904, at 12 o'clock, you will be given an opportunity to make such statements and present such proofs as you may desire, to show why an additional assessment of $6,000,000 should not be placed on said real property. Thereafter the court may enter an increased assessment thereof, according to its best judgment and information in the premises." The company appeared by its counsel. No evidence was adduced by either side, but the company's counsel insisted that the contemplated or projected assessment of $6,000,000 could not be legally made in the form or by the method proposed. On the day following the appeal tax court entered its conclusions in these words: "Additional assessment on mains, pipes, and other construction located in, on, or over public highways of Baltimore city, $6,000,000." (N.S.) so as to include the valuation of the easements enjoyed by said company in said highways, $6,000,000." From that action or determination the gas company appealed to the Baltimore city court. Upon the trial of that appeal, evidence was offered with respect to the method pursued by the appeal tax court in arriving at the sum of $6,000,000 as "the valuation of the easements enjoyed by said company in said highways;" and propositions of law, embodied in prayers, were presented, with a view of raising the question as to the right and authority of the city to tax the particular easement involved, and the further question as to the regularity of the mode adopted by the appeal tax court in reaching the result to which it came. The Baltimore city court rejected all the prayers of the gas company, but granted four out of the eight prayers presented by the city. The court, sitting without a jury, passed an order sustaining the action of the appeal tax court, and from that order this appeal was taken.

There are two questions in the case: First, Had the city the power to increase the prior assessment on the mains, etc., by the addition of $6,000,000, so as to include by that addition the taxable value of what the appeal tax court describes as the easements enjoyed by the company in the highways? and, secondly, If it did have that power, has it properly and lawfully exerted it?

It is not denied by the appellant that the legislature could make provision for an independent assessment of the intangible, incorporeal right called by the company a "franchise," but claimed by the city, in view of the facts, to be an easement,—the right to occupy a certain space beneath the surface of the streets with gas mains and service pipes; but it is maintained on behalf of the appellant that the general assembly did not intend, by existing enactments, to allow the appeal tax court to assess as real property the right, privilege, or franchise to occupy the streets with gas mains, because that right, by whatever name you call it, like the franchise to carry on business, forms part of the value of the company's capital, and is taxable only through its shares of stock. It is obvious, when these two contentions are brought into juxtaposition, that, in order to determine the first inquiry with which we have to deal, the exact nature of the right in question, under existing conditions, must be definitely ascertained. It must be ascertained, however, not as a mere abstraction, nor purely from a philosophical standpoint, but especially and specifically with reference to and in the light of previous adjudications by this court, as applied to the actual facts in evidence. It is a question of taxation which is before us. "An easement is a liberty, privilege, or advantage, without profit, which the owner of one parcel of land may have in the lands of another. An easement, although only an incorporeal right, and appurtenant to another, the dominant tenement, is yet properly denominated an interest in land which constitutes the servient tenement; and the expression 'estate or interest in lands,' when used in a statute, is broad enough to include such rights, for an easement must be an interest in or over the soil." 14 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1139. In every instance of a private easement (that is, an easement not enjoyed by the public), there exists the characteristic feature of two distinct tenements,—one dominant, and the other servient. On the other hand, a franchise is a special privilege conferred by government on individuals, which does not belong to the citizens of the country generally by common right. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 303. A franchise does not involve an interest in land. It is not real estate, but a privilege which may be owned without the acquisition of real property at all. The use of a franchise may require the occupancy, or even the ownership, of land; but that circumstance does not make the franchise itself an interest in land. To define the nature of a thing by the accidents which are employed in its use is to confound the thing itself with the agencies applied in its adaptation. Because land may be required in putting a franchise into effective operation, it does not follow that the franchise is land, or an interest in land. But an easement is quite a different thing. It is essentially and inherently an interest in land. It is an estate,—a dominant estate imposed upon a servient tenement. To which of these two distinct and dissimilar classes does the right of the gas company to occupy with its mains the subsurface of the streets belong, in the contemplation of the revenue and tax laws of Maryland?

It will be found, upon examining some of the cases, that there is occasionally, in the arguments of counsel, a want of exactness in the use of terms, and now and then the right to do a particular thing, which is the franchise, is confused with the results achieved in the exercise of the right, and those results are inaccurately spoken of as the franchise. The right to occupy the streets with gas mains is a franchise. The actual occupation of them in that way, pursuant to the franchise, is the acquisition of an easement. You must distinguish between the right to do the thing, and the interest acquired in the soil by the exercise of that right. The right of a railroad company to be and to build a road is a franchise from the state. The roadbed acquired by purchase or condemnation is an easement altogether distinct therefrom, though obtained as a result of the exercise of that pre-existing franchise. It is strictly accurate to say the right of a gas company to lay its pipes, and to use the streets of a city for the purposes of laying pipes to convey gas, is a franchise, and can only be conferred upon a corporation by the legislature. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Cincinnati Gaslight & Coke Co. 18 Ohio St. 362. It is equally correct to declare: "The right to use the public streets of a city for the purpose of laying gas pipes therein is, in my opinion, a franchise which the state alone can confer." Jersey City Gas Co. v. Dwight, 29 N. J. Eq. 242. In each of these cases, and in many more that might be cited, the right to do the thing spoken of is the franchise. And so in Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe & J. River R. Co. 11 Leigh 78, 36 Am. Dec. 374, it was said: "Now I take a franchise to be (1) an incorporeal hereditament; and (2) a privilege or authority vested in certain persons, by grant of the sovereign (with us, by special statute), to exercise powers, or to do and perform acts, which, without such grant, they could not do or perform. Thus it is a franchise to be a corporation, with power to sue and be sued, and to hold property as a corporate body. So, it is a franchise to be empowered to build a bridge or keep a ferry over a public stream, with a right to demand tolls or ferriage, or to build a mill upon a public river, and receive tolls for grinding, etc. But the franchise consists in the incorporeal right, the property acquired is not the franchise. A bank has a right to purchase a banking house. When purchased, is the house a franchise? Surely not, for it is corporeal, whereas a franchise is incorporeal." In Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 34 Conn. 266, 4 Am. Rep. 63, it was held that a franchise does not include property gained by the exercise thereof.

The distinction is clear between a franchise, as such, and the property acquired for the use of the franchise. The naked, unused, slumbering franchise is property; but it is property concerning the assessment of which in that condition for purposes of taxation the statutes do not make provision otherwise than by including it as an element which enhances the value of the shares of the capital stock. But when the franchise is brought into activity, and is availed of to accomplish the ends it was designed to effect, the property acquired under it becomes amenable to the tax laws, apart from the tax on the stock, and its value as an easement, if an easement it be, may be largely augmented by the use which the franchise enables that property or easement to be put. Said the court in People ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Commrs. 174 N. Y. 441, 63 L. R. A. 892, 105 N. St. Rep. 686, 67 N. E. 74: "They [tangible chattels in the public highway] have no assessable value, worthy of notice, except through the actual and constant use made of them as incidental to the special franchises. The value of either resides in the union of both, and can be practically ascertained only by treating them as a unit. Unless assessed together, both cannot be adequately assessed. A man of judgment, in valuing a wagon, and especially in estimating its earning capacity, does not rest upon the body, wheels, top, and tongue separately. We regard the tangible property as an inseparable part of the special franchises mentioned in the statute, constituting with them a new entity, which, as a going concern, can neither be assessed nor sold to advantage except as one thing, single and entire." We cite this to show, if precedent be needed to support such a self-evident proposition, that the use to which a franchise permits an easement to be put is an essential element to be considered in placing a valuation on that easement for purposes of taxation.

What, then, is the thing assessed and taxed in this case? It is the mere right to occupy the streets below the surface with mains and pipes, which is the franchise, or is it the easement acquired, through the franchise, by the actual occupancy of the highways in that manner? Ostensibly it is the latter, and the right to include the value of that easement as an element in fixing an assessment on the tangible property employed in availing of that easement is, we think, no longer an open question in this state, since the decision in Appeal Tax Court v. Union R. Co. 50 Md. 274. In that case it appeared that the tracks of the Union Railroad Company within the city of Baltimore were, to a considerable extent, constructed in a tunnel under the bed of Hoffman street, a public highway of the city, and another portion of the road within the city, not in a tunnel, was also, to a considerable extent, within the limits of public highways. The company asked that the assessments of the roadbed in the tunnels be stricken from the property valued to it. The court below granted the relief asked, and the appeal tax court appealed. The specific contention was made in the argument here, as to the tracks located in the tunnel and on the streets, that the railroad company did not own the property (that is, the roadbed), and ought not to be assessed for it as though it was seized of it; it had only the right to make use of the streets and the soil beneath the streets, and to receive the tolls authorized by its charter. But, in disposing of that contention, our predecessors said: "We do not concur in the position of the appellee that it should only be assessed with the superstructures on the bed of the road, irrespective of the roadbed itself, or any right or interest therein, because the road occupied a tunnel under a public street, or runs along the highways of the city. The appellee has an easement in the way occupied by its road, and, whether that easement be under or over the public street, it is an element of value to the road, and, as such, should be included in the valuation of the road itself. But few of the railroad companies of the country have anything more than a mere easement in the ways occupied by their roads, and we are not aware that it has ever been held that, because the company did not own the freehold estate in the bed of the road, nothing but the mere superstructures thereon could be assessed to the company. The rule would seem to be clearly otherwise, and that an easement enjoyed in the bed of a public street may be assessed and taxed as real estate. People ex rel. Dunkirk & F. R. Co. v. Cassity, 46 N. Y. 49; North Beach & M. R. Co.'s Appeal, 32 Cal. 499; Providence Gas Co. v. Thurber, 2 R. I. 21, 55 Am. Dec. 621." The last-cited case (Providence Gas Co. v. Thurber, 2 R. I. 21, 55 Am. Dec. 621) is peculiarly apposite. The supreme court of Rhode Island there said: "What, then, is the nature of the right which the plaintiffs [the gas company] take under their charter? We think, when exercised, it is an easement,—an incorporeal hereditament,—like the right of a railroad company to build and occupy their road, or a canal company their canal, under the provisions in their charter which grant the power to take the land upon rendering compensation to the owners." Here is a specific decision that the right conferred by the charter—the franchise—becomes, "when exercised," an easement. But it is not necessary to go beyond Maryland in search of adjudged cases to support the proposition that the easement possessed by a corporation in a public thoroughfare may be assessed and taxed as real estate owned by the corporation. The Appeal Tax Court v. Union R. Co. 50 Md. 274, expressly so rules, as already indicated; and that case, though referred to as supporting various propositions, in eight subsequent decisions, has never been doubted, questioned, or even distinguished in any particular. Swan v. Kemp, 97 Md. 692, 55 Atl. 441; Dundalk, S. P. & N. P. R. Co. v. Smith, 97 Md. 181, 54 Atl. 628; United R. & Electric Co. v. Baltimore, 93 Md. 633, 52 L. R. A. 772, 49 Atl. 655; State v. Northern C. R. Co. 90 Md. 473, 45 Atl. 465; Smith v. Dorchester County, 81 Md. 316, 32 Atl. 193; State v. Falkenham, 73 Md. 467, 21 Atl. 370; State v. Yewell, 63 Md. 121; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Appeal Tax Court, 50 Md. 409. It is true that in only one of the above eight cases was the inquiry with which we are now concerned under discussion, but the frequent reaffirmance of the judgment in Appeal Tax Court v. Union R. Co. as to other propositions covered by it, so thoroughly ingrafts it, in its entirety, on the Maryland system of taxation, that nothing short of a legislative enactment can now disturb or qualify it.

Can anyone doubt that, if the Consolidated Gas Company, by purchase or condemnation, had secured the right to lay its mains through private property, instead of under the streets, lanes, and alleys of the city, it would have acquired an easement—an interest or estate in land—with which it could have been properly assessed as an owner of real estate? Surely no one would seriously contend that such a right of way through private property was a mere franchise, to be considered, in fixing the company's taxable basis, as included in the value of its capital stock. In what respect, looking alone to its legal attributes, would an easement of the kind just supposed differ from the one actually enjoyed by the company? The fact that the pipes are laid in the bed of the street without compensation having been paid for the use of the ground occupied cannot change the nature of the estate held by the company, nor convert the thing done, which is an easement, into a mere right to do the thing, which is the franchise.

From the views thus far expressed, it follows, we think, that the property or estate which the gas company has in the highways of Baltimore is an easement which may be properly assessed to the company as real estate; and hence, there was no error committed by the city court in rejecting the appellant's first prayer, nor in granting the appellee's first and second instructions.

We come next to the second inquiry, namely, Did the appeal tax court properly and lawfully exert the power which we hold that it possessed to tax the easement in question? Before that question can be intelligently answered, the method actually pursued must be closely and critically examined. Now, what did the appeal tax court do? First, as will be remembered, the appeal tax court sent the notice of September 23, 1904, giving the company an opportunity "to show why an additional assessment of \$6,000,000 should not be placed" on its real property. So, in advance of any hearing, the appeal tax court apparently fixed upon a sum to be added to the company's assessment unless the company could show that such an increase would be wrong. The amount of \$6,000,000 was arrived at by the following process: The appeal tax court acted on the theory that the entire assets and property of the company, and its securities, capital stock, and obligations on which it was able to earn a dividend and to pay interest, respectively, constituted the value of its total holdings. The stock was then selling at \$80 a share, the par being \$100,—but in the calculation it was put at \$70. There are 107,000 shares. At \$70 a share, the appeal tax court carried out the aggregate as \$7,500,000. In addition, the company owed several millions of dollars, represented by outstanding bonds, which were valued at \$7,700,000. Then the company owed \$1,500,000 in certificates, which were put down at \$1,350,000. Still another item was \$1,000,000 of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent general mortgage bonds, which were included at par. The aggregate of all these items footed up \$17,550,000, of which \$10,050,000 represented debts due by the company on bonds and certificates held by creditors of the company. Then from this total aggregate the appeal tax court deducted the assessed value of the company's real estate, namely \$4,300,000, and there remained the sum of \$13,250,000. The company was assessed with \$150,000 of personal property, but, in deducting that personal property from the above-mentioned sum total, the appeal tax court increased the valuation of the same personalty to \$1,500,000, from which they at once subtracted \$250,000, and took the remainder—\$1,250,000—from the \$13,250,000, leaving exactly \$12,000,000, which sum, it is insisted, represents the value of the company's franchises derived from the state, and also the increased value of its mains by reason of the enjoyment of the easements in the street. This result was then divided by two, and \$6,000,000 were added to the assessed value of the mains and pipes, to include the value of the easement enjoyed by the company in the highways. Was that process a lawful method, under existing statutes, to reach a valuation of the street easements for taxation purposes? The city contends that it is, and relies in support of that contention on the case of Simpson v. Hopkins, 82 Md. 478, 33 Atl. 714.

It must be borne in mind that there are two distinct elements which enter into the question as to whether the method pursued by the appeal tax court in making the assessment now under review was lawful.

and they are, first, the right of the assessors, under the Maryland statutes, to measure the value of a corporation's property, for the purposes of taxation, by adding thereto, and including therein, and charging against the company the bonded indebtedness due by the corporation; and, secondly, the peculiar and apparently arbitrary, as distinguished from juridical, ascertainment of the values apportioned amongst the component factors reckoned and comprised in the sum total of the assessment. The case of Simpson v. Hopkins, 82 Md. 489, 33 Atl. 714, does not deal with or pass upon either of these two elements, because neither of them was then before the court for decision. These are the facts: Hopkins, the collector of state and city taxes, sued Mrs. Simpson and her husband to recover the amount of taxes levied for the years 1891, 1892, and 1893 upon 12 bonds of the Consolidated Gas Company owned by Mrs. Simpson. Three grounds of defense were relied on, namely: First, that § 88 of article 81 of the Code (Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1888), as then in force, and under which the tax was levied, was in conflict with article 15, Declaration of Rights, and unconstitutional, because it subjected to taxation, in the hands of the holders, all bonds of the corporation, even though the bonds were secured by a mortgage on real property wholly within the state, whilst § 4 of the same article of the Code exempted from taxation similar mortgages and mortgage debts due by individuals; secondly, that, by reason of the facts just stated, § 88 of article 81 was void, under the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution; and, third, that, by the above named section, 88 bonds of the description held by Mrs. Simpson were declared to be liable to assessment and taxation to the owners thereof in the same manner as like bonds secured by a mortgage on land partly in this state and partly beyond it; and that, as there was no provision for the assessment of the last-named class of bonds, there could be no taxation on those owned by Mrs. Simpson. There was no question raised as to whether the gas company should have been assessed with the bonds. Dealing with the first and second of the three defenses, and with a view of showing that there was no unreasonable discrimination made between the bonds issued by a corporation and the mortgage debt created by an individual, this court said: "An individual's true worth for the purposes of taxation consists of his real and personal property; but, in the case of a corporation, its franchise, its borrowing power, its earning capacity, its real worth, are not represented merely by its visible property and shares of stock. The taxable value of a corporation is its bonded indebtedness, together with its stock. In support of this, Justice Miller, in State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 605, 23 L. ed. 670, said: 'It is therefore obvious that, when you have ascertained the current cash value of the whole funded debt and the current cash value of the entire number of shares, you have, by the action of those who, above all others, can best estimate it, ascertained the true value of the road, all its property, its capital stock, and its franchises, for these are all represented by the value of its bonded debt and of the shares of its capital stock.' We then added: "It is quite apparent, then, that this exemption of the mortgage debt of an individual and taxation of the mortgage bonds of a corporation in the hands of the respective creditors is not an arbitrary and unreasonable discrimination between the same classes of property." Whilst we thus quoted from the State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 605, 23 L. ed. 670, which concerned and interpreted the Illinois system of taxation, that differs from ours, the citation was made, not as referring to our tax system in its application to corporations, but to show that there was no unreasonable or arbitrary discrimination involved in the exemption of individual mortgage debts, under § 4, art. 81, Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, and the taxation of corporate bonds, under § 88, in the hands of the owners thereof; but we did not say, or imply, that, under the Maryland statutes, the indebtedness of a corporation formed an assessable part of its taxable value, or could be included in the assessment of its property. That question was not involved. It may not be amiss to note, in passing, the view entertained of the Illinois system by Judge Cooley, though the supreme court reached a different conclusion. In a note to page 136, Cooley on Taxation, evidently written before the State Railroad Tax Cases were decided by the Supreme Court, Judge Cooley said: "A franchise may have a distinct value by itself, irrespective of any debts that may be owing by the corporation or persons possessing it, as a farm may have irrespective of the mortgage upon it; but there is certainly some difficulty in understanding how the capital stock of a corporation can be valued without taking into account its indebtedness, or how, if the corporation owes so much that its capital stock is absolutely worth nothing and could be sold for nothing, it could have for any legal purposes a 'fair cash value' given it by taking as the measure of its value that which renders it valueless. It may be that if, by enforcing the debt, the capital stock should become the property of the creditors, it would then have a value equal to the previous value of the debt, but this would be by the substitution of one thing . . . for another. Before that time, certainly, the debt is no part of the capital stock." However this may be, it is perfectly apparent that Simpson v. Hopkins did not hold that the bonded indebtedness of a corporation might be added to the market value of its stock in order to ascertain by that process the corporations actual worth for the purposes of taxation, under the then existing laws of Maryland. The opinion does say, "The taxable value of a corporation is its bonded indebtedness, together with its stock," but it does not say the corporation may be taxed on account of that indebtedness. Doubtless the general assembly could prescribe such a rule. The question is not, Can it validly do so? but, Has it done so?

The answer to that question must be sought in the provisions of the Code relating to assessments and taxation, and to those provisions we now turn. Naturally, the first inquiry which suggests itself in this connection is, What are the statutory requirements with regard to the valuation of bonds which constitute the indebtedness of a corporation, and to whom, by the declared will of the legislature, are such bonds directed to be assessed for the purposes of taxation? To the corporation, to the bondholder, or to both? Let us see. Section 2 of article 81, Code Pub. Gen. Laws of 1934, among other things, provides: "All bonds made or issued . . . by any corporation whatsoever belonging to the residents of this state, . . . shall be valued and assessed for . . . state, county, and municipal taxation to the owners thereof in the county or city in which such owners may respectively reside." Further on the same section also declares: "All bonds and certificates of indebtedness bearing interest, issued by any railroad or other corporation of this state secured by mortgage of property wholly within this state, belonging to residents of this state, shall be subject to valuation, assessment, and taxation to the owner or owners thereof, in the same manner as like bonds or certificates of indebtedness bearing interest and secured by mortgage of property partly in this state and partly in some other state or states are now subject to valuation and assessment under the laws of this state. . . ." Section 92 of article 81 is in almost the same language as the above quotation, but it concludes with these words: "And it shall be the duty of the county commissioners of the several counties and the appeal tax court of Baltimore city to assess all such bonds or certificates of debt to the owner or owners thereof resident in their several counties, or in the city of Baltimore, respectively." The plain and explicit terms of these sections of the Code make it the imperative duty of the county commissioners and the appeal tax court to assess to the holders thereof the bonds and certificates of indebtedness issued by the Consolidated Gas Company. The holders therefore, are to be assessed with them. Now, § 210, art. 81, declares: "All bonds, certificates of indebtedness, or evidence of debt, in whatsoever form, made or issued by any public or private corporation, . . . owned by residents of Maryland, shall be subject to valuation and assessment to the owners thereof in the county or city in which such owners may respectively reside. . . . and upon such valuation the regular rate of taxation for state purposes shall be paid, and there shall also be paid on such valuation 30 cents (and no more) on each $100 for county, city and municipal taxation in such county or city of this state in which the owner may reside." This section distinctly limits the amount which may be exacted on each $100 of the assessed value of such bonds. By the prior sections the bonds are to be assessed to the owners thereof, and by this section the rate is restricted, outside of the state tax, to 30 cents, "and no more," on each $100 of their assessed value. Primarily, therefore, the creditor, who owns the bonds, and not the debtor company, which issued them, pays the tax on them; and, unless there is some explicit and unequivocal provisions of law subjecting the same bonds to an additional imposition as part of the taxable value of the assets of the indebted corporation, the appeal tax court was without authority to charge the Consolidated Gas Company with $10,050,000 of the company's own outstanding obligations. Is there any such provision to be found upon the statute book? A diligent search has failed to discover it, and in the admirable and instructive arguments at the bar it was not even suggested that an enactment of that kind existed in Maryland. Very cogent reasons were assigned, and dwelt on with great force, to sustain such a scheme of assessment. Those reasons would doubtless have much weight with the legislative department of the state government, but we have no right or power to supply by judicial interpretation measures of administrative detail or systems of valuation which the legislature has not yet seen fit to adopt. "A distinction must be noticed," said the Supreme Court, "between the state law and the power of a state." Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 166 U. S. 221, 41 L. ed. 977, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604. We are dealing now with the construction our existing statutes, and not in any way with the power of the state to enact this particular a different scheme of taxation. In the case last cited the Supreme Court, after illustrating the inequality resulting from the imposition of a tax on only the tangible assets of a corporation, whilst its intangible and perhaps most valuable property was suffered to escape, observed: "Accumulated wealth will laugh at the crudity of taxing laws which reach only the one and ignore the other, while they who own tangible property, not organized into a single producing plant, will feel the injustice of a system which so misplaces the burden of taxation. . . . But that a mockery of substantial justice it would be for a corporation, whose property is worth to its stockholders for the purposes of income and sale $16,800,000, to be adjudged liable for taxation upon only one-fourth of that amount. The value which property bears in the market—the amount for which its stock can be bought and sold—is the real value. Business men do not pay cash for property in moonshine or dreamland. They buy and pay for that which is of value in its powers to produce income or for purposes of sale." The power of the state to levy taxes on values thus computed is one thing. The question as to whether it has, by enactments now in force, done so, is another and a widely different thing. With the first we have no concern, because the method of taxation, and what shall be taken as the measure of the tax, are in the discretion of the legislature. Cooley, Taxn. 273. As to the second, we have reached the conclusion that no such legislation has yet been adopted. It follows, then, that the method pursued by the appeal tax court in this instance was without warrant of law, and that the assessment was irregular.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But there is, in addition, an equally serious objection to the validity of the assessment, though it rests on a different foundation. Whilst it is true this court cannot be required to sit as a board of review to revise the amount of the valuation placed by assessors or other tax officials upon property for purposes of taxation (Baltimore v. Bonaparte, 83 Md. 159, 48 Atl. 735; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 610, 23 L. ed. 672), yet, when the record shows that a valuation had been imposed upon property in a capricious or whimsical or unwarrantable way, instead of by the exercise of judgment, then such a valuation would not be an assessment at all. "An assessment, strictly speaking, is an official estimate of the sums which are to constitute the basis of an apportionment of a tax between the individual subjects of taxation within the district. As the word is more commonly employed, an assessment consists in the two processes of listing the persons, property, etc., to be taxed, and of estimating the sums which are to be the guide in an apportionment of the tax between them." Cooley, Taxn. 258; New York v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539, 25 L. ed. 705; 3 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1111. Taxes by valuation cannot be apportioned without an assessment. "Without an assessment, they have no support, and are nullities." Thayer v. Stearns, 1 Pick. 482. It is shown by the evidence that the $6,000,000 figure was fixed tentatively in the notice sent to the company, and that it was arrived at by the method hereinbefore indicated. But, inasmuch as the result actually reached by the process followed by the appeal tax court produced a sum, as the value of the easement in the streets and of the franchises, nearly $1,000,000 in excess of the total par value of the capital stock, the appeal tax court proceeded at once to cut the sum down, first by deducting an inflated and confessedly erroneous valuation of the personal property, and then by dividing the residuum by 2. The inflation of the value of the personal property purely for the purpose of augmenting the amount of the subtrahend in the calculation detailed by the witness—an inflation having not a pretense of fact nor a shadow of justification to rest on—necessarily diminished the remainder; but, as thus diminished, it was still too high to permit even the semblance of judgment in its ascertainment to be predicated of it, and it was summarily split in two. The arbitrary inflation of the value of the personal property—arbitrary because done without the suggestion of a valid reason—tainted the whole calculation. It will be remembered that the value of the personal property was fixed at $150,000; that this sum, without any suggestion that it was too low, and without any intimation that it was erroneous, was raised to $1,500,000. But when it appeared that the result obtained by deducting this last-named sum would not be represented in round numbers, $250,000 were subtracted from the $1,500,000 so as to make the remainder an even $12,000,000. In all this there is not an element of judgment as respects the value of the easement. Any other combination of figures might just as well have been employed, and, by subtracting here and adding there, $6,000,000—the sum named in advance in the notice—could have been as readily and precisely reached. That is not the kind of judgment which the law contemplates shall be exercised by an assessor. The method of valuation was wrong, and the appellant asked the court to so rule; but, by rejecting the company's fourth prayer, the trial court refused to grant that instruction. In this there was error.

There was also error in granting the appellees' sixth and eighth instructions. The sixth declares that the burden of proof was on the company to show by a preponderance of testimony that the assessment was erroneous. Presumptions are in favor of the correctness of assessments. 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 728. But there must be an assessment before there can be a presumption in favor of its accuracy. In this case there was no assessment; hence no presumption can be invoked. The theory underlying the eighth prayer is that there had been a valid assessment of $6,000,000 on the easements. As that theory is unsupported, the prayer must fall.

This disposes of all the questions raised in the case, and it will be seen that, whilst we hold the easements in question to be taxable, we determine that the method followed in valuing them cannot obtain under the statutes now in force.

For the errors indicated, the order sustaining the action of the appeal tax court will be reversed, and the alleged assessment as to the $6,000,000 will be, and hereby is, vacated.

Order reversed, with costs above and below.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

GANS SALVAGE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

ROBERT BYRNES to Use of JAMES HIGGINS.

(.... Md.)

1. Unsafe walls—fall as evidence of negligence.

The mere fall of a square brick stack, erected in a building to provide safety vaults on different floors, after the building has been destroyed by fire and while salvors are at work in the débris, is not sufficient to show negligence on the part of the master salvor, so as to render him liable for injury thereby caused to his employee.

2. Injury to servant—unsafe working place—standing walls.

That the cellar of a burned building was unsafe as a working place for salvors is not shown by the mere fact of the fall of a square brick stack placed in the building to provide safety vaults on the different floors and which was left standing after the fire.

3. Master and servant—salvaging from fire debris—assumption of risk.

One who engages to work in saving property from the débris left by a fire assumes the risk of injury from falling walls, when the peril is open and obvious.

4. Same—injury from falling walls.

An employee of one engaged in salvaging property from the débris of a fire cannot hold his employer liable for injuries caused by falling walls; since, if the danger was obvious, he assumed the risk of injury; and, if it was not obvious, the master did not violate his duty to use ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe working place.

(November 23, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of Baltimore City in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carroll T. Bond, George Weems Williams, and William L. Rawls, for appellant:

The master is not an insurer of the servant's safety.

Wood v. Heiges, 83 Md. 269, 34 Atl. 872.

No one is responsible for injuries resulting from unavoidable accidents while engaged in a lawful business.

United R. & Electric Co. v. Fletcher, 95 Md. 536, 52 Atl. 608; Baltimore v. War, 77

Case Note.—Dresser, on Employers' Liability, § 95, states the general rule as to a servant's assumption of risk as follows: "The servant assumes the obvious risks arising from the condition of affairs. Dangers of such a character that this servant, either through the common knowledge he is presumed to possess, or through the intelligence and experience it appears that he has, must have known and appreciated, or have been guilty of contributory negligence in failing to know and appreciate them."

With reference to risks which are incident to specially dangerous employments, Labatt, on Master & Servant, vol. 1, § 286, says: "A doctrine frequently recognized in the formal statements of the courts is that the principle which charges a servant with an assumption of the ordinary risks of an employment is applicable whether that employment may or may not be described as being inherently dangerous. It is, in fact, quite clear that any other position would be entirely illogical and unreasonable. Provided the risk from which the injury results is, as a matter of fact, obviously incident to the employment undertaken by the servant, it is impossible to argue, with any show of reason, that the essential elements from which an assumption of that risk is predicable are not present. It is not easy to see what useful purpose is served by enunciating the doctrine of assumption of risks in terms which recognize a distinction between occupations which are inherently dangerous and those which are not so." And in a note to this section the same author says: "There are many kinds of work in which danger is necessarily inherent, where precautions such as would insure safety to the workmen are either may not be described as being inherently dangerous. It is, in fact, quite clear that any other position would be entirely illogical and unreasonable. Provided the risk from which the injury results is, as a matter of fact, obviously incident to the employment undertaken by the servant, it is impossible to argue, with any show of reason, that the essential elements from which an assumption of that risk is predicable are not present. It is not easy to see what useful purpose is served by enunciating the doctrine of assumption of risks in terms which recognize a distinction between occupations which are inherently dangerous and those which are not so." And in a note to this section the same author says: "There are many kinds of work in which danger is necessarily inherent, where precautions such as would insure safety to the workmen are either 1004, 27 Atl. 85; Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 438, 5 Atl. 338.

The fall of the wall has by itself no proximate effect.

Merio v. Murphy, 99 Md. 556, 105 Am. St. Rep. 316, 58 Atl. 435; South Baltimore Car Works v. Schaefer, 96 Md. 88, 94 Am. St. Rep. 560, 53 Atl. 605; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. State, 75 Md. 152, 32 Am. St. Rep. 372, 23 Atl. 310; Nason v. West, 78 Me. 253, 3 Atl. 1; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 41, 41 L. ed. 1136, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707; Mon v. Texas & P. R. Co. 179 U. S. 661, 45 L. ed. 361, 364, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275; First v. Carnegie Steel Co. 173 Pa. 166, 33 Atl. 1102; Quinn v. Baird, 49 App. Div. 270, N. Y. Supp. 237; Larich v. Moies, 18 R. 513, 28 Atl. 661; 2 Labatt, Mast. & S. 2314-2320.

Plaintiff assumed the risk.

Griffin v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 124 Ind. 326, 24 E. 888; Pederson v. Rushford, 41 Minn. 442, N. W. 1063; Mielke v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 103 Wis. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 874, N. W. 22; Kanz v. Page, 168 Mass. 213, 1 E. 620; Olson v. McMullen, 34 Minn. 24, N. W. 318.

When a servant is employed by the master in a certain kind of work, the nature of which is such that certain dangers may arise from time to time as the work progresses, the master has discharged his full duty if he provides his servants with the means of protecting themselves against those dangers. Coal & Min. Co. v. Clay (Consolidated) & Min. Co. v. Floyd, 51 Ohio St. 557, 1 L. R. A. 856, 38 N. E. 610; Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Brown, 20 C. C. A. 147, 1 U. S. App. 759, 73 Fed. 974; Heald v. Wallace, 109 Tenn. 346, 71 S. W. 84; Union R. Co. v. Jarvi, 3 C. C. A. 433, 10 U. S. App. 439, 53 Fed. 65; Armour v. Hahn, 111 S. 313, 28 L. ed. 440, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433; Minneapolis v. Lundin, 7 C. C. A. 344, 19 U. S. App. 245, 58 Fed. 525; Gulf, C. & S. F.

possible, or would only be attainable at expense altogether incommensurate with the end to be accomplished. In all such cases the workman must rely upon his own care and skill; and in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, the risk is to be with him, and not with the employer."

The doctrine thus stated was recognized in Byrnes v. Packer, 99 Pa. 405, in which it was held that, when a servant undertakes dangerous duties, he assumes such risks as are incident to their discharge from causes apparent and obvious, the dangerous character of which causes he has had opportunity to ascertain. The same doctrine was applied with approval in Southwest Improv. Co. v. Andrew, 86 Va. 270, 9 S. E. 1015; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Banks, 104 Ala. 516, 16 So. 1 L.R.A.(N.S.)

R. Co. v. Jackson, 12 C. C. A. 507, 27 U. S. App. 519, 65 Fed. 48; Finalyson v. Utica Min. & Mill. Co. 14 C. C. A. 492, 32 U. S. App. 143, 67 Fed. 510; Carlson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 450, 28 Pac. 497; Batty v. Niagara Falls Hydraulic Power & Mfg. Co. 79 App. Div. 466, 79 N. Y. Supp. 734; Oleson v. Maple Grove Coal & Min. Co. 115 Iowa, 74, 87 N. W. 736; Fraser v. Red River Lumber Co. 45 Minn. 235, 47 N. W. 785; Moore v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 167 Pa. 497, 31 Atl. 734; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L. R. A. 460, 68 N. E. 262; Petaja v. Aurora Iron Min. Co. 106 Mich. 467, 32 L. R. A. 435, 58 Am. St. Rep. 505, 64 N. W. 335, 66 N. W. 951; Durst v. Carnegie Steel Co. 173 Pa. 165, 33 Atl. 1102; Perry v. Rogers, 157 N. Y. 254, 51 N. E. 1021; State use of Eckhardt v. Lazaretto Guano Co. 90 Md. 192, 44 Atl. 1017.

Mr. James Fluegel for appellee.

McSherry, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant is a body corporate engaged in the prosecution of a general salvage business. After the great fire, which caused a vast destruction of property in Baltimore city, on February 7 and 8, 1904, the appellant contracted to remove a quantity of canned goods from the cellar of a building which, before the fire had consumed it, had stood on South street. The plaintiff, who is the appellee on this record, was one of a number of men employed by the appellant to do the work of removal. Several walls, or parts of walls, of the building were standing after the fire was extinguished and at the time the salvage work was commenced. In the declaration it is alleged that "the building was dangerous and unsafe to work in," and that the "dangerous condition of said building was known to the defendant, but unknown to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff, while using due care and caution in the 547; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stutts, 105 Ala. 376, 53 Am. St. Rep. 127, 17 So. 29.

In Evansville & R. R. Co. v. Henderson, 134 Ind. 636, 33 N. E. 1021, the doctrine of assumption of risk in a dangerous employment is illustrated. The facts show that a servant was engaged to work on a construction train, which was run upon an unfinished track, in the service of unloading ties along the track, and while so employed was injured by the derailment of the train while running at the rate of 15 or 20 miles an hour. The court held that such an accident was one of the dangers incident to the service which the servant assumed. The court said: "It is an elementary principle of law, governing the relation of master and servant, that, when a servant enters upon an employment which is, from its nature, necessarily hazardous, the servant assumes said building, was, by the negligence of the defendant in thus having him work in the said dangerous and unsafe premises, . . . seriously and permanently injured . . . by the collapsing of a wall and other parts of the said building." The case went to trial before a jury upon the issue joined on the plea of not guilty, and resulted in a verdict against the defendant. From the judgment entered on that verdict, the pending appeal was taken. During the progress of the trial five exceptions were reserved. Four of them relate to rulings concerning the admissibility of evidence and the fifth brings up for review the action of the trial court on the prayers submitted for instructions to the jury.

As this is a suit by a servant against the master to recover damages for a personal injury sustained by the former in the course of his employment, negligence is the gravamen of the action. The negligence averred in the declaration consisted, if it existed at all, not merely in a failure of the appellant to exercise ordinary care to provide its servant, the appellee, with a reasonably safe place in which to perform the labor he had been employed to do, but in deliberately the usual risks and perils of the service; and this is especially true as to all those risks which require only the exercise of ordinary observation to make them apparent. In such cases, there is an implied contract on the part of the servant to take all the risks fairly incident to the service, and to waive all right of action against the master for injuries resulting from such hazards. This waiver includes, on the part of the servant, all such risks as, from the nature of the business, usually and ordinarily conducted, he must have known when he embarked in the master's service, and, also, those risks which the exercise of his opportunities for inspection, while giving diligent attention to such service, would have disclosed to him. . . . Where the danger is equally open to the observation of both the master and the servant, both are upon common ground, and the master is not liable, as a general rule, for resulting injuries." In Manning v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 105 Mich. 260, 63 N. W. 312, the same rule finds application.

In Kennedy v. Manhattan R. Co. 145 N. Y. 288, 39 N. E. 956, it was held that an employee of an elevated railroad company, who had been employed for more than three weeks in a yard elevated some distance above the ground, and who had actual knowledge that it was not in a completed state, and that carpenters were constantly employed in covering it with plank, assumed the risk of working there while there were uncovered spaces.

In Connelly v. Hamilton Woolen Co. 163 Mass. 150, 39 N. E. 787, it was held that one who voluntarily undertakes to whitewash the ceiling above rapidly revolving danger-putting him to work in the ruins of a building known by the appellant, but unknown by the appellee, to be in a dangerous condition. The alleged negligence relied on to sustain a recovery was therefore not simply an omission to discharge some duty which the master owed to the servant, but involved an affirmative act of commission in the assignment of the servant to a situation which the master knew and the servant did not know to be perilous and insecure. Under the declaration, it was incumbent on the appellee to prove by legally sufficient evidence, first, not only that some of the walls of the building in question, which were standing after the fire, were in a dangerous condition and liable to fall, but that the identical wall which, by falling, caused the injury complained of, was also in that condition when the appellee was placed and retained at work in close proximity to it; secondly, that the appellant had knowledge of the dangerous condition of the wall which, by collapsing, injured the appellee, and that, at the time, the appellant, possessed that knowledge prior to the occurrence of the accident; and thirdly, that the appellee was ignorant of the danger, and by the exercise of provident machines, assumes the risk of injury from being caught by the key of a revolving shaft.

In Judkins v. Maine C. R. Co. 80 Me. 414, 14 Atl. 735, the court held that the enhanced risk created by the defective condition of a rolling stock which is set apart to be taken to the repair shop will, as regards a servant, be treated as an ordinary one, which he will be deemed to have assumed.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boland, 96 Ky. 626, 18 L. R. A. 260, 11 So. 667, the court held that the extra hazard to a brakeman by use of cars with couplings of different patterns was one of the risks assumed when entering such employment.

The same doctrine was applied by the same court, in later decisions, to the servant's assumption of the risks of using cars having double bumpers. East Tennessee & G. R. Co. v. Turvaille, 97 Ala. 125, 12 So. 63; Davis v. Western R. Co. 107 Ala. 63, 11 So. 173; Southern R. Co. v. Arnold, 114 Ky. 189, 21 So. 954. And a similar decision has been rendered in Indiana. Whitcomb Standard Oil Co. 153 Ind. 518, 55 N. E. 414.

In King v. Morgan, 48 C. C. A. 507, 1 Fed. 446, the court held that one who is employed to blast rock in a mine by the use of dynamite assumed the risk of injury resulting from his use of an iron bar, instead of a wooden one, to tamp down the charge.

A workman assumes the risk of injury while working near a dam having an angle of about 135 degrees with the surface of the water, where the current is so swift that he cannot swim out of it, if there is nothing to prevent his seeing and appreciating the danger. Bullivant v. Spokane, 14 Wash. 577, 45 P. 42.

prudence and care could not have discovered before the wall fell upon him.

A brief outline of the facts appearing in the bills of exception must be given before turning to a consideration of the legal principles which underlie and will control the final decision of the several questions presented to this court by the record. The building, in the cellar of which the appellee and others were working when the accident happened, had been completely destroyed by the fire. Some partition walls and a brick vault, which extended from the cellar to the top story, were left standing. All of the wood material had been consumed by the flames. The fragments of the walls still standing and the brick vault were not supported by any of the timbers which had formerly tied the outer and the inner walls together. The ruins showed merely a heap of débris, a few fragments of walls, and the remnant of the brick vault. This vault was built of brick, and was about 4 or 5 feet square, with openings into it on each floor. These openings in the face of the vault had iron doors attached. Thus the tenants of each floor were provided with a vault for the protection of their books and papers. After the fire this vault stood for a height of 30 or 35 feet, and presented the appearance of a square stack or chimney with iron doors opening into it at each floor. The cellar of the house was divided up into arched compartments, and in these the cases of canned goods were closely packed. In order to get them out after the fire, it was necessary to dig through the arched tops of the compartments, and this was done by the appellee and the other laborers engaged in the work of removing the goods. The work of removing the cases had progressed for several days under these conditions. There was a foreman who had charge of the hands, and both the foreman and the hands worked under a man named Ratinger, who had full charge of and supervision over the salvage work for the appellant company. Several days before the accident happened James W. McCuen, an inspector of furnaces, who was a subordinate of Building Inspector Preston, went to the premises where the appellee and the other employees of the salvage company were working, and told the foreman "to take care of the walls as they were coming down, as it was dangerous for the men to go further down without taking care of them, and he said he would." This message was delivered to the foreman, because Building Inspector Preston, who had not seen the condition of the walls, and who had no personal knowledge concerning them, had been informed "that there were some men working in a cellar on South street, where it was dangerous." The building inspector directed McCuen "to go down there and notify them to take care of the walls if they continued working there," and McCuen, without making any minute or even casual inspection of the walls, because, as he says, he did not have time to do so, merely communicated to the foreman the warning sent by Mr. Preston. The foreman thereafter repeated to Ratinger the message delivered to McCuen. After McCuen had left, and after Ratinger had learned from the foreman what the building inspector had directed to be done, one of the walls was thrown down under the supervision of Ratinger, but the vault stack was allowed to remain. There is not a particle of evidence in the record to show that the vault walls, the four walls forming the 4 or 5 feet square vault stack, were unsafe or dangerous, or even impaired. On the contrary, three witnesses examined on behalf of the appellee, they being the foreman and two of the 18 men employed by the appellant, distinctly and emphatically say they thought the vault walls perfectly safe because they were solid. McCuen did not tell the foreman that the vault walls were unsafe. He did not go into the cellar; he made no special inspection of the vault walls; he is not a builder, but a furnace inspector; and he testified that he thought in his judgment "if they would attempt to clear that débris out without protecting the walls, before they could get away from them, they would weaken and would fall down." He further testified: "The way it looked to me, to clear the débris out that was there without first protecting the wall, it might possibly fall after the débris was away. I wasn't making any particular inspection of that particular work. I was going around delivering messages to them who had charge of the gangs pulling down different walls." On March 7, 1904, it rained and no work was done by the men on the premises in question, though they had worked there several days the previous week. On the following day, March 8th, work was resumed, and whilst the appellee and other laborers were in the cellar, and whilst Ratinger was standing within a few feet of the vault, the vault walls fell and injured the appellee and another workman. There is nothing in the record to show what caused the vault walls to fall. To all appearances they were solid and safe, and, though McCuen, when testifying in the case a year after the accident had happened, stated that, in his judgment, "when they got all this débris and stuff out of the cellar, it seemed to me it would so weaken the wall, there being nothing to support it, it would fall," he did not venture to say how much of the débris would have to be removed before the walls would give away, nor was any evidence whatever adduced to show that the removal of the débris actually caused the walls to fall. This vault stack, as has been remarked, extended up the height of the building, and the upper half toppled over and fell inwards, leaving about a story and a half of it undisturbed. It certainly could not have been foreseen by anyone that the upper part of this quadrilateral brick structure would separate from the lower part about midway of its entire elevation, and that the top portion would fall in the way it did.

It is a general rule, not, however, without very important exceptions, at least one of which will be alluded to later on, that it is the duty of the master to exercise ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place in which the servant may perform his services. State use of Eckhardt v. Lazaretto Guano Co. 90 Md. 192, 44 Atl. 1017; Armour v. Hahn, 111 U. S. 318, 28 L. ed. 440, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433. A failure of the master to do this, in the instances where it is his duty to do it, is negligence, and, if an injury to the servant results therefrom and is the direct consequence thereof, an action will lie. A master is not an insurer of the servant's safety. Wood v. Heiges, 83 Md. 289, 34 Atl. 872. His liability, if any liability attaches at all, depends altogether upon a breach by him of some imposed duty. Laying aside for the moment all the exceptions to the general rule requiring the master to exercise ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place for the servant to work, what evidence is there in this case of a breach of the duty imposed by the rule? The concession by the appellee of the appellant's fifth prayer, which instructed the jury that the mere falling of the wall by itself was not sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the appellant, excluded any inference of negligence from the naked act which caused the injury. Serio v. Murphy, 99 Md. 556, 105 Am. St. Rep. 316, 58 Atl. 435. The concession of the prayer made the legal proposition which it announced the law of the case, whether that proposition was right or wrong. Baltimore Consol. R. Co. v. State, 91 Md. 510, 46 Atl. 1000. But the legal proposition contained in the conceded prayer was right. South Baltimore Car Works v. Schaefer, 96 Md. 105, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 53 Atl. 605. The case at bar is distinguishable from Treusch v. Kamke, 63 Md. 278. That was an action to recover damages for an injury sustained by the fall of a house which had been so carelessly and negligently erected, and with such insufficient and improper materials, that in consequence it suddenly fell, and in falling injured the plaintiff. It was held that "the fact of the fall itself was at least prima facie evidence of improper construction, and entitled the plaintiff to call upon the defendant to explain it to the satisfaction of a jury." Here, however, we have no inquiry concerning a faulty or negligent construction. A house properly and carefully built, with sufficient and suitable material, would not suddenly fall, and the owner who built it, if it did so fall, would be bound to explain the cause of the collapse, if he wished to free himself from the consequences resulting from conditions for the existence of which he was himself responsible. The case in 63 Md. was not one between master and servant. In the case now before us no question as to improper or negligent construction is concerned, no suit is pending against the builder of the vault walls, and no inference as to the dangerous condition of the walls can be drawn from the mere fact that the walls fell, unless it be assumed that they could not have fallen had they not been in a unsafe and dangerous condition. But to assume that would be to assume as true the precise thing to be proved, and that assumption, when adopted, would then be substituted for evidence tending to establish the fact to be proved. Such a process would permit negligence to be inferred from the simple happening of the accident. In a case like this that cannot be done.

Something else, then, in addition to the mere falling of the vault walls, must be found in the record before it can be held that there was evidence tending to prove that the place where the appellee was employed to work was dangerous. One wall of the building had been torn down by city employees, and, after the warning message delivered by McCuen, had been communicated to Ratinger by the foreman, another wall was demolished by the appellant's workmen; but neither the city employees nor the appellant's workmen disturbed the vault walls. If the vault walls had presented any indications of being in a dangerous condition at the time the other walls were leveled, it is scarcely probable that they would have been allowed to remain standing. Indeed, it is reasonably certain they would also have been destroyed or strengthened. They appeared to be solid and secure, and the fact that they formed a square, cornered column which had stood firmly for a month after the fire, seemingly unaffected by it, and without exhibiting any signs of weakness whatever, was calculated to induce a belief that it was not necessarily or even probably hazardous to remove the cases of canned goods from the cellar before either razing the walls or shoring them up. The evidence does not show what caused the vault walls to fall. The conjecture of Mc-

When that, if the débris were removed, the walls would fall, is, at best, a mere speculation, because there is nothing in the record to show either that the débris had been removed, or, if removed, to what extent it had been taken away, or what causative relation existed, if any, between its removal and the collapse of the walls. Nor does the testimony of Emerich, the district chief of the fire department, tend to show that the walls were dangerous before the accident happened. He was summoned to the scene after the walls fell, and he knew nothing concerning them prior to that time. He aided in rescuing the men imprisoned by the débris. He found it necessary then to shore up the portions of the walls left standing before he would permit his subordinates to extricate the appellee. But the condition of the remnants of the walls after the upper half of them had toppled over gave no indication of their condition before their collapse. The physical appearance and the actual status had wholly and completely changed.

But, if it be assumed, or for the moment be conceded, that there was some legally sufficient evidence tending to prove that the walls which fell, and which by falling caused the injury complained of, were in a dangerous and unsafe condition when the appellee was put to or retained at work in the cellar, then it is certain, in the absence of any proof as to what caused them to fall, that the means of knowing the danger and the peril incident to the removal of the canned goods were as open and obvious to the appellee as to the appellant. It will not do to say that the information imparted by McCuen to the foreman, and by the latter to Rätinger, apprised the appellant of a hazard and a risk of which the appellee was ignorant; because, in the last analysis, all that McCuen definitely said to the foreman was to repeat Mr. Preston's instructions "to all people cleaning out débris" that they should "take care of all dangerous walls before getting the débris out." The dangerous walls were not pointed out, and Rätinger, the foreman, and the 18 men at work under the latter, each had precisely the same opportunity to see, and to judge as to, the peril involved in doing the work in which they were engaged, under the then existing surroundings. An employee who contracts for the performance of hazardous duties assumes such risks as are incident to their discharge from causes open or obvious, the dangerous character of which he had an opportunity to ascertain. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stricker, 51 Md. 47, 34 Am. Rep. 291. One who remains in a service which necessarily exposes him to hazardous risks from causes open and obvious, the dangerous character of which he knew or had an opportunity of knowing, must be considered as having assumed such risks, and, if injured in consequence thereof, has no claim against the employer. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Wachter, 60 Md. 395; Yates v. McCullough Iron Co. 69 Md. 370, 16 Atl. 280. This doctrine, firmly grounded in the law of this state, in the law of England, and of probably every state in the Federal Union, though usually stated as a general rule, constitutes in reality, an exception to or qualification of the broad principle which requires the employer to use ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place in which the servant may perform his work. It may be taken, then, as a postulate, that a servant, who, on entering into a contract of employment, knows of the dangers of the premises or place of work, or by the use of ordinary care could see and understand them, assumes the risks which arise therefrom. 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 114. Knowledge by the servant of defects in appliances has been held in legal contemplation to carry with it knowledge of the risk and danger incident to the use of such appliances; and in such instances the law imputes and presumes knowledge of the risk and danger, and will not allow the injured workman to aver or prove that he had no actual knowledge thereof. Yates v. McCullough Iron Co. supra.

Whatever danger or hazard there was in performing the work which the appellee had been employed by the appellant to do was the danger or risk that unsupported and isolated walls, which had been subjected but recently before to the effects of the intense heat produced by a mighty conflagration, would, without warning and without the intervention of other forces than those set in motion by the laws of nature, suddenly collapse and fall, and in falling occasion the precise injury which actually befell the appellee. He saw the denuded walls rising up to a height of 35 feet above the place where he was working,—they confronted him as he stepped upon the premises,—and he had aided in throwing down one of the walls because it was more threatening than the others, and he must have known that a gale of wind or a vibration produced by the dynamiting of other walls in proximate sections of a burnt district, or a jar resulting from the fall of other walls in the vicinity, or the absorption of rain by the exposed mortar might cause the vault walls to totter and fall. He must have known all this, because we are bound to assume he was a man of average intelligence, as there is "no proof that he was stupid or dull of intellect, that any of his senses were impaired, or that he was not possessed of ordinary powers of observation." Yates v.

McCullough Iron Co. supra. If the place was really dangerous, the appellee must have known that it was, because the means of knowledge were as open and obvious to him as to the master, and by voluntarily working there he assumed the risks of being injured by causes which were open and obvious, and he cannot hold the employer responsible in damages, if those open and obvious causes produced the injury. If, on the other hand, the place where he worked was not a hazardous one, if the walls which in falling injured him were not in a dangerous condition, then there was no breach by the master of the duty owed to the servant to use ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place in which the servant might perform his service; and, there being no breach of that duty, no action can be maintained, even though, in consequence of an accident resulting from some unexplained cause, an injury has been sustained. In either event, upon either hypothesis, there was no adequate cause of action. Such being the situation, the eighth prayer presented by the appellant, withdrawing the case from the consideration of the jury, ought to have been granted. That prayer sought to take the case from the jury because of a failure on the part of the appellee to adduce any legally sufficient evidence to show that the appellant had violated any of the duties it owed to the appellee. Holding as we do, for the reasons that have been given, that the prayer should have been granted, it becomes unnecessary to allude to or discuss the instructions which were given or the questions which are raised by the other bills of exception. As no recovery can be had, the judgment will be reversed without awarding a new trial.

Judgment reversed, with costs above and below, without awarding a new trial.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

WALTER F. MUNDHENKE By Guardian, Respt.,
v.

OREGON CITY MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appt.

(.... Or.)

1. Minor servant—assumption of risk.

A youth sixteen years old, upon taking employment in a mill, assumes the risk of injury which is plainly apparent from coming in contact with exposed gears upon machines adjoining a passageway, notwithstanding he is not expressly warned as to such danger.

2. Same—imputation of negligence.

Want of care, precaution, and foresight.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

will not, as matter of law, be imputed to youth sixteen years old, who is employed in a mill to distribute bobbins into boxes which are in close proximity to exposed cog gearing, when, in the performance of his work he slips on the floor, which is covered with a variable quantity of grease from day to day, and falls against the uncovered gear to his injury.

3. Unsafe working place—question for jury.

Whether or not it is negligence for a manufacturer who employs boys to perform part of his work to permit the floor to become so slippery in close proximity to exposed gears as to afford insecure footing is question for the jury.

4. Negligence of minor employee.

A sixteen-year-old boy, in taking employment in a mill, assumes no risk of injury from defective machinery and passageway that would not have been avoided by the precaution common to other boys of like age and experience, and cannot be charged with negligence for conduct which is common to such boys.

(August 15, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clackamas County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Wolverton, Ch. J.:

This is an action for the recovery of damages for a personal injury sustained by the plaintiff, a minor. He was, at the time of the accident, about the age of sixteen years and eight months. The injury of which he complains consists in the loss of parts of two fingers on the left hand. The defendant was engaged in operating a woolen mill, and the plaintiff was in its employ, charged with the duty of carrying yarn which was in the form of bobbins, and distributing it to the looms. The particular acts of negligence upon which plaintiff predicates the action are stated in the complaint in substance as follows: That the defendant carelessly and negligently placed the box used for receiving yarn or filling next to exposed gearing on the side of one of the weaving looms, which said gearing the defendant carelessly and negligently permitted to be exposed in a dangerous, defective, and unsafe condition; that the defendant knowingly, carelessly, and negligently allowed the floor of said room next to the box where the plaintiff was employed to carry yarn or filling to become oily and slippery, and in an unsafe and defective condition; that the plaintiff was inexperienced in the matter of his employment, and unacquainted with the dangerous, defective, and slippery condition of the floor, and of the defective and dangerous condition of said machinery, and of the dangers incident to said employment; but it was the duty of the defendant herein to instruct the plaintiff as to the dangers incident to and in connection with his said employment, and of the dangerous and slippery condition of said floor, and of the dangerous condition of said exposed gearing; but the defendant failed and neglected to instruct and inform plaintiff of the dangerous and slippery condition of said floor and of the dangerous and defective condition of said exposed gearing, and, because of such failure to so instruct plaintiff, he was injured and damaged as hereinafter set forth; and that while plaintiff was so performing his duties as aforesaid, being engaged in putting said yarn or filling in the said box prepared by defendant, and by reason of defendant's negligence in allowing said floor to become oily and slippery, and in allowing said gearing to be and remain exposed, and without fault on plaintiff's part, he slipped, and his hand came in contact with said exposed gearing, whereby he was injured,—describing the injury. The answer joins issue with these alleged matters of negligence, and sets forth two separate defenses: (1) That the danger, whatever existed, was open and obvious, and that plaintiff assumed the risk; and (2) that he was himself negligent, and contributed to the injury. When plaintiff rested, defendant moved for a nonsuit, which motion being Case Note.—The court in MUNDHENKE v. OREGON CITY MFG. CO., in holding that a minor assumes the risks incidental to the business so far as he is competent to understand them, discusses with approval the case of Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Erickson, 5 C. C. A. 41, 12 U. S. App. 260, 55 Fed. 943. This case has been cited frequently in other cases, but on entirely different questions. It was, however, referred to with approval in the case of Glenmont Lumber Co. v. Roy, 61 C. C. A. 506, 126 Fed. 529, in which the court held that a young man, twenty years old, who had worked about sawmills for some time, assumed the risks incidental to his duties, where the risks were open and visible, and where he testified that he was aware of them all, but did not recognize the danger. The same case was also cited in Omaha Bottling Co. v. Theiler, 59 Neb. 564, 90 Am. St. Rep. 673, 80 N. W. 821, in which the court held that a nineteen-year-old boy of average intelligence, who had worked at the bottling business five years, could not be considered ignorant of the hazards of the business, and consequently assumed the risk of injuries resulting from the explosion of bottles filled with carbonated cider.

Dubiver v. City & Suburban R. Co. 44 Or. 227, 74 Pac. 915, 75 Pac. 693, and Cudahy Packing Co. v. Marcan, 54 L. R. A. 258, 45 C. C. A. 515, 106 Fed. 645, were also cited by the court and discussed with approval; but they have not been referred to in other cases on the questions involved in MUNDHENKE v. OREGON CITY MFG. CO.

The court also cites the case of Rummel v. Dilworth, P. & Co. 131 Pa. 509, 17 Am. St. Rep. 827, 19 Atl. 345, 346, which held that a seventeen-year-old boy who had lately been engaged did not assume the risks of injury resulting from being caught between the gears of an iron roller which no one but a skilled employee could operate with safety. The court said that in the case of young persons it is the duty of an employer to take notice of their age and ability, and to use ordinary care to protect them from risks which they cannot properly appreciate, and to which they should not be exposed. (L.R.A.(N.S.) posed. This duty to instruct grows out of the ignorance or inexperience of the employee.

To similar effect in Bowers v. Star Logging Co. 41 Or. 301, 68 Pac. 516, it was held that an eighteen-year-old boy did not assume the risks attendant on filling the position of a brakeman on a logging train. The same rule is applied in Doyle v. Pittsburgh Waste Co. 204 Pa. 621, 54 Atl. 363.

The case of Ciriack v. Merchants' Woolen Co. 146 Mass. 182, 4 Am. St. Rep. 307, 15 N. E. 579, is also cited as an authority. But in this case it was held that a twelve-year-old boy of average intelligence, who had worked for nearly two months in the same room with machines used for rubbing up the nap of cloth, could not recover for an injury which he sustained while obeying the overseer's order to go between the machines to look for a tool. The court said that the duty of the employer did not extend so far as to require the giving of special caution on every occasion when the boy might be called upon to pass near the machines. This case was cited in Williamson v. Sheldon Marble Co. 66 Vt. 427, 29 Atl. 660, but there, also, it was held that a boy fifteen years old assumed the risks and understood the dangers attendant upon climbing an icy ledge of rock to shut off air from a drilling machine.

In Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Young, 117 Ind. 525, 20 N. E. 423, the court held that the same rules as to assumption of risk which apply to men do not apply to boys. In James v. Rapides Lumber Co. 50 Ia. Ann. 729, 44 L. R. A. 52, 23 So. 469, which also cited the Ciriack Case, the court held the master liable for the negligence of the foreman of a sawmill, who suddenly called a young boy to assume a dangerous position, without giving him any instructions or explanation as to the movements of the machinery or the risks to which he was exposed. And in Day v. Achron, 23 R. I. 627, 50 Atl. 654, it was held that a sixteen-year-old girl who was accustomed to operating a mangle in a laundry assumed the risk of injury.

As another authority the court cites the denied, the trial proceeded, resulting in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

Messrs. Hogue & Wilbur and Hedges & Griffith, for appellant:

An employee in a mill assumes the risk of injury from a fall upon a floor that is slippery in its normal condition.

Cudahy Packing Co. v. Marcan, 54 L. R. A. 258, 45 C. C. A. 515, 106 Fed. 645; Herold v. Pfister, 92 Wis. 417, 66 N. W. 355; Tinkham v. Sawyer, 153 Mass. 485, 27 N. E. 6; Cunningham v. Bath Iron Works, 92 Me. 501, 43 Atl. 106; Williamson v. Sheldon Marble Co. 66 Vt. 427, 29 Atl. 669; Kleinst v. Kunhardt, 160 Mass. 230, 35 N. E. 458; Murphy v. American Rubber Co. 159 Mass. 266, 34 N. E. 268; Fitzgerald v. Elsas Paper Co. 30 Misc. 438, 62 N. Y. Supp. 597; Labatt, Mast. & S. 400, and note, page 1082.

case of Dowling v. Gerard B. Allen & Co. 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298, which was reaffirmed in 102 Mo. 213, 14 S. W. 751, and in which the court held that a seventeen-year-old boy who was hired to run errands did not assume the risk of injury resulting from obeying an order to stop the engine, and, who, while obeying such order, was caught by a set-screw and collar revolving with a certain countershaft which was operated by the engine. This case was cited with approval in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Perego, 36 Kan. 428, 14 Pac. 7, in which the court held the master liable for the injury to an unskilled apprentice who was called upon to assist other employees, who were also unskilled, in the handling of a dangerous drilling machine, where they were not instructed as to the danger. The case was also referred to with approval in Turner v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 40 W. Va. 692, 22 S. E. 83, in which the same doctrine was applied.

The doctrine is well stated in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Brick, 83 Tex. 602, 20 S. W. 511, in which the court said that the great weight of authority supports the rule that if a servant is under the age of twenty-one years, and has not been instructed by the master as to the dangers of his employment, it is a question for the jury whether he has acquired sufficient knowledge of the dangers to exempt the master from liability. It is the duty of the master to inform him, not only that the work is dangerous, but also as to the extent of the danger, and how to avoid it. If this is done, he assumes the risk, and in case he is injured by reason of the risks so assumed, he cannot recover. If he knows not only of the danger, but also of its extent, and has the capacity to appreciate it, he then assumes the risk, and the master cannot be held liable. It is not sufficient that he knows the employment is dangerous, but he must also be aware of the extent of the danger, and have the discretion to understand the risk, before he can be held

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

An instruction to a servant is only necessary where the servant does not know or appreciate the dangers of his employment.

Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Erickson, 5 C. C. A. 34, 12 U. S. App. 260, 55 Fed. 943; Coulter v. Tecumseh Mills, 151 Mass. 85, 23 N. E. 731; Ciriack v. Merchants' Woolen Co. 14 Mass. 182, 4 Am. St. Rep. 307, 15 N. E. 573; Pratt v. Prouty, 153 Mass. 333, 26 N. E. 1002; Truntle v. North Star Woolen-Mill Co. 57 Minn. 52, 58 N. W. 832; Mackin v. Alaska Refrigerator Co. 100 Mich. 276, 58 N. W. 999; Sullivan v. India Mfg. Co. 113 Mass. 396; Tinkham v. Sawyer, 153 Mass. 485, 27 N. E. 6; Cunningham v. Bath Iron Works, 92 Me. 501, 43 Atl. 106; Olson v. McMurray Cedar Lumber Co. 9 Wash. 504, 37 Pac. 679; Goodridge v. Washington Mills Co. 160 Mass. 234, 35 N. E. 484; Downey v. Sawyer, 157 Mass. 418, 32 N. E. 654; Merryman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 85 Iowa 638, 52 N. W. 545; Evans v. Josephine Mills to have assumed it; citing Dowling v. Gerard B. Allen & Co. supra. The same doctrine is recognized in Emma Cotton Seed Oil Co. v. Hale, 56 Ark. 238, 19 S. W. 600, and Fisk v. Central P. R. Co. 72 Cal. 44, 1 Am. St. Rep. 22, 13 Pac. 144. Also Labatt (Mast. & S. § 291) and Bailey (Master's Liability for Injuries to Servants, p. 114) lay down the same rule and cite the cases referred to in MUNDHENKE v. OREGON CITY MFG. CO.

A child who is employed in a factory contrary to statute, because of his immature age, is not, as matter of law, chargeable with having assumed the risk of employment, in case he is injured while so employed. Marino v. Lehmaier, 173 N. Y. 539, 61 L. R. A. 811, 66 N. E. 572.

A minor who is directed by his superior to perform a task without the range of his employment does not necessarily assume the increased risk from the defective plant, although he is aware of the defect, and an adult with the same knowledge would be held to have assumed such increased risk. Foley v. California Horseshoe Co. 115 Cal. 184, 56 Am. St. Rep. 87, 47 Pac. 42.

In Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 5 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 283, 13 S. W. 501, a youthful employee was held not to assume unappreciated risks.

Shearman & Redfield on the Law of Negligence, § 219, state that it is the duty of one who employs young persons to take notice of their apparent age and ability, and to use ordinary care to protect them from risks which they cannot properly appreciate; and this is a duty which cannot be delegated. The master must instruct young servants in their work, and warn them against dangers, and he must put this warning in plain language. It is not enough that he do his best to make children understand; citing Dowling v. Gerard B. Allen & Co. supra; Augusta Factory v. Barnes, 72 Ga. 217, 53 Am. Rep. 838; and Hoffman v. Adams, 106 Mich. 111, 64 N. W. 7.

119 Ga. 448, 46 S. E. 674; Sitts v. Waionthe Knitting Co. 94 App. Div. 38, 87 N. Y. Supp. 911; Dubiver v. City & Suburban R. Co. 44 Or. 227, 74 Pac. 915, 75 Pac. 693.

Messrs. U'Ren & Schuebel, for respondent:

A minor is not held to the same degree of responsibility as an adult. The question of negligence is generally one of fact, and not of law.

Hedin v. City & Suburban R. Co. 26 Or. 155, 37 Pac. 540; Dubiver v. City & Suburban R. Co. 44 Or. 227, 74 Pac. 915, 75 Pac. 693; Merrifield v. Maryland Gold Quartz Min. Co. 143 Cal. 54, 76 Pac. 710; Wallace v. City & Suburban R. Co. 26 Or. 178, 25 L. R. A. 663, 37 Pac. 477; Anderson v. North Pacific Lumber Co. 21 Or. 281, 28 Pac. 5.

As to whether or not the plaintiff understood and appreciated the risks and dangers to which he was exposed, the question is pre-eminently for the jury.

Roth v. Northern Pacific Lumbering Co. 18 Or. 205, 22 Pac. 842; Jancko v. West Coast Mfg. & Invest. Co. 34 Wash. 556, 76 Pac. 78.

Wolverton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is first necessary to understand the nature of the machinery and the attending conditions before alluding to the facts touching the manner in which the accident occurred. At the end or side of the looms, facing on an isle or passageway, is a set of gearing, consisting of two cogwheels working into each other, the lower being much the larger. The point of contact of the gearing is from 2 feet to 2 feet, 6 inches above the floor. Immediately at the end of the looms, boxes were placed for receiving the yarn or filling. These stood against the lower cogwheel of the gearing, and, when being filled, the person doing the work would naturally stand in the passageway in front of the box and opposite the gearing, so that the width only of the box would intervene between him and the gearing, which was otherwise exposed, without guard or other protection to prevent contact with it. The plaintiff testified that he was carrying filler for the weavers, and had been so occupied for three months; that neither the foreman of the mill nor anyone else had instructed or cautioned him relative to the danger of coming into contact with the machinery; that he slipped, and was caught in the cogwheels of the loom, and his fingers were crushed. Describing the incident further, he says: "I slipped with my left foot, and threw up my hand so I wouldn't fall, as a person naturally will throw out his hand when he slips;" that he was taking the bobbins from the basket in which he had carried them to the box, and putting them into the box, which was full, or nearly so, when his foot slipped, he having all his weight on one foot at the time; that the floor was "greasy and slippery;" that he had slipped and fallen upon it before, and that he always tried to do his work carefully; that neither the foreman nor anyone else had cautioned him to be careful in standing about the boxes, or that he might slip upon the floor; that the only instructions given him were as to where to get the yarn and where to deposit it, and that nothing was said to him about the danger of slipping or falling or of getting his fingers in the cogwheels.

On cross-examination he testified that he had about twenty boxes to fill altogether, and further, as interrogated:

Q. You saw those cogs, you knew where they were?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw those when you first went there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see them as they came to gether in the mesh—right where they came together—those cogs?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know at that time that if you would get your fingers caught in them you would get hurt?

A. Anybody would know you would get hurt if you would catch your fingers in there, but I don't think anybody was intending to get hurt there, though. . . .

Q. You knew it would be dangerous if you would get your fingers in there?

A. If you would think about it, yes, sir. . . .

Q. What was the condition of this floor when you went there, along that isle and about this loom?

A. The same as it always is.

Q. Has it always been that way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just as it was to-day?

A. If they didn't clean it up right away, it was. . . .

Q. You say you had slipped a number of times there in the mill. Say how soon after you went there was the first time you slipped?

A. I might have slipped the same day. . . .

Q. How often did you slip?

A. I couldn't say how often.

The witness further testified that the company swept and cleaned the floor once a week, on Saturdays; that the accident occurred on Friday, and that the floor grew more slippery toward the end of the week than it was at the beginning, and that it becomes oilier when it has not been swept for a long time. This testimony was corroborated by other witnesses. Fred Hoag, another "filler boy," testified that the "floor was pretty oily in some places," and that he had himself slipped and fallen thereon. It was later shown that the box was from 1½ to 2 feet deep and perhaps 2 feet wide, and that the top of it was from 4 to 6 inches below the point of contact of the cogs.

That it was the duty of the defendant to provide safe machinery and a reasonably safe place in and about which to work for plaintiff and other employees to discharge the duties assigned them is conceded; but it is contended that defendant was not required to provide and furnish the very best and safest, and that if what was provided and furnished was defective, and not so well equipped and guarded as it might have been to render it more safe and secure against the liability of accident and injury, plaintiff knew and fully appreciated the exact conditions, and that, by engaging and continuing in the employment, he assumed the risk, and, injury having resulted to him in the course of his employment, defendant is not liable. This is the strong contention of defendant, and it has been urged by its counsel with signal ability. There is in this case the element of the youth of the party injured. It has been determined by this court that only such care and caution to avoid the dangers of accident can be expected or required of a person of immature age as is common to other persons of his years, of prudence, forethought, and discretion. Dubiver v. City & Suburban R. Co. 44 Or. 227, 74 Pac. 915, 75 Pac. 693. This must necessarily be so, because infancy and youth spring into manhood and maturity by degrees only, and responsibility develops accordingly. In general the servant assumes the ordinary risks and dangers incident to the employment in which he engages to the extent, and only to such extent, as they are known to him; but if the employee be of immature years, the assumption of risk is commensurate only with his age, experience, and capacity. As is said by Judge Sanborn in Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Erickson, 5 C. C. A. 341, 12 U. S. App. 260, 55 Fed. 943, 946; "He does not assume latent dangers known to the master that are actually unknown to him, and that one of his capacity and experience would not have known by the use of ordinary care." Again, he continues: "Risks and dangers that are apparent to the man of long experience and of a high order of intelligence may be unknown to the inexperienced and ignorant; hence, if the youth, inexperience, and incapacity of a minor who is employed in a hazardous occupation are such that a master of ordinary intelligence and prudence would know that he is not aware of or does not appreciate the ordinary risks of his employment it is his duty to notify him of them, and instruct him how to avoid them. This notice and instruction should be graduated to the age, intelligence, and experience of the servant. They should be such as a master of ordinary prudence and sagacity would give under like circumstances, for the purpose of enabling the minor not only to know the dangerous nature of his work, but also to understand and appreciate its risks and avoid its dangers." The doctrine is reaffirmed much later by the same learned judge. Cudahy Packing Co. v. Marcan, 54 L. R. A. 258, 45 C. C. A. 515, 106 Fed. 645. So it is that a minor assumes the ordinary hazards or risks of his engagements that he, though his degree of intelligence, known or should know and appreciate, and consequently he assumes those dangers also that are so open and obvious to the senses that one of his age, capacity, and experience would, in the exercise of the ordinary care and prudence common to persons of like age and experience, know and appreciate, and would be expected to be sufficiently attentive and alert to avoid. In other words, the minor's assumption of the hazards and dangers attending his employment is to be determined by his capacity to know, understand, and appreciate them, and his caution, alertness, and aptitude as well to avoid them. The test is what would ordinarily be expected, in a general sense, of persons of the minor's age and experience, whose conduct is under scrutiny; and this is so even if the child is sui juris.—that is, has reached years of discretion, and has become, as a matter of law, responsible for his conduct. No higher degree of care will be expected of him than is usually exercised, by persons of similar age, judgment, and experience. 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 291, 398; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 405, 407; Plumley v. Birge, 124 Mass. 57, 26 Am. Rep. 645; Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co. 102 Mass. 572, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Dowling v. Gerard B. Allen & Co. 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298; Rummel v. Dilworth, P. & Co. 131 Pa. 509, 17 Am. St. Rep. 827, 19 Atl. 345, 346; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall. 401, 21 L. ed. 114.

With this exposition and understanding of the law relating to the assumption of risks by minors, we may turn to the facts of the case. As it pertains to the exposed gearing at the end of the loom, that pre-ated a danger so open and obvious that plaintiff, considering his age, must surely have known and fully appreciated it. He could not have been so stupid as not to have known that if he got his hand between the cogs he would get hurt. He must have known also how to avoid the danger, which was simply not to come into contact with it, and the responsibility was his, notwithstanding he was not warned of a result which he must have understood and appreciated as well without the warning. Cirick v. Merchants' Woolen Co. 146 Mass. 82, 4 Am. St. Rep. 307, 15 N. E. 579; Carlington v. Mueller, 65 N. J. L. 244, 47 Atl. 64. This in the abstract, unconnected with the condition of the passageway and floor upon which plaintiff was required to walk and stand while in the discharge of the duty assigned him. Plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the way was swept and cleaned but once a week, that it was allowed to become greasy and oily, and consequently slippery, insecure, and unsafe for use. Plaintiff had slipped and fallen perhaps a number of times, and so had Hoag, another "filler boy," attesting unmistakably its insecurity. The accident occurred on Friday, and the sweeping and cleaning was usually done on Saturday, so that it would be but a reasonable inference that the way was in a bad condition at the time of the accident. The proximate cause of the accident, according to plaintiff, was the circumstance that he slipped on the floor, thus causing him to throw out his hand, which came in contact with the gearing. He was not warned as to the condition of the passageway, but, notwithstanding, he must have known much about it. This he admits. It was, however, a variable condition that he had to contend with. Sometimes the way would be less safe than others, and it would be going quite beyond the authorities to say as a matter of law that he did not use or observe the care, precaution, and foresight common to one of his age, intelligence, and experience that would be expected of him to avoid getting his hand between the cogs. The condition and pertinent fact are so peculiarly a matter for the jury that we are not disposed to take it away from them. The gearing was very near the place in which plaintiff was depositing the filling, and a misdirection of the hand in but a few inches would carry it to the point of danger; and it is reasonably inferable that the slipping of the foot was the adequate proximate cause of the accident. It is but a humane duty that the employers of youth about factories should observe every reasonable precaution to protect the comparatively unwary from accident and disaster. If the gearing in the present case had been covered or hooded, which could have been done at a trifling expense, no accident could have happened; and if the aisle had been kept clean of grease, it is quite probable that the result would have been avoided. The condition of the passageway was a variable one, as we have seen, and was surely out of condition at times, as the carrier boys were slipping and falling occasionally. This presents a matter for the jury to say, in the first place, whether or not it was negligence in the defendant to allow it to get into an unsafe condition, and, in the second place, it was also manifestly pertinent for them to determine whether plaintiff used the precaution that boys of his age are wont to observe to avoid the danger. It is a matter of common knowledge that a boy of the age of plaintiff would not be as careful and cautious in going to and from upon a slippery way as an adult, and it was for the jury to say whether he acted with that precaution in the premises as is common to other boys of his age and experience; for, if he did so act, negligence could not be imputed to him, and he assumed no risk that he would not have avoided by the observation of like precaution.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Both these inquiries being decided against the defendant, the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Petition for rehearing denied.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM MILLER, Appt.,

v.

MORAN BROTHERS' COMPANY, Resp't.

(....Wash....)

1. Master and servant—Independent contractor—injury to servant—liability.

An employee cannot hold his master liable for injuries caused by the master's breach of duty to furnish to one who has taken an

Case Note.—The court, in the above case, in denying the liability of a master to his servant for an injury resulting from the former's failure to provide an independent contractor with safe appliances, cites only the case of Steeple v. Panel & Folding Box Co. 33 Wash. 359, 74 Pac. 475, on this proposition. This case holds that a night watchman, who fell from a second-story platform, is guilty of contributory negligence, as matter of law, where he had worked about the place for two months, and had frequently been on the platform before, and who neglected to use the light which it was his independent contract to perform a certain portion of the work in which the master is engaged, safe appliances for the performance of such work.

2. Same—-independent contract—existence of.

The retention, by the master, of general supervision of the work to be performed by an independent contractor will not change the contractor's relationship to the work.

3. Same—liability of contractor.

One who takes an independent contract to perform a portion of the work which his employer has undertaken to do is responsible for injuries caused to the employer's servants by his negligent use of appliances in the performance of his work.

4. Same—unsafe working place.

A servant cannot hold his master liable for injuries caused by the fact that the working place was unsafe, if he was in as good position to ascertain and understand the situation, and does equally well know and appreciate the existing conditions, as the master.

5. Same—supervision.

A master is not bound to give continual attention to a servant to protect him from situations made dangerous by occurrences unusual and unexpected by either master or servant.

6. Same—assumption of risk.

A servant assumes the risk of injury from duty to prepare. The doctrine as to furnishing a safe place to work, or providing safe appliances, did not enter into the case.

The obligation of the master to furnish an independent contractor with safe appliances, or to see that those used by the latter are safe, and so protect his own servants, grows out of his duty to provide his servants a safe place in which to work. Thus, in Trainer v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 137 Pa. 148, 20 Atl. 632, the master was held liable for injuries to its servant, caused by being hit by the fall of an appliance used for the storage of coal, which was erected on its right of way and operated by an independent contractor.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Delaney, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 427, 55 S. W. 538, a railroad company was held liable for the death of one of its employees, caused by defects in the appliances used on its right of way by an independent contractor.

But in Conway v. Furst, 57 N. J. L. 645, 32 Atl. 380, the master was held not to be liable for injuries to one he employed as a night watchman in an unfinished building, and who fell into an elevator shaft which an independent contractor had not yet completed. This decision was based on the doctrine that the risk was incident to such service. The case of Kennedy v. Manhattan R. Co. 145 N. Y. 288, 39 N. E. 950, is to the same effect.

In the case of Toledo Brewing & Malting Co. v. Bosch, 41 C. C. A. 482, 101 Fed. 530, a more positive personal duty is imposed upon the master. The court held that the master remaining without necessity under a heavy steel plate while it is being hoisted in the air by means of a tackle.

7. Same—information of servant.

A master is not bound to inform his servants that a portion of the work is under the charge of an independent contractor for whose conduct he is not responsible.

(September 1, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to have been responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Benson & Hall, for appellant:

The act of selecting the appliance was that of the master.

Bailey v. Cascade Timber Co. 32 Wash. 319, 73 Pac. 385; Toledo Brewing & Malting Co. v. Bosch, 41 C. C. A. 482, 101 Fed. 530; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181, 22 Atl. 1094; Moran v. Corliss Steam Engine Co. 21 R. I. 386, 45 L. R. A. 267, 43 Atl. 874; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Delaney, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 427, 55 S. W. 538; Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson 39 Mich. 492, 33 Am. Rep. 423; Herdler v.

cannot escape from the positive personal duty which he is under to his servant by letting work to a contractor; and liability for injury to a servant, due to the dangerous condition of the appliances which he was required to use, cannot be avoided on the ground that their dangerous condition was caused by the negligent acts of an independent contractor.

In the case of Savannah & W. R. Co. v. Phillips, 90 Ga. 829, 17 S. E. 82, a railroad company was held liable which furnished to a contractor engaged in constructing an extension of a railroad, an engine and train upon which there was a fireman who was already in the service of the company, and who was injured by defects in the engine, attributable to the company's negligence while obeying the latter's order, although the track in progress of construction was in possession of the contractor, and the operation of the train under the latter's exclusive control. But this case is to be distinguished from MILLER v. MORAN BROS. Co. in that, in the former, while the servant was injured by the appliances furnished to an independent contractor, yet he was acting pursuant to an order of the master when he was injured.

And in Jacobs v. Fuller & H. Co. 67 Ohio St. 70, 65 L. R. A. 833, 65 N. E. 617, it was held that an employer who furnishes a dangerous machine to an independent contractor, and who neglects to give instructions as to the dangerous character of the machine, is liable to one who is injured while operating it. The court held that the de-ock's Stove & Range Co. 136 Mo. 3, 37 S. 7, 112.

Messrs. Kerr & McCord, for respondent:

If it was not one of plaintiff's duties to assist in raising the plate, and was outside of the line of his employment, then the defendant in no event is responsible to him.

2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 633, p. 1834.

If the defendant furnished reasonably safe appliances, and if competent men to handle the same were provided, there was no liability.

Metzler v. McKenzie, 34 Wash. 470, 76 Pac. 14; Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 17.

If the plaintiff suffered an injury by reason of any negligence on the part of the servants and employees of Kelly, this defendant cannot be held to respond.

Cooper v. Seattle, 16 Wash. 462, 58 Am. R. Rep. 46, 47 Pac. 887; 2 Thomp. Neg. § 2, p. 899; Harkins v. Standard Sugar Refinery, 122 Mass. 400; Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469, 68 Am. Dec. 345; Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 18 Kan. 34; Powell v. Virginia Constr. Co. 88 Tenn. 692, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925, 13 S. W. 691; Rome & D. R. Co. v. Thasteen, 88 Ala. 591, 7 So. 94; Forsyth v. Hooper, 11 Allen, 419; Riedel v. Moran, Fitzsimmons Co. 103 Mich. 202, 61 N. W. 509;

Fulton County Street R. Co. v. McConnell, 87 Ga. 750, 13 S. E. 828; Reier v. Detroit Steel & Spring Works, 109 Mich. 244, 67 N. W. 120; Nugent v. Atlas S. S. Co. 51 Hun, 306, 3 N. Y. Supp. 861, 40 N. Y. S. R. 927, 16 N. Y. Supp. 66, 147 N. Y. 709, 42 N. E. 724.

Root, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was employed as a carpenter by respondent, a corporation engaged in building the battleship Nebraska for the United States government. Respondent had in its employ over 700 men; some working by the hour, some by the day, and some by contract on certain portions of the work for fixed amounts. Appellant's duties required him to go from place to place about said ship, putting in and changing stanchions or shores used to support the vessel in position. One Kelly had a contract from respondent to place upon the sides of the ship certain steel plates. He was to be paid a gross sum for doing said work. He was given full power to hire and discharge men, and had the control and supervision of them while engaged in the work; they all being subject, however, to the general rules of the shipyard. The work was required to be satisfense that the plaintiff was an employee of an independent contractor was not available, as it was a case in which the resulting injury might have been anticipated as a direct or probable consequence of the performance of the work contracted for, if reasonable care is omitted in the course of its employment. The theory on which the doctrine of this decision rests is illustrated in Conlon v. Eastern R. Co. 135 Mass. 195 in which a railroad company was held liable to a third party who was injured in consequence of the parting of a guy in a defective derrick furnished by it to a contractor. The court said that the contractor ought to have discovered the unfitness of the derrick, but did not; but, however this may be, the defendant would be responsible for the natural consequences of the use of the derrick in the manner in which it contemplated that it should be used.

In the case of Devlin v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 42 Am. Rep. 311, the liability of the master is limited. In this case a painter who had a contract to paint the inside of the dome of a courthouse, having no experience in scaffold building, let that work to an experienced independent contractor. While a servant of the painter was using the scaffold, it fell killing the latter. The court denied the liability of the master on the ground that he was not liable for the failure of the independent contractor to construct a sufficient scaffold, but held that the independent contractor was responsible.

The doctrine laid down in the New York case is applied with approval in Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 97 Va. 631, 46 L. R. A. 11 L.R.A.(N.S.)

367, 34 S. E. 525. in which it was held that the negligence of a bridge company, as an independent contractor, in removing too soon, the false work on a new railroad bridge which it had contracted to substitute for the old one. in consequence of which the new bridge fell with a train, causing the death of a fireman, did not render the railroad company liable if it had made a proper contract with the bridge company, and if the latter was a reputable concern.

The general rule requiring the master to furnish reasonably safe appliances is stated in Labatt on Master & Servant, vol. 1. § 22a, as follows: "The master is in default, as respects his servants, unless the appliances furnished are such as would commend themselves to a reasonably prudent man. . . . In order to discharge this obligation, he must see that the instrumentalities which he furnishes are 'in proper condition.' . . . The doctrine is now regarded as axiomatic, that the employer is bound to furnish adequate materials . . . [including premises reasonably safe] to accomplish the work."

With reference to the master's obligation to furnish a safe place, as an absolute duty, Thompson's Commentaries on the Law of Negligence, § 4928, states that the duty which the law imposes upon a master, of exercising reasonable care, to the end that the premises committed by him to his servant shall not subject the servant to greater dangers than those which necessarily flow from the nature of the employment, is an absolute duty, but not in the sense that the master is an insurer of its performance.

factory to respondent and the United States government, both of whom had superintendents about the premises. The appliances used by Kelly were furnished by respondent, although the written contract between them (which appears to have been the only contract governing them) is silent as to who should furnish the tools and appliances. On the 16th day of November, 1903, while appellant was working in the vicinity of some of Kelly's workmen, he was seriously injured by the falling of a steel plate weighing about 2,000 pounds. In raising this plate a chain and tackle were fastened to an iron bar placed lengthwise across a manhole, extending about 9 inches on each side of said opening, which was 18 inches in diameter. By chains extending from the tackle to the plate, the latter was raised from the floor to the side of the ship, where said plate was to be adjusted. While the plate was suspended in the air appellant helped shove and "steady" it awhile, and then proceeded to do something about his own work under said suspended plate. In attempting to get the plate into proper position on the side of the vessel, one of the workmen, in using a wrench as a lever to push the plate along, let said wrench slip, which caused the plate to swing back on the chain, and by its swinging motion and momentum to occasion a slipping of the iron bar supporting the tackle. One end of the bar thereupon came through the opening, releasing the tackle, and permitting the plate to fall. It appears by the evidence that an appliance known as a "grappling hook," or as a "clamp," could have been used, instead of the iron bar, and, if properly adjusted, would have avoided this accident. Two of the workmen went to the toolhouse to get such an appliance, but were told by the keeper in charge thereof that there was no such appliance there at that time. It appears by the evidence that there were probably such appliances about the yard. No request for such was made of any superintendent, foreman, or officer of respondent. The workmen selected the iron bar from certain of respondent's material found near by. Appellant instituted this action against respondent to recover damages occasioned by reason of the injuries sustained as aforesaid. At the close of his case a motion for nonsuit was sustained by the trial court. From the judgment of dismissal, this appeal is taken.

It is claimed by appellant that it was respondent's duty to furnish a reasonably safe appliance to Kelly for raising these plates, and that, inasmuch as it did not do so, it must respond in damages to appellant for the injuries he sustained. In the first place, the only contract shown to exist between respondent and Kelly does not place upon respondent any obligation to furnish any tool or appliances. In the next place, it does not appear that respondent, or any of its officers, superintendents, or foremen, refused to furnish necessary and safe appliances. The unsafe appliance was not furnished to respondent. There is no evidence that respondent, or any of its agents, knew anything about Kelly's men having taken or used the iron bar in question. These men went upon their own motion and selected the bar in question. There is nothing to show that grappling hooks could not have been obtained, if requested of respondent's officers or foremen. It appears that there were doubtless some of these appliances on the premises. If there was any obligation on the part of respondent to furnish Kelly with appliances, it was a duty due to Kelly, and for any breach thereof it would be held against Kelly, and not to appellant. That Kelly was an independent contractor is shown by the written contract in evidence. This relationship was not changed by the fact that general supervision was exercised over his work by respondent and the government, to both of whom the result of his work was required to be satisfactory. The choice of men, appliances, and methods was left to him, and for any negligence touching any of these matters he, and not respondent, was answerable. Even conceding it to have been the duty of respondent to furnish Kelly with appliances (and this is not shown by the evidence), this duty would be fulfilled by delivering suitable appliances to Kelly upon his request therefor. If there were such appliances provided in the yard where Kelly could secure them upon demand, it was a sufficient compliance with the duty in Steeple v. Panel & Folding Box Co., 10 Wash. 359-364, 74 Pac. 475. It appears that respondent, by some official, gave Kelly's workmen an order on the keeper of the toolhouse for one of these grappling hooks. None was there at the time. Instead of going to some foreman and asking as to where such an appliance could be found, these men went to a pile of iron near by and selected the bar which was used. It was not the duty of respondent to keep watch of Kelly and deliver his appliances at the place of use.

As an independent contractor, Kelly owed his servants the duty of furnishing reasonably safe appliances. Toward others working in his vicinity he owed the duty of ordinary care. Respondent had the right to presume that Kelly would observe these obligations in the conduct of his work. If it were respondent's duty to furnish suitable appliances, it would have the right to presume that Kelly would request them from someone having authority when they were needed, if they were not at hand. As the written contract did not require respondent to furnish appliances, the fact that respondent had been doing so would not render it liable in a given instance where the contract or his servants selected an unsafe device. We can find nothing in the evidence showing any breach of duty on the part of respondent in the matter of furnishing, or neglecting to furnish, appliances. Such a breach must be shown before negligence is established. Singleton v. Felton, 42 C. C. A. 57, 101 Fed. 626.

A breach of respondent's duty to furnish appellant a safe place to work is suggested. That the master is under obligations to give the servant a reasonably safe place to work is, of course, a well-established principle of law. But, where the servant is in as good a position as the master to ascertain and understand the situation, and does equally well know and appreciate the existing conditions, he cannot be heard to complain from injuries sustained by working therein. Wilson v. Northern P. R. Co. 31 Wash. 67, 71 Pac. 713; Anderson v. Inland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 19 Wash. 585, 41 L. R. A. 410, 53 Pac. 657; Tham v. J. T. Steeb Shipping Co. 39 Wash. —, 81 Pac. 711. In the case of Wilson v. Northern P. R. Co. supra, this court speaking by Mount, J., said: "If defendants are liable at all, they are liable because of some neglect of duty owing from defendants to plaintiff. . . . They were not obliged to guarantee the safety of the place, but they were in duty bound to make a reasonable inspection. . . . His [the servant's] inspection was the inspection of a reasonably careful man. The foreman, no doubt, also inspected the ground in the same way for the same purpose, and saw the same as the plaintiff saw, and came to the same conclusion. . . . When the danger is not known, and not suspected, and where there are no circumstances which would cause a reasonably careful man to investigate and ascertain the danger, the law will not impute knowledge of danger, where the knowledge is not shown in fact. When reasonably careful men conduct their business in a reasonably careful manner, there is no negligence." In Anderson v. Inland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 19 Wash. 575-584, 41 L. R. A. 410, 53 Pac. 657, 660, this court, speaking through Dunbar, J., said: ". . . If the employee does know of the defect, or has equal means of knowing with the employer, then, certainly, it is his unquestioned duty to investigate before proceeding." And the following quotations were made with approval: "Where the danger is alike open to the observation of all, both the master and servant are upon an equality, and the master is not liable for an injury resulting from the dangers of the business,"—taken from Griffin v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 124 Ind. 326, 24 N. E. 888. A master is not liable for injuries to his servant while using machinery in the employment, if the servant has the same knowledge of its defects, or the dangers incident to its use, as the master, or if, in the exercise of due care, he ought to have such knowledge.—quoted from Wood, Master and Servant, § 366. "Knowledge on the part of the employer and ignorance on the part of the employee are of the essence of the action,"—quoted from Beach, Contributory Negligence, § 346. In the case of Tham v. J. T. Steeb Shipping Co. supra, this court upheld an instruction of the trial court given in the following language: "If you find from the evidence that the danger was alike open and obvious to the plaintiff and to the defendant, both the plaintiff and the defendant are upon an equality, and the master is not liable for an injury resulting from the dangers incident to the employment."

In the case before us there was no occasion for respondent's supposing that Kelly would be using the iron bar mentioned. Respondent was concerned with the results of Kelly's work, but not with the details of its performance. It was not required to know that he was using an unsafe appliance at that particular time, and there is no evidence that any of its officers or agents did know. Appellant was at the place. So far as the evidence shows, he was in a better position to know of the character of this appliance and its dangers than any officer or agent of respondent. Appellant's work was constantly being changed from place to place in removing and adjusting the shores about the ship. This particular place was rendered unsafe only at the moment when they began to elevate this heavy plate. The entire situation may have been thoroughly inspected and found safe a minute before, so far as the evidence shows. Respondent was under no obligation to have an officer constantly follow appellant around to protect him from situations made dangerous by occurrences unusual and unexpected by either master or servant. It was daylight, and appellant could have seen this iron bar as well as any foreman. Seeing it, he would know that there was more or less danger in its use. The very nature of the work of building a ship necessitates constant changes. A place perfectly safe one minute may become extremely dangerous the next by the ordinary and necessary operation of the work, and without fault on the part of anyone. A servant working in the capacity of this appellant knows all this, and must be held to be, to a certain extent, his own injury resulting from the dangers of the business,"—taken from Griffin v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 124 Ind. 326, 24 N. E. 888. A master is not liable for injuries to his servant while using machinery in the employment, if the servant has the same knowledge of its defects, or the dangers incident to its use, as the master, or if, in the exercise of due care, he ought to have such knowledge.—quoted from Wood, Master and Servant, § 366. "Knowledge on the part of the employer and ignorance on the part of the employee are of the essence of the action,"—quoted from Beach, Contributory Negligence, § 346. In the case of Tham v. J. T. Steeb Shipping Co. supra, this court upheld an instruction of the trial court given in the following language: "If you find from the evidence that the danger was alike open and obvious to the plaintiff and to the defendant, both the plaintiff and the defendant are upon an equality, and the master is not liable for an injury resulting from the dangers incident to the employment."

In the case before us there was no occasion for respondent's supposing that Kelly would be using the iron bar mentioned. Respondent was concerned with the results of Kelly's work, but not with the details of its performance. It was not required to know that he was using an unsafe appliance at that particular time, and there is no evidence that any of its officers or agents did know. Appellant was at the place. So far as the evidence shows, he was in a better position to know of the character of this appliance and its dangers than any officer or agent of respondent. Appellant's work was constantly being changed from place to place in removing and adjusting the shores about the ship. This particular place was rendered unsafe only at the moment when they began to elevate this heavy plate. The entire situation may have been thoroughly inspected and found safe a minute before, so far as the evidence shows. Respondent was under no obligation to have an officer constantly follow appellant around to protect him from situations made dangerous by occurrences unusual and unexpected by either master or servant. It was daylight, and appellant could have seen this iron bar as well as any foreman. Seeing it, he would know that there was more or less danger in its use. The very nature of the work of building a ship necessitates constant changes. A place perfectly safe one minute may become extremely dangerous the next by the ordinary and necessary operation of the work, and without fault on the part of anyone. A servant working in the capacity of this appellant knows all this, and must be held to be, to a certain extent, his own inspector. He cannot complain because the master, with less opportunity than he, has failed in a given instance to detect or anticipate an unexpected occurrence. Weideman v. Tacoma R. & Motor Co. 7 Wash. 517, 35 Pac. 414; Decker v. Stimson Mill Co. 31 Wash. 522, 72 Pac. 98; Cully v. Northern P. R. Co. 35 Wash. 241-247, 77 Pac. 202. There is no evidence to show that respondent knew or had any reason to suspect that appellant's working place had been made dangerous by Kelly or anyone. It therefore follows that appellant's action cannot be sustained on that ground.

The defenses of contributory negligence and assumed risk are interposed by respondent, and are not without support in the evidence. Appellant offers no good reason for standing under the suspended steel plate. He knew its tendency to swing, as he admits that he helped to "steady" it. It would seem that common prudence ought to suggest to any person of ordinary intelligence the propriety of "standing from under" while a 2,000-pound weight was swinging over his head in the air. Where a heavy steel plate is being handled with chains and other metallic appliances, in the manner open and apparent as was this, the risk of danger from standing under it would be evident to anyone. To be sure, there was no certainty of injury, perhaps no probability; but there was an obvious possibility, and the serious character of the danger in case the heavy plate should fall would be apparent to any person of ordinary intelligence. It is inconceivable that any person of ordinary prudence would have stood under such a swinging mass of steel. No emergency, direct orders, or unusual occurrence is shown in justification of appellant's presence in a place of such danger.

It is urged by appellant that he did not know that Kelly was an independent contractor, and that he had a right to suppose that Kelly's men were servants of respondent, and that it was respondent's duty to furnish them with safe appliances. We are shown no facts or law making it the duty of respondent to inform appellant that Kelly was such contractor. None such occur to us. Neither has our attention been called to any authority giving a servant a right of action for a breach of duty on the part of the master toward an independent contractor and his men; said servant not working for, or under the direction of, said contractor.

Perceiving no error in the ruling of the trial court, its judgment is affirmed.

Mount, Ch. J., and Rudkin, Crow, and Hadley, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, Plf. in Err.,
v.

P. R. HETZER.

(68 C. C. A. 26, 135 Fed. 272.)

1. Personal injury—damages—mental pain.

In actions for personal injury the plaintiff may recover for the bodily suffering and mental pain which are inseparable, and which necessarily and inevitably result from the injury. But mortification and distress of mind from the contemplation of the crippled condition and of its effect upon the esteem of his fellows—that mental pain which is separable from the bodily suffering caused by the injury—is too remote, in definite, and intangible to constitute an element of the damages in such a case; and evidence of it is inadmissible.

2. Master and servant—employment of co-servants.

It is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care to employ competent servants; and, when he has exercised this care this duty is discharged.

3. Same—discharge of incompetents.

Another duty of the master is to discharge a servant when he knows, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence would know, that the servant has contracted the habit or character of negligence, of drunkenness, or of lack of skill, so that he is incompetent.

4. Same—duty to learn habits.

The diligence required of the master to learn the habits or characters of servants employed with due care is not of that degree demanded in his employment of servants, or in his inspection of machinery, because careful and skillful men grow more careful and skillful, and the legal presumption is that servants once competent continue so. The master may rely upon the presumption of competency until he has notice or knowledge to the contrary.

5. Same.

The reasonable diligence and care which the master is required to exercise here is Headnotes by SANBORN, Circuit Judge.

Case Note.—The general doctrine that a master is bound to keep himself informed as to the fitness of servants already in his employ, so far as this can be accomplished by proper supervision and superintendence, is shown in Labatt on Master and Servant, vol. 1, § 195, to be clearly established. The following cases are cited in its support: Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 19 C. C. A. 623, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. 634; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Nuckols, 91 Va. 193, 21 S. E. 342; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collard, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniel, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932; Holland v. Tennessee Coal, Iron, & R. Co. 91 Ala. 444, 12 L. R. A. 232, 8 So. 524. But it is also the rule that, of that high degree of care which a prudent business man would use if the want of endangering his own person. It is that degree of care which prudent railway officials exercise under like circumstances; that are which such officials charged with the duty of discharging servants employed with due care commonly exercise as soon as they know, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence would know, that such servants have become incompetent.

Same—assumption of risk.
Servants assume the risk of the occasional acts of negligence of their fellow servants, and the master is not liable for them; but the servants may, by notice, cast the risk of the habitual negligence of their coemployees upon the master.

Evidence—carelessness of servant.
Evidence of specific acts of negligence known to the master, and of acts of negligence like those which cause the death of messengers, so notorious that the master must have known of them if he had exercised reasonable diligence, is admissible to prove the habit or character for incompetence of a servant who is employed with due care.

Same—specific acts.
Specific acts of negligence, of drunkenness, or lack of skill, or of incompetence, of which the master had no notice, are inadmissible to prove the incompetence of a servant employed with due care. The proper proof of habit and character, as of reputation, in such a case, is the testimony of witnesses qualified to speak of them, subject to proper cross-examination relative to the facts upon which their testimony is based.

Same—general reputation.
After proof of the incompetence of a servant, his general reputation among those acquainted with him or his work is competent to prove notice of the habit of incompetence to the master. But reputation among a particular class, which obviously includes but a part of those who knew his character or work, is inadmissible for this purpose.

Exception—general—several instructions.

When suitable and competent persons have been employed, good character and proper qualifications may be presumed to continue, and the master may rely on that presumption until notice of a change. Blake v. Maine C. R. Co. 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 Mich. 510; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 Mich. 176, 1 N. W. 243; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 123 Ind. 210, 23 N. E. 246; Chapman v. Erie R. Co. 55 N. Y. 579.

In the Chapman Case the court said: "Good character and proper qualifications, once possessed, may be presumed to continue; and I see no reason why a principal may not rely upon that presumption as to these personal qualities until he has notice of a change, or knowledge of such facts as would be deemed equivalent to notice, or, at least, such as would put a reasonable man

A single exception to a refusal to give a number of requests to submit to the jury several propositions of law and of fact is futile, if any of those propositions is erroneous or inapplicable.

(Hook, Circuit Judge, dissents from proposition 5.)

(January 25, 1905.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Utah to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion. Argued before Sanborn and Hook, Circuit Judges, and Lochren, District Judge.

Mr. Martin L. Clardy, with Mr. Henry G. Herbel, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. H. H. Henderson and H. R. Mac-Millan, for defendant in error:

Mental suffering caused by an injury, such as alleged in the complaint in this action, is an element for which the jury should assess damages.

District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 459, 34 L. ed. 475, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 105, 18 L. ed. 591, 594; Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co. v. Graham, 63 Pa. 290, 3 Am. Rep. 549; Smith v. Holcomb, 99 Mass. 552; Holyoke v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 N. H. 541; Stockton v. Frey, 4 Gill, 406, 45 Am. Dec. 138; Smith v. Overby, 30 Ga. 241; Cox v. Vanderkleed, 21 Ind. 164; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577.

Evidence of specific acts of negligence may be introduced for the purpose of proving incompetency.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. pp. 412 et seq.; Baulec v. New York & H. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 361, 17 Am. Rep. 325; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby, 38 Ind. 294, 10 Am. Rep. 111; Wharton, Neg. § 238, and notes;

upon inquiry." The court added, as to the presumption of the servant's continued fitness: "If competent when employed, additional experience would naturally render him more so; and, while his habits might change for the worse, there is no such depravity in human nature as, in law, requires special vigilance on the part of the employer to prevent it." Even the fact that the employer had some information to indicate that the servant has become unfit for his duties, or unreliable, does not require him to discharge the servant without investigation; but he should, in such case, make proper investigation on this subject, so as to keep informed. Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, and Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, supra; Baulec v. New York & H. R. Co. 62 Barb. 623, Affirmed in 59 N. Y. 356, 17 Am. Rep. 325.

Southern P. Co. v. Huntsman, 55 C. C. A. 368, 118 Fed. 412; Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 108 Cal. 129, 41 Pac. 24; Cosgrove v. Pitman, 103 Cal. 268, 37 Pac. 232; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244, 38 N. E. 244; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 19 C. C. A. 627, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. 634.

General reputation is admissible for the purpose of proving notice to the master of the incompetency of a fellow servant.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, supra; Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 108 Cal. 129, 41 Pac. 23; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244, 38 N. E. 245; Coppins v. New York, C. & H. R. Co. 122 N. Y. 557, 19 Am. St. Rep. 523, 25 N. E. 916; Hiltz v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 55 Mich. 437, 21 N. W. 882; Driscoll v. Fall River, 163 Mass. 105, 39 N. E. 1003; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 47 Am. St. Rep. 392, 29 Atl. 994; Southern P. Co. v. Huntsman, supra; Wabash Western R. Co. v. Brow, 13 C. C. A. 222, 31 U. S. App. 192, 65 Fed. 952; Scott v. Utah Consol. Min. & Mill. Co. 18 Utah. 486, 56 Pac. 305; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 181, note 5, p. 399; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 674, 42 L. ed. 1188, 1192, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777.

The degree of care and foresight which it is necessary to use should be that care and prudence which a discreet and cautious individual would or ought to use if the whole risk and loss were to be his own exclusively.

New York v. Bailey, 2 Denio, 440; Northwest Transp. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 41 Fed. 799; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Ryles, 84 Ga. 420, 11 S. E. 499; Hoffman v. Tuolumne County Water Co. 10 Cal. 417; The Nitro-Glycerine Case (Parrott v. Wells), 15 Wall. 524, 538, 21 L. ed. 206, 212; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 460, 27 L. ed. 608, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932; Harley v. Buffalo Car Mfg. Co. 142 N. Y. 31, 36 N. E. 813; Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 396, 5 N. E. 58; Sykes v. Packer, 99 Pa. 465; Hoffman v. Dickinson, 31 W. Va. 142, 6 S. E. 58; Brymer v. Southern P. Co. 90 Cal. 498, 27 Pac. 371; Sappenfeld v. Maine Street & Agri. Park R. Co. 91 Cal. 56, 27 Pac. 590.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

About 5 o'clock in the afternoon of July 23, 1902, P. R. Hetzer, the plaintiff below, was the brakeman on the rear of a train of 22 cars which Tom Delano, one of the engineers of the Southern Pacific Company, was backing into a gravel pit. As this train approached a switch which it was Hetzer's duty to throw, he gave the slow signal, and his fellow brakeman gave the stop signal to the engineer. Delano applied the air. Hetzer fell to the track, one of the wheels of the rear car passed over his leg, and the train stopped. The injury to the leg necessitated its amputation above the knee. He sued the company for causal negligence for employing and keeping in its employment an incompetent engineer. At the trial there was no evidence to sustain his averment that the company was guilty of negligence in selecting and employing Delano, this charge was withdrawn from the jury by the court and the only issues submitted to them were the question whether or not the defendant was guilty of any want of ordinary care in continuing Delano in its employment at the time of the accident, and the amount of plaintiff's damages. There was a verdict and judgment against the company for $11,450.

It is assigned as error that, at the trial of the action, more than fifteen months after the accident, in answer to questions of his counsel relative to the effect upon his mind at that time of the injury to his leg, the plaintiff testified that the fact that other people looked down upon him because he was crippled, and seemed to shun him, made him feel very badly and distressed him mentally. There is a conflict of authority upon the question which this assignment presents. In some states, notably in Wisconsin and Michigan, evidence of mental pain caused by disfigurement, apart from the physical suffering produced by an injury, is admissible to enhance the damages in an action for personal injury. Heddes v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 77 Wis. 228, 20 Am. St. Rep. 106, 46 N. W. 115, 116, and cases there cited; Sherwood v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 82 Mich. 374, 46 N. W. 773, 776. The rule which has been adopted by this court, however, and the rule which seems to us the better one, is that, in actions for personal injury, the plaintiff may recover for the bodily suffering and the mental pain which are inseparable and which necessarily and inevitably result from the injury. But mortification or distress of mind from the contemplation of the crippled condition and of its effect upon the esteem of his fellows—that mental pain which is separable from the physical suffering caused by the injury—is too remote, indefinite, and intangible to constitute an element of the damages in such a case, and evidence of it is inadmissible. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Caulfield, 11 C. C. A. 552, 555, 27 U. S. App. 358, 63 Fed. 396, 399; Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 26, 33 L. ed. 110, 112, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696; Bovee v. Danville, 53 Vt. 183; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Hines, 45 Ill. App. 299, 302, 303; Saline

Trosper, 27 Kan. 544, 564; Dorrah v. Illinois C. R. Co. 65 Miss. 14, 7 Am. St. Rep. 2, 3 So. 36; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Stables, 62 Ill. 313, 321; Joch v. Dankardt, 85 Ill. 331, 332; Johnson v. Wells, & Co. 6 Nev. 224, 236, 3 Am. Rep. 245. Mental pain of this character, the suffering from injured feelings, is intangible,—incapable of test or trial. The evidence of it, like that which convicted the alleged itches, rests entirely in the belief of the sufferer, and it is not susceptible of contradiction or rebuttal. Many other causes, the location, temperament, and sentiment of the sufferer, the mental attitude, the acts and words of his friends and acquaintances, concur with the accident to cause this mental distress, in such a way that it is impossible to separate and ascribe the proper part of it to the injury caused by the defendant. And the amount of the mental pain caused by any disfigurement necessarily varies so with the character, temperament, and circumstances of the injured person that no just measure of the damages from it can be found. Such mental suffering is too remote, intangible, and immeasurable to form the basis of any just adjudication, and the objections to the testimony of the plaintiff concerning it should have been sustained.

One of the counsel for the plaintiff asked him if there was any other occurrence of sudden stopping or jerking of the train while Delano was acting as engineer during the day of the accident. Defendant's counsel promptly objected to the testimony which the question was intended to elicit, upon the ground that it was evidence of a specific act other than the one pleaded. The witness testified that, about three hours before the accident, Delano stopped his train in a very rough manner, so that the plaintiff staggered around, but did not fall. Evidence of another act of Delano of a similar character was admitted, under a like objection; and these rulings of the court are assigned as error. The issue of law which these rulings present is not without importance, and it may be well, before entering upon its discussion, to place clearly before the mind the legal relation of the plaintiff and the defendant, and the exact question to be decided. It is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care to employ competent servants to work with his employees. When he has exercised this care, he has fully discharged this duty. There is another duty of the master. It is to discharge a servant whom he has employed with due care when the employee has contracted the habit of negligence or of lack of skill, so that he has become incompetent, and the master knows, or by the exercise of reasonable care would have known, of this habit. This duty, however, is not imposed until the habit has been formed, nor until the master knows, or by the exercise of reasonable care would have known, of its existence. It is not invoked by occasional acts of negligence. Wood's Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 432. Moreover, the master is not required to exercise that degree of care to ascertain this habit which is imposed upon him in reference to the selection of employees or the inspection of machinery which deteriorates with its use, because careful and skilful men become more careful and skilful with the practice of their occupations or professions, and the legal presumption is that competent servants continue to be so, and because servants assume the risk of the negligence of their fellows, a risk which, when that negligence becomes habitual, they may cast upon their master by a simple notice of their incompetence. When the master has exercised due care to employ a servant, he may rely upon the presumption of his competency until he has notice or knowledge to the contrary. Walkover v. Penokee & G. Consol. Mines, 115 Mich. 629, 634, 41 L. R. A. 33, 73 N. W. 895; Weeks v. Scharer, 49 C. C. A. 372, 378, 111 Fed. 330, 336; Chapman v. Erie R. Co. 55 N. Y. 579, 585, 586; 1 Bailey, Personal Injuries Relating to Master & Servant, § 1413; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. p. 428; Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 433, p. 841.

One who enters the service of another assumes all the ordinary risks and dangers of that service. One of those risks is the danger of injury from the negligence of his fellow servants. The association of a servant with his coworkers, as in the case at bar of a brakeman in the same crew with an engineer, is often closer, his knowledge of their characters, habits, and competence more intimate and more exact, than that of his master can be. As he generally has a better knowledge of the characters, habits, and negligence of his fellow servants, he is better able to protect himself against their negligence than the master can be; and for this reason the law charges him with the risk. So it is that, under the law, the duty of employing fit servants is imposed upon the master, and, when that duty is discharged, the duty of protecting themselves against the negligence of their fellow servants is imposed upon the employees.

The claim of the plaintiff is that his master was negligent because it retained in its employment one whom it engaged with due care after he had become incompetent by reason of his habitual negligence in the use of the air to stop his trains. But the risk of the negligence of this servant was prima facie that of the plaintiff. One who would charge the master with negligence here must prove not only that the servant was incompetent, but that the master knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence would have known, of his unfitness. A habit of negligence that is known, or that, by the exercise of reasonable care, would have been known, to a master, and notorious acts of negligence, such as those which cause collisions of trains and the death of passengers, may render a servant incompetent, and impose upon the master the duty of discharging him. A single specific act of ordinary negligence, however, has no tendency to prove incompetence, and imposes no such duty upon the master, because perfection is not an attribute of humanity, because ordinary care implies occasional forgetfulness, and hence the risk of the casual negligence of his fellow servant is that of the servant, and not that of the master. Wharton, Neg. § 238; Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 438, 5 Atl. 338, 343; Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 20 Mich. 105, 4 Am. Rep. 364; Moss v. Pacific R. Co. 49 Mo. 167, 8 Am. Rep. 126; Wood, Mast. & S. § 432.

Specific acts of negligence of which the master has notice are conceded to be admissible to prove incompetence; and a general reputation for incompetence is admissible to show that the master, by the exercise of ordinary care, would have known of the incompetence of the servant. In the case at bar there was no evidence that the master knew, or that by the exercise of reasonable care it would have known, of the two specific acts of negligence, the evidence of the commission of which is here challenged; and the question is, Are specific acts of negligence of which the master has no notice admissible to prove the incompetence of his servant whom he has exercised due care to employ?

The burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show (1) that the engineer had contracted the habit of negligence in the use of the air to stop his trains, to such an extent that he was an incompetent operator, and (2) that he had so notorious a reputation for this incompetence that the defendant, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, must have known it. The contention of counsel for the plaintiff is that specific acts of negligence are admissible to prove the habit, the character, and hence the fact, of incompetence. Counsel for the defendant insist that this fact is properly evidenced by the testimony of those who knew the habit or character alone, and that isolated acts are inadmissible to establish it, because the habit or character is conditioned, not by a few sporadic deeds, but by all the acts of the employee which relate to the charge against him. In support of their position, counsel for the plaintiff have cited the following cases: Cosgrove v. Pitman, 103 Cal. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

268, 275, 37 Pac. 232; Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 108 Cal. 129, 131, 41 Pac. 22, 23, 24; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 9, 38 N. E. 241, 244; Baulec v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 356, 358, 360, 17 Am. Rep. 325; Southern P. Co. v. Huntsman, 55 Cal. 366, 367, 118 Fed. 412, 413; Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 20 Mich. 105, 113, 123-124, 4 Am. Rep. 364; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 47 Am. Rep. 392, 29 Atl. 995, 996; Monahan v. Worcester, 150 Mass. 439, 15 Am. St. Rep. 2, 23 N. E. 228; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 123 Ind. 210, 23 N. E. 246, 24; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 19 Cal. 623, 627, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. 637, 638, 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 411-412. The learned author of the work has cited expresses an opinion favorable to the contention of plaintiff's counsel, but the authorities to which he refers in his notes in support of his view present cases in which notice of the specific acts was brought home to the master, such as Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby, 38 Ind. 294, 298, 318, 10 Am. Rep. 11; Couch v. Watson Coal Co. 46 Iowa, 17, 5 Grube v. Missouri P. R. Co. 98 Mo. 330, 1 L. R. A. 776, 14 Am. St. Rep. 645, 11 S. W. 736; Sutton v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 50 N. Y. S. 514, 21 N. Y. Supp. 33; Barkley v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 1 App. Div. 228, 54 N. Y. Supp. 766, 769; Morris v. Mt. Morris Electric Light Co. 41 App. D. 574, 53 N. Y. Supp. 659; and Consolidated Coal Co. v. Seniger, 179 Ill. 370, 53 N. E. 733,—cases in which the remarks of the courts upon the admissibility of the acts were obiter dicta, as in Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Elec. R. Co. supra, and even where the habit of drunkenness, or of negligence, was proved, presumably by competent witnesses who knew it, and no question of the admissibility of specific acts to establish it was considered or decided, as in Hill v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 55 Mich. 437, 21 N. W. 878, 882; so that the argument of Labatt is not as persuasive as it would have been if it had been supported by decisions of courts which had necessarily considered and decided the question.

Bearing in mind, now, that it is conceded that specific acts of incompetence of a servant, notice of which was brought home to the master before the accident, are admissible on the issue of his negligence in failing to discharge him, and that the question before is not whether acts known to the master, so notorious that they ought to have been known, are admissible, but whether or not specific acts of which he had no notice or knowledge are competent to establish the incompetence of the servant, let us considauthorities upon which counsel for the plaintiff rely.

In Cosgrove v. Pitman, supra, evidence of several specific acts of drunkenness of which the master had no notice was introduced, and the court held that an instruction that, as an engineer was unsteady and unreliable on account of a habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, he was not a competent motorer, was erroneous, and reversed the judgment which had been rendered for the plaintiff, because the specific acts did not constitute competent evidence of the incapacity of the servant. The court said: "Proof of specific acts is not equivalent to proof that Murphy had either this reputation or this habit. 'Character for care, skill, and truth of witnesses, parties, or others must all alike be proved by evidence of general reputation, and not of special acts.' 1 Greenl. 7. §§ 461-469. Character grows out of special acts, but is not proved by them, though, indeed, special acts do very often indicate frailties or vices that are altogether contrary to the character actually established, and sometimes the very frailties that are proved against a man may have been regarded by him in so serious a light as to have produced great improvement of character." Frazier v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 38 Pa. 110, 80 Am. Dec. 467."

In Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co., supra, the conductor of a motor car sued his master for retaining a careless motorman. Evidence that the motorman's reputation for care was bad was introduced, but there was no evidence that he had the habit of negligence, or that he had been guilty of any specific acts of negligence before the accident. The court reversed the judgment for the plaintiff, upon the ground that a reputation for negligence was insufficient alone to prove the fact of negligence, and, in the course of its argument, said that evidence of individual acts evincing negligence or incompetence was admissible to prove the fact. This remark, however, was an obiter dictum. The question whether or not such acts, unknown to the employer, were admissible for this purpose, was not presented by the record in that action. The decision of that question was neither necessary nor material to the determination of the case, and the court which decided that case, in Cosgrove v. Pitman, where the decision of the question was necessary to the adjudication of the case, expressly held that specific acts were not admissible to prove the alleged unfitness of the employee.

In Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, supra, the court remarked, in the course of the opinion, that it seemed to be well settled that proof of specific acts was admissible to establish incompetency. But that question was not before the court for adjudication, and its dictum is without authority. The question the court was considering in that case, and the one it decided, was whether or not evidence of reputation was admissible to show notice to the master. No other opinion cited by counsel for the plaintiff either discusses or decides the question before us for determination.

1 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, supra, the habit of recklessness was alleged and proved; and in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, and Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover, supra, the habit of drunkenness was proved. But there is nothing in the reports of either of these cases to indicate that specific acts of negligence, or of drunkenness, were received to establish these habits, or that they were not proved by the testimony of qualified witnesses who were acquainted with them. Indeed, in the case last cited, the court said, "The evidence offered and admitted had no relation to specific or isolated acts of negligence. These, unless brought home to the knowledge of the master, would not have been admissible as reflecting on the question of the master's care."

In Monahan v. Worcester, supra, there is no reference to the issue in hand.

In Baulec v. New York & H. R. Co., and in Southern P. Co. v. Huntsman, supra, notice of specific acts was brought home to the master, and for that reason they were clearly admissible.

And in Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 20 Mich. 105, 113, 124, 128, 4 Am. Rep. 364, a judgment in favor of the defendant was sustained, because the knowledge of specific acts of negligence, proof of which was introduced in the case, was not brought home to the master.

This brief review of the opinions to which counsel for the plaintiff have referred us discloses the fact that while there are two dicta, there is no adjudication among them in support of the position they have taken. And why should there be such a decision? The issue on trial in a case of this character is the negligence of the master, in that he failed to dismiss a servant who was employed with due care, and whom the law presumed to continue to be competent. Why should specific acts of negligence, or of lack of skill, of such a servant, of which the master has no knowledge or notice, and of which every servant subject to the infirmities of human nature must necessarily sometimes be guilty, be admitted in evidence to establish the negligence of the master in failing to discharge him? The employer is not liable for such acts. The fellow servant has assumed the risk of them. It is only when they have become so grave and numerous as to establish the habit and character, and so notorious as to establish the reputation of lack of care or of skill, that any liability for negligence in retaining the servant can attach to the master. The habit, the character, of a man or of a servant is not made, and it ought not to be provable, by isolated, sporadic acts. It is the product of all the acts he performs during his life or his service. If the plaintiff may introduce in evidence two specific acts of alleged negligence of an engineer in stopping his train to prove his habit and character in this regard, and if he has stopped his train a thousand times within a reasonable period preceding the accident, may not the defendant also introduce in evidence the other 998 stops for the same purpose? And may not the parties litigate and submit to the jury the question whether each of these 1,000 stops was careful or negligent? It by no means follows from the fact that a servant was guilty of negligence, or of a lack of skill, on a few specified occasions, that he is not ordinarily a careful and skilful workman; and the investigation of his specific acts to ascertain his character and habits would tend to confuse the case with collateral inquiries, which, if carefully made, would indefinitely prolong the trial, and would lead the court and jury far away from the issue before them.

This is not the only reason why such specific acts should not be received. A defendant is entitled to fair notice of the issues upon the trial of which his liability hinges. A complaint that a servant was incompetent, and that the defendant was negligent in that it did not discharge him, informs the master, indeed, that the habit, character, and reputation of the employee are in issue; but it is no adequate notice that the character of an isolated or specific act which the servant may have committed is to be tried, and that upon the character of that act the liability of the defendant is to hinge; and it gives the master no opportunity to prepare, or to fairly try, any such issue.

These considerations, and the deliberate and carefully considered adjudications of this question in the cases in which it was necessary to decide it, which are cited below, persuasively lead to the conclusion that specific acts of negligence, of drunkenness, or of incompetence, no notice of which was given to the master before the accident, are inadmissible to prove the incompetence of the servant, or the negligence of the master in failing to discharge him. Hatt v. Nay, 144 Mass. 186, 187, 10 N. E. 807; Connors v. Morton, 160 Mass. 333, 335, 35 N. E. 860; Cosgrove v. Pitman, 103 Cal. 268, 275, 37 Pac. 232; Frazier v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 38 Pa. 110, 80 Am. Dec. 467; Norfolk & W. R. Co. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Hoover, 79 Ind. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710. Am. St. Rep. 392, 29 Atl. 995. 996.

The review of the authorities which this decision of this question has invited, and consideration of the reasons upon which the rules relating to the liability of the master for negligence in the employment of and the failure to discharge servants are based, convince that the following rules are well established, and should prevail in the trial of actions to enforce that liability: It is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care to employ competent servants, and, when he has exercised this care, this duty is fully discharged. Another duty of the master is to discharge a servant whom he has employed with due care, when he knows, or by the exercise of reasonable care would have known, that the servant has contracted the habit or character of negligence or lack of skill, so that he has become incompetent. The diligence or care required of the master to learn the habits or character of servants whom he has employed with due care is not of that degree which is required in his employment of servants or in his inspection of machinery that deteriorate with its use, for the reason that careful and skilful men grow more careful and skilful in the practice of their occupations, and the legal presumption is that servants once competent continue to be so. Servants assume the risk of the occasional acts of negligence of their fellow servants, and the master is not liable for them. The servants may have notice to the master, cast upon him the risk of the habitual negligence of their employees. Evidence of specific acts of negligence known to the master, and of acts of negligence like those which cause the death of passengers, so notorious that the master must have known of them if he exercised reasonable diligence, is admissible to prove the habit or character of a servant, who was employed with due care, for incompetence. But specific acts of negligence, of lack of skill, or of incompetence, of which the master had no notice or knowledge prior to the alleged accident, are inadmissible to establish the incompetence of a servant who was employed with due care.

The court instructed the jury that, after the defendant had used due care to select and employ the engineer, Delano, it was his duty to exercise that degree of care to supervise his subsequent conduct "that an ordinarily prudent business man would use under similar circumstances if the danger to be apprehended from a want of care was his personal danger." This portion of the charge laid too heavy a burden on the defendant: (1) Because the supervision and discharge of the engineer did not constitute the personal danger of those to whom they were intrusted. The law never requires the impossible, and the imperfection of human nature is such that ordinarily prudent men do not and cannot commonly exercise that high degree of care to insure the safety of others which they instinctively use to protect their own safety. (2) Because the limit of the duty of the defendant was to exercise ordinary care, and the standard of ordinary care is that degree of caution which ordinarily prudent persons commonly exercise under like circumstances,—that is to say, in the case at bar, when the danger to be apprehended from the want of care does not condition the personal safety of those who exercise the care,—while the court directed the jury to test the duty and the liability by the degree of care ordinarily exercised by such persons under different circumstances; that is to say, when the want of care conditions the personal safety of those who use it. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Lewis, 144 U. S. 408, 416, 417, 36 L. ed. 485, 88, 489, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels (Union P. R. Co. v. Snyder) 132 U. S. 684, 691, 38 L. ed. 597, 601, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756; Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 569, 34 L. ed. 235, 240, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1044; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 67, 48 L. ed. 96, 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Holloway, 191 U. S. 334, 338, 48 L. ed. 207, 210, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Chumock v. Texas & P. R. Co. 194 U. S. 432, 437, 48 L. ed. 1057, 1059, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671. And (3) because a rule which would require a master to exercise that high degree of care to supervise the conduct of his servants, after their careful employment, which he would commonly exercise to protect his own person from danger, would abrogate the rule that servants assume the risk of the ordinary negligence of their fellows.

Cases may be found in the books in which courts have expressed the opinion that it was the duty of defendants, under certain circumstances, to exercise the same degree of care for the persons and property of others that they would use if their own personal danger was conditioned by it; but they involve other duties due under different circumstances, and no decision has been called to our attention which sustains the application of such a rule to the duty of a master to supervise the conduct of servants once carefully selected. Thus, where the liability of one who erects a structure on his own land for damages to the property of his neighbor is in issue, the declaration has sometimes been made that the former should exercise that degree of care which a discreet, and prudent person would use, or ought to use, if the whole risk of loss were to be his own exclusively (New York v. Bailey, 2 Denio, 433, 440); and "that the question is not what the plaintiffs could have done, but what discreet and prudent men should do or ordinarily do, in such cases, where their own interests are to be affected, and all the risk their own." Hoffman v. Tuolumne County Water Co. 10 Cal. 413, 419. This, however, is far from declaring that the degree of care required, even in such cases, is that which one would exercise if his own personal danger was involved; and the statement that the care required is such as a prudent person ought or should be expected to exercise presents a rule that abrogates every criterion of duty and liability, unless these statements are the simple equivalent of the rule that the requisite degree of care is such as ordinarily prudent persons commonly use under like circumstances. Moreover, the degree of care of the property and lives of adjoining proprietors required of those erecting structures on their own land, like the care of passengers which is required of carriers, is much higher than that which a railroad company owes to its employees, who assume the risk of the ordinary negligence of their fellows.

In several cases involving alleged negligence in the selection of appliances, it is said that the master has discharged his whole duty, and has absolved himself from liability, if he has used as much care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise to protect his own safety (Carlson v. Phoenix Bridge Co. 132 N. Y. 273, 30 N. E. 750; Probst v. Delamater, 100 N. Y. 266, 3 N. E. 184; Sappenfield v. Main Street and Acari Park R. Co. 91 Cal. 48, 27 Pac. 590; Brymer v. Southern P. Co. 90 Cal. 496, 498, 27 Pac. 371), a statement obviously correct, whether ordinary care is that which prudent men commonly exercise under similar circumstances, or that which such men would exercise if the danger from the lack of it was their own personal danger; so that the decisions in these cases do not rule this question.

There are other opinions which treat of the master's duty to exercise care in the selection of tools and machinery, and one in which the care of the place of work was in question, in which declarations have been made that the ordinary care which the master was required to use was such as a man of ordinary prudence would employ, or would be expected to employ, to secure his own safety if he was to do the work. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Heimlich, 62 C. C. A. 92, 127 Fed. 92, 94; Burke v. Witherbee, 98 N. Y. 562, 565; Hoffman v. Dickinson, 31 W. Va. 142, 152, 6 S. E. 53; Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co. 27 W. Va. 285, 55 Am. Rep.

304; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Ryles, 84 Ga. 430, 11 S. E. 499; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494; Smoot v. Mobile & M. R. Co. 67 Ala. 13, 18. These decisions, however, do not commend themselves to our judgment, because they require of employees, the discharge of whose duties does not condition their personal safety, the exercise of a degree of care that is extraordinary and unattainable, and because the courts in those cases did not consider or determine the degree of care required of employees whose duty it is to discharge competent workmen for subsequent negligence, the ordinary risk of which the coemployees assume in the first instance.

For the same reasons, and also because that statement has been repeatedly repudiated by the later decisions of the Supreme Court, the declaration of that court in Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 459, 27 L. ed. 607, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932, to the effect that the ordinary care required of corporations in the selection of employees is not the care which prudent and cautious officials charged with that duty ordinarily exercise in similar circumstances, but that degree of care which such officials ought to exercise in such circumstances, is neither persuasive nor controlling. By what standard could that requisite degree of care be measured under that declaration? What is the test of duty or of liability under it? Does it not abrogate every test, and leave the determination of the degree of care which conditions the liability of masters to their servants to the necessarily varying opinions of courts and juries, formed after the events, as to the care which such masters ought to use, so that neither master nor servant could ever know under it, until long after his action, what the limit of his duty or liability was to be in any case, and so that the degree of care required in any two cases arising under like circumstances would never be the same? This declaration in the McDaniels Case was made twenty-two years ago. The question of law which it treated has since been considered, and decided otherwise by the Supreme Court again and again. That court has cited and referred to its decisions of this question which were rendered before and those which were rendered after the opinion in the McDaniels Case, but, so far as we have been able to learn, it has never cited or referred to the declaration in that case upon this subject from the year 1882, when it was rendered, to the present day, except in the single case of Texas & P. R. Co. v. Behymer, 189 U. S. 468, 470, 47 L. ed. 905, 906, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622. In that case the question was not controlling. It received no discussion. The court declared that a charge which made ordinary care—"that is, the care that a person or ordinary prudence would use under the same circumstances"—the test of liability was right, and then, apparently casually, said that "what ought to be done is fixed by a standard of reasonable prudence, whether it usually is complied with or not;" and cited Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels. With this single exception, the decision in the McDaniels Case has suffered that silent repudiation which is the accustomed fate of opinions of that court which it subsequently finds to be erroneous.

In Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 417, 36 L. ed. 485, 488, 489, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, the Supreme Court decided that the exact converse of that declaration was the law.

In Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels (Union P. R. Co. v. Snyder) 152 U. S. 684, 691, 38 L. ed. 597, 601, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756, the charge of the court was that the duty of exercising ordinary care to employ competent servants "was discharged by the defendant if the care disclosed by it in these several matters accorded with that reasonable skill and prudence and care which careful, prudent men engaged in the same kind of business ordinarily exercise," and the Supreme Court failed to suggest that this statement of the law was either erroneous or inaccurate.

In Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 569, 34 L. ed. 235, 240, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1044, that court decided that a charge that one was only bound to use ordinary care and prudence in the selection, arrangement, and care of its machinery was right, and in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 619, 620, 41 L. ed. 1136, 1138, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707, that a charge that a master was bound to use reasonable care in providing and repairing machinery, and that "by ordinary care is meant such as a prudent man would use under the same circumstances," laid down "the applicable rules with sufficient accuracy and in substantial conformity with the views of this court as expressed in Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 211, 25 L. ed. 612; Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, and Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels, supra; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978, and other cases."

In Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 19 U. S. 64, 67, 48 L. ed. 96, 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; and in Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Holloway, 191 U. S. 334, 338, 48 L. ed. 207, 210, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102, the Supreme Court again declared, after the foregoing definition of ordinary care had been repeatedly approved, that an employer is only required to use ordinary care to furnish reasonably safe and secure appliances and machinery

And in Charnock v. Texas & P. R. Co. 194 U. S. 432, 437, 48 L. ed. 1057, 1059, 24 Sup. t. Rep. 671, that court laid down the general proposition that "negligence has always relation to the circumstances in which one is faced, and what an ordinarily prudent man could do or omit in such circumstances."

These later decisions of our highest judicial tribunal declare that the degree of care required of masters in dealing with their servants is ordinary care, and affirm the truth of that which seems axiomatic,—that ordinary care is that which is ordinarily prudent and cautious men commonly exercise in similar circumstances. If prudent and humane officials who employ men for their masters partake of the infirmities of our common human nature, and sometimes fail to exercise that high degree of care which they instinctively use to protect their own persons, then that degree of care is not ordinary, but is extraordinary care, and their master is not liable in damages for such a failure. The limit of the legal duty of such officials is the exercise of ordinary care, however so much higher in the varying conceptions of different minds may be their moral or ethical duty. For their failure to discharge the former, damages may be recovered of their master. But their failure, in common with all mankind, to perfectly discharge the latter, furnishes no cause of action in human tribunals. Any departure from this rule, any substitution for it of a test of liability which must necessarily change with the varying conceptions of moral duty, which will be formed after the events by the juries and courts that subsequently try the cases involving it, would put uncertainty, confusion, and injustice in the place of the proximate certainty of the law and its just administration.

In Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, supra, the Supreme Court decided that a charge to a jury was right which instructed them that negligence was "the failure to do what reasonable and prudent persons would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what reasonable and prudent persons, under the existing circumstances, would not have done. . . . You fix the standard for reasonable, prudent, and cautious men under the circumstances of the case as you find them, according to your judgment and experience of what that class of men do under these circumstances, and then test the conduct involved and try it by that standard." From this rule that court has never since departed. Tested by it, the charge of the court below was erroneous, because it fixed the standard of negligence, not at what ordinarily prudent and cautious men do under like circumstances (that is to say, when their action does not involve their personal safety), but at what they do under radically different circumstances (that is to say, when their action does condition their personal safety). The true test of the duty and liability of the master is that degree of care which ordinarily prudent, cautious, and humane officials commonly exercise under similar circumstances; not that which they would exercise under different circumstances when their personal safety was involved, and not that which courts and juries, unguided by this test, might think, after the event, they ought to have exercised in view of some ethical standard which they might then approve.

Witnesses who acknowledge that they were not acquainted with the general reputation of the engineer were permitted to testify to his reputation among conductors and brakemen, excluding consideration of the engineers and others acquainted with the workman and his service. The issue to which this testimony was directed was whether or not the reputation of Delano for incompetence was so notorious that the officers of the defendant whose duty it was to hire and discharge its servants would have been aware of it if they had exercised reasonable diligence. Reputation among specific classes of men to which such officials did not belong, and which obviously included only a part of those who were acquainted with the operator or his service, was too restricted to meet this issue. A reputation confined to only a part of those who must be familiar with the man and his service is not general reputation, and it is insufficient to evidence knowledge of that reputation by those who do not belong to the limited class in which it exists. General reputation alone is competent to charge the master with notice in cases where no knowledge of habitual incompetence of the servant is brought home to him.

Counsel for the defendant requested the court to give to the jury a charge which they had prepared, which covers 9 pages of the printed record and is divided into 30 paragraphs. The court refused to grant this request, and the defendant excepted to its refusal to give these 30 paragraphs, which in its exception it termed "instructions." A single exception to a refusal to give a series of instructions is futile if any proposition of law or of fact embodied in the instructions is either erroneous or inapplicable to the case. The only question which such an exception presents is whether or not all the instructions thus requested should have been given; and, if any of them should not have been submitted to the jury, the question of the correctness or applicability of the others is not presented to the appellate court for decision. In the series of instructions which counsel for the defendant requested there are several propositions of law which are erroneous, and some statements of fact that are inapplicable to the issues which the jury was required to determine. The questions presented by many of the requests which are discussed in the briefs of counsel are therefore not here for our consideration, and they are dismissed. Union P. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 161 U. S. 91, 95, 40 L. ed. 628, 629, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Waples-Platter Co. v. Turner, 27 C. C. A. 439, 441, 49 U. S. App. 592, 83 Fed. 64, 66.

The various objections to the complaint in this action which were argued at the bar and presented in the briefs are purposefully ignored, because this case must be tried again, and there will be opportunity to amend and reform the pleadings, so that any discussion of them now would serve no useful purpose.

The judgment below is reversed, and the case is remanded to the Circuit Court with instructions to grant a new trial.

Hook, Circuit Judge, specially concurring:
I concur in the reversal of the judgment in this case and in the reasons given therefor, excepting those pertaining to the measure of ordinary care, the exercise of which was incumbent upon the company, and the charge of the circuit court upon that subject.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

M. C. ROSS, Appt.,

v.

DOUBLE SHOALS COTTON MILLS.

(.... N. C.)

1. Negligence—evidence—res ipsa loquitur.

Mere proof of facts which call into action the rule res ipsa loquitur in an action for negligent injuries does not make a prima facie case, or raise a presumption of negligence, but merely furnishes an element to be considered by the jury as part of the plaintiff's case.

2. Master and servant—negligence—question for jury.

An employee who shows that, having shifted the belt running the machinery which he was operating, he attempted to clean the machine by putting his hand inside, when the machine suddenly started from a cause of which he has no knowledge, and injured him; and who further shows that the belt shifter was imperfect, the accident being one which, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen to those who have the management of the business use due care,—has a right to have the jury say whether, in the light of the rule res ipsa loquitur, he has made out actionable negligence on the part of his employer.

(November 28, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Cleveland County dismissing an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Connor, J.:

Action for personal injury sustained by plaintiff while operating a lapper in defendant company's mill. Plaintiff introduced Alfred Gilliam, who testified that he was sixty-seven years of age, had worked at defendant's mill since he was fifteen and up to two years ago. The lapper was purchased and put in mill six or seven years ago; examined, and found to be very good; nothing wrong with it; was not new. It was a 36-inch lapper, had been taken out of a mill to give place to a 40-inch one. It run very well. The worm gear gave out, and it gave trouble,—a good deal first and last. The shaft, the coupling from the evenner plates, broke once; was off when left there. The belt-shifter fork was wider than the belt, and put on a piece of wood to make it correspond with the width of the belt. Think put the piece of wood next to the tight pulley; am not certain. Have worked in cotton mills fifty-two years. Was superintendent of defendant mill thirty-two years. Nothing wrong with the machine. Evenner plates under the feed rolls, then the beater gars,—two arms or bars. Beater shaft revolves 1,400 or 1,500 times a minute. Bars cannot be seen when cap is down,—arched cap on hinges. Could not get hurt when cap is down. Worm gear has no connection with beater or blinding. If plaintiff got hurt by beater bars,

Case Note.—A result different from that arrived at in the case in hand is found in Dingley v. Star Knitting Co. 134 N. Y. 554. 32 N. E. 35, where it was held that there was no presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant, arising from the fact that the machine which the employee was cleaning at the time of his injury started suddenly, from some unknown cause. The method of stopping the machine in question was by pressing the hand against the driving belt, and running it off from the tight pulley onto the loose one; and of starting it by pressing the belt back onto the tight pulley. The testimony showed that the machine had started suddenly on three other occasions. This case differs in one respect from the case in hand, in that there was evidence in the latter case that the belt shifter was defective, while in the Dingley Case it appeared that an examination of the machine after the accident failed to show any the worm gear could not have affected it. Stop-motion rod has no connection with beater bar. Beater bars are stopped by throwing the belt from the tight to the loose pulley by means of the belt shifter. There is no danger of operating machine that know of. The shaft, pulleys, belt, and beater shifter were brought into court, and used by witness in explaining testimony to the jury. Plaintiff testified that he was hurt July, 1904, working for defendant. Had been a card hand. Ran machine an hour and a half, when it choked down and belt ran off big pulley. Carded the belt off, and put belt grease on it to prevent belt from running off. Ran five or ten minutes and choked again. Moved the belt shifter, stopped machine, and carried two loads of cotton back to the hopper. Jim Champion came along; went to opposite side, and raised cap from beater. "I put my hand over feed roll into beater bars to get cotton out. Machine started by some means, and tore off my arm to my elbow; knocked me numb or paralyzed. Had run lapper three months before I was hurt. Belt ran off pulley, which runs beater, when I got hurt. Am certain that I changed belt shifter, and stopped machine when it choked, but cannot tell how it started. When I went to unclog it, know of nothing that could have put the belt on tight pulley." At the close of the evidence defendant demurred, and moved the court to dismiss the action. Motion allowed. Judgment and appeal.

Messrs. Webb & Mull and D. F. Morrow, for appellant:

The evidence tends to show that the belt defect. As will hereafter appear, this distinction is an important one. The Dingley Case was cited, and this distinction pointed out, in Towle v. Stimson Mill Co. 33 Wash. 305. 74 Pac. 471, where the court refused to disturb a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, who had been injured by the automatic starting of a 10-block shingle machine, where it appeared that the defendant knew that the machine had previously started automatically owing to defects in the clutch; the court pointing out the fact that in the Dingley Case no defect in the machine was shown, while in the case at bar there was testimony that the clutch and clutch band were defective at the time of the accident. It was also cited in Ross v. Pearson Cordage Co. 164 Mass. 257, 49 Am. St. Rep. 459, 41 N. E. 284, where it was held that the mere fact that a machine started suddenly, injuring an employee who was cleaning it, is not sufficient to show a breach of duty on the part of the employer in the absence of a defect in the machine.

The latter case was cited in Kenneson v. West End Street R. Co. 168 Mass. 1, 46 N. E. 114, where it was held that the mere fact that an electric car started suddenly while the motorman was fixing the fender was not sufficient to go to the jury. It was also cited and distinguished in Gregory v. American Thread Co. 187 Mass. 242, 72 N. E. 962, where the court held that the sudden starting of a machine, to the injury of the plaintiff, was some evidence that it was defective; to which proposition it cites Packer v. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. 175 Mass. 496, 56 N. E. 704.

In Vorbrich v. Gendler & P. Mfg. Co. 96 Wis. 277, 71 N. W. 434, a decision similar to that in the Dingley Case was rendered. It was there held that, while a presumption of negligence, as matter of law, might arise from the fact that a personal injury was caused by the unexpected revolution of a stamping machine which had made a similar revolution the day before, such presumption is completely overcome, as a matter of law, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by proof that the machine or thing was not defective or out of repair at the time. The opinion in this case, in elaborating the distinction above pointed out, states that there is a class of cases where the facts are such that the mere proof of the accident creates a presumption of negligence; to which it cites the following cases: Byrne v. Boodle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 722; Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 596; Briggs v. Oliver, 4 Hurlst. & C. 403; Kearney v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411, L. R. 6 Q. B. 759; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530; McCarragher v. Rogers, 120 N. Y. 526, 24 N. E. 812; Volkmar v. Manhattan R. Co. 134 N. Y. 418, 30 Am. St. Rep. 678, 31 N. E. 870; Hogan v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 23, 43 N. E. 403; Lvons v. Rosenthal, 11 Hun. 46; Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 423, 46 N. W. 111; Thomas v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Mass. 156; Connors v. Durite Mfg. Co. 156 Mass. 163, 30 N. E. 559; Donahue v. Drown, 154 Mass. 21, 27 N. E. 675; Martineau v. National Blank Book Co. 166 Mass. 4, 43 N. E. 513; Dixon v. Plums, 98 Cal. 384, 20 L. R. A. 698, 35 Am. St. Rep. 180, 31 Pac. 931, 33 Pac. 268; Judson v. Giant Powder Co. 107 Cal. 549, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146, 40 Pac. 1020; Howser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. 80 Md. 146, 27 L. R. A. 154, 45 Am. St. Rep. 332, 30 Atl. 906; Spaulding v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 30 Wis. 110, 11 Am. Rep. 550; Cummings v. National Furnace Co. 60 Wis. 603, 18 N. W. 742, 20 N. W. 665; Kurz & H. Ice Co. v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co. 84 Wis. 171, 53 N. W. 850; Stacy v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 85 Wis. 225, 54 N. W. 779. The opinion then refers to another class of cases holding that this presumption is completely overcome by merely proving, by competent experts, that the machine or thing at the time was not defective or out of repair, or that the conditions were such as to preclude negligence; and cites Read v. Morse, 34 Wis. 315; Gibbons v. Wisconsin Valley R. Co. 62 Wis. 546, 22 N. W. 533; Menominee River Sash & Door Co. v. Mil- shifter and machine were defective; and from these facts and circumstances negligence on the part of the master should be inferred, the familiar doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applying.

Craft v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 136 N. C. 49, 48 N. E. 519; Cox v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. 123 N. C. 604, 31 S. E. 848; Coley v. North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 407, 57 L. R. A. 817, 40 S. E. 195; Hopkins v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 131 N. C. 463, 42 S. E. 902; Butts v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 133 N. C. 82, 45 S. E. 472; Purnell v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953; Capital Printing Co. v. Raleigh, 126 N. C. 516, 36 S. E. 33; Gibbs v. Lyon, 95 N. C. 146; Springs v. Schenck, 99 N. C. 551, 6 Am. St. Rep. 552, 6 S. E. 405; Brittain v. Westhall, 135 N. C. 492, 47 S. E. 616; Kinney v. North Carolina R. Co. 122 N. C. 961, 30 S. E. 313; Trenton Passenger R. Co. v. Cooper, 60 N. J. L. 219, 38 L. R. A. 637, 64 Am. St. Rep. 592, 37 Atl. 730; Hartford Deposit Co. v. Solitt, 172 Ill. 222, 64 Am. St. Rep. 35, 50 N. E. 178; Womdle v. Merchants Grocery Co. 135 N. C. 474, 47 S. E. 493; Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331, 29 Atl. 380; Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 43 W. Va. 661, 39 L. R. A. 499, 64 Am. St. Rep. 922, 28 S. E. 733; Ellis v. Portsmouth & R. R. Co. 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 138; Aycock v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 89 N. C. 321; Hicks v. Naomi Falls Mfg. Co. 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703.

Messrs. O. F. Mason and Ryburn & Hoey, for appellee:

In actions for injuries sustained on acwaukee & N. R. Co. 91 Wis. 447, 65 N. W. 176; Brymer v. Southern P. Co. 90 Cal. 406, 27 Pac. 371; Duffy v. Upton, 113 Mass. 544; Badger v. Janesville Cotton Mills. 95 Wis. 599, 70 N. W. 687; Redmond v. Delta Lumber Co. 96 Mich. 545, 55 N. W. 1004.

The cases cited in the Vorbrich Case are presented for the purpose of comparing the two phases of the rule there discussed, and, of course, are not confined to any particular class of accidents.

In Donahue v. Drown, 154 Mass. 21, 27 N. E. 675, where the plaintiff was injured by the sudden starting of a machine which she was cleaning, it was held that, where it appeared that the cause of the machine starting of itself, if it did so start, must have been the shifting of the belt from the loose pulley to the fixed pulley, the jury might properly find that this was the cause of the starting of the machine at the time of the injury to the plaintiff, and that a proper construction and arrangement of the pulleys and adjustment of the belt would have prevented such shifting; and they might, therefore, infer negligence on the part of the defendant.

In Mooney v. Connecticut River Lumber Co. 154 Mass. 407, 28 N. E. 352, it was held that the jury were justified in finding the defendant negligent, where it appeared that count of defective machinery or appliances, it is presumed that the master discharged his duty by providing suitable machinery and appliances for the use of his servant in his employment, and by keeping them in proper condition. No presumption of negligence in failing to discharge this duty arises from the mere fact of accident, until facts appear which authorize a conclusion that he wrongfully violated his duty.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 87; Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 382; Duntley v. Inman, 42 Or. 334, 59 L. R. A. 785, 70 Pac. 529; Clegg v. Southern R. Co. 133 N. C. 303, 45 S. E. 657; Minty v. Union P. R. Co. Idaho, 471, 4 L. R. A. 409, 21 Pac. 660.

Connor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We did not have a model of the machine or any of its parts before us by which to illustrate the testimony and argument. The plaintiff in the employment of defendant was, on the day of the injury, operating a lapper in defendant's cotton mill. The motive power was applied by a belt running over a pulley on the machine, attached to another pulley overhead, working upon shafting connected with the power. When it was desired to stop the machine for any purpose, the belt was removed or shifted from the tight to the loose pulley by means of the belt shifter. If the machine became choked with the cotton passing through the beater, and it became necessary to clean it, or remove the cotton, it the plaintiff was injured by the sudden starting of the carriage of a sawing machine, and that the machine had acted in a similar manner on a previous occasion.

In Shaughnessy v. Sewall & D. Cordage Co. 160 Mass. 331, 35 N. E. 861, it was held that the plaintiff, who was injured while oiling a machine which suddenly and unexpectedly started into motion, had the burden of proving that the machine started of itself, and that he could not recover unless he proved this; and, in case the jury were unable to decide what caused the machine to start, plaintiff would be unable to recover.

In Blanton v. Dold, 109 Mo. 64, 18 S. W. 1149, the plaintiff, who was a skilled mechanic, was injured by the sudden starting of a grinding mill which he was attempting to clean. He was unable to assign any specific cause for the sudden movement of the machinery, and the same was not explained on the trial. The court held that where such a machine as this starts into motion entirely out of the usual manner of its operation, as shown in the case at bar, its action affords prima facie evidence of some want of care in its original construction or then condition, calling for explanation from the party responsible therefor.

stopped by throwing the belt from the tight to the loose pulley; this being done by a shifter. If in proper condition, it will remain motionless until the belt is thrown back onto the tight pulley. While machine is in motion, there are parts in which the hand of the operator may be put without injury. There are other parts in which the beater shaft revolves very rapidly. Plaintiff's witness Gilliam says that two years ago, when he left the mill, the lapper was all right and in good condition. The plaintiff says that on the 11th day of July, 1904, he was operating the lapper; that it became choked, and "the belt ran off the big pulley;" that he carded the belt off, and put belt grease on it to prevent belt from running off; in five or ten minutes it choked again; that he stopped the machine with the belt shifter, and carried some cotton back to the hopper. Champion went to the opposite side, raised the cap from the beater, and the plaintiff put his hand into the beater bars to get the cotton out. The machine, by some unknown means, started, and tore his arm off. The plaintiff's witness refers to some defects in parts of the machine, which, he says, could not have had any connection with the plaintiff's injury. The immediate cause of the injury was that by some means the belt was thrown back on the tight pulley. The only testimony which throws any light on the condition of the belt shifter is that of Gilliam, who says: "The belt shifter fork was wider than the belt, and I put on a piece of wood to make it correspond with the width of the belt." There is no suggestion as to what effect, if any, this would have on the movement of the belt.

With the light afforded us, but one of three possible explanations of the unexpected starting of the machine occurs to our minds. Either Champion accidentally struck the shifter, and threw the belt onto the tight pulley; or the plaintiff, in moving about the machine, did so; or there was some defect in the belt or shifter. It is elementary learning that the defendant is not liable for the movement of the belt, unless, either by the negligent conduct of some employee not a fellow servant, or by some defect in the condition of the shifter, it worked back and threw the belt onto the tight pulley. In this condition of the case, what shall be done? The defendant has charge of the machinery and its operation, except in so far as the plaintiff, in the discharge of his duty, had such charge. The plaintiff is suddenly and unexpectedly caught in the machine, struck dumb, his arm torn off, paralyzed. Conceding that there is no direct evidence of a defect in the machine or any of its parts, is the plaintiff driven to a nonsuit, or may he, upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, have his case submitted to the jury to say whether there be actionable negligence which is the proximate cause of his injury?

L.R.A. (N.S.)

To prevent any misconstruction of the circumstances under which, or the manner in which, this principle applies in the trial of causes, we wish to restate what was said in Womble v. Merchants' Grocery Co. 135 N. C. 474, 47 S. E. 493: "The principle of res ipsa loquitur in such cases carries the question of negligence to the jury, not relieving the plaintiff of the burden of proof, and not, we think, raising any presumption in his favor, but simply entitling the jury, in view of all the circumstances and conditions as shown by the plaintiff's evidence, to infer negligence and say whether, upon all of the evidence, the plaintiff has sustained his allegation." It does not, in any degree, affect or modify the elementary principle that the burden of the issue is on the plaintiffs. Walker, J., in Stewart v. Van Deventer Carpet Co. 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562, clearly states the law in this respect: "The doctrine does not dispense with the requirement that the party who alleges negligence must prove the fact, but relates only to the mode of proving it: The fact of the accident furnishes merely some evidence to go to the jury which requires the defendant to 'go forward with his proof.' The rule of res ipsa loquitur does not relieve the plaintiff of the burden of showing negligence, nor does it raise any presumption in his favor." The suggestion has been made in argument of cases at this term that, when the rule applies, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury that proof which calls the rule into action constitutes a prima facie case, or raises a presumption of negligence. This is a misapprehension, both of the principle upon which the rule is founded and its application. It must be conceded that expressions are used in cases, some of which are cited in the opinion in Womble's Case, 135 N. C. 474, 47 S. E. 493, which give color to the suggestion. These cases were cited as illustrations of the rule. The author of the opinion was not advertent, as he should have been, to this inaccuracy. The conclusion which is drawn from the cases and quoted herein does not contain the error. Mr. Justice Walker, in Stewart's Case, puts the subject in its true light. So learned and accurate a jurist as Judge Gaston, in Ellis v. Portsmouth & R. R. Co. 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 138, being the first time that we find the rule declared in this court, refers to it as making out, when applicable, a prima facie cause. Smith, Ch. J., in Aycock v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 89 N. C. 323, quotes with approval the language used in Ellis's Case, 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 138. The correct application of the rule is as stated in Stewart's Case, 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 563. In Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 780, 19 S. E. 344, the court held that permitting a live wire to lie upon the street was negligence,—a breach of duty. In that case it was not necessary to invoke the rule. The defendant, by permitting the live wire to be upon the street, became liable for any injuries sustained thereby, unless it showed that it was there through no fault of its agents and servants. The learned justice, writing in that case, was of the opinion that the rule applied. When, as in that case, a breach of duty is shown, which is the proximate cause of the injury, a verdict follows for the plaintiff unless exculpatory circumstances are shown. It is only, as here, when there is no direct evidence of a defect in the machine, and the physical conditions surrounding the transaction do not ordinarily produce injury, that the occurrence speaks for itself. Such conditions are shown to exist in this case. A machine operated as this one, with the adjustment of the belt, etc., does not ordinarily resume its motion after being disconnected with the motive power. The evidence shows that it did start suddenly, and, so far as the plaintiff is able to say, from some unknown cause. The defendant says that it was an accident. That may be true, and, in the absence of any other testimony, a jury would be justified in so finding. But, on the other hand, the jury may infer that this is not a satisfactory explanation; that the difference between the width of the belt fork and the belt in some way caused the machine to start; that the piece of wood put upon it to make it correspond had worn or dropped out, and that caused the movement of the belt on the pulley. We do not suggest that either of the hypotheses is true. We are not sufficiently advised to have any opinion in regard to it. We merely say that a properly adjusted belt, removed from the tight pulley onto a loose pulley, does not usually get back onto the tight pulley and start the machine at so rapid movement as to tear a man's arm off. It is for this reason the law says that the plaintiff is entitled to have a jury pass upon the physical facts and condition, and to say whether, in their opinion, he has made good his allegation of actionable negligence. The defendant may or may not introduce evidence, as it is advised. By failing to do so, it admits nothing, but simply takes the risk of nonpersuasion. This is what is meant by going forward with testimony. He, by this course, says that he is willing to go to the jury upon the plaintiff's evidence. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

While the rule has not been, in express terms, often applied in this state, it is by no means new or of unusual application. Professor Wigmore says that, for a generation at least, in England it has been conceded to exist "for some classes of cases at least." In 1865, Erle, Ch. J., in Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 601, said: "There must be reasonable evidence of negligence. But where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care." The limitations governing the application of the rule are thus stated in Wigmore on Evidence (§ 2509): "(1) The apparatus must be such that in the ordinary instance no injurious operation is to be expected, unless from a careless construction, inspection, or user; (2) both inspection and user must have been, at the time of the injury, in the control of the party charged; (3) the injurious occurrence or condition must have happened, irrespective of any voluntary action at the time by the party injured." The underlying reason for the rule is that usually the chief evidence of the true cause of procedure is practically accessible to the defendant, but inaccessible to the person injured. Stewart's Case, 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 563. It is for this reason that in some cases the legislature has made the fact of injury "presumptive evidence," and in others a "prima facie" case. Aycock's Case, 89 N. C. 323.

The learned counsel for defendant insists that the plaintiff cannot recover, because there is no evidence that, if defective, the defendant had notice, or could by reasonable care have known, of such defect. It is well settled that this is essential to the plaintiff's recovery. The question is not, in the present condition of the record, presented. We cannot tell in what respect, if at all, the jury would find the shifter or other part of the machine defective. Their attention would be directed to this element in the plaintiff's case, either by a specific issue or by instruction. Hudson v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. 104 N. C. 491, 10 S. E. 669. Other questions will probably arise upon the trial. If the belt was thrown upon the tight pulley by an accidental contact with the plaintiff or some other person, or if it was the result of the negligence of a fellow servant, the court would instruct the jury in respect to the law. The question of the plaintiff's own conduct, and its effect upon his right to recover, are to be pre-ted by proper instructions. Our ruling confined to one question,—whether the se should have gone to the jury upon the physical conditions disclosed by the evidence. It does not appear what the plaintiff proposed to show by the rejected question. Hence we cannot pass upon the exceptions to His Honor's rulings. The judgment of nonsuit must be set aside and a new trial had.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

M. D. SHELBY, Appt.,

v.

C. C. BURROW.

(.... Ark.)

Contract—by agent—suit on.

A contract made by an agent in his own name, without disclosing his principal, is not void, but may be enforced by the agent in the absence of objection by the principal; and it is immaterial that the signature to the contract is actually affixed by a sub-agent, where his act was authorized by all parties in interest.

(October 14, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Conway Coun-

Case Note.—The right of an agent to sue on a contract which he has entered into in his own name without disclosing his agency, if the principal makes no objection, seems hardly to have been questioned, and is said to be the rule, in different text-books on agency, including 2 Clark & Skyles, Agency, § 614; Mechem, Agency, § 755, and Tiffany, Agency, p. 387. Many cases are cited in support of such rule. All of those directly in point sustain the agent's right to sue.

Coburn v. Phillips, 13 Gray, 64, sustains the right of an agent contracting for the purchase of goods to sue for breach in charging more than the price agreed on.

In Stockbarger v. Sain, 69 Ill. App. 436, and Cogburn v. Simpson, 22 Mo. 351, the right of an agent, selling the principal's goods as his own, to recover on the contract, was sustained; while in Davis v. Harness, 20 Ohio St. 397, he was permitted to recover for a breach of the contract. In Alsop v. Gaines, 10 Johns. 396, and Gardiner v. Davis, 2 Car. & P. 49, the agents who sold the goods as their own, while carrying on the principal's business ostensibly in their own names, were also permitted to recover the purchase price.

In Tustin Fruit Assn. v. Earl Fruit Co., 111 Cal. 53 Pac. 693, the right of an agent, contracting, as principal, that the other party to the contract should market for it all fruit under control of the former, to sue thereon, is sustained.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ty in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce a contract for the sale of cotton. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sellers & Sellers, for appellant:

Even if the contract had been a bona fide contract between Burrow and appellant, and by Burrow assigned to the Moose Gin Company, suit could not have been maintained under the Code in his name, but would have to be brought in the name of the assignee.

15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 709-715; Kirby's Digest, § 5099; Gamblin v. Walker, 1 Ark. 220; Roberts v. Jacks, 31 Ark. 597, 25 Am. Rep. 584; Purdy v. Brown, 4 Ark. 535.

Appellee cannot sue as one in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another.

Vrooman v. Turner, 69 N. Y. 280, 25 Am. Rep. 195; Burton v. Larkin, 36 Kan. 250, 59 Am. Rep. 541, 13 Pac. 398; Thomas Mfg. Co. v. Prather, 65 Ark. 30, 44 S. W. 218; Austin v. Seligman, 21 Blatchf. 506, 18 Fed. 523.

Without mutuality and evidences of "meeting of minds," lacking which no valid contract can be made, the courts refuse to allow a third party to maintain an action.

Chung Kee v. Davidson, 73 Cal. 522, 15 Pac. 100; Burton v. Larkin, 36 Kan. 246, 59 Am. Rep. 541, 13 Pac. 398; Howsmon v. Trenton Water Co. 119 Mo. 304, 23 L. R. A. 146, 41 Am. St. Rep. 654, 24 S. W. 784; Garnsey v. Rogers, 47 N. Y. 233, 7 Am. Rep. 440;

In Stoll v. Sheldon, 13 Neb. 207, 13 N. W. 201; Bird v. Daniel, 9 Ala. 302; Grigsby v. Nance, 3 Ala. 347, and Barbee v. Williams, 4 Heisk. 522, an agent to whom a note was made payable individually was held entitled to sue thereon in his own name.

And Dawson v. Burrus, 73 Ala. 111, holds that an agent intrusted with the exclusive use and management of the money of another to lend on interest, who makes a loan without disclosing his principal, taking a note therefor in his own name, secured by a mortgage to himself, may maintain an action to foreclose the mortgage for the purpose of reducing the money loaned to his possession, as an active duty imposed on him by the agency.

Joseph v. Knox, 3 Campb. 320, holds that the agent of consignors, who is stated in the bill of lading to have shipped the goods, and who pays the freight, may maintain an action for failure to deliver according to the contract.

And Blanchard v. Page, 8 Gray, 281, holds that persons named in the bill of lading as shippers may maintain an action for damage to the goods during transportation, though they had no interest in such goods, but simply forwarded them at the request of the owner.

And Carter v. Southern R. Co. 111 Ga. 38, 50 L. R. A. 354, 36 S. E. 308, sustains the right of an agent to maintain, in his own name, an action against a carrier for dam-

Parker v. Jeffery, 26 Or. 186, 37 Pac. 712; Street v. Goodale, 77 Mo. App. 318; Martin v. Peet, 92 Hun, 133, 36 N. Y. Supp. 554; Linneman v. Moross, 98 Mich. 178, 39 Am. St. Rep. 528, 57 N. W. 103.

Appellant not having agreed to contract with or for the benefit of the Moose Gin Company, the alleged contract is void.

Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9; Meynell v. Surtees, 3 Smale & G. 101; Consumers' Ice Co. v. E. Webster, Son & Co. 32 App. Div. 592, 53 N. Y. Supp. 56; Winchester v. Howard, 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93; Boulton v. Jones, 2 Hurlst. & N. 564; Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 127 U. S. 387, 32 L. ed. 248. 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1308; Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B. 310.

A contract made by an agent claiming to represent one person, while in reality he represents another, is absolutely void.

Hamet v. Letcher, 37 Ohio St. 356, 41 Am. Rep. 519; Moody v. Blake, 117 Mass. 23, 19 Am. Rep. 394; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 418; Cundy v. Lindsay, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 459; Barcus v. Dorries, 64 App. Div. 109, 71 N. Y. Supp. 695; Paine v. Loeb, 37 C. C. A. 434, 96 Fed. 164.

Mr. Charles C. Reid, for appellee:

Burrow was the real party in interest.

Lanigan v. North, 69 Ark. 66, 63 S. W. 62;

Perciful v. Platt, 36 Ark. 456; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 58 Ark. 490, 25 S. W. 504; Kent v. Dana, 40 C. C. A. 281, 100 Fed. 56; Brown v. Powers, 53 App. Div. 251, 65 N. Y. Supp. 733.

The action may be maintained by Burrow though he made the contract for the benefit of the Moose Gin Company.

Dickenson v. Harris, 48 Ark. 355, 3 S. W. 58; 16 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 890, 897; Close v. Hodges, 44 Minn. 204, 46 N. W. 335; Bishop. Contr. § 356; Mechem, Agency, §§ 754, 755; Catlett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 57 Ark. 461, 38 Am. St. Rep. 254, 21 S. W. 1062.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 25th day of June, 1900, M. D. Shelby and C. C. Burrow entered into a written contract in the words and figures following:

Morrilton, Ark., June 25, 1900.

This contract, entered into this 25th day of June, by and between M. D. Shelby and C. C. Burrow & Co., of Little Rock, witnesses:

That C. C. Burrow & Co. have this day bought of M. D. Shelby one hundred round bales at seven and forty-hundredths (7.40) cents per pound, to be delivered at Morrilton on or before the 15th day of December, 1900.

ages from a breach of the contract to transport the goods.

Neal v. Andrews (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 459, holds that a broker buying notes in his own name may maintain an action against the seller, on his refusal to deliver, for the damages resulting from the breach, although he acted as agent for another in making the purchase, and the seller knew of his intention to resell, but did not know who the principal was.

And United States Teleg. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 29 Md. 232, 96 Am. Dec. 519, holds that a broker, acting for an undisclosed and unknown principal in sending a telegram directing the sale of gold, for which he is to receive a commission from his principal, may maintain an action against the telegraph company for damages due to its failure to deliver the message.

But Evrit v. Bancroft, 22 Ohio St. 172, holds that an agent for the sale of land for which he is to receive all over a specified price per acre cannot maintain an action against one to whom he sold the land in his own name, for the amount above such price as damages for breach of the agreement, where the land was worth more than the contract price; as the principal himself could not have maintained such an action.

In SHELBY v. BURROW it is said that the statutes of the state have made no change in the law allowing an agent to sue on a contract made in his own name; and in 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

several cases cited in 2 Clark & Skyles on Agency, § 615, and Tiffany on Agency, p. 388, the right of an agent to sue in his own name on a contract entered into in his own name is held not to have been affected by the provisions of the Codes of different states that every action must be prosecuted by "the real party in interest," as such provisions give a right of action to "the trustee of an express trust," and define such trustee as "a person with whom, or in whose name, a contract is made for the benefit of another;" thus including an agent in the definition. Thus, Cremer v. Wimmer, 40 Minn. 511, 42 N. W. 467, holds that an agent taking in his own name a contract for the purchase of land may sue the holder for breach of the contract to convey.

And Beard v. Sloan, 38 Ind. 128, sustains the right of an agent, contracting in his own name for the purchase of merchandise, to sue for damages from a breach of the contract.

And Sharp v. Jones, 18 Ind. 314, 81 Am. Dec. 359, sustains the right of an agent, contracting in his own name for the sale of goods, to maintain an action against the purchaser on the contract.

And Close v. Hodges, 44 Minn. 204, 46 N. W. 335, holds that a chattel mortgage and note secured thereby, made directly to one who is the agent of the equitable owner of the debt, may be enforced in the name of the agent.

Cotton to be gathered in good condition off of the farm of M. D. Shelby in bottom.

M. D. Shelby.

C. C. Burrow & Co. (Heagan).

J. M. Heagan, by the express authority of Burrow, made this contract in his name. In this way the cotton was purchased for the Moose Gin Company. At the time the contract was entered into no principal was disclosed to Shelby by Burrow, or Heagan acting for him. Shelby thought and believed he was selling, and intended to sell, the cotton to Burrow for his use and benefit. He would not have sold to Moose Gin Company, because he believed it was insolvent. Shelby failed to deliver the cotton and refused to perform the contract. Burrow brought this action to recover damages sustained by the nonperformance. The question is, Can he maintain the action? Shelby insists that he made no contract with Moose Gin Company, or for its benefit, and, Burrow having purchased the cotton for it, the sale is void.

In this case Burrow was the agent of Moose Gin Company, and Heagan acted as his agent with the express consent of his principal. Heagan was the subagent of Burrow. The cotton was purchased by Burrow in his own name, without disclosing his principal. Shelby believed that he was purchasing for his own benefit. This did not render the contract invalid. "An agent can make a valid contract with a third person in his own name, without disclosing his principal. Such contract is binding upon the agent in his individual capacity, and either party to it can enforce it against the other independently of the undisclosed principal. . . . In such case the agent is, in contemplation of the law, the real contracting party, to whom the promises of the other party were made and who is entitled to enforce them." He can sue upon the contract, and can, unless the principal intervenes, "recover the full measure of damages for its breach, in the same manner as though the action had been brought by the principal." Mechem, Agency, §§ 755, 763; 2 Clark & Skyles, Agency, pp. 1331, 1341.

The fact that the contract was made by a subagent does not alter the case. The subagent acted for the agent with the consent of the principal, and his acts as such were valid and binding.

The statutes in this state make no change in the law allowing an agent to sue on a contract made in his own name. Kirby's Digest, § 6002; 2 Clark & Skyles, Agency, § 615; Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389.

This case is unlike Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9, cited by appellant. In that case Potter had had a contract with plaintiff ice company, and had terminated it and made another with the Citizens' Ice Company. The Citizens' Ice Company sold out its business to the plaintiff company, who continued to supply ice to the defendant without informing him of the change. On an action on account for ice actually delivered and used, the court held that no recovery could be had, saying: "A party has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent. It may be of importance to him who performs the contract; as when he contracts with another to paint a picture, or write a book, or furnish articles of a particular kind, or when he relies upon the character or qualities of an individual, or has, as in this case, reasons why he does not wish to deal with a particular party. In all these cases, as he may contract with whom he pleases, the sufficiency of his reasons for so doing cannot be inquired into."

In that case the defendant made no contract with the plaintiff as principal or agent. In this case he selected and determined with whom he would contract, and made a contract which is binding on both parties and can be enforced by either party against the other. Hamet v. Letcher, 37 Ohio St. 356, 41 Am. Rep. 519, another case cited by appellant, is unlike this. In that case, one Rohnen represented to Hamet that he was the agent of Letcher & Company, a firm who were buying hogs, and as such agent bought a lot of hogs from Hamet, paying him part of the purchase price. Hamet delivered the hogs to him, and he sold them to Letcher & Company as his own, they paying him full value for them. Letcher & Company were ignorant of the fraud by which they were obtained. Hamet sued Letcher & Company for their value, and recovered. In that case there was no sale of the hogs. They were not sold to Rohnen, nor Letcher & Company, because Rohnen was not their agent; and they were still the property of the plaintiff.

We hold that the contract of Burrow and Shelby is valid, and that Burrow can lawfully sue and recover thereon.

Judgment affirmed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

W. T. HUGHES et al., Appts.,

v.

PEPER TOBACCO WAREHOUSE COMPANY.

(139 N. C. 158.)

Contract—guaranty.

No guaranty of payment for property

Case Note.—The rule governing the construction of contracts of guaranty is stated shipped is effected by a reply by a warehouseman to a letter requesting information about a broker, that he considered him reliable, with whom samples and sales would be safe, and doubly so, since all shipments would come to the warehouse, and payment for all such property "would be made by us to you for all sales."

(September 26, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Franklin County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to hold defendant liable on an alleged guaranty. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. F. S. Spruill and William H. Ruffin, for appellants:

A guaranty is a mercantile instrument, to be construed according to what is fairly to be presumed to have been the understanding of the parties.

Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, 51; Davis v. Wells, F. & Co. 104 U. S. 159, 26 L. ed. 686; Mauran v. Bullus, 16 Pet. 523, 10 L. ed. 1056; Bell v. Bruen, 1 How. 169, 11 L. ed. 89; Hooper v. Hooper, 81 Md. 155, 48 Am. St. Rep. 496, 31 Atl. 508.

The words used are to be accepted and received in the strongest sense against the party using them.

Shine v. Central Sav. Bank, 70 Mo. 524; Shelton v. Reynolds, 111 N. C. 525, 16 S. E. 272; Times Co. v. North Carolina Steel & I. Co. 114 N. C. 224, 19 S. E. 147.

This letter was an absolute guaranty.

Hutchins v. Planters Nat. Bank, 130 N. C. 285, 41 S. E. 487; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1141; Jenkins v. Wilkinson, 107 N. C. 707, 22 Am. St. Rep. 911, 12 S. E. 630; Jones v. Ashford, 79 N. C. 173.

in Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, 3d ed. § 103, as follows: "The . . . generally received opinion . . . is that this contract should be construed the same as any other contract, and that the same rules should be applied to ascertain the true intention of the parties." Citing inter alia the following cases in point: Creamer v. Mitchell, 162 N. Y. 477, 56 N. E. 977; Hernley v. Brannum, 23 Ind. App. 388, 55 N. E. 512; Dobell v. Green [1900] 1 Q. B. 526; Kastner v. Winstanley, 20 U. C. C. P. 101; White v. Reed, 15 Conn. 457; Locke v. McVean, 33 Mich. 473; Crist v. Burlingame, 62 Barb. 351; Weiler v. Henarie, 15 Or. 28, 13 Pac. 614. See also Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284.

In Stearns, Suretyship, § 17, the language of the court in Belloni v. Freeborn, 63 N. Y. 388, is adopted: "In guaranties . . . the terms used and the language employed are to have a reasonable interpretation, according to the intent of the parties, as disclosed by the instrument, read in the light of surrounding circumstances and the purposes for which it was made. . . . But in such instruments the meaning of written language is to be ascertained in the same manner and by the same rules as in other instruments; and, when the meaning is ascertained, effect is to be given to it."

In view of the fact, therefore, that each case rests upon its peculiar circumstances, little is to be gained by a comparison of decisions. A few cases resembling HUGHES v. PEPER TOBACCO WAREHOUSE Co. in that the alleged guaranty was contained in a letter replying to an inquiry as to the third party's financial condition are, however, subjoined.

In Switzer v. Baker, 95 Cal. 539, 30 Pac. 761, in which the question arose upon demurrer to the complaint, it was held that a guaranty cannot be inferred from a letter written by the lessor of land to one contemplating work for the lessee, in response to an inquiry whether he would be paid for his work, which states: "You may rest assured that you will get your pay for all work done."
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A letter written in reply to an inquiry from the buyer concerning the responsibility of the seller, made after the contract had been concluded, by the brokers who had negotiated the sale, saying: "We are very much interested in seeing you get the goods, and from the position we occupy we would say that the contract is good, and that we will look after the same, both to your interest and for our own," does not amount to a guaranty of performance. Kenneweg Co. v. Finney, 98 Md. 118, 56 Atl. 482 (Citing Switzer v. Baker, 95 Cal. 539, 30 Pac. 761).

No guaranty is made by a letter written in answer to an inquiry as to the financial standing of an applicant for credit, in which it was stated: "I have no fear in becoming responsible for the goods, but dislike to be troubled with the settlement of other merchants' bills. I know he has bought a great many liquors from you, and has paid you up promptly. I see no reason why you should doubt him and ask for security. I recommend him as being a safe man to sell to, and I think you ought to allow him some credit, as he has never deceived you. His credit is good here, as I furnish him all his groceries and supplies. I hope you will ship his goods at once, as I see no good reason why you should not. I will look to your interest in this matter." Thomas v. Wright, 98 N. C. 272, 3 S. E. 487.

A corporation which was furnishing ore to a certain iron company, feeling doubtful about the latter's solvency, wrote to its president, saying: "We thought it best to write to you and get the information whether you would not guarantee us," to which he replied, "All right, send the ore. Moselem [the iron company] will pay it. She is not involved." This correspondence was held to constitute a guaranty. McDowell v. Lehigh Valley Iron Co. 8 W. N. C. 137.

Messrs. T. W. Bickett and Smith P. Galt for appellee.

Clark, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is upon an alleged guaranty, as proof of which the plaintiff relied upon the following letter:

St. Louis, Mo., Mar. 19, 1897.

Messrs. W. T. Hughes & Co.,
Louisburg, N. C.

Gentlemen:—

Your letter of the 11th inst. making inquiry about the general standing of J. E. M. Walker, received. We regard him as a perfectly reliable, trustworthy gentleman, with whom your samples and sales would be entirely safe and doubly so, as all tobacco of yours that might be shipped would come direct to the Pepper Tobacco Warehouse Co., and the payment of all such tobacco would be made by us to you for all sales.

Yours truly,
Nicholas N. Bell, Manager,
Per Hall.

Bell was manager of the defendant company. The defendant demurred, giving as its first ground that the letter did not constitute a guaranty, and hence the plaintiffs' complaint did not set forth a cause of action, and the court below so held.

We do not think that this letter constituted a guaranty by the defendant to Hughes & Company of payment of all tobacco which they should ship J. E. M. Walker. A guaranty is a contract,—an aggregatio mentium. This letter is, on its face, merely a response to a letter of inquiry to ascertain the general standing of J. E. M. Walker, and not to a request for them to guarantee purchases made by him. The reply contains what was asked for,—information, and nothing more. This reply states that the defendant "regarded" Walker as a reliable and trustworthy gentleman, with whom Hughes & Company's samples and sales would be entirely safe, and doubly so because Hughes & Company's tobacco would come direct to the defendant's warehouse, and payment for all sales of such tobacco would be made by the defendant to the plaintiffs. This was merely a statement of the defendant's opinion of Walker's reliability, and of the matter in which the defendant would handle the tobacco, and the additional safety this method would be to the plaintiffs. Besides, there was no consideration for the guaranty. The tobacco was already being shipped to the defendant for Walker, as it would seem from the letter, and there certainly is no agreement shown to so ship, nor an indication of any benefit to accrue to the defendant. Neither in the letter nor in the attendant circumstances is there anything to justify holding this letter to be a guaranty. The purport of the letter depends upon its intent, as derived from its perusal; and cases cited upon the construction of other papers, differently worded, could be of no assistance to us.

As the letter is not a guaranty, it becomes entirely unnecessary to consider the other exceptions.

The judgment sustaining the demurrer is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

FRANK W. JOHNSON et al., by Guardian ad Litem, Appts.,

v.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, Respt.

(... Cal. ...)

Railroad—signals at overhead crossing.

An overhead bridge crossing of a highway by a railroad track is within the provision of a statute requiring signals to be given when a train approaches a place where the "railroad crosses any street, road, or highway."

(September 2, 1905.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Santa Barbara County in favor of defendant in a suit to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiffs' intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Richards & Carrier, for appellants:

Railroads must measure their precautions by, and make them reasonably commensurate with, the conditions and circumstances by which they are surrounded.

Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Foxworth, 41 Fla. 67, 79 Am. St. Rep. 162, 25 So. 338;

Case Note.—As will be seen, the courts differ in the construction which they place upon statutes requiring the giving of signals by locomotives on approaching railroad crossings. This conflict is more substantial than appears from the opinion in JOHNSON v. SOUTHERN P. R. Co. Some courts give the statute a broad construction so as to include all crossings, while others limit it to grade crossings. The opinion is somewhat misleading when it states that, in all the cases cited by respondent, either the sections of the statute under examination expressly apply to grade crossings only, or, when carefully examined, show from their phraseology that they were meant to apply only to grade crossings; and it is particularly misleading in its reference to the Wisconsin case of Jenson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 589, 22 L. R. A. 680, Nehrbas v. Central P. R. Co. 62 Cal. 320; Continental Improv. Co. v. Stead, 95 U. S. 161, 24 L. ed. 403; Richardson v. New York C. R. Co. 45 N. Y. 846; Weber v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 458; Cordell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 123, 26 Am. Rep. 550; Byrne v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 362, 58 Am. Rep. 512, 10 N. E. 539; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Matthews, 36 N. J. L. 531; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Dillon, 123 Ill. 570, 5 Am. St. Rep. 563, 15 N. E. 181; English v. Southern P. Co. 13 Utah, 407, 35 L. R. A. 155, 57 Am. St. Rep. 772, 45 Pac. 47.

It is for the jury to determine the degree of care required.

Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Stables, 62 Ill. 313; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Kowalski, 34 C. C. A. 1, 92 Fed. 312; Thomas v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 19 Blatchf. 533, 8 Fed. 729; Czech v. Great Northern R. Co. 68 Minn. 38, 38 L. R. A. 302, 64 Am. St. Rep. 452, 70 N. W. 791; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 259, 98 Am. Dec. 346.

57 N. W. 359, of which it says: "The attorney for respondent (plaintiff in the court below) conceded in his argument, and it is so intimated in the opinion, that the statute of that said state did not require a warning to be given at the overhead crossing where the accident occurred." An examination of the Wisconsin statute, which was not set forth in the report of the Jensen Case, shows that it provided as follows: "And before crossing any highway, except in cities and villages, with any locomotive, the whistle shall be blown 80 rods from such crossing, and the engine bell rung continuously from thence until the highway be crossed by the locomotive." Wis. Stat. § 1800. The question was again raised in the Wisconsin courts in Barron v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 89 Wis. 79, 61 N. W. 303, and the court was there urged to reverse its ruling; but it adhered to its former decision and refused to review the authorities, although it stated that it was aware that contrary views were entertained by some courts.

It also appears that the decision in the JOHNSON CASE is in conflict with an Illinois case which neither court nor counsel referred to. It is the case of Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Halbert, 179 Ill. 196, 53 N. E. 623, Reversing 75 Ill. App. 592, and holding that the statute applied only to grade crossings. Carter, Ch. J., dissented. The statute in this case was general in its terms, and provided that railroad companies should equip locomotives with bell and whistle, and should "cause the same to be rung or whistled by the engineer or fireman at a distance of at least 80 rods from the place where the railroad crosses or intersects any public highway; and it shall be kept ringing or whistling until such highway is reached."

An early case, and one which is in accord—
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Canfield & Starbuck, for respondent:

A railroad corporation is not required by statute to signal the approach of its trains to overhead crossings.

East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Feathers, 10 Lea, 103; Wilson v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 16 Barb. 167; Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 695, 16 C. C. A. 435, 32 U. S. App. 577, 69 Fed. 908; Melton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 99 Mo. App. 282, 73 S. W. 231; Williams v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 135 Ill. 491, 11 L. R. A. 352, 25 Am. St. Rep. 397, 26 N. E. 661; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Lee, 47 Ill. App. 384; Harty v. Central R. Co. 42 N. Y. 468; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 87 Ala. 708, 4 L. R. A. 710, 13 Am. St. Rep. 84, 6 So. 277; Jensen v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 589, 22 L. R. A. 680, 57 N. W. 359; Barron v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 89 Wis. 79, 61 N. W. 303; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Thomas, 87 Tex. 282, 28 S. W. 343; McElroy v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co.

ance with the JOHNSON CASE, and which is cited by it, is that of People v. New York C. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 78, where it was held that a general statute requiring the blowing of whistle and ringing of bell at a specified distance from the place where the railroad shall cross any traveled public road or street, applied although the railroad passed over the public road upon a bridge at such a height as to render a collision impossible. The court placed its decision upon the ground that the case was within the evil or danger which the legislature designed to guard against, namely, that the traveler shall have notice, when he is approaching a railroad crossing, of the approach of an engine, so that he may protect himself and team from danger.

The Texas case referred to by the court in the JOHNSON CASE has been followed in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Sgalinski, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 107, 46 S. W. 113.

Another case in harmony with the Johnson Case, is that of Toledo & O. C. R. Co. v. Jump, 50 Ohio St. 651, 35 N. E. 1054. There it was held that the signals must be given, even though the crossing is not at grade. The statute involved provided for the giving of the signals on "approaching a turnpike, highway, or town-road crossing, upon the same level therewith, and, in like manner, when the road crosses any other traveled place by bridge or otherwise." It was contended by the railroad company that the last clause did not apply where the road crossed "a turnpike, highway, or town-road." The court, in holding against the railroad company, based its decision upon the ground that the purpose of the statute was for the prevention of accidents, and that the construction contended for would be absurd in its results.

98 Ga. 257, 25 S. E. 439; Ransom v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 62 Wis. 178, 51 Am. Rep. 718, 22 N. W. 147.

A railroad corporation is not required, by any rule of common law, to signal the approach of its trains to overhead crossings.

Hahn v. Southern P. R. Co. 51 Cal. 605; Morgan v. Central R. Co. 77 Ga. 788; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Roberts, 3 Herdman (Neb.) 425, 91 N. W. 707; Abbot v. Kalbus, 74 Wis. 504, 43 N. W. 367; Hendricks v. Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. 67 Neb. 120, 93 N. W. 141; Lamb v. Old Colony R. Co. 140 Mass. 79, 54 Am. Rep. 449, 2 N. E. 932; Bailey v. Hartford & C. Valley R. Co. 56 Conn. 444, 16 Atl. 234; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Gaines, 104 Ind. 526, 54 Am. Rep. 334, 4 N. E. 34, 5 N. E. 746; Ransom v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 62 Wis. 178, 51 Am. Rep. 718, 22 N. W. 147; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Payne, 29 Kan. 166; Flint v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 110 Mass. 222; Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 695, 16 C. C. A. 435, 32 U. S. App. 577, 69 Fed. 808; Melton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 99 Mo. App. 282, 73 S. W. 231; Favor v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 114 Mass. 350, 19 Am. Rep. 364; Jenson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 589, 22 L. R. A. 680, 57 N. W. 359; Barron v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 89 Wis. 79, 61 N. W. 303; Phillips v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 84 Hun, 412, 32 N. Y. Supp. 299.

Lorigan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought to recover damages for the death of Katherine S. Johnson, wife of the plaintiff Frank W. Johnson, and mother of the other plaintiffs, who are minors, alleged to have been occasioned through the negligence of defendant. The second amended complaint, after stating the corporate existence of defendant, and the maintenance and operation by it of a railroad on July 25, 1901, alleges, as the facts upon which the cause of action for negligence is predicated, that said railroad, "about 5 miles west of the city of Santa Barbara, crosses obliquely the county road known as 'Hollister avenue,' about 90 yards east of the place where the road known as the 'Modoc road' enters said Hollister avenue, the acute angle formed thereby being of about 30 degrees; that the said crossing is an overhead one, the track being upon a bridge over said road, and the public road excavated so as to pass under the bridge, and being flanked by the sides of the cut on each side; that said bridge is supported by three abutments, one on each side of the county road and one in the middle; that the space between said abutments is about 20 feet, and said abutments are about 80 feet in length; that, by reason of trees and other obstacles, the view up and down the track is very much obstructed, so that persons driving along Hollister avenue cannot see approaching trains; that, by reason of the said construction of said crossing, the same is a dangerous one to persons driving to and fro along Hollister avenue; that on the 25th day of July, 1901, Katherine S. Johnson . . . was driving from plaintiff's home, near Goleta, along Hollister avenue, towards the city of Santa Barbara, and, as she approached said crossing, defendant caused one of its locomotives, with a train of cars attached thereto, to approach said crossing at a high rate of speed, and in so doing disregarded its duty to give signal of such approach, but, on the contrary, caused said train to approach negligently and carelessly and without signaling, either by blowing a whistle or ringing a bell, or giving any other signal whatsoever, and without giving any signal by flag or otherwise; that the said Katherine S. Johnson, hearing no signal, was unaware of the approach of said train, and, just as her horse and wagon were under said bridge, said train passed over the same, negligently and carelessly, as aforesaid; that, in consequence of the dangerous character of said crossing as maintained by defendant, and of the failure on its part, by reason of its negligence and carelessness, to give the proper signal as its train approached said crossing, the horse of said Katherine S. Johnson was frightened and ran away, and she was thrown violently out of the wagon and killed." A demurrer to the complaint on the ground that these alleged facts did not constitute a cause of action was sustained, and, plaintiffs declining to further amend, judgment was rendered against them. This appeal is taken from said judgment to test the validity of the order sustaining said demurrer.

It is contended by appellants that the judgment should be reversed on two grounds: First, because they insist that the complaint shows that the crossing was a peculiarly dangerous one, and therefore it became the duty of defendant to take commensurate precautions, and the extent of these precautions was a matter to be left to the jury; second, that it was the duty, under the statute, of the defendant's train to have signaled, either by bell or whistle, before reaching the crossing, and that, having failed to do so, defendant is liable for the damage that ensued.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the first proposition advanced by appellant, that the allegations of the complaint were sufficient to constitute negligence on the part of the defendant at common law in failing to give warning of the approach of its train to the highway crossing referred to in the complaint, because we are satisfied that the complaint, in alleging that the defendant failed and neglected to give such warning of the approach of its train, as provided by § 486 of the Civil Code, sufficiently stated a cause of action. The lower court, in sustaining the demurrer, necessarily took the view, which is also insisted on here by respondent, that the section above referred to has application only where a railroad crosses a highway at grade,—upon the same level as the highway. We cannot agree with this construction of the statute, and find no warrant in its language for this limitation placed upon its meaning. The section provides that a bell must be rung, or whistle sounded, at least 80 rods from the place where the “railroad crosses any street, road, or highway.” There is certainly nothing in this language which limits the giving of signals of approach to any particular crossings. The language of the section is plain and unambiguous, and applies in general terms to all crossings. By it the duty is enjoined upon the railroad to signal at a prescribed distance from “where the railroad crosses any street, road, or highway.” This is broad enough to apply to any crossing of a highway by a railroad, whether it is super, sub, or level grade. Nothing is said in the section about signaling only when the railroad crosses a highway at level grade. Nor is there anything in the section which would warrant so construing it. In fact, the language is so plain as not to be subject to construction at all. If the legislature had intended that the railroad should only be required to give signals when crossing highways at grade, it would, as has been done in other states, have readily and clearly expressed that intention. It could not, however, have used more general language than is employed in the section under consideration to express the intention that the required signal should be given at all crossings of highways, whether above, below, or at grade. To construe this language as applying only to grade crossings, when nothing is said about grades, would be to judicially legislate into the section an exemption which its plain and comprehensive language clearly excludes. Nothing is said in the section about crossing at grade; but it is simply provided that signals shall be given whenever the railroad crosses any street, road, or highway. In the case at bar it is alleged that the railroad crosses Hollister avenue, a public highway, upon a bridge. The fact that it crossed it upon a bridge did not make it any the less a crossing within the terms of the statute. It was a crossing at 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) supergrade, but still a crossing. People v. New York C. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 78, 25 Barb. 199.

It is, however, insisted by respondent that, while the language of the section may be broad enough to include all crossings, yet that, when the object sought to be accomplished by requiring such warnings at crossings is taken into consideration, it is evident that the legislature intended to use the phrase “when the railroad crosses any street, road, or highway” in a restricted sense, as applying only to grade crossings. In this connection it is urged that, as the primary object of requiring warning is to guard against the danger of collision at the crossings of highways by railroads, which can only occur at grade, the statute was only intended to apply to prevent such collisions; that this was the object in view in the legislative mind when the section was enacted, and, as such collisions are rendered impossible by overhead crossings, the section was not intended to apply where such crossings existed. While it is true that the primary object of requiring signals at crossings is to prevent collisions, still this was not the only purpose the legislature had in view. It recognized other dangers, and the more general purpose was that, by giving such signals, travelers upon the public highway near the crossing might be warned of the approach of the train, and be afforded an opportunity to guard themselves against any harm or danger by reason of its approach. The construction of an overhead bridge across a highway obviates, it is true, the danger of collision; but it does not remove the danger to persons driving upon the highway, at or near the crossing, which may arise from the sudden and unannounced approach of the train to the bridge, and the consequent frightening of their teams. The liability of horses to become frightened at sudden and unusual noises is matter of common knowledge, and, while the giving of such signals may not remove all danger therefrom, yet, when given at the proper time and place, as provided by the statute, they at least tend to lessen the danger, by putting the traveler approaching the crossing upon his guard, and giving him an opportunity to remain at a safe distance with his team, or to take such precautionary measures with reference to it as may be necessary for his and their safety. As said by the court in People v. New York C. R. Co. 25 Barb. 203, confirmed by the supreme court of New York in 13 N. Y. 81, in speaking of the objects to be attained under a section of the New York statute identical with our section under consideration: “The hazards to be provided against were twofold: (1) The danger of actual collision at the crossing; and (2) that of damage by the frightening of teams traveling upon the public highway; and, to guard against the latter peril, it was as important to provide for a proper warning when the railroad passed over the highway at an elevation, which allowed a passage upon the highway underneath, as when it passed upon the same level, to enable those passing upon the highway to place their teams in such positions of security as would best guard against injury from their fright. But, whatever may have been the reason, it is sufficient that the legislature have deemed the performance of this duty, which is not onerous upon the company, sufficiently beneficial to the public to secure its performance by the imposition of a penalty,"—a penalty which our statute also imposes. Upon this same subject, it is said by the supreme court of Kentucky, in Rupard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 88 Ky. 284, 7 L. R. A. 316, 11 S. W. 70: "Injury may occur to the traveler at the crossing in two ways, namely by a collision with him, or by scaring the horse that he is riding or driving, whereby he is injured. It is the duty of the appellee [the railroad], in approaching a crossing, if danger to the traveler in either of the ways above mentioned may be reasonably apprehended, to give timely notice of its approach, in order that the traveler may not only be warned not to come in collision with the train, but secure himself from injury by his frightened horse. By the trains crossing the highway on a trestle, there is no danger of a collision with a traveler on the highway; but, if he should be under the trestle with his horse while the train is passing over it, the danger is increased, for it is well known that a horse is more likely to scare at a sound made over his head than when the same sound is made on the ground."

It is suggested by counsel for respondent that there is no more reason why signals should be given at crossings of the character here involved than when the railroad and the public road run parallel to each other. Aside from the fact that the language of the statute requires these signals at all crossings, it is, we think, quite obvious that a greater reason exists for them in the one case than in the other. It is never absolutely necessary that a public highway, in any case, should parallel a railroad at an unsafe distance. On the other hand, in the very nature of things, there must be points at which public highways and railroads must necessarily intersect each other, and where danger to travelers by team is much more likely to arise than upon the highway paralleling the railroad; and, realizing the greater danger which must exist from the necessity of having highways crossed by railroads, the legislature has provided for greater precautionary measures to meet the danger which this necessity creates. It is apparent, therefore, from what has been said, that the purpose of the statute is not alone to require warnings so as to prevent collisions, but also to guard against injury to travelers from the frightening of their teams, and to afford as much security as possible against accidents at or on such crossings, by requiring notice to travelers of the approach of the train. If the restricted construction which respondent claims for it should be placed on the section of the Code, this security to the public would be taken away. On the other hand reading the language as it is plainly written, there is extended to the public all the practical protection which can be afforded against the danger at such crossings, and which it is clear the statute was intended to secure. There have been but few authorities cited upon either side bearing directly upon the points we have been discussing. The New York statute, considered in the cases from the courts of that state to which we have referred, is in its essential particulars the same as the provisions of our Code section. It uses the same plain and comprehensive language, requiring warning by whistle or bell to be given when the railroad "shall cross any traveled public road or street," and it was determined by the courts of that state that, under this provision, as the language used in the statute was broad enough to include all crossings, it was required thereby that the railroad give the statutory signals, even when the crossing of the highway by the railroad was overhead. The Kentucky case referred to, and the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 259, 98 Am. Dec. 346, cited by appellants, while not involving the construction of any statute upon the subject, very clearly state the necessity for and reasons why warnings for the protection of travelers with teams at the crossing should be given by a railroad of the approach of its train, where the track crosses the highway above or below grade,—reasons which doubtless the legislature of this state bore in mind when it provided in general terms that such warning should be given at all crossings, without limitation as to grade.

In support of its claim that the sections of the statute should be given the restricted meaning it contends for,—that it only applies to grade crossings,—respondent relies upon the cases of Favor v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 114 Mass. 351, 19 Am. Rep. 364; Jenson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 589, 22 L. R. A. 680, 57 N. W.

359; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Thomas, 87 Tex. 282, 28 S. W. 343, and McElroy v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 98 Ga. 257, 25 S. E. 439. All these cases involved the question whether the statutes of the several states in which the cases were determined provided for the giving of warnings at crossings above or below grade. It was held that they did not, and this conclusion was reached from a particular examination of the statute in each state. An examination of the section of the statute referred to in the opinion in the Massachusetts case shows that it provides for signals "80 rods from the place where the road crosses a highway . . . upon the same level therewith." The court held that the statute required signals only at crossings on grade, which, of course, is what the statute plainly says. In the Wisconsin case the attorney for respondent (plaintiff in the court below) conceded in his argument, and it is so intimated in the opinion, that the statute of that said state did not require a warning to be given at the overhead crossing where the accident occurred. In the Texas case, while the statute did not say that the warning should be given at grade crossings, the court, construing the language, held that it must refer only to grade crossings, because it provided that the train should come to a full stop under certain conditions, which could only apply to grade crossings. The Georgia court reached a similar conclusion, based upon a construction of the language of the statute of that state, which provided that the engineer should commence giving warning at a certain distance from the crossing, and simultaneously commence checking and keep checking the speed of the locomotive, "so as to stop in time should any person or thing be crossing said track or said road." The court held that, in requiring a slackening of speed, so as to readily stop if anyone was crossing the track, the section could only apply to grade crossings, and that there could be no occasion for stopping the train for the protection of persons not on, or about to go upon, the track itself. It will be observed that, in all these cases cited by respondent, either the sections of the statute under examination expressly applied to grade crossings only, or, when carefully examined, showed from their phraseology that they were only meant to be applied to grade crossings. Our section, however, is, as we have said, so plain in its language as not to be open to construction. It says nothing about any particular kind of crossing, but speaks of crossings generally. To say that, when it so speaks of crossings generally, it means crossings at grade only, would be to place a limitation upon the section by construction which can find no warrant from anything in the language of the section itself.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

We are satisfied that the demurrer was improperly sustained, and the judgment is accordingly reversed.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Henshaw, J.

Petition for hearing in banc denied October 2, 1905.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

HANNAH ANN LOOMIS, Appt.,

v.

E. H. LOOMIS et al., Respts.

(.... Cal.)

1. Homestead—conveyance to wife—gift over.

No constructive trust arises under a deed by a man to his wife of the homestead property with a proviso that after her death it is to go to another, where, under the law, she takes, upon his death, absolute title to the property by right of survivorship.

2. Same—declaration of trust.

A voluntary, express trust is not created by a letter from a widow to the cestui que trust, stating that her husband has conveyed their homestead to her on condition that at her death it shall go to the cestui que trust, where the law gave her, upon the death of the husband, an absolute title to the property by right of survivorship.

(October 14, 1905.)

Case Note.—No exact precedent for the above case has been found after extensive search, but, under the law of California, which, as the court points out in the above case, gives the homestead property absolutely to the wife in the event of her surviving her husband, the attempt of the husband, in a deed to her, to derogate from her right of survivorship, seems to raise a question similar to that of the right of one of the spouses to survivorship in an entirety estate after the death of the other spouse. The inability of either spouse to derogate from the other's right of survivorship in entirety property is well established, as shown by Varnum v. Abbot, 12 Mass. 478, 7 Am. Dec. 87; Fox v. Fletcher, 8 Mass. 274; Den ex dem. Wyckoff v. Gardner, 20 N. J. L. 556, 45 Am. Dec. 388; Atkison v. Henry, 80 Mo. 151; Martin v. Jackson, 27 Pa. 504, 67 Am. Dec. 489; Phillips v. Hodges, 109 N. C. 248, 13 S. E. 769; and other cases collected in the note found in 30 L. R. A., on page 328. But the rule which is established in California on this subject for homesteads would obviously not be applicable to homesteads in some of the states created under statutes which do not give such right of survivorship.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial after rendition of the judgment in defendants' favor in an action brought to set aside a deed. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. E. Ragland and E. A. Bridgford, for appellant:

To be valid, the trust, as expressed in the writing, must be definite and certain as to its "nature, extent, and object."

Wittfield v. Forster, 124 Cal. 418, 57 Pac. 219; Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 58 Pac. 543.

Homestead property cannot be alienated by the voluntary act of either or both of the parties, unless it is done in conformity to the statute.

Flege v. Garvey, 47 Cal. 376; Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 18; Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 15 Am. St. Rep. 47, 22 Pac. 551; Gagliardo v. Dumont, 54 Cal. 496; Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 471, 77 Am. St. Rep. 195, 58 Pac. 910, 59 Pac. 296.

Messrs. Joseph Hutchinson, Frank Otis, and W. B. Treadwell, for respondents:

Where a husband conveys property to his wife upon a prior or contemporaneous promise by her to hold the property, in whole or in part, for the benefit of another, the law fastens upon her a constructive trust for the disposition of the property in accordance with the promise.

Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Alaniz v. Casenave, 91 Cal. 41, 27 Pac. 521; Hayne v. Hermann, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171.

It is not necessary, even in cases where a trust can be evidenced only by writing, that the writing should be executed at the time of the creation of the trust.

Perry, Tr. 82; Garnsey v. Gothard, 90 Cal. 603, 27 Pac. 516.

The contract and the deed were made at the same time, and as parts of the same transaction, and are, therefore, to be construed together.

Civil Code, 1642; McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 455, 31 Pac. 558; Janes v. Throckmorton, 57 Cal. 368.

The existence of the homestead did not prevent the creation of the constructive trust.

Re Lamb, 95 Cal. 397, 30 Pac. 568; Burkett v. Burkett, 78 Cal. 310, 3 L. R. A. 781, 12 Am. St. Rep. 58, 20 Pac. 715.

Angellotti, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by plaintiff to quiet her title to a parcel of real property in San Francisco, found to be of the value of $5,000, and to have declared void, upon the ground that the execution of the same was procured by undue influence, a certain deed executed by her to defendant Mary Hawley, in trust to receive the rents and profits of the property, to pay therefrom the taxes, insurance, and repairs, and to pay the balance thereof to the use of plaintiff during her life, and, upon her death, "to convey the said property in fee simple absolute" to one E. H. Loomis. The trial court found against plaintiff upon her allegations of undue influence, but determined that the deed of trust was void under the decision of this court in Re Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 4 Am. St. Rep. 70, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000. The correctness of this determination is not disputed here. The trial court, however, found that, notwithstanding the invalidity of said deed of trust, plaintiff was not the owner of any interest in said land other than an estate for her life therein; and that, subject to said estate for life, defendant E. H. Loomis was the owner of "an estate in fee in remainder of said property, commencing at the death of said plaintiff." Judgment having been entered accordingly, the plaintiff appeals from the whole of the judgment, except that portion thereof relating to the invalidity of the deed of trust, and also from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The theory of counsel for defendant Loomis, adopted by the learned judge of the court below, appears to be that, by reason of a certain transaction between plaintiff and her husband, Barney Loomis, on January 6, 1900, plaintiff received said property from her husband, solely in trust to receive the rents and profits of the same during her life; and that, upon her death, the said property should vest in fee in said E. H. Loomis, a brother of her husband. The transaction in question, viewed in the light of the evidence most favorable to defendant, was as follows, viz.: On January 6, 1900, the husband, Barney Loomis, executed and delivered to plaintiff what purported to be an absolute conveyance of said property, which purported to be made in consideration of love and affection. This deed was in fact executed by the husband only upon the promise of his wife that she would contract "to reserve this property for my brother." The wife agreed to this, and thereupon drew up and signed a writing wherein she stated, according to the evidence of a witness who was present, the writing not being produced, "that she would reserve and hold this property for the brother of the husband." On February 2, 1900, the said husband died. On February 5, 1900, she wrote a letter to said brother, in which, after speaking of the death and burial of her husband, she said: "This home is a gift to myself, with the promise that, when I am through with it, it shall be given to his brother, Edwin, who proved himself the best friend to him he ever found." On February 16, 1900, she executed the void deed of trust, hereinbefore referred to, indicating her understanding of the terms and conditions upon which she had received the deed from her husband. It is claimed by defendants that the foregoing evidence sufficiently shows a constructive trust, in accord with the doctrine of Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Hayne v. Hermann, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171, and similar cases, relating to transactions between husband and wife. It is said by counsel for defendants that it is the settled law of this state, under the decisions, that, where a husband conveys property to his wife, upon a prior or contemporaneous promise by her to hold the property, in whole or in part, for the benefit of another, the law fastens upon her a constructive trust for the disposition of the property in accordance with the promise. It may be conceded here that the rule is correctly stated by counsel, and that the evidence set forth above is sufficient to bring the transaction of January 6, 1900, within the operation of that rule. As to this, it is unnecessary to express an opinion, in view of other facts presented by the record, which make the rule contended for inapplicable here.

The record shows that on that day the premises in question constituted the duly selected and recorded homestead of the plaintiff and her husband. It does not appear whether the property was community property, or the separate property of either spouse, but, owing to the fact, alleged by the pleadings, established by the evidence, and found by the trial court, that the wife had, on February 18, 1881, regularly selected the premises as a homestead, and that the husband, on March 14, 1899, did the same; and, there being no intimation that the homestead so selected had ever been abandoned,—it is unquestioned that on January 6, 1900, the property constituted the homestead of the parties, selected either from the community property, or from the separate property of the person selecting, or joining in the selection of, the same. Under these circumstances, it cannot be doubted that it was then of such a character that it would, unless subsequently abandoned by the concurrent act of both parties, vest absolutely on the death of either husband or wife in the survivor. In the absence of such abandonment, which could only be effected by the mutual concurrent act of the parties, in the mode prescribed by law (Civ. Code, §§ 1242, 1243), the law gave the homestead property absolutely to the wife in the event that she survived her husband. Her husband could not affect her right in this regard by any instrument which he, acting alone, could execute.

It is true that it has been held that a husband may, by deed executed by himself alone, convey his title to the homestead property to his wife, subject to the homestead (Burkett v. Burkett, 78 Cal. 310, 3 L. R. A. 781, 12 Am. St. Rep. 58, 20 Pac. 715; Re Lamb, 95 Cal. 397, 405, 30 Pac. 568); but such a conveyance cannot affect the homestead character of the estate, nor can it prejudicially affect the wife's right of survivorship thereunder. A wife cannot be held to acquire, under such a deed, any right or interest in the property described therein that she already has under the law; and her absolute right to succeed to such property in the event of her husband's death is such a right. When, therefore, the husband died before her, the property vested absolutely in her under the homestead laws, and the husband's deed added nothing to her title. Whatever interest had been conveyed by that deed, the homestead subject to which the conveyance had been made had taken all of the property, and left nothing to be affected by such deed. From the moment of her husband's death, she held nothing under such deed. Under these circumstances, it follows that there was, subsequent to the death of the husband, no property to which the rule as to constructive trusts contended for by defendants could apply, for clearly such rule is applicable only to such property as is acquired by reason of the transaction relied on. As stated in Hayne v. Hermann, supra: "Whenever one person acquires from another the title to real estate by a fraud, actual or constructive, practised upon that other, a constructive trust is created, which a court of equity will fasten upon the title in his hands." It is the property acquired by the fraud as to which the trust is created, and that alone, or, in the language of § 2224 of the Civil Code, "the thing gained." The only property acquired by the wife under the deed was the interest of the husband subject to the homestead. Such interest, it may be assumed, was held by the wife from the date of the deed to her husband's death in trust, by reason of her promise made when the deed was executed; but by his death that interest was absolutely terminated, and thenceforth the deed was ineffectual as a muniment of title.

There is no question, in this connection, as to whether there was such an interest in the husband at the date of the deed as to constitute that deed a sufficient consideration for the promise of the wife; but the question is whether there is property in her hands, acquired by the wife from her husband under a deed made under such circumstances as to create a constructive trust. When it appears that there is no property in her hands, acquired by reason of such deed, all questions as to a constructive trust are removed from the case. Defendant must then prevail, if at all, only upon the theory that an express trust in favor of defendant Loomis is shown. As to this, it is manifest that no such trust was created while both husband and wife were living. Under the clear and explicit provisions of our homestead law, as uniformly construed by this court, the interest in the homestead property, vested jointly in the husband and wife, cannot, while both live, be thus conveyed, encumbered, destroyed, or impaired, in favor of a third party, except by a single written instrument, executed and acknowledged personally by both husband and wife (Civ. Code, §§ 1242, 1243. See Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 471, 476, 77 Am. St. Rep. 195, 58 Pac. 910, 59 Pac. 296, and cases there cited; Freiermuth v. Steigleman, 130 Cal. 392, 80 Am. St. Rep. 138, 62 Pac. 615); and any attempted action in this behalf, not in full conformity with the requirements of the law, is absolutely void and inoperative for any purpose, and acquires no validity, even if the premises subsequently lose their character as a homestead from abandonment or other cause (Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 15 Am. St. Rep. 47, 22 Pac. 551; Powell v. Patison, 100 Cal. 236, 34 Pac. 677). In Graves v. Baker, 68 Cal. 133, 8 Pac. 691, an action to declare a trust, it was squarely held, in accord with what has been said, that a deed of homestead property from a husband to a wife, in trust to receive the rents and profits for herself and children during her life, and providing that, after her death, the property should vest absolutely in the children, was, as against a valid declaration of homestead, void, because executed and acknowledged by the husband alone. In this case there was no pretense that the husband and wife joined in a single instrument, or that the writing signed by her at the time of the execution of the deed was acknowledged by her.

Defendant, however, relies upon a letter written by plaintiff to defendant Loomis, after the death of her husband, as creating such a trust. The statement relied on in that letter has already been set forth. There was nothing herein to indicate any intention on the part of the writer to create any trust, and all that the letter constituted at most was a voluntary acknowledgment on the part of plaintiff, made without any consideration whatever, that the property had been given to her by her husband, upon her promise that, when she was through with it, she would give it to defendant Loomis. It afforded very satisfactory evidence that she had made the alleged promise to her husband at the time of the execution of the deed, evidence in support of the claim of 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) constructive trust; but it had no further effect, and could not, under the circumstances already detailed, operate to create a voluntary trust under the provisions of § 2222, Civ. Code, as claimed by defendant. From what has been said, it follows that the finding of the trial court as to the ownership of this property is not supported by the evidence. It is contended by plaintiff that, upon the findings of the court, judgment should be ordered entered for plaintiff in accordance with the prayer of her complaint; but we are of the opinion that the other findings are not such as to enable us to do this in the face of the findings as to ownership.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: Shaw, J.; Van Dyke, J.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS MCGARRIGLE, Resp.,
v.

ROMAN CATHOLIC ORPHAN ASYLUM OF SAN FRANCISCO, Appt.

(145 Cal. 694.)

Deed—words of grant.

No estate is granted by a clause in a deed which, after granting a life estate, declares that it is the purpose of the grantor, by this deed, that, after the death of the life tenant, "said described lands shall become and be the property of" an institution named.

(January 7, 1904.)

Case Note.—In Devlin on Deeds, vol. 2, 2d ed., § 854, it is said that, where no present interest passes by a deed, the instrument, "while in form a deed, is in substance a will, possessing all the incidents of a will." Continuing his discussion of the question, when a conveyance is to be regarded as passing a present interest, the same author says (§ 855): "It seems to be impossible to lay down an invariable rule which will apply to all cases. There is, it is to be observed, however, a tendency in the modern decisions to uphold conveyances when not clearly repugnant to some well-defined rule of law." (§ 855a) "But it must be confessed that the rules, as they are applied by the courts, are rather shadowy, and it is almost impossible to lay down a rule with which some well-considered case will not be found to be in conflict."

In the case of Bigley v. Souvey, 45 Mich. 370, 8 N. W. 98, cited in MCGARRIGLE v. ROMAN CATHOLIC ORPHAN ASYLUM, it was held that an instrument purporting to convey land, but providing that it shall remain the grantor's property during his lifetime and go to the grantee at his death, should APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Sonoma County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to quiet title to certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank J. Sullivan, with Messrs. D. C. Murphy and John L. Seawell, for appellant. Messrs. J. M. Thompson and C. H. Pond, for respondent:

The deed does not purport to be effective as a conveyance to the asylum until after the death of McGarrigle; the deed passed no present interest in the property. The intention of the grantor is to be gathered from the legal import of the words employed; for all parties must be judged by the legal meaning of their words.

Bigley v. Souvey, 45 Mich. 370, 8 N. W. 98; Leaver v. Gauss, 62 Iowa, 314, 17 N. W. 522; Reed v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321, 15 Pac. 177; Sperber v. Balster, 66 Ga. 317; said grantee survive, is testamentary in character, and passes no title.

It is also cited in the cases which follow: Tuttle v. Raish, 116 Iowa, 331, 90 N. W. 66, which holds an instrument providing that, in the event of the maker's death without children, "I, Milo R. Tuttle, of Clinton, Iowa, do hereby make and constitute my wife, Jennie Tuttle, the sole owner in her own right (without regard to my next of kin) of all our property, whether real or personal, or wherever situated, that we may be possessed of; and I hereby invest her with full powers and rights to receive, receipt for, sell, dispose of, and give title to as valid as if done by both of us in my lifetime"—is not a deed. Murphy v. Gabbert, 166 Mo. 596, 89 Am. St. Rep. 733, 66 S. W. 536, which holds that an instrument reciting that "the intention of this instrument of writing is such that Mrs. Ann Ellison relinquishes her entire right at her death, then this deed is to come immediately into effect, but not till then,"—is not a valid deed. Hunt v. Hunt, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 973, 68 L. R. A. 180, 82 S. W. 998, which holds that an instrument containing words of present grant and covenants of warranty is a valid deed, although it provides that it "is not to take effect until the death of" the grantors.

It is distinguished in Kelly v. Parker, 181 Ill. 49, 54 N. E. 615, which holds that a deed containing words of grant in presenti is not rendered testamentary because of reservations, trusts, and conditions respecting the use of the property during the grantor's life; and in Hitchcock v. Simpkins, 99 Mich. 198, 58 N. W. 47, in which it was held that a deed which provided that the grantor was to remain in full possession and control during his life, that the grantee should pay the grantor an annuity; and states that, "at the death of the said party of the first part, the title shall be, and is hereby declared to be, in said party of the second part,"—passed a present title to the remainder.

Another authority cited in the McGARRIGLE CASE is Leaver v. Gauss, 62 Iowa, 314, 17 N. W. 522, which holds that an instrument purporting to convey real estate, in the usual form, and reciting an agreement "that the grantee shall have no interest in said premises as long as the grantors, or either of them, shall live," conveys no present estate, but is testamentary in character.

This case is cited in the following: Cates v. Cates, 135 Ind. 277, 34 N. E. 957, which holds that a deed reciting that the grantor "hereby expressly excepts and reserves from this grant all the estate in said lands, and the use and occupation, rents and proceeds, thereof unto himself during his natural life," conveys a present interest. Kelley v. Shimer, 152 Ind. 290, 53 N. E. 233, which holds a conveyance reciting that "this deed is to take effect and be in full force on and after the death of this grantor," is a deed, and not a testamentary disposition of property. Phillips v. Thomas Lumber Co. 94 Ky. 445, 42 Am. St. Rep. 367, 22 S. W. 652, which holds that a conveyance stating: "This land is deeded to Vioey E. Phillips during her life, and she is to live on and have control until her death, and at the time of her death it is to go to and belong to John Phillips, son of William Phillips, deceased, and his heirs forever. This deed is not to take effect until the death of Jesse Phillips, and Jesse Phillips is to have and keep full possession of said farm during his life, and to have all proceeds of said farm until his death; and, if said John should get in debt, or anything that would sell the land, then at the time of sale it is to go to his children,"—is to be regarded as a deed taking effect at once.

Griffin v. McIntosh, 176 Mo. 392, 75 S. W. 677, which holds that a deed containing a condition that the grantors shall hold the deed in their possession until their death passes no present interest.

It is distinguished in Saunders v. Saunders, 115 Iowa, 275, 88 N. W. 329, which holds the interest to be limited as a remainder, either vested or contingent, must commence or pass out of the grantor in the same instrument and at the time of the creation of the particular estate, and not afterwards. 4 Kent, Com. 13th ed. 248; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 834.

It is necessary for an effective deed that it contain what are termed operative words. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 438; Cadell v. Allen, 99 N. C. 542, 6 S. E. 399; Brown v. Manter, 21 N. H. 528, 53 Am. Dec. 223; 4 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. 379; Irwin v. Powell, 188 Ill. 107, 58 N. E. 941; Hummelman v. Mounts, 87 Ind. 178.

It is distinguished in Saunders v. Saunders, 115 Iowa, 275, 88 N. W. 329, which holds the interest to be limited as a remainder, either vested or contingent, must commence or pass out of the grantor in the same instrument and at the time of the creation of the particular estate, and not afterwards.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was to quiet title to 42 acres of land in the county of Sonoma. Cordelia Jones during her lifetime conveyed an estate in the land in question to the plaintiff, who was her nephew. Subsequently she died, and in the probate of her estate this land was distributed to Catherine McGarrigle, the mother of this plaintiff, subject to a life estate in plaintiff. Thereafter Catherine McGarrigle conveyed her fee to plaintiff, who instituted this action. Defendant claims by the deed above referred to from Cordelia Jones to the plaintiff, and the construction of that instrument is determinative of this case. It is in language as follows:

"This indenture, made this 10th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, between Cordelia Jones of Sonoma county, a conveyance subject, however, to the occupancy and possession of said real estate for and during the natural life of the grantor; "the intention being that this deed shall not be in force or take effect until after the death of the grantor herein,"—conveys a present interest; and in Spencer v. Robbins, 106 Ind. 584, 5 N. E. 726, which holds that an instrument purporting to convey land to named persons "as tenants in common, in the following proportions, to wit: To be equally divided between them at my decease, and after the payment of all my funeral and burial expenses by them fully settled; and they are to pay all taxes and other expenses of repairs and improvements on the same during my natural life, and then the title to vest in them absolutely,"—is a valid deed.

Reed v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321, 15 Pac. 177, cited in the MCGARRIGLE CASE, holds that an agreement that, "after the death of said Henry Rickett, of the first party, the right and title of" the land in question "shall vest in the said John Hazleton, of the second party," is of a testamentary nature.

It is also cited in Durand v. Higgins, 67 Kan. 110, 72 Pac. 567, which holds that a deed, though accompanied by an agreement by the grantees not to sell any part of the granted premises during the lifetime of the grantor without his written consent; and that all of such property should be under his control and direction so long as he should live, with right to sell and convey as though no deed had been given; and that the grantees should sign all deeds for such property when so requested by the grantor,—conveys a present estate; and in Bevins v. Phillips, 6 Kan. App. 324, 51 Pac. 59, which holds that a deed containing the words: "Condition of this deed is such as to said party of the second part that this land shall not be encumbered in any way, or this deed shall be void. The party of the first part state of California, the party of the first part, and Thomas McGarrigle of the same place, the party of the second part.

"Witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of love and affection and one dollar money of the United States of America, to her in hand paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, has granted, bargained and sold, conveyed and confirmed, and by these presents does grant, bargain and sell, convey and confirm unto the said party of the second part, during his lifetime, all that certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the township of Santa Rosa, county of Sonoma, state of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit: [Here follows description.]

"It is the purpose of the party of the first part by this deed, that after the death of is to hold said property his lifetime,"—conveys a present estate.

Another case cited in the MCGARRIGLE CASE, Sperber v. Balster, 66 Ga. 317, holds that an instrument having the general form of a deed, and stating, "said deed of gift to be of full effect at my death," is of a testamentary character.

This case is also cited in Barnes v. Stephens, 107 Ga. 441, 33 S. E. 399, which holds that a paper purporting to convey title to land, declaring that the grantee shall have and hold such lands after the maker's death, together with certain personal property, after payment of grantor's debts and burial expenses; and declaring that all his other property shall be divided among other named persons designated as "heirs"—is testamentary, and conveys no present title; and in Wynn v. Wynn, 112 Ga. 214, 37 S. E. 378, which holds a conveyance containing a clause: "To have and to hold the above-described premises to the said Bryant P. Wynn of the second part, his heirs and assigns, to be his at my death and the death of my wife,"—is a deed, and not a will.

Donald v. Nesbit, 89 Ga. 290, 15 S. E. 367, cited in the MCGARRIGLE CASE, holds that a conveyance providing that "in no event is this deed to go into effect until after my death" is testamentary in character.

Pinkham v. Pinkham, 55 Neb. 729, 76 N. W. 411, also cited, holds that a conveyance providing: "This deed is to take effect and be in full force from and after my death,"—passes no present estate.

Cunningham v. Davis, 62 Miss. 306, also cited, holds that an instrument, in form a deed, but containing a provision: "And that this deed do not take effect until after my death;" coupled with the direction that the grantee should pay all the grantor's debts, and have only the remainder of his property,—is testamentary in character.

the said party of the second part, the said described lands shall become and be the property of the Roman Catholic Girls' Orphan Asylum of San Francisco, state of California."

It is upon the italicized portion of this conveyance that appellant relies; but we are of opinion that the trial court correctly construed this clause as containing no operative words of grant, and as failing to convey any present interest in the property. It will be noted that the appellant is nowhere mentioned as a grantee in the deed, and that the language of the clause itself is but an expression of the grantor's purpose in the future disposition of the property. It left in her a reversion after the life estate to Thomas McGarrigle, which required some future conveyance, or some testamentary disposition, to effectuate its transfer to the orphan asylum. But not only was there a failure of operative words to convey to the asylum, but no present interest can be said to pass under the language which was employed. It is fundamental that, while possession or enjoyment of an estate may be deferred, a deed, to be operative, must pass a present interest. This was not done by the instrument in question. The express purpose was—giving to it its fullest effect—that the land should become the property of the orphan asylum after the death of McGarrigle, but should not become its property before. Such attempted dispositions have been uniformly held to be inoperative in deeds. Bigley v. Souvey, 45 Mich. 370, 8 N. W. 98; Leaver v. Gauss, 62 Iowa, 214, 17 N. W. 522; Reed v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321, 15 Pac. 177; Sperber v. Balster, 66 Ga. 317; Pinkham v. Pinkham, 55 Neb. 729, 70 N. W. 411; Cunningham v. Davis, 62 Miss. 366; Donald v. Nesbit, 89 Ga. 290, 15 S. E. 367.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: McFarland, J., Lorigan, J.

Petition for rehearing denied January 6, 1905.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

A. A. ROBERSON et al., Appts.,

v.

JOHN M. WAMPLER, Guardian, etc., of Susan J. Roberson.

(.... Va.)

1. Deed to heir—construction.

A grant to the "heirs" of a living person will be construed as having meant children, and upheld, if such plainly appears to have been the intention of the grantor.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. Judgment—matter not in issue.

It is not error to fail to provide, in a final decree, for a matter which has not been put in issue, and for the settlement of which the necessary parties are not before the court.

(September 14, 1905.)

A PPEAL by intervening petitioners from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wise County in plaintiff's favor in a suit brought to enjoin the cutting of timber on land alleged to belong to plaintiffs' ward. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ayers & Fulton for appellants. Messrs. Bond & Bruce, for appellee:

The court will ascertain from the instrument itself, and from all the surrounding circumstances, the true intent of the grantor; and will construe it, if possible, so as to make that intent effective.

Devlin, Deeds, § 837; 2 Minor, Inst. 1050; Carrington v. Goddin, 13 Gratt. 587; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 17; Post v. Weil, 115 N. Y. 361, 5 L. R. A. 422, 12 Am. St. Rep. 809, 22 N. E. 145; Cravens v. White, 73 Tex. 577, 15 Am. St. Rep. 803, 11 S. W. 543; Bassett v. Budlong, 77 Mich. 338, 18 Am. St. Rep. 404, 43 N. W. 984; Bartholomew v. Muzzy, 61 Conn. 387, 29 Am. St. Rep. 206, 23 Atl. 604; Heath v. Hewitt, 127 N. Y. 168, 13 L. R. A. 46, 24 Am. St. Rep. 438, 27 N. E. 959; Heard v. Horton, 1 Denio, 165, 43 Am. Dec. 659; Holeman v. Fort, 3 Strobb. Eq. 66, 51 Am. Dec. 665; Darbishon v. Beaumont, 3 Bro. P. C. 60; Morton v. Barrett, 22 Me. 257, 39 Am. Dec. 575; Buford v. North Roanoke Land & Improv. Co. 90 Va. 418, 18 S. E. 914.

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal question involved in this case is whether the word "heirs," as used in the deed under which the parties to this controversy claim, was employed in its technical sense, or as meaning "children." The language of that deed, omitting the description of the land conveyed, is as follows:

"This deed made this April 25th, 1902, between James Roberson and Nancy, his wife, of the County of Wise and State of Virginia, of the first part, and John B. F. Roberson heirs, of the County of Letcher and State of Ky., of the second part.

"Witnesseth: That for and in consideration of the natural love and affection they have for their sd. son and especially for his heirs and for the further consideration of the performance of the agreement herfb to be written on their part, doth grant, bargain and sell unto the heirs of the sd. John B. F. Roberson, a certain tract or parcel of land, lying and being in the County aforesaid on the waters of Pound River.

"To have and to hold the said heirs of John B. F. Roberson forever, and it is also agreed and becomes a part of this contract that the said heirs of John B. F. Roberson shall take it is also agreed the said heirs of John B. F. Roberson is furnish timber to keep up the line fence so far as it binds on the other heirs of James Roberson care of or cause to be taken care of said James Roberson and Nancy, his wife for and during their natural lives by furnishing them with food and raiment, washing and bedding such as will be fit and becoming to persons of this age and as the customs of the country, and for the performance of the said service the said grantors doth hereby retain a lien on the said premises, and the said James Roberson and Nancy, his wife, for themselves and their heirs doth covenant with the said heirs of John B. F. Roberson that they will warrant generally the premises hereby conveyed."

At the time of the execution of the deed John B. F. Roberson was living.

Case Note.—Some other authorities, not cited by the court in the case of ROBERSON v. WAMPLER, and which construed the word "heirs," in a deed, to mean "children," are as follows:

In Tinder v. Tinder, 131 Ind. 386, 30 N. E. 1077, the deed to a living grantee and "heirs" by her husband was construed as vesting a present estate in the grantee and her children. The court said that the word "heirs" may often be taken as descriptive of a class who shall take directly from the grantor.

Also, in Seymour v. Bowles, 172 Ill. 521, 50 N. E. 122, the court construed a deed to a grantee "and her minor heirs" as using the term "heirs" as synonymous with "children." In this case the conveyance showed the grantee to be living, and, consequently, the possibility of the use of the word "heirs" in its technical sense would be excluded. Wood v. Taylor, 9 Misc. 640, 30 N. Y. Supp. 433, is to the same effect.

In Wikle v. McGraw, 91 Ala. 631, 8 So. 341, a conveyance to a grantee and her bodily heirs was held to be a deed to the grantee and her children.

In Tharp v. Yarbrough, 79 Ga. 382, 11 Am. St. Rep. 439, 4 S. E. 915, it was held that the word "heirs" used in a deed, the consideration of which was love and affection, from the grantor to the heirs of the grantee, there being three children of the grantee living when the deed was executed, passed the title to such three children. Lee v. Tucker, 56 Ga. 9, lays down the same rule.

In Brasington v. Hanson, 149 Pa. 289, 24 Atl. 344, it was held that children were included within the meaning of the word "heirs" in a deed to the grantee and her heirs, naming them, when the persons so designated were the grantee's children.

In Read v. Fite, 8 Humph. 328, the court held that a deed of land to a trustee for the benefit of joint heirs—"as well the present as any future heirs"—of a husband and wife, was made for the benefit of the children of the husband and wife, and includes future as well as present children. Grimes v. Orand, 2 Heisk. 298, is to the same effect.

In Tucker v. Tucker, 78 Ky. 503, the court held that, in a deed of real estate to a certain grantee and to the heirs of a certain other person, the grantor intended to use the word "heirs" as synonymous with "children." (N.S.)

dren;" and it had the same effect as if the children of such person were named in the conveyance.

In Findley v. Hill, 133 Ala. 229, 32 So. 497, the court held that a deed conveying real property to a designated person in trust for the use of the latter's son for life, and, at his death, "for the use and benefit of the heirs of . . . [the son] at the time of his death, and their heirs and assigns forever. But, in case he shall leave no heir or heirs living at the time of his death, then, in that case, the same real and personal estate shall go to the heirs at law of the . . . [grantor] living at the time of the death of . . . [the son],"—intended to use the word "heirs" in the first limitation as children of the son living at his death.

The word "children," in its primary and natural sense, is a word of purchase, and the words "heirs" and "heirs of the body" are, in their primary and natural sense, words of limitation, and not of purchase. Schoonmaker v. Sheely, 3 Denio, 490, Re Sanders, 4 Paige, 293.

13 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, p. 660, states that the word "heirs" may be construed as meaning children when an intention to that effect is clearly shown by the instrument.

Devlin on Deeds, § 864, states that if, by the deed, a trust is created for the benefit of the present as well as the future heirs of a person, the word "heirs" will be taken to mean children, as there can be no heirs of a person until after his death.

1 Kerr on Real Property, §§ 334, 335, says: The word "heirs" must be deemed, ordinarily, a word of limitation, and not a word of purchase, as the equivalent of "children;" and will be construed to limit or define the estate intended to be conveyed. The words "heirs of the body," in a deed, are words of limitation, and not of purchase. It has been held that the words "heirs now living," where used in a deed, are words of limitation or purchase, as will best accord with the manifest intention of him who employs them. When the word "heirs" is used in reference to a living person as the ancestor, it means in the popular sense children who are heirs apparent. Jones on Real Property in Conveyancing, § 231, lays down the same general doctrine.

It is a well-settled rule of construction that technical words are presumed to be used technically, unless the contrary appears upon the face of the instrument, and that words of a definite legal signification are to be understood as used in their definite legal sense. Nye v. Lovitt, 92 Va. 710, 713, 714, 24 S. E. 345, and authorities cited; Waring v. Waring, 96 Va. 641, 32 S. E. 150; Brett v. Donaghe, 101 Va. 786, 788, 45 S. E. 324. But, where other expressions are used in conjunction with such technical words, which plainly indicate what the intention was, and that such intention was not in accordance with the technical signification, the intention will control the legal operation of the words. 2 Minor, Inst. 1st ed. 1114, 1115; 1 Jarman, Wills, Bigelow's ed. 61, and note; Wootton v. Redd, 12 Gratt. 196, and note to Michie's ed. citing cases; Tebbs v. Duval, 17 Gratt. 349.

The word "heirs" is a technical word having a definite legal signification, and, when unexplained and uncontrolled by the context, must be interpreted according to its strict and technical import, and, in this sense, it designates the person or persons appointed by law to succeed to the real estate in cases of intestacy. But where, from the language of the instrument and the circumstances surrounding its execution, it appears that the maker, in using the word "heirs," meant "children," it will be so construed. This it is conceded is so as to wills; but it is insisted that a different rule prevails as to deeds, and cases are cited to sustain the contention that a deed made to the "heirs" of a living person is void, although words are used in conjunction therewith which show that the word was not used in its technical sense, but as meaning children. Hall v. Leonard, 1 Pick. 27; Hileman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 344, 53 Am. Dec. 478; Morris v. Stephens, 46 Pa. 200; Winslow v. Winslow, 52 Ind. 8.

Whatever may have been the rule of decision in the earlier cases of the states of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Indiana, the later decisions seem to have modified the rule. The weight of authority and the better reason is in favor of the rule that in deeds, as well as in wills, the intention of the maker of the instrument, as gathered from all its parts, must prevail.

In Heath v. Hewitt, 127 N. Y. 166, 13 L. R. A. 46, 24 Am. St. Rep. 438, 27 N. E. 959, where, by statute, the courts are required to give effect to the intention of the maker in construing deeds as well as wills, it was held that where, from the language of the deed and the circumstances surrounding its execution, it appears that the grantor, in using the word "heirs," meant "children," it will be so construed, and effect 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

thus given to the instrument, notwithstanding the general rule that a conveyance to the heirs of a living person is void for uncertainty. In this respect the court declared there was no difference between wills and deeds. Seymour v. Bowles, 172 Ill. 521, 50 N. E. 122. See 13 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 660, note 87, citing cases.

No decision of this court has been cited by counsel, nor have we found one in our investigation, in which the precise question involved in this case was raised and decided. But the rule of construction in this state, independent of statute, is that in deeds, as well as in wills, the intention of the parties must prevail, unless that intention is contrary to law.

In the early case of Hawkins v. Berkley, 1 Wash. (Va.) 204, 206, it was said that "agreements are always to be construed according to the evident intent of the parties, appearing from the deed itself, without a rigid adherence to the letter." And this reasonable and just rule has ever since been recognized as the correct rule for interpreting written instruments. 2 Minor, Inst. 1st ed. 1113-1116; Stace v. Bumgardner, 89 Va. 420, 16 S. E. 252; Temple v. Wright, 94 Va. 338, 340, 26 S. E. 844; Lindsey v. Eckels, 99 Va. 668, 671, 40 S. E. 23; White v. Sayers, 101 Va. 821, 828, 45 S. E. 747.

In the case of Stace v. Bumgardner, 89 Va. 420, 16 S. E. 252, it was said by Judge Lewis, in delivering the opinion of the court, where it was insisted that a different rule applied in the construction of wills from that which prevails as to deeds and other contracts, that "there is, however, no material difference in principle in the rules of interpretation between wills and contracts, except what naturally arises from the different circumstances of the parties. No technical language is necessary to create a trust either by deed or will; and in both classes of cases the object of the judicial expositor is the same, namely, to discover the intention which is to be gathered in every case from the general purpose and scope of the instrument in the light of surrounding circumstances."

Applying the foregoing rules of construction to the deed under consideration, it is reasonably certain that the word "heirs" was not used technically, but as synonymous with "children," a sense in which it is frequently used in common language, especially by unlettered people, as the scrivener in this case evidently was.

It appears from the record that on the same day the deed under consideration was made the grantor executed two other conveyances, and a few days afterward another, by which he partitioned and conveyed his real estate to three of his children and the heirs of his other child, in consideration of natural love and affection, with a requirement that the grantees in the deed should support and maintain the grantor and his wife during their natural lives. A consideration of natural love and affection for the grantees in the deed implies that they were living persons for whom he cherished affection, and not persons unknown, or perhaps not in being, as the grantees might be if the word "heirs" was used in its technical sense. Fountain County Coal & Min. Co. v. Beckleheimer, 102 Ind. 82, 52 Am. Rep. 645, 1 N. E. 202. Again, the provision in the deeds that the grantees should care for, support, and maintain the grantor and wife, or cause that to be done, necessarily implies that they were living persons, since the deeds took effect upon their delivery, and the duty to support and maintain at once commenced.

The grantees in the deed in question are described as being "of the county of Letcher and state of Kentucky," where John B. F. Roberson resided, again indicating that the word "heirs" was used in the sense of "children," and not in its technical sense, since the grantor could not know who would be the possible heirs of John B. F. Roberson.

The deed further provides that the grantees shall "furnish timber and keep up the line fence so far as it binds on the other heirs of James Roberson," the grantor. There can be no question that the grantor used the word "heirs" in this connection in the sense of "children," for he himself was then living and had no heirs.

In the other deeds made on the same day to his daughters, the grantor makes use of the same expression again, unmistakably indicating that the word was not used in its technical sense.

Construing the deed as a whole, we are satisfied that the manifest intention of the grantor was to convey the property to John B. F. Roberson's children, and not to his heirs in the technical sense of that word, and that the circuit court did not err in so holding.

The appellants assign as error the action of the circuit court in failing to provide, in its final decree, that the person to whom the tract of land in controversy belonged should contribute his proportion of the maintenance and support of the grantors in said deed.

This assignment of error is, we think, without merit. The pleadings in the case do not properly put that question in issue. Unless the appellants had done more for the support and maintenance of the grantor and his wife than their conveyances required them to do, they had no right to implead the appellee's ward for a failure to comply with the terms of the conveyance to her as to such support and maintenance. Again, the necessary parties were not before the court. The grantor in the deed was dead, and neither his personal representative nor his widow, the principal parties interested in that controversy, was a party to the suit.

The decree appealed from must be affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIRST CIRCUIT.

CLITHEROE D. JAMES, Appt.,

v.

BURTON PAYNE GRAY, Trustee, etc., of James & Abbott, Bankrupts.

(65 C. C. A. 385, 131 Fed. 401.)

1. Courts—Federal and state—application of general law.

The Federal courts will apply the general rule that a loan by a wife to her husband from her separate estate creates an equity in her favor, notwithstanding decisions of the local state court to the contrary.

2. Husband and wife—loan by wife—presumptions.

A loan by a married woman to a firm of which her husband is a member, in the absence of any evidence as to its source further than that the loan was made, will be presumed to have come from her separate estate, where the statute provides that a woman's property shall, upon her marriage, remain her separate estate, and that she may receive property in the same manner as if she were sole.

3. Same—statutory separate estate—protection in equity.

Equity treats personal estate vested in a married woman in accordance with statutory provisions permitting her to receive and hold such estate for all substantial purposes the same as an estate vested for separate uses according to equity rules, and will pro-

Case Note.—On the question whether or not the Federal courts, in a bankruptcy case, will be bound by the local decisions in determining the equitable rights of a wife on a contract which is not valid in law, that she has made with her husband, or a firm of which he is a member, or whether the Federal courts, in equity, will apply the equitable rules of their own jurisdiction on the subject, if these are contrary to the local law, the final decision must obviously rest with the Supreme Court of the United States. Except for the local decisions to the contrary, it would unquestionably be held in a Federal court that on such a contract, though void at law, the wife's equity would be protected. Post-nuptial contracts between husband and wife, though not valid at law, and though not made with the intervention of a trustee, are sustainable in tect it substantially to the same extent and in the same manner as it would the latter.

4. Same—statutory regulation of contracts.

A statute permitting a married woman to make contracts, except with her husband, the same as though sole, which does not relate to her separate estate, does not affect the equity rule governing contracts affecting separate estates.

5. Bankruptcy—claims against husband's estate.

Under a bankruptcy act allowing the presentation of equitable claims against bankrupt estates, the Federal courts will allow the presentation of a claim by a married woman for money loaned out of her statutory separate estate to a firm of which her husband was a partner, in bankruptcy proceedings against it, although the decisions of the state in which the bankruptcy was declared have denied the validity of such claims.

(Aldrich, District Judge, dissents.)

(July 6, 1904.)

A PPEAL by claimant from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts dismissing a equity in the Federal courts, as well as in some, and probably in most, states where the question may arise. Such a contract is upheld in Kesner v. Trigg, 98 U. S. 50, 25 L. ed. 83, where the contract sustained in equity did not appear to have been made with the intervention of any trustee. This doctrine is not denied by the dissenting judge in JAMES v. GRAY, but is, at least for the purposes of the case, admitted. But the ground of his dissent is stated as follows: "I cannot concur in the idea that the bankruptcy act was intended to create substantive rights to married women beyond those existing under the law of the state in which the married woman resides." That the contract involved was not authorized by the Massachusetts statute is clearly stated; that the Massachusetts decisions cited in the majority opinion deny that such a contract can be enforced in equity is also clearly stated. The question then is, Can a claim on such an invalid contract by a married woman be enforced in equity in a bankruptcy case when the local law, as established by the state courts, denied that any equity was created by the transaction?

A precedent in favor of the equity of the wife against the estate of her bankrupt husband for a loan advanced to him is found in Re Blandin, 1 Low. Dec. 543, Fed. Cas. No. 1,527. A similar decision was rendered in Re Bigelow, 3 Ben. 198, Fed. Cas. No. 1,398. The Blandin Case was cited with approval in Fleitas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 550, 37 L. ed. 276, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495, on the question of the provability of such a claim under a bankrupt law. In the Fleitas Case the question was whether a debt of the husband to the wife for her paraphernal property was extinguished by his discharge in bankruptcy; thus indirectly involving the question of the provability of such a claim in a bankruptcy case. But the court said in that case: "The law of Louisiana as to the rights of married women, which must have a controlling influence on the decision of this case, differs widely from the common law;" and it was after a review of the statutes and decisions of Louisiana that the court declared that the husband's liability to the wife for her paraphernal property, under the law of Louisiana, was provable as a debt against him under the bankrupt law. Therefore in that case there was no question of conflict between the local law and the Federal rule in equity.

The Blandin Case was rejected as an authority by the district court of Massachusetts in Re Talbot, 110 Fed. 924, on the ground that Judge Lowell, in deciding the Blandin Case, proceeded on the assumption that the wife's claim was enforceable in a Massachusetts court of equity. As to the general doctrine of protecting a wife's equity in her separate property as a creditor of her husband, he says: "I do not understand that it has ever been decided in this commonwealth that these doctrines do not fully apply in equity to separate property held under the statute." But in the Talbot Case the court held that the premises upon which Judge Lowell based his decision in Re Blandin were no longer sound, because since that decision the Massachusetts courts had decided that the liability could not be enforced in equity, any more than at law, because enforcement was contrary to the public policy of the commonwealth. The Talbot Case was cited with approval by the same judge who rendered it, in Re Nickerson, 116 Fed. 1003, but he distinguished it and sustained the claim of the wife in the bankruptcy case by subrogation which did not arise from any contract with her husband, but from an equitable right against her mother.

The right of a wife to present an equitable claim against her husband's bankrupt estate was upheld, also, in Re Jones, 6 Biss. 68, Fed. Cas. No. 7,444, and Clark v. Hezekiah, 24 Fed. 663. But no question was raised in these cases as to any conflict of this doctrine with the local law. That equitable debts are provable on the same footing as legal debts in bankruptcy cases was expressly stated in Re Boston & F. Iron Works, 20 Fed. 783, and Re Buckhause, 2 Low. Dec. 331, Fed. Cas. No. 2,086; and this does not seem to be denied in any case. But whether this rule is to be applied in respect to an equitable claim which is not recognized by the local law of the jurisdiction in which the parties reside is the only matter in question, since the circuit court of appeals in the present case is not unanimous. The question may be deemed somewhat uncertain until the Supreme Court of the United States shall pass upon it.

claim presented against a bankrupt estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Argued before Colt and Putnam, Circuit Judges, and Aldrich, District Judge.

Messrs. Joseph H. Beale, Jr., and Henry M. Hutchings, for appellant:

In other jurisdictions a wife may prove in bankruptcy against her husband, and a fortiori against her husband's firm, for money lent.

Ex parte Wells, 2 Mont. D. & DeG. 504; Feitas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 550, 37 L. ed. 276, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Re Bigelow, 3 Ben. 198, Fed. Cas. No. 1,398; Re Jones, 6 Biss. 68, Fed. Cas. No. 7,444; Re Blandin, 1 Low. Dec. 543, Fed. Cas. No. 1,527.

This is the general doctrine of law. Questions of general law should be settled by the Federal courts according to the general understanding of the common law, and not according to local peculiarities.

Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 865; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Man-ship v. New South Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 845; United States Sav. & Loan Co. v. Harris, 113 Fed. 27; Edwards v. Davenport, 4 McCrary, 34.20 Fed. 756; First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565; Re Blandin, supra.

Messrs. Morse & Friedman, for appellee:

A married woman may not prove a debt against her husband's estate in bankruptcy.

Re Talbot, 110 Fed. 924; Re Nickerson, 116 Fed. 1006.

The provability in bankruptcy of a claim must depend upon the validity of the claim in the state where it arose.

Re Talbot, supra; Re Novak, 101 Fed. 800; Re Neiman, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 329.

In Massachusetts a married woman cannot enter into a contract with her husband; nor can she sue him.

Keil v. Egleston, 140 Mass. 202, 4 N. E. 573; Woodward v. Spurr, 141 Mass. 283, 6 N. E. 521; Ingham v. White, 4 Allen, 412; Bassett v. Bassett, 112 Mass. 99; Lord v. Parker, 3 Allen, 120.

Neither can she contract with, or sue, others jointly with him.

Plumer v. Lord, 7 Allen, 481; Edwards v. Stevens, 3 Allen, 315; Fowle v. Torrey, 135 Mass. 87; National Granite Bank v. Tyndale, 176 Mass. 547, 51 L. R. A. 447, 57 N. E. 1022; Clark v. Patterson, 158 Mass. 388, 35 Am. St. Rep. 498, 33 N. E. 589.

Putnam, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a case of a bankrupt partnership. Proof of a claim of $20,469.46 for money loaned the partnership was offered by the wife of one of the bankrupt partners, and 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

rejected by the district court on the strength of Re Talbot, 110 Fed. 924. Re Talbot rested on Woodward v. Spurr, 141 Mass. 283, 6 N. E. 521, and National Granite Bank v. Tyndale, 176 Mass. 547, 51 L. R. A. 447, 57 N. E. 1022. The district court also made reference to Clark v. Patterson, 158 Mass. 388, 35 Am. St. Rep. 498, 33 N. E. 589.

All the transactions were in Massachusetts, and all the parties are residents of that state. The common and statutory laws of Massachusetts relating to this loan are, as we will see, in harmony with the common-law text writers and authorities; so that, so far as they are concerned, the claim could not be allowed in either the Federal or state courts, because, on the ground of the unity of the persons of the husband and wife, no contract could ever exist. Therefore, if we had no separate estate as known to the chancery courts, and no statutory separate estate, the decision of the district court would necessarily be affirmed.

The case involves the statutes which were re-enacted in Mass. Rev. Laws 1902, chap. 153, §§ 1, 2, as follows:

"Sec. 1. The real and personal property of a woman shall, upon her marriage, remain her separate property, and a married woman may receive, receipt for, hold, manage, and dispose of property, real and personal, in the same manner as if she were sole. But no conveyance by a married woman of real property shall, except as provided in § 36, extinguish or impair her husband's tenancy by the curtesy by statute or his rights to curtesy which existed at the time this chapter takes effect in such property, unless he joins in the conveyance or otherwise releases his said rights.

"Sec. 2. A married woman may make contracts, oral and written, sealed and unsealed, in the same manner as if she were sole, except that she shall not be authorized hereby to make contracts with her husband."

It will be observed that, unlike the statutes of many states, this legislation does not enlarge the common law so far as contracts between husband and wife are concerned. If any relief is found, it must be on equitable principles, treating the property vested in the wife under the statute as a separate estate in equity, or analogous thereto. The existing statutes in bankruptcy make no special provision in reference to claims of this character; but that full equitable principles are accepted by the courts in bankruptcy was determined by us in Batchelder & L. Co. v. Whitmore, 58 C. C. A. 517, 122 Fed. 355, and in Re Chase, 59 C. C. A. 629, 124 Fed. 753. There can be no question that equitable claims, as, for instance, claims arising out of a breach of trust in the technical sense of the word "trust," are provable under act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, § 63 (30 Stat. at L. 562, 563, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3447). They are to be regarded either as "unliquidated claims" or as claims founded "upon a contract, express or implied," because every trust involves such a contract. There never has been any question on this score in the United States, and in England the rule is the same. Williams, Bankruptcy Practice, 7th ed. 1898, at page 120, says: "A breach of trust, although it would afford a good ground for an action of tort for unliquidated damages, is always, even without express enactment, held to create a debt in equity."

The learned author makes this observation as part of his description of debts provable in bankruptcy. At pages 36 and 37 the learned author, speaking of the words describing provable debts in the act of 1869, "due at law and in equity," says: "These words do not appear in the present act, but it would not seem that the law has been changed by the omission of them."

In Ex parte Wells, 2 Mont. D. & De G. 504, the value of a legacy of stock, bequeathed to the wife's separate use, but transferred to the name of her husband, who sold it out and became bankrupt, was held provable. In Ex parte Green, 2 Deacon & C. 113, it was decided that the income of an estate settled in trust for the wife might be used by the husband with her consent without creating a debt; yet the whole theory of the case was that, if the principal had been so used, it would create a debt provable in bankruptcy. These decisions are in all respects analogous, as they arise with reference to a claim of a married woman against her husband in connection with her separate estate.

It must be conceded that the decisions of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, which have been referred to by the learned judge of the district court, would, if they controlled this court, compel us to sustain his decree. Clark v. Patterson, 158 Mass. 388, 35 Am. St. Rep. 498, 33 N. E. 589, was a bill in equity, brought by a wife against a partnership of which her husband was a member, for relief with reference to a loan made to the partnership from her separate estate. The court held that relief could not be granted, even in equity, stating, at page 391, 158 Mass., page 500, 35 Am. St. Rep., page 591, 33 N. E., that the note was void as between the original parties, having been given to a wife by a partnership of which her husband was a member, and, with a citation of prior decisions of the same court, adds that equity does not relieve in such a case. The reason for this decision appears in Woodward v. Spurr, 141 Mass. 283, 286, 6 N. E. 521, where it was held that, with reference to the rights of a wife having a separate estate, against her husband, with regard to that estate, relief, even in equity, will not be granted on an alleged debt strictly contractual, nor unless there are some elements of spoliation on the part of the husband, or elements raising a trust on his part, either express, implied, or resulting, or something analogous thereto.

We should also refer to the expressions of the then Chief Justice Gray, earlier than any decisions already referred to, found in Atlantic Nat. Bank v. Tavenor, 130 Mass. 407. This was in 1881, subsequent to the enactment of any statute the substance of which is found in the sections which we have cited from chapter 153 of the Revised Laws, which could possibly affect the case now before us. We shall have occasion to turn again to this case; but, for the present, we notice only the fact, stated at page 409, that, while it had not then been determined in Massachusetts whether a loan by a wife to her husband from her separate property creates an equity in her favor, "it has generally, if not unanimously, been decided in the affirmative by other courts." That such is the general rule which the Federal courts will apply in equity, notwithstanding any local decisions, cannot be questioned. It is so stated by all the text writers to whom we look for the general rules of the equity law. The latest English work, and a very satisfactory one, Eversley's Law of the Domestic Relations, 2d ed. 1896, giving the law as it was before the modern legislation in England, says, at page 291: "But in equity a married woman was permitted to contract with her husband in respect of her separate estate, and sue him with regard to it." Again, at page 297, the author says: "A husband formerly, at common law, could not make a valid loan to his wife, both because it was in the nature of a contract, and whatever property might have passed by delivery reverted to him in virtue of his marital right. But in equity the husband was enabled to sue his wife in respect to her separate estate. The husband can make a valid loan to his wife of property, whether specific chattels or other things. . . . In equity the capacity of a wife who had separate estate to make a valid loan to her husband was clearly recognized, and she might have sued her husband, or proved against his estate after death, like any other creditor."

The same rule, so far as concerns loans by the wife to her husband from her separate estate, was authoritatively held by Lord Westbury in Woodward v. Woodward, 3 De G. J. & S. 671, 674. We will observe that any suggestion that there can be no transactions between husband and wife enforceable in equity, except through the medium of a trustee or some other third person, finds no support in the authorities, and was positively ignored in Woodward v. Woodward, where the loan was a direct one.

The same rules were stated in Wallingsford v. Allen, 10 Pet. 583, 593, 9 L. ed. 542, 546. The opinion rendered by Mr. Justice Wayne says: "Agreements between husband and wife, during coverture, for the transfer from him of property directly to the latter, are undoubtedly void at law. Equity examines with great caution, before it will confirm them. But it does sustain them, when a clear and satisfactory case is made out that the property is to be applied to the separate use of the wife. . . . In More v. Ellis, Bunb. 205, it was determined that articles of agreement between husband and wife are binding in equity without the intervention of a trustee."

More v. Ellis was decided in 1726. It was affirmed by the House of Lords, as appears at page 207, and has apparently been ever since regarded as authoritative. These expressions in Wallingsford v. Allen, in connection with the other decisions of the Supreme Court to which we will hereafter refer, like the English authorities which we have cited, require that we should disregard the limitations established in Massachusetts, so far as they bear upon any considerations dealt with in courts of equity with reference to the case before us. Therefore it is an established proposition that the claim offered in proof must be allowed, if it came from the separate estate of the wife in any sense in which the chancery courts can accept that expression.

We are left, then, to determine this condition. The case does not expressly show from what estate the funds were advanced by the proponent of the claim offered for proof, in that it does not expressly appear whether they came from her separate estate in any sense which the rules of equity or the statutes recognize. The record stands on the certificate of the referee, which states as follows: "Upon hearing the defense offered, I find as a fact that the money had been advanced by Mrs. James to the firm as set forth in the account."

Thereupon he allowed the claim, which proceeding was reversed by the district court on a point of law only. Thus the presumption is that the funds so loaned came from such an estate as Mrs. James could control in her own right. If it also appeared that the loans were made from an estate vested to her separate use according to the chancery rules, we would have occasion to go no further. There is no statement in the record expressly or impliedly assuming such an equitable separate estate, and therefore for 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

us to accept its existence from what appears before us involves too violent a presumption. Taking the record together, the reasonable construction of it is that the loan was made from an estate vesting in Mrs. James in accordance with chapter 153 of the Revised Laws.

As, therefore, in order to sustain the proof of debt, we must proceed under the rules of the chancery courts, it is necessary for us to determine that those courts hold, or would hold, that an estate of personal property vested in a married woman in accordance with the statutory provision which we have cited would be regarded by them as, for all substantial purposes, the same as an estate vested for separate uses according to the equity rules, and be protected substantially to the same extent and in like manner. On the reason of the thing there can be no distinction. The underlying purpose of the legislature to secure the interests of married women could not otherwise be made effective. The case at bar is a striking illustration that, unless equity thus regards the statutory estate, the anxiety of the legislature in behalf of married women would fail, in most significant cases, of accomplishing a practical result. Of course, this observation would not apply to legislation which expressly authorized contracts between husband and wife and common-law suits between them.

Section 2 of chapter 153 neither aids this case nor tends otherwise. It vests in married women the right to make contracts independently of any question of holding separate estates. It contains a limitation forbidding her to make contracts with her husband; but as this, also, has no relation to a "separate estate" or "separate property," it is to be regarded only as a limitation on the general authority to make contracts, and therefore is an exception in favor of the common law only, and does not at all concern the chancery rules. This provision existed at the time of the decision in Atlantic Nat. Bank v. Tavener, 130 Mass. 407, already cited. The question there was with reference to a loan from a married woman to her husband, without any intimation that the loan was from an estate vested for her separate use under the general rules in equity. In this respect the record stands precisely as it does at bar, and the presumption is that the loan was made from property vested in her in accordance with the Massachusetts statutes. Yet the opinion discusses, as we have already said, the extent of the rules in equity with reference to transactions concerning an estate vested to the separate use of a married woman, without making any distinction of the kind we are considering. This discussion would have been superfluous, unless the court assumed that, in equity, property held in accordance with the statute was to be regarded the same as an estate in express trust to the separate use of the wife.

Various other decisions tend to show that the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts makes no distinction with reference to the equity rules under discussion, as limited by it, between a statutory estate and an estate vested by a deed of trust, or otherwise, for the sole use of a married woman. Among others is Willard v. Eastham, 15 Gray, 328, 335, 79 Am. Dec. 366. Throughout this opinion, which held that, as the law then stood, the statutory separate estate of a married woman could not be charged for a debt contracted by her, unless it in some way related to that estate, the discussion takes up and applies, especially at page 335, without discrimination, the rules recognized by the equity courts. The same is the fact with reference to Lombard v. Morse, 155 Mass. 136, 140, 14 L. R. A. 273, 29 N. E. 205. Frankel v. Frankel, 173 Mass. 214, 73 Am. St. Rep. 266, 53 N. E. 398, is a marked case in this particular, wherein it was held that a bill in equity may be had by a wife against her husband to recover her separate property obtained from her by his fraud and coercion. An examination of the record in the clerk's office discloses that the proceeding originated out of real estate in Boston of which the wife was seised in fee in her sole right. The opinion, at page 215, Am. St. Rep. page 267, N. E. page 398, after referring to the fact that, according to the statutes of Massachusetts, the wife could not maintain an action at law against her husband, adds that, unless the bill could be maintained, she would be without a remedy, and that that of itself would be a sufficient reason for a decree in her favor. It continues that the statutes do not forbid suits between husband and wife, but simply provide that they shall not be construed to authorize them; and it adds: "It would seem, therefore, that equitable remedies may be availed of as between husband and wife, in cases where they apply."

These authorities establish that, in the view of the supreme judicial court, the statutory estate is to be construed, for all the purposes we have in hand, the same as an estate vested under a trust deed.

Our observations in reference to the decisions of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, if we correctly understand them, aid the result which we have reached, because it is of assistance if that court has assumed that the statutes of that state are to be construed as vesting estates subject to equitable rules. Yet, even if we were mistaken in that respect, the result could not change our conclusion. It would not bar the Federal courts from applying their own equitable rules according to their own methods of procedure. Examining what has been determined by those courts, the result seems to be clear. In Ankeney v. Hannon, 147 U. S. 118, 128, 37 L. ed. 105, 107, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206, et seq., the court considered, discussed, and settled, on the rules of the chancery, questions with reference to an estate vested in the wife under state statutes which, in substance, so far as any present issues are concerned, were the same as those of Massachusetts; and this it did in a manner which impliedly holds that there is no distinction, so far as those rules are concerned, of the class which we are discussing. Indeed, on this point and on the entire case, Sykes v. Chadwick, 18 Wall. 141, 148, 21 L. ed. 824, 826, seems to be most persuasive in favor of the proponent of the proof of debt before us. It is true that, in this case, which came from the supreme court of the District of Columbia, there was a reference to a statute of the District regulating the rights of property of married women; and, both in the syllabus and in some citations, it seems to have been thought that the decision rested on the local statutes, and not on the general rules of equity. An examination of the facts and of the opinion, however, shows that the reverse of this is necessarily true, except to the limited extent otherwise which we will hereafter state. The transaction began with an inchoate right of dower, which existed only at common law, or by statute affirming or modifying the common law. The wife joined with her husband in a sale of the property, releasing her inchoate right, and obtaining in exchange therefor a promissory note signed by her husband and the purchaser. According to the strict rules of the common law, the note was joint, and void; but, under a statute of the District of Columbia, the only statute relied on by the counsel, it became a several obligation, so that a suit against the promisor other than the husband was successfully maintained by the wife, according to the judgment both of the supreme court of the District and the Supreme Court of the United States. The portion of the opinion with which we have to do is at page 148, 18 Wall., page 826, 21 L. ed. This refers to a statute of the District, which, so far as we are concerned, is substantially, if not in literal terms, the same as § 1 of chapter 153 of the Revised Laws of Massachusetts. It states that, by force thereof, the plaintiff acquired the capacity at law to receive property to her separate use. This expression, "to her separate use," was borrowed by the court from the chancery, because the phraseology of the statute is like that of the Massachusetts act, "separate property." The opinion proceeds: "Having this capacity, she did receive and acquire, for a good and valid consideration moving from herself, the promissory note in question. This note, then, being her separate property, not acquired by gift or conveyance from her husband in the sense in which the statute uses those terms, she is entitled to the benefit of the statute in reference to the exclusive possession and enjoyment of the note, and to the exclusive right of suing upon it. As to it, she is relieved from the incapacity which the common law imposed upon her, and is as if she were unmarried. The technical reasons, therefore, which at the common law rendered void a note or other obligation made by the husband to the wife, no longer exist in this case; and, if there are still any such reasons which would compel the plaintiff, in enforcing the note as against her husband, to seek the aid of a court of equity, there are none to prevent her from suing the defendant upon it in a court of law." At page 146, 18 Wall., page 826, 21 L. ed., the opinion elaborates what is said at page 148, 18 Wall., page 826, 21 L. ed., in reference to the necessity of the aid of a court of equity if the plaintiff had sought to proceed against her husband. It goes into the whole question of the rules of chancery which we have been discussing; and at page 147, 18 Wall., page 826, 21 L. ed., it says: "We may therefore regard the transaction under consideration as valid and binding in equity, both on the defendant and the husband of the plaintiff."

Therefore, although the suit was brought under a statute of the District which allowed a severance, and so was at common law, yet the transaction was regarded by the court as binding in equity as between the wife and the husband, and this without the interposition of a trustee, or other third person, and though dealing with what was the estate of the wife at common law and under the statute. The trend of the opinion supports the conclusion that, on questions like this before us, there is no distinction under the chancery rules arising out of the formal nature of the wife's separate estate, with reference to whether it vested at common law, or by statute, or in equity.

The result of the authorities is summed up in Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, 2d ed. 1882. In §§ 79 and 80, the author points out the fact that the late married women's acts of various states have, most of them, superseded the necessity of applying the chancery rules. Legislation of this kind he describes as the first class. Then he adds, in § 79, as follows: "By the second class, which prevails in most of the states, the wife's capacity is limited to agreements made with reference to her property. These contracts are wholly equitable in their nature and obligation, and can only be enforced by an equitable action against the property itself, and not against the wife personally." In § 80 he observes: "In all the other states where the wife's contracts are not yet made legal, the equitable jurisdiction is to a certain extent enlarged. It is no longer confined in its operation to her separate equitable estate held in trust for her by an express or implied trustee. It reaches to and operates upon all her property of which she holds the full legal title and interest. While the wife's power to make contracts which shall be a charge upon her property is not increased, the property thus affected, and which can be reached by a court of equity, is all which the wife holds in her own name and right by a legal title."

He repeats, and somewhat elaborates, to the same effect in § 1099. Therefore the authorities are in harmony with the natural, underlying principles which suggest no reason why the chancery courts should not protect an estate vested in, or for the benefit of, the wife, equally, whether at the common law, or by statute, or under a deed of trust for her separate use.

The case may be summarized as follows: While the Federal courts are required by the statutes creating them to accept, as rules of decision in trials at common law, the laws of the several states, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States otherwise provide, their proceedings in equity suits, involving equitable rights, cannot be impaired by the local rules of the different states in which they sit. The principles of equity as applied by them are the same everywhere in the United States. Of course, there may necessarily exist exceptional circumstances, as, for example, in Louisiana, where there never has been any law of uses and trusts as in England, so there can be no such thing as an estate limited to the separate use of the wife. There the whole topic of the rights and obligations of the wife is a part of the Code or statutory law of the state. So, also, if any state, say Massachusetts, had peculiar legislation relating to estates vested to the separate use of the wife, that legislation might have to be regarded by the Federal courts in equity as well as at law. Such exceptional cases ordinarily fall within those chancery rules which relate to giving special remedies for rights existing only at common law or under a statute. The general rule which we state is well laid down in Curtis's Jurisdiction of the United States Courts (1880) 13, 14, and strikingly illustrated in Russell v. Southard, 12 How. 139, 147, 13 L. ed. 927, 930; Neves v. Scott, 13 How. 268, 271, 14 L. ed. 140, 142; Babcock v. Wyman, 19 How. 289, 299, 300, 301, 15 L. ed. 644, 648, 649; Brick v. Brick, 98 U. S. 514, 516, 25 L. ed. 256, 257; and Kirby v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 120 U. S. 130, 137, 138, 30 L. ed. 569, 572, 573, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 430. Even in Massachusetts it appears, as we have already shown, that the topic which we are discussing is recognized as one concerning a right in equity limited or regulated in accordance with rules peculiar to that state. We refer to this as merely illustrating our proposition. It could not control it, because, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, it remains for the Federal courts, not only to occupy the field of equitable rights according to their own rules, but also to determine what are the boundaries of that field.

The first question to be determined in the case at bar is whether an equitable right is involved. We find that the real issue presented is whether, under the Federal bankruptcy statutes, which permit the allowance of equitable claims, a loan by a wife to her husband from property secured to her by the Massachusetts statutes creates an equity in her favor. This is a question of general equity. The Massachusetts courts hold that the general principles of equity jurisprudence are to be applied to the statutory separate estates of married women, the same as to an estate vested in trust for her separate use under the general rules of law. The only difference between the Massachusetts courts and courts elsewhere, with respect to the particular question now under consideration, is that the former hold to a limited rule; so that all courts agree that the general topic relates to an equitable right, and the only distinction is that the local treatment of it is peculiar. In cases where parties seek in equity only a concurrent remedy to enforce a legal right, the right is ordinarily determined by the common law of the state where the litigation is pending; but, as we have seen, this proceeding asserts an equitable right, so that we are not bound by the local rule.

As the record comes to us, we are justified in holding that it authorizes us to make a final disposition of the case. There is nothing to suggest that the findings of the referee, or the assumptions which we have made, are not in conformity with the substantial facts.

The decree of the District Court is reversed; the case is remanded to that court, with directions to allow the proof offered by the appellant, Clitheroe D. James, as a valid proof of an unsecured claim against the partnership estate, and against the several estates of the individual partners, so far as 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

such several estates are subject to the jurisdiction of the District Court in bankruptcy, subject to the rules for marshaling between partnership and individual estates; and the appellant recovers her costs of appeal.

Aldrich, District Judge, dissenting:

I cannot agree with the conclusion reached in the majority opinion. I do not understand that the rule which contemplates that equity jurisdiction, practice, and procedure in the Federal courts, based upon the English chancery system, shall be uniform throughout the United States, goes so far as to create a legal or equitable status in respect to the property rights of married women within a given state different from that which exists under the local laws thereof. I do not understand that Federal equity accords to married women within a state power to contract or a property status distinctly different and beyond that which exists in equity as administered by the state courts under its own statutory equity and common-law system.

The Federal government never committed itself altogether to the idea of an adoption bodily of English chancery rights, or of the English limitations upon equitable rights, or to the idea of adopting bodily the prospective expansion and growth of the English chancery doctrines, to the end that the same should be imposed upon a state contrary to its own idea of domestic relations and property rights. No state is bound to adopt the measures of supposed equitable reform inaugurated in another jurisdiction. The legal and equitable status of the property rights of married women in a given state is not regulated by general law, or by general principles of equity. It rests upon local statutes and local law. It was the English doctrine as to scope of jurisdiction and the English system of practice and procedure that was adopted, and the adoption related to the situation as it then existed; and any subsequent enlargement or limitation of the English system by statute or otherwise must be excluded when we are considering what was actually adopted at the inauguration of our government. For a discussion of this question, I will refer to Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 How. 369, 394, 395, 15 L. ed. 80, 90, 91, and Alger v. Anderson, 92 Fed. 696. As said by Chief Justice Taney in Meade v. Beale, Taney, 339, 361, Fed. Cas. No. 9,371: "So, too, as relates to the jurisdiction of the circuit court sitting as a court of chancery. It is undoubtedly true, as contended for in the argument of the complainant, in regard to equitable rights, that the power of the courts of chancery of the United States is, under the Constitution, to be regulated by the law of the English chancery; that is to say, the distinction between law and equity as recognized in the jurisprudence of England is to be observed in the courts of the United States, in administering the remedy for an existing right. The rule applies to the remedy, and not the right; and it does not follow that every right given by the English law, and which, at the time the Constitution was adopted, might have been enforced in the court of chancery, can also be enforced in a court of the United States. The right must be given by the law of the state, or of the United States. It is the form of remedy for which the Constitution provides; and, if a complainant has no right, the circuit court, sitting as a court of chancery, has nothing to remedy in any form of proceeding.

"In the case before the court, the question is: Is the bequest which the complainants claim a valid one by the laws of Maryland? It is a question which, in its nature, necessarily depends upon the laws of the respective states. Some of the states sanction devises of this description: some do not; and undoubtedly it depends upon every state to determine for itself to whom, and in what form, and by what instrument any property within its borders may pass by devise or otherwise."

The present enlarged rights of married women in England, both at law and in equity, principally resulted from removal by statutory enactment of disabilities which the old common law imposed upon the wife by reason of the marital relations. The same is true in respect to the rights and liabilities of married women in the various states. The rights of married women, varying largely in the different states, have resulted from legislation extending the rights of the wife upon such grounds of public policy as each state has seen fit to adopt. It has never been understood that the property rights and liabilities of married women in a given state were regulated by the law of England or by the law of any other state.

It is conceded by the majority opinion that the claim of the wife in the case at bar would have no standing, either at law or in equity, in the state courts of Massachusetts. Indeed, § 1 of the Massachusetts statute, referred to in the majority opinion, expressly declares that the wife shall not be authorized thereby to make contracts with her husband, thus statutorily declaring it to be the policy of the state that contracts between husband and wife shall not be recognized and upheld in that jurisdiction. Moreover, in Woodward v. Spurr, 141 Mass. 283, 287, 6 N. E. 521, which was an equity proceeding involving a local insolvency law, which provided for the proof of equitable liabilities against insolvent estates, and in which the state statute in question was under consideration, it was expressly said: "When contracts are themselves not authorized, validity cannot be imparted to them by affording a remedy for the breach of them through the medium of a court of equity;" thus expressly and emphatically repudiating the idea of an enforceable equitable status founded upon considerations of trust in a case like this in the courts of Massachusetts.

Fleitas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 550, 555, 37 L. ed. 276, 278, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495, was an equity proceeding involving the claim of a wife against her husband, who had been discharged in bankruptcy; and not only was the law of the state with respect to the right and the local idea of trust relations recognized, but the right and the provability of the claim were made distinctly to rest upon the state law of Louisiana.

While I do not question, for the purposes of this case, that a claim of the character of the one in question is now enforceable in equity in England and in nearly all of the states of the Union, and at law, perhaps, in some of the states, I cannot concur in the idea that the bankruptcy act was intended to create substantive rights to married women beyond those existing under the law of the state in which the married woman resides.

The proceeding here is to adjust the rights between local creditors in respect to a bankrupt estate in the state of their residence. There is no diverse citizenship, and therefore could be no regulation of the rights in question by the Federal courts unless under the bankruptcy law. Therefore, if the view of my brethren is sound, under the bankruptcy law, with no diverse citizenship, the wife has a property right of the value of $20,000, while, if the bankruptcy law were to be repealed, she would have no right enforceable at law or in equity either in the state or Federal courts. Giving a status to the claim of a married woman against the estate of her husband in bankruptcy different from that which exists under the local law impairs the substantive rights of the other creditors as they exist under the laws of the state, and is therefore inequitable as to them. It would be inequitable and unwarrantable in the state courts, because against the policy and contrary to the law of the state, and therefore not founded upon a legal or equitable right or remedy enforceable in that jurisdiction, and inequitable in the Federal courts because, in the absence of diverse citizenship, the Federal courts, in the exercise of general equity power independent of bankruptcy, would have no jurisdiction, equitable or otherwise, to establish and maintain the right.

It is difficult for me to adopt the view that the bankruptcy law was intended to create a property or contract right as between local creditors, either in a legal or an equitable sense, beyond that which obtains according to the rules of property existing under the laws of the state. If the conclusion of the majority is sound, there exist in Massachusetts two rules of property in respect to married women,—one rule, distinctly and deliberately expressed, established by its statutes, construed by the highest court of the state, regulating the rights of married women, and another and a very different rule of property, administered in the same jurisdiction by the Federal courts,—a condition, in my opinion, never contemplated under our system of Federal and state governments, in respect to parties residing in the same state and whose property rights are based upon local law.

English and American decisions in other jurisdictions, as to claims of married women enforceable in equity, have no bearing, as it seems to me, upon a situation involving a Massachusetts statute, Massachusetts decisions, a Massachusetts estate, and Massachusetts creditors only. The property rights of married women in Massachusetts are established upon grounds of public policy, upon which the state is entitled to stand. It has been repeatedly decided by the highest court of the state that a claim of this character, even under insolvency conditions, has no legal standing, either at law or in equity, as against the other creditors. Such decisions are based upon the rules of common law and equity as modified and enlarged by the statutes of Massachusetts. As there expressed by its highest court, the rights of married women are based upon "the rule of the common law which has been declared and recognized by the legislature." National Granite Bank v. Tyndale, 176 Mass. 547, 550, 51 L. R. A. 447, 57 N. E. 1022; Clark v. Patterson, 158 Mass. 388, 35 Am. St. Rep. 498, 33 N. E. 589; Woodward v. Spurr, 141 Mass. 283, 6 N. E. 521; Fowle v. Torrey, 135 Mass. 87.

When our government was established, and the common law of England, so far as not inconsistent with our institutions, was adopted by the governments of the various states; and when the English chancery system was adopted by the Federal government, and for a long time thereafter,—a claim of a married woman like the one in question had no standing in that country at law, or in equity, it is believed, in a suit by the wife against the husband or his estate upon a naked loan relieved from relations and considerations of trust; but, however that may be, it is clear, even if otherwise, now, that for many years the claim of a married woman had no standing there either at law, or in equity as administered in bankruptcy proceedings, where the claim of the wife was strictly contractual, and where creditor interests were involved, as is the case here. Robson, Bankruptcy, 6th ed. 475, and cases cited; Re Beale, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 249. According to Taney, as has been already said, in order to have an equitable remedy, there must be a right based upon Federal or state law; and, as said by Lord Eldon, in Ex parte Dewdney, 15 Ves. Jr. 479, 498, in discussing the English doctrine as to equitable claims in bankruptcy: "Upon the whole, my opinion as to the general point is that in the consideration of this statute a commission of bankruptcy is nothing more than a substitution of the authority of the Lord Chancellor, enabling him to work out the payment of those creditors who could, by legal action or equitable suit, have compelled payment; and that the objection upon the statute [statute of limitations] is competent to the creditors . . . regarding the claim of each creditor as a suit depending."

Indeed, § 23a of the bankrupt law (Act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 552, 553, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3431), conferring law and equity jurisdiction upon the circuit courts in bankruptcy matters, adopts the idea expressed by Lord Eldon, that the right, as between the parties, should be regulated according to law and equity in the same manner and to the same extent as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted; thus making the right or the claim depend upon its original status of enforceability or nonenforceability at law or in equity under general equity powers, independent of the bankruptcy law; and under this standard there was no right enforceable under the state law, and no equity jurisdiction or right cognizable in the Federal courts, in the absence, as is the case here, of diverse citizenship. The question in this case is, therefore, a very plain and simple one. Was the claim, independent of the bankrupt law, based upon a right enforceable in the state under its laws, or in the Federal courts under their general equity powers? And surely this question must be solved in the negative.

It thus results in the case at hand that we have a situation where the claim of the wife was not recognized by the local statutes of Massachusetts and not enforceable in its courts, and where there is no equity jurisdiction in the Federal courts in the absence of diverse citizenship, and therefore no equitable right enforceable in such courts under their general equity powers independent of the bankruptcy law. And the consequence is that the majority opinion departs from and goes contrary to the idea expressed by Lord Eldon, that creditors have a right to object to an equitable claim, not cognizable and not enforceable either at law or in equity, and accords to a creditor wife a right and a status not recognized by the state law, a right and a status not enforceable in the Federal courts of equity under their general equity powers, and one with which they could have nothing to do, independent of the bankruptcy law and bankruptcy proceedings.

Under our distribution of governmental functions between the Federal and state governments, and especially in view of the recognition by the Federal government of the power of the state (under certain limited and expressly defined constitutional restrictions not material here) to establish and regulate rules of property within its jurisdiction, it results clearly and necessarily that the legal and equitable status of property rights of married women in a given state is regulated by local law; that is to say, by the old common law modified and enlarged by such judicial innovations and such legal and equitable statutory reforms as it has seen fit to adopt, and by such, if any, of the modern ideas and expanded rules of common law and equity adopted in other jurisdictions as the legislature and the courts of the state in question have seen fit to recognize and declare.

While a state may not, by statutory enactment or otherwise, place any restrictions upon Federal equity practice and procedure, which is uniform throughout the United States, or impede or impair its jurisdiction, which is likewise uniform, it may regulate property rights within its jurisdiction; and the laws of the state regulating such rights are regarded by Federal courts as rules of decision in respect to property rights so regulated by the local law. And, as said by Woods, Circuit Judge, in Mitchell v. Lippincott, 2 Woods, 467, Fed. Cas. No. 9,865, which was an equity proceeding: "If the rule is ever to be applied to any case, it seems to me the construction of the 'married women's law' is a proper case for its application."

The Supreme Court, in affirming the decision of Judge Woods, 94 U. S. 767, 770, 24 L. ed. 315-317, in referring to the state law, and the state decisions, said: "This construction is a rule of property of the state, and we are as much bound by it as if it were a part of the statute. It is our duty to apply the law of the state as if we were sitting there as a local court, and this case were before us as such a tribunal." Again, referring to the local statute: "Where the intent to exclude the marital rights of the husband is doubtful or equivocal, or rests on speculation, the statute intervenes and fixes the character of the estate."

Mr. Justice Curtis, in Neves v. Scott, 13 How. 268, 271, 14 L. ed. 140, 142, while holding that the Supreme Court, upon general questions of equity, would not be bound by the decisions of the supreme court of Georgia, in the absence of a statute, a custom, or a local law, in effect recognized the idea of the right of a state to regulate legal and equitable property rights by local statutory law.

While the leading aspect of the principle that the Federal courts regard as rules of decision the decisions of state courts has reference to the construction of statutes and decisions affecting titles to real property, the rule is by no means limited to such subjects; for it includes as well the exposition of the local common law of a state by its highest courts, like preferences between creditors, as in Parker v. Phetteplace, 2 Cliff. 70, Fed. Cas. No. 10,746, like questions of possession of personal property, as in Allen v. Massey, 17 Wall. 351, 21 L. ed. 542, like questions relating to executions, as in United States v. Morrison, 4 Pet. 124, 7 L. ed. 804, the construction of wills, as in Smith v. Shriver, 3 Wall. Jr. 219, Fed. Cas. No. 13,108, the equitable rights of married women, as in Mitchell v. Lippincott, supra, the validity of a mortgage not truly describing the debt intended to be secured, as in Townsend v. Todd, 91 U. S. 452, 23 L. ed. 413, the power of a corporation to issue bonds, as in Thomas v. Scotland County, 3 Dill. 7, Fed. Cas. No. 13,909, as to the time when a corporation was formed, as in Stone v. Wisconsin, 94 U. S. 181, 24 L. ed. 102, and in respect to many other subjects relating to property rights within a state. See also 1 Bates, Fed. Eq. Proc. §§ 6-10; Bump, Fed. Proc. pp. 416-420.

Nothing could be more disturbing or hurtful to a community than the existence within its domain of two sets of law or two measures of equity respecting property rights; and this would be especially so with respect to a system which undertakes to regulate the social, domestic, and property status between the sexes, and the rights of a married woman as between her husband and creditors, who, in reliance upon the local law regulating the rights of property, deal with him in the ordinary course of business within the bounds of the state which creates and maintains its own local system of law and jurisprudence.

I cannot conceive, aside from diverse citizenship or a Federal statute expressly creating a right, that the Federal courts are, or ought to be, charged with any responsibility in the adjustment of property rights, equitable or otherwise, within a state between its citizens. The idea that such a right or responsibility exists contravenes a fundamental theory as to the distribution of power between the Federal and state governments. It is a strained, startling, and subversive construction that carries a bankrupt law, intended only to distribute the assets of a bankrupt estate between local creditors, according to the right or equity as existing independent of the bankrupt law, to the point of creating a substantive, enforceable, Federal right, which shall override the positive law and the public policy of a state with respect to the legal and equitable status of married women in property situations, domestic affairs, and business conditions relating to property rights within a state.

It must be always borne in mind, of course, that the issue here is not one alone between the married woman and her husband, but involves as well the equitable rights of creditors. This element distinguishes this case from equitable proceedings to protect the separate estate of the wife as against the husband.

The Massachusetts statute and the Massachusetts cases have established a local rule of property which the Federal courts are bound to recognize and enforce. It is said in Walker v. Walker (Walker v. Beal), 9 Wall. 743, 754, 19 L. ed. 814, 818: "The circuit courts of the United States, with full equity powers, have jurisdiction over executors and administrators, where the parties are citizens of different states, and will enforce the same rules in the adjustment of claims against them that the local courts administer in favor of their own citizens."

And in Ewing v. St. Louis, 5 Wall. 413, 419, 18 L. ed. 657, 659, which was an equity proceeding, it is said: "The complainant can ask no greater relief in the courts of the United States than he could obtain were he to resort to the state courts. If in the latter courts equity would afford no relief, neither will it in the former."

I agree with the reasoning of Judge Lowell in Re Talbot, 110 Fed. 924, which he adopted as the ground for disallowing the claim in question.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

BIG SIX DEVELOPMENT COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.

S. DUFFIELD MITCHELL.

(138 Fed. 279.)

1. Injunction—restraining operation of mine.

Injunction will lie to restrain a lessee
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

from continuing to mine ores on leased property after a forfeiture of the lease for breach of conditions as to manner of performing the work, although the title is disputed, and no action has been instituted at law; since a continuation of the alleged wrongful acts will tend to destroy the property.

2. Equity—cancellation of lease.

Having acquired jurisdiction to prevent a destruction of mining property by wrongful methods of operating the mine under a lease, equity may retain the case, and cancel the lease as a cloud on title.

3. Same.

Although equity will not enforce a forfeiture, it may remove a lease as a cloud on title after it has been declared forfeited, and the aid of the court is sought to prevent a threatened continuous trespass upon the property, which will tend to its destruction.

4. Lease—forfeiture—waiver.

Receipt of rent under a mining lease does not waive a forfeiture of it for continuous failure to work it in a workmanlike manner, as required by the terms of the lease.

5. Equity—remedy at law—forcible entry and detainer.

An action for forcible entry and detainer to recover possession of property leased, for mining purposes is not an adequate remedy, so as to defeat the jurisdiction of equity, where the mining operations are being carried on in such a way as to remove the supports of the surface and cause it to subside.

(Hook, Circuit J., dissents.)

(April 22, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri in favor of complainant in a suit to cancel a lease as a cloud on title. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Sanborn and Hook, Circuit Judges, and Riner, District Judge.

Mr. Frank Hagerman, with Messrs. John W. McAntire, Haywood Scott, Samuel McReynolds, and John W. Halliburton, for appellant:

Complainant's bill will not be entertained by a court of equity, as he has an adequate remedy at law.

Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 271, 15 L. ed. 633; Lewis v. Cocks, 23 Wall. 466, 23 L. ed. 70; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. ed. 1006, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327; Root v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 189, 26 L. ed. 975; Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 568, 28 L. ed. 247, 4 Sup. St. Rep. 232; Fussell v. Gregg, 113 U. S. 550, 28 L. ed. 993, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631; Church of Christ v. Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S. 17 C. C. A. 389, 36 U. S. App. 110, 70 Fed. 179; Smyth v. New Orleans Canal & Bkg. Co.

141 U. S. 656, 35 L. ed. 891, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 35 L. ed. 358; 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712; Whitehead v. Shattuck, 138 U. S. 146, 34 L. ed. 873, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 451, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Swan Land & Cattle Co. v. Frank, 148 U. S. 603, 37 L. ed. 577, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 691; Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 36 L. ed. 368, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 659.

Equity never, under any circumstances, lends its aid to enforce a forfeiture.

Horsburg v. Baker, 1 Pet. 237, 7 L. ed. 127; Marshall v. Vicksburg, 15 Wall, 149, 21 L. ed. 121; Livingston v. Tompkins, 4 Johns, Ch. 415, 8 Am. Dec. 598; 2 Story, Eq. § 1319; Farmers' v. M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 33, 23 L. ed. 199; Jones v.

New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. 101 U. S. 628, 25 L. ed. 1035; Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955; Minah Consol. Min. Co. v. Briscoe, 47 Fed. 276; Michigan Pipe Co. v. Fremont Ditch, Pipe Line, & Reservoir Co. 49 C. C. A. 324, 111 Fed. 284; Kellar v. Craig, 61 C. C. A. 366, 126 Fed. 630; Colgan v. Forest Oil Co. 194 Pa. 234, 75 Am. St. Rep. 695, 45 Atl. 119; Young v. Forest Oil Co. 194 Pa. 243, 45 Atl. 121; Ammons v. South Penn Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 610, 35 S. E. 1004; Harness v. Eastern Oil Co. 49 W. Va. 232, 38 S. E. 662; Erskine v. Forest Oil Co. 80 Fed. 583; Blodgett v. Lanyon Zinc Co. 58 C. C. A. 79, 120 Fed. 893; White, Mines & Mining Remedies, § 127; McKnight v. Kreutz, 51 Pa. 232; Core v. New York Petroleum Co.

Case Note.—A valuable addition to the discussion found in the above case is afforded by the opinion of Judge Phillips in the lower court, the material portions of which are as follows:

In modern equity jurisprudence in the Federal courts it has become a crystalized rule that "it is not enough that there is a remedy at law. It must be plain and adequate, or, in other words, as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity." Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. 216, 7 L. ed. 657; Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 74, 18 L. ed. 580; Preteca v. Maxwell Land Grant Co. 1 C. C. A. 607, 4 U. S. App. 326, 50 Fed. 674; Empire State-Idaho Min. & Developing Co. v. Bunker Hill & S. Min. & Concentrating Co. 58 C. C. A. 311, 121 Fed. 973. In the constantly developing complications growing out of new conditions and situations in our complex commercial and business affairs, the courts, in the very necessities of the occasions as they arise, must extend the protective, preservative hand of equity to meet the extraordinary demands of justice in the particular instance. The growth of mining industries of the country furnishes a striking illustration of the flexibility of equitable principles adaptable to the exigencies of the peculiar character and situation of such property. The owner of a tract of land chiefly valuable for its mineral deposits might have his property ruined if he were driven to the ordinary action at law for evicting the wrongdoer, burrowing beneath the comparatively worthless surface and extracting the ore. At the end of a tedious lawsuit, he might find the under-surface despoiled of its riches, and his judgment for damages might be against an insolvent wrongdoer. In such instance a court of equity, on proper showing in the bill, would not hesitate to lay its restraining hand on the despoiler pendente lite, and at the end place the rightful owner in the peaceable and full possession of the property. It should make no difference that the wrongdoer has been admitted into the ground under a license contract to mine, if, after he enter, he so prosecute his explorations and excavations in disregard of the reversionary rights and interests of the owner of the fee as to threaten irreparable injury thereto,—especially when such licensee is insolvent.

It inheres in the powers of courts of equity, in the case of mines and collieries, to entertain bills in the nature of bills quia timet and bills of peace, and to remove, as a cloud on the title, recorded leases, where the mining property is exposed to irreparable injury, as where the lessee exceeds the limits imposed by the lease,—especially where he is insolvent, and a continuation of his course and methods of mining in violation of the contract threatens great damage. Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 860, 922; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1398, and notes; Bispham, Eq. § 575; West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 703. In Allegany Oil Co. v. Bradford Oil Co. 21 Hun, 26, 32, it is held that, where the condition absolutely avoids the license in case of breach, the estate lapses without any entry or notice; citing Smith's Leading Cases, vol. 1, 8th ed. p. 109, notes to Dumpsor's Case. So a court of equity in that case granted relief by injunction, annulled the lease, and restrained the defendants from boring for oil thereon. In Pendill v. Union Min. Co. 64 Mich. 172, 31 N. W. 100, upon failure of the lessee to pay rent, and while he had ceased to operate the mine, the lessor took possession under a provision of the lease for re-entry in case of nonperformance, and filed a bill to remove the cloud of the forfeited lease. The court decreed an injunction, notwithstanding the lessee had expended large sums of money in mining operations, and paid the landowner large royalties, and the lessee's machinery and tools were in the ground at the time of the forfeiture, just as is claimed in the case at bar. In Oolagah Coal Co. v. McCaleb, 15 C. C. A. 270, 32 U. S. App. 330, 68 Fed. 87, the rights of the parties depended upon the legality of the license grant to each. The defendant being insolvent, Judge Thayer overruled the demurrer to the bill praying for an injunction to restrain the defendants from further mining coal and from obstructing the plaintiff in so doing, al-

52 W. Va. 276, 43 S. E. 128; Henne v. South Penn Oil Co. 52 W. Va. 192, 43 S. E. 147; Bowser v. Colby, 1 Hare, 109; Hoch v. Bass, 133 Pa. 328, 19 Atl. 360; Drake v. Lacoe, 157 Pa. 17, 27 Atl. 538; Lynch v. Versailles Fuel Gas Co. 165 Pa. 518, 30 Atl. 984; Re Brain, L. R. 18 Eq. 389; Peachy v. Somerset, 1 Strange, 447; Messersmith v. Messersmith, 22 Mo. 369; Bispham, Eq. § 181, p. 238; McCormick v. Rossi, 70 Cal. 474, 15 Pac. 35; Cross v. McClenahan, 54 Md. 21; Chicago & A. Oil & Min. Co. v. United States Petroleum Co. 57 Pa. 83; Morse v. O'Reilly, 4 Clark (Pa.) 75, Fed. Cas. No. 9,858; Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 113; Beecher v. Beecher, 43 Conn. 556; McKim v. Mason, 2 Md. Ch. 510; White v. Port Huron & M. R. Co. 13 Mich. 356; Vermont Copper Min. Co. v.

Ormsby, 47 Vt. 709; Clark v. Drake, 3 Chand. (Wis.) 253, 3 Pinney (Wis.) 228; Lowe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345.

It will not lend its aid to defeat an estate for breach of condition subsequent.

Warner v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 468; Douglas v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 127 Ill. 101, 20 N. E. 51; Birmingham v. Lesan, 77 Me. 494, 1 Atl. 151; Michigan State Bank v. Hammond, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 527; Smith v. Jewett, 40 N. H. 530; Livingston v. Tompkins, 4 Johns. Ch. 415, 8 Am. Dec. 598; Craig v. Hukill, 37 W. Va. 520, 16 S. E. 363; Bispham, Eq. § 181; Tiedeman, Eq. Jur. § 37.

It is essential in a bill to quiet title that plaintiff aver possession.

Whitehead v. Shattuck, 138 U. S. 146, 34 L. ed. 873, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Boston &

though the respective rights of the parties had not been determined in an action at law. So, in Preteca v. Maxwell Land Grant Co. supra, and Dimick v. Shaw, 36 C. C. A. 347, 94 Fed. 266, injunctions were sustained restraining mining operations, although the question of title between the parties had not been adjudicated at law. In Kentucky River Nav. Co. v. Com. 12 Bush, 8, the court sustained a bill in equity in behalf of the state to determine and forfeit the navigation company's right under a lease from the state, on the ground of its failure to keep in repair the works and improvements along the river, where the company was insolvent. Mr. Justice Field, in Erhardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S. 539, 28 L. ed. 1117, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566, said: "It is now a common practice in cases, where irremediable mischief is being done or threatened, going to the destruction of the substance of the estate, such as the extracting of ores from a mine, or the cutting down of timber, or the removal of coal, to issue an injunction, though the title to the premises be in litigation. The authority of the court is exercised in such cases, through its preventive writ, to preserve the property from destruction pending legal proceedings for the determination of the title." And it may be added, under the recognized practice in equity, that, where the court becomes possessed of the cause in equity, it will maintain jurisdiction to the end; determining the legal rights of the parties to the property by putting the rightful owner in peaceable possession. In Mehaffey's Appeal, 4 Pennyp. 502, the authorities are fully discussed, holding that a forfeited lease may be regarded as a paper, although functus officio, and is subject to cancellation by a court of equity. This should be so, for the reason that the lease in question runs for ten years from the 1st day of May, 1898. It was duly acknowledged and recorded in the recorder's office of Jasper county, Missouri, where the land is located; and as long as it remains uncanceled of record it constitutes a cloud on complainant's title. "In a case like this, equity follows the law, and will enforce the covenant of forfeiture, as essential to do justice. It is true, as 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

general statement, that equity abhors a forfeiture; but this is when it works loss that is contrary to equity, not when it works equity and protects the landowner against the indifference and laches of the lessee and prevents a great mischief." Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 142; Munroe v. Armstrong, 96 Pa. 307. So, Mr. Justice Miller, on the circuit in this court, in the case of Kansas City Elevator Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 3 McCrary, 463, 17 Fed. 200, said "that the right of re-entry and forfeiture, in regard to the terms of the lease, is a right which the courts at common law dealt with very rigidly and strictly, while a court of equity very often sets aside and restores the parties to their former position, and refuses compensation for any damage done. There is, however, a different mode of proceeding to declare the lease forfeited. When either party—lessor or lessee—claims that acts have been done which render the continuing of the relation no longer proper, such party can go into a court of equity, on general principles, and ask to have that lease set aside, canceled, and annulled. In that case the court in equity sits, holding the scales of justice evenly between the parties, and may say that it believes that such acts have been done by the lessee, for instance, as ought to terminate the agreement, or that he shall account by compensation and by payment of damages. And the court will declare the agreement at an end, and set aside and annulled, and will make such orders as seem proper and right."

Foremost among the matters of special defense excepted to is that of waiver or estoppel, predicated of the allegation that, after the complainant was advised of the alleged grounds of forfeiture, and after formal declaration of forfeiture, he accepted rentals from the defendant. It may be conceded to the defendant that, as a general rule, the acceptance of the payment of rent constituted a waiver of antecedent forfeiture; but the rule is as firmly established that where the obligation of the defendant to do, or to forbear doing, certain acts is a continuing obligation, which the tenant persists in disregarding, it is a con-

M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. 188 U. S. 632, 47 L. ed. 626, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434; Northern P. R. Co. v. Amacker, 1 C. C. A. 345, 7 U. S. App. 33, 49 Fed. 537; Gordan v. Jackson, 72 Fed. 88; Gombert v. Lyon, 80 Fed. 305; Erskine v. Forest Oil Co. 80 Fed. 583; Davidson v. Calkins, 92 Fed. 232; Cosmos Exploration Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Co. 61 L. R. A. 230, 50 C. C. A. 79, 112 Fed. 4; Black v. Jackson, 177 U. S. 349, 44 L. ed. 801, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648; Blalock v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 21 C. C. A. 208, 41 U. S. App. 761, 75 Fed. 43; Orton v. Smith, 18 How. 265, 15 L. ed. 394; United States v. Wilson, 118 U. S. 86, 30 L. ed. 110, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 991; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 30 L. ed. 1010, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1129; Mc-

Guire v. Pensacola City Co. 44 C. C. A. 670, 105 Fed. 677.

Waiver of forfeiture occurs by an acceptance of rent which became due after a breach committed by the tenant.

Taylor, Land. & T. § 497; Jackson ex dem. Lewis v. Schutz, 18 Johns. 174, 9 Am. Dec. 195; Jackson ex dem. Church v. Brownson, 7 Johns. 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258; Jones v. Roberts, 3 Hen. & M. 436; Keeler v. Davis, 5 Duer, 507; Croft v. Lumley, El. Bl. & El. 1069; Garnhart v. Finney, 40 Mo. 449, 93 Am. Dec. 303; Marsh v. Curteys; Cro. Eliz. pt. 2, p. 528; Harvey v. Oswald, Cro. Eliz. pt. 2, p. 553; Goodright ex dem. Walter v. Davids, 2 Cowp. 804; Boggs v. Black, 1 Binn. 333; Clarke v. Cummings, 5 Barb. 339; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 83; Roe ex dem. Gregson continuing cause of forfeiture, which "the landlord will not be precluded from taking advantage of by receiving rent which accrued after the breach was originally committed." Much less does it constitute a waiver where the landlord simply stands by, with knowledge of the breaches of the lease, where they are continuing from day to day. Bleecker v. Smith, 13 Wend. 531; Taylor, Land. & T. § 500; Conger v. Duryee, 24 Hun, 617; Douglas v. Herms, 53 Minn. 209, 64 N. W. 1112; Gluck v. Elkan, 36 Minn. 80, 30 N. W. 446; Ainley v. Balsden, 14 U. C. Q. B. 535; Farwell v. Easton, 63 Mo. 446; Mulligan v. Hollingsworth, 99 Fed. 220, 221. In Alexander v. Hodges, 41 Mich. 691, 694, 3 N. W. 187, 188, Campbell, Ch. J., said: "The desire of the landlord to avoid coming to extremities if the lessee would mend his ways cannot be regarded as a waiver, but was laudable and calculated to further the interests of both. Where there is such a continuous obligation, there is nothing to prevent the exercise of forbearance until it ceases to be desirable." The requirements imposed by the lease at bar were continuing obligations, and were violated up to the hour of the application for a temporary injunction herein, if the complainant's testimony is to prevail.

Other matters of special defense set up in the amended answer were substantially pleaded in the original answer, exceptions to which were sustained by the court. Their repetition in the amended answer adds no virtue to the error, nor force to the matter. They are statements to the effect that the defendant's subtenants, in their manner of working the mine, pursued the course approved by other mine operators in that locality, and that they worked the mines as they deemed most advantageous for the lessor, and as best they could under the circumstances of the local situation, and the like. Such special matters constitute no defense. The requirements of the contract, as its terms have received settled construction by courts of recognized authority, must control.

For instance, the gravamen of the complaint is that the defendant's sublessees were mining in such manner as to permanently injure the surface superstructure of the premises, and do irreparable injury to the mineral deposits. The law is oppositely expressed by the court in Robertson v. Youghiogheny River Coal Co. 172 Pa. 566, 33 Atl. 706. There the defendant sought to prove that it was regarded as good mining to take out the coal in the manner pursued: that it was skillfully done, in respect of the depth of the surface and the condition of the rock over the coal; that the surface over this particular deposit was light, and the rock was rotten or broken, so that it would be impossible to take the coal without doing some injury to the surface; that the coal was mined according to approved methods of mining practised throughout that region, as approved by experienced mining engineers; and that the coal under such light surface could not be mined by any known method without doing some injury to the surface. This evidence was excluded. The court said: "The owner of the coal, though he has a right to take it out, must support the surface above. . . . This is a duty devolving upon the owner of the coal, who takes it out by virtue of the relations between the two parties; and therefore, if the coal is taken out, and the surface is injured in any way by reason of taking the coal out, the defendants are bound to make that injury good. . . . It does not make any difference whether the mining is done in the ordinary and usual way of mining coal, or whether there is negligence in the mining of the coal. It is an absolute right that the plaintiffs have to have their surface supported, and if that support is interfered with, intentionally, negligently, or otherwise, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover." So, Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, 5th ed. § 716, state the general rule to be that "where, as is often the case, the title to the surface of the land is in one person, and the title to the minerals underneath the surface is in another, together with the right to excavate for and remove them. . . . Unless there is some peculiar law or contract affecting the rights of the parties the miner is in such case

v. Harrison, 2 T. R. 425; Arrsby v. Woodward, 6 Barn. & C. 519; 2 Platt, Leases, 468; Taylor, Land. & T. § 497, 498; Coon v. Brickett, 2 N. H. 163; Jackson ex dem. Blanchard v. Allen, 3 Cow. 220; Gombor v. Hackett, 6 Wis. 323, 70 Am. Dec. 467; Bleecker v. Smith, 13 Wend. 530; Goodright ex dem. Charter v. Cordwent, 6 T. R. 219; Camp v. Scott, 47 Conn. 370; Carroll v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 1 Abb. App. Dec. 320; Clark v. Jones, 1 Denio, 516, 43 Am. Dec. 706; Rogers v. Snow, 118 Mass. 118; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 97 Mass. 188, 93 Am. Dec. 75; Guild v. Richards, 16 Gray, 309; Chapman v. Harney, 100 Mass. 353; 2 Kerr, Real Prop. §

1282; White, Mines & Mining Remedies, § 256.

Messrs. S. Duffield Mitchell and Thomas Dolan, for appellee:

In controversies respecting mines and mineral land a court of equity will take jurisdiction of a bill: (a) To quiet title; (b) to cancel a forfeited lease as a cloud upon title; and (c) to enjoin defendant from asserting rights thereunder, and settle the rights of the parties.

17 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 278, 279; Story, Eq. Jur. § 860; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1398; Biapham, Eq. § 575; West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 703; Allegany Oil Co. v. Bradford absolutely bound to leave sufficient support to the surface to prevent it, while in a natural state, from falling in." Indeed, in the absence of a special contract limiting the right, it is the well-settled rule in such mining contracts that "the owner of the surface is entitled to absolute support, not as an easement of right depending on a supposed grant, but as a proprietary right at common law. . . . The right of a surface owner has been likened to that of an owner of an upper story of a house, who holds his tenement with an implied right to support from the owner of the lower story. . . . If the owner of land grant a lease of minerals beneath the surface, with power to work and get them, in the most general terms, still the lessee must leave a reasonable support to the surface; and so, conversely, when the minerals are demised and the surface is retained by the lessor, there arises a prima facie inference at common law, upon such demise, that the lessor is demising them in such a manner as is consistent with the retention by himself of his own right of support." Snyder, Mines & Mining, § 1020. "The word 'surface,' as used in the books, means not simply the geometrical superficies, without thickness, but includes whatever earth, soil, or land lies above and superincumbent on the line." § 1030. The rule is thus stated in Wood on Nuisances, § 192: "The person owning the minerals is bound, at his peril, not to cause a subsidence of the surface, even though he cannot work his mines at all without doing so, and no degree of care or skill exercised in the mining operations will shield him from liability to the owner of the surface for all damages sustained by reason of any subsidence thereof. A custom, as between the owner of the surface and the owner of the mines, entitling the owner of the mines to cause a subsidence of the surface if necessary to the working of the mines, will not be operative to shield the mine owner from liability; and such a custom has been held bad and wholly void." This rule is recognized and enforced in Brown v. Torrence, 88 Pa. 186. In Humphries v. Brogden, 12 Q. B. 739, it was held that, notwithstanding the jury found that the defendant had worked faithfully according to the custom of the country, but without leaving sufficient pillars of support, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. After discussing the question, the court asserted the rule to be that, in the absence of any express reservation, the owner of the surface is entitled to protection, without any reference to the nature of the strata of mineral deposits or the difficulty of propping the surface, or the comparative value of the surface and the mineral. In Randolph v. Halden, 44 Iowa, 327, the defendant sought to show a custom among miners, when the coal is exhausted, to remove the supporting pillars. The court ruled that such custom was wholly inadmissible, for the reason that "it is made manifest if the pillars are removed the mine will not be and cannot be left in a working condition at the expiration of the lease; and it is also manifest that the removal of the pillars of coal will cause depressions on the surface of the ground." The supreme court of Ohio, where there is much coal mining pursued, recognizes this doctrine to its fullest extent. In Burgner v. Humphrey, 41 Ohio St. 340, after reviewing the authorities, the court said: "This obligation to protect the superincumbent soil exists, whether there is a conveyance of the surface, reserving the minerals, or a grant of the minerals without a conveyance of the surface. In either case the presumption arises that the owner of the minerals is not, by removing them wholly or in part, to injure the owner of the soil above. . . . The right which the surface has to support is a part of the freehold, and not an easement. It is a right independent of the nature of the strata, and the mine owner can only work so far as is consistent with this right, and is liable if he violates it. The highest care and skill in the working of the mine is no defense whatever, if injury results to the surface from a removal of the subjacent strata." See also Randolph v. Halden, supra; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schaefer, 135 Ill. 210, 25 N. E. 788; Yandes v. Wright, 66 Ind. 319, 32 Am. Rep. 109; Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co. 50 Mich. 604, 16 N. W. 161; Marvin v. Brewster Iron Min. Co. 55 N. Y. 538, 14 Am. Rep. 322; Jones v. Wagner, 66 Pa. 429, 5 Am. Rep. 385; Carlin v. Chappel, 101 Pa. 348, 47 Am. Rep. 722; New Jersey Zinc Co. v. New Jersey Franklinite Co. 13 N. J. Eq. 322, 341.

Oil Co. 21 Hun. 26; Oolagah Coal Co. v. McCaleb, 15 C. C. A. 270, 32 U. S. App. 330, 68 Fed. 87; Pendill v. Kenton Min. Co. 64 Mich. 172, 31 N. W. 100; Preteca v. Maxwell Land Grant Co. 1 C. C. A. 607, 4 U. S. App. 328, 50 Fed. 674; Dimick v. Shaw, 36 C. C. A. 347, 94 Fed. 266; Kentucky River Nav. Co. v. Com. 13 Bush. 435; Erhardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S. 537, 28 L. ed. 1116, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Anderson v. Harvey, 10 Gratt. 386.

Riner, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill in equity, brought by S. Duffield Mitchell, a citizen of the state of Pennsylvania, against the Big Six Development Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Missouri, to cancel a lease as a cloud upon plaintiff's title to certain lands, to establish his right of possession therein, and to enjoin the lessee from mining ore in the leased premises. The lease was dated May 31, 1898, and, by its terms, was to run ten years from date. It provided that the parties of the second part should commence the work of sinking shafts within ten days after the date of the lease: "And shall keep and have on said tract of land, sufficient pumps and machinery to drain the same of water, so as to permit efficient mining thereof, and shall properly operate the same, and shall increase the capacity thereof from time to time as same becomes necessary."

"The said parties of the second part, their successors and assigns, shall mine said land in a good, thorough, and workmanlike manner, shall keep all shafts and drifts well and securely timbered and supported, and shall not remove such timbers and supports so as to endanger the ground or to permit the same to cave or fall in. Mining shall be carried on in good faith continuously, and shall not be suspended at any time except on written permission of the party of the first part. All lead and zinc ores shall be cleaned and prepared for market on said land, and no rough or crush stuff shall be removed therefrom to be cleaned; nor shall minerals or crush stuff from other land be brought or cleaned on said land without the written permission of the said party of the first part."

"The said parties of the second part, their successors and assigns, shall keep in a book a correct account of all lead and zinc ores mined, the kinds and weights thereof, to whom sold, and the price received therefor, which book shall be open to the inspection of the party of the first part at all reasonable times."

"The said parties of the second part, their successors and assigns, shall pay to the party of the first part, at the Bank of Joplin, Missouri, on Monday of each and every week, as rent and royalty, twelve (12) per cent of the market value of all ores mined and sold during the preceding week, and shall furnish at the time of said payment a written statement of all ores sold, to whom sold, and the price received therefor."

"The parties of the second part, their successors and assigns, shall have the right to erect all necessary buildings and machinery on said land for the purpose of mining and draining, crushing and cleaning ores thereon, and to remove the same at the expiration or forfeiture of this lease, except timbering and other materials necessary to support the ground, which timbering and improvements immediately on their being placed in the ground shall become the property of the party of the first part. All uses of the ground not inconsistent with thorough and proper mining, as herein required, are hereby reserved to the party of the first part."

"Any failure at any time on the part of the parties of the second part, their successors and assigns, to comply with and perform in good faith the requirements of this lease shall end and determine the same, and said party of the first part, his heirs and assigns, may declare an ouster and forfeiture of said lease, and may re-enter and hold said demised premises without recourse to law in as full and complete a manner as if this lease had never been made. Nor shall the failure of the party of the first part, his heirs or assigns, to enter upon and take possession of said premises on account of the failure of the parties of the second part to keep and perform the conditions and agreements herein contained, be construed to be a waiver of the rights of the party of the first part to declare an ouster and re-enter and forfeit said demised premises for any other and subsequent breach of the requirements of this lease."

The bill alleges that the plaintiff was the owner in fee simple and in possession of a tract of land situate in Jasper county, Missouri, and described as the north half of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, of section 4, township 27, range 32, containing 120 acres, more or less; that on the 31st of May, 1898, plaintiff executed and delivered a mining lease upon the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 4, containing 40 acres, the same being a part of the 120 acres above described; that, by deed of assignment duly executed and acknowledged by the parties of the second part to the lease, they conveyed all of their interest and title therein to defendant; that defendant subdivided the tract of land into mining lots, and subleased the same to miners and mining companies, who have been conducting mining operations thereon; that the defendant, by its mining rules and regulations, declared and posted according to law, imposed upon its several sublessees the duties and obligations imposed upon it by the lease with reference to sinking and driving shafts, timbering, supporting the surface of the land, preventing the surface from caving or falling in, pumping and draining water, cleaning and preparing for market all ores produced from the mine; that defendant performed none of these acts, nor did it own any machinery, pumps, or buildings located on the land; that the defendant kept an account of all lead and zinc ores mined, the kind and weight thereof, to whom the same was sold, and paid to the plaintiff the royalty due thereon, as provided by the terms of the lease. It is then alleged in the bill that "defendant corporation, its sublessees and licensees, have failed to comply with and perform the conditions and requirements of said lease, in this: That it and they have failed and refused to keep the deeper drifts in said land drained of water, to permit efficient mining thereof, and have failed to mine said ground in a workmanlike manner; and have removed and caused to be removed a pillar or pillars in said ground, which, in mining said ground, had been left to support the surface and prevent the same from caving or falling in, and have failed to properly timber and secure the drifts of said ground from caving, and have failed to timber certain shafts securely and properly; by reason of which failure the ground has subsided, caved, and fallen in, to the great detriment and damage of said land. That, by reason of its failure to comply with the requirements and conditions of said lease, the defendant has forfeited the same, and the said lease, by its terms, has ended and determined; and the plaintiff, electing to enforce said forfeiture as against defendant, on account of said failure to comply with the conditions and requirements of said lease, did on the 7th day of July, 1903, declare said lease forfeited, and made re-entry on said described land, declared an ouster of the defendants therefrom, and posted upon said land a notice of forfeiture, . . . and duly served same on defendant on said 7th day of July, 1903, by delivering a true copy thereof to J. W. Allen, president of defendant. That, notwithstanding the re-entry by plaintiff on said land by the terms of said lease, at his election, to re-enter and oust defendant from said land for forfeiture of said lease by reason of failure to comply with its conditions and requirements, defendant, its officers and agents, refused to surrender said lease, and claim 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) and assert rights thereunder adverse to plaintiff, and threaten to continue to claim and assert said rights to the said land of plaintiff, and threaten to continue to mine or cause said land to be mined, and to take the ores, rock, and earth therefrom, to the irreparable damage of plaintiff."

It is then alleged that the defendant corporation was organized solely and only to take over and hold the title to the plaintiff's lands; that it has no other property or assets than the lease; that at the organization the defendant corporation received nothing but the lease as property, in full payment for its entire capital stock; that the defendant divides its royalty, earnings, or profits derived under said lease on plaintiff's land among its stockholders, when received; that the defendant is insolvent; and that plaintiff's remedy at law would be inadequate. The plaintiff then alleges that the lease creates a cloud upon his title to the land in controversy, and prays that the court may decree that the defendant has no interest in or title to the lease; that the title of the plaintiff to the land in controversy is unaffected by the lease or any claim of the defendant; that the lease be declared to be no longer in force and effect in favor of the defendant, and that it may be canceled, annulled, and surrendered into the possession of the plaintiff; and that the defendant, its officers, servants, and agents, be enjoined from asserting any claim under the lease, and from continuing in possession of the land in controversy. To this bill the defendant demurred, and the demurrer was overruled. It then filed an answer, the testimony was taken, and the case came on for final hearing, resulting in a decree declaring the lease a cloud upon plaintiff's title, establishing his right of possession in the property, and enjoining the lessee from mining ores in the leased premises.

It was insisted by appellant that a court of equity had no jurisdiction, upon the pleadings and evidence, to grant the relief given by the court in this case. And at the argument it was said that this bill should not be maintained: (1) Because a bill for an injunction can only be maintained, where the title is disputed, after a trial at law, or after an action at law has been commenced; (2) because a cloud upon the title cannot be removed unless the complainant is in possession; and (3) because it seeks to enforce a forfeiture.

The trespass here complained of, as disclosed by the record, is not an ordinary case of trespass upon lands, of temporary duration, but, as we think the evidence shows, was a continuous trespass, which threatened to destroy the character of the property as a mine, and would render the plaintiff's interest therein valueless. Threatened and continuous injuries to mines, quarries, timber growing upon lands, buildings located thereon, or other improvements of a permanent character, are enjoined, because, as has been said, such acts "alter the character of the property, and also tend to destroy it, and occasion irreparable loss and damage." Courthope v. Mapplesden, 10 Ves. Jr. 290; Scully v. Rose, 61 Md. 408; Erhardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S. 537, 28 L. ed. 1116, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Jerome v. Ross, 7 Johns. Ch. 315, 11 Am. Dec. 484; Hammond v. Winchester, 82 Ala. 470, 2 So. 892; Snyder v. Hopkins, 31 Kan. 557, 3 Pac. 367. In such cases the threatened injuries are to the res, and diminish the value of the property itself; and an injunction will be granted to prevent the continuing waste or continuing trespass, although the plaintiff is not in possession, and although the legal title has not been settled or questioned by an action at law. Story, Eq. Jur. § 860; Union P. R. Co. v. Kansas City Elevator Co. 3 McCrary, 463, 17 Fed. 200; Cowper v. Baker, 17 Ves. Jr. 128; West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 703; Snyder v. Hopkins, 31 Kan. 559, 3 Pac. 367; Lacustrine Fertilizer Co. v. Lake Guano & Fertilizer Co. 82 N. Y. 486; Oolagah Coal Co. v. McCaleb, 15 C. C. A. 270, 32 U. S. App. 330, 68 Fed. 87; High, Inj. 736; Allegheny Oil Co. v. Snyder, 45 C. C. A. 604, 106 Fed. 764; Peck v. Ayers & L. Tie Co. 53 C. C. A. 551, 116 Fed. 273; Logan Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Great Southern Gas & Oil Co. 61 C. C. A. 359, 126 Fed. 623.

If the only relief sought by the bill in this case was to remove the cloud upon plaintiff's title, it may well be doubted whether the bill could be sustained. Orton v. Smith, 18 How. 263, 15 L. ed. 393; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 30 L. ed. 1010, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1129. But the bill goes further, and seeks to enjoin the defendant from committing waste and destroying the property as a mining property. In such a case jurisdiction in equity attaches, even where the plaintiff is not in possession. And, having obtained jurisdiction for that purpose, the court may, for the purpose of preventing a multiplicity of suits, retain it for further relief, and may remove a cloud upon the title, quiet the title, and determine the right of possession.

In the Elevator Case above cited, Mr. Justice Miller said: "When either party, lessor or lessee, claims that acts have been done which render the continuing of the relation no longer proper, such party can go into a court of equity, on general principles, and ask to have that lease set aside, canceled, and annulled. In that case the court of equity sits, holding the scales of justice 1 L.R.A.(N.S.)

evenly between the parties, and may say that it believes that such acts have been done by the lessee, for instance, as ought to terminate the agreement. . . . And the court will declare the agreement at an end, and set aside and annulled, and will make such orders as seem proper and right."

We think, both upon reason and authority, that in a case such as this, where the injury is to the res (that is to say, where irreparable mischief is being done or threatened, going to the very substance of the estate), a court of equity has jurisdiction, not only for the purpose of restraining waste or threatened trespass, but, having acquired jurisdiction for that purpose, it may also proceed to settle the question of title and to remove the cloud; and this was the view taken by the circuit court.

While the bill in this case is not carefully drawn, yet we think sufficient is presented by the record to invoke the jurisdiction.

It is also urged that the bill cannot be maintained because it is a bill to enforce a forfeiture, and equity never lends its aid to enforce a forfeiture or penalty. But, as we understand it, the theory of the bill is not that, but is that the forfeiture was complete before the bill was filed, that the lease was dead, and that the defendant was threatening and was guilty of a continuous trespass. We think the bill may well be maintained upon this ground. Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 98 Mo. App. 248, 71 S. W. 696. While the right of a lessor to determine, without recourse to the courts, a lease of real estate, as forfeited, and re-enter upon the premises, is limited to the most technical terms and conditions upon which the right is to be exercised, yet we think there can be no doubt but what the right exists in a case where the terms of a contract and the acts complained of justify such a course. He must, it is true, be able to point out specifically some clear act in violation of the terms of the lease, which will authorize the forfeiture. The circuit court found that the plaintiff had made a sufficient showing in this regard, and, from our examination of the record, we are not prepared to say that the conclusion reached was erroneous.

It is also urged that after the notice of forfeiture, and on the 5th day of October, 1903, the plaintiff received and accepted the rents or royalties due under the lease, and that this act upon his part constituted a waiver of the forfeiture. The ground of forfeiture, as we understand the record, was the continued failure of the defendant to mine in a workmanlike manner, and to support the ground so that it would not cave, and the defendant's violation of these covenants of the lease continued up to the time the temporary injunction was issued. We think the receipt of the rent or royalty was not a waiver of the forfeiture. A waiver rests upon an estoppel, and there was no estoppel here: (1) Because a continuing breach of the covenants of a lease is not waived by receipt of rent. Farwell v. Easton, 63 Mo. 446; Taylor, Land. & T. 500; and (2) because the receipt of rent after the institution of a suit to recover the property is not a waiver. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 387; Cleve v. Mazzoni, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 2001, 45 S. W. 88.

It is also insisted that the bill cannot be maintained because there was a complete remedy at law by an action for forcible entry and detainer. Our examination of the record leads us to the conclusion that this contention cannot be sustained. Such an action would not have prevented the extraction of the ore and removal of the earth, so that continuous cavings would have occurred, during the time spent in the various courts in reviewing the trial for forcible entry and detainer by successive appeals until a final decision was reached. On the other hand, we think it is a case where there would be no adequate remedy at law, because the law, as stated by the Supreme Court, in regard to the jurisdiction in suits in equity of courts of the United States, in view of the statute which declares that there shall be no remedy in equity where there is a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, is that the remedy at law must be as efficient to the ends of justice and its complete and prompt administration as the remedy in equity; and we think the record clearly shows in this case all of the injuries that could be inflicted upon the property might well be inflicted before such a proceeding could have effect.

We have carefully examined the evidence set out in the record, and, while it is somewhat conflicting, we think it is entirely sufficient to sustain the findings of the circuit court. Applying the rule so well stated by Judge Sanborn, of this court, in the case of Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 61 C. C. A. 138, 126 Fed. 82, that "the legal presumption is that the finding and decree of a court of chancery are right, and they should not be disturbed or modified by an appellate court unless an obvious error has intervened in the application of the law, or some grave mistake has been made in the consideration of the facts," we think it does not so clearly appear that the defendant was not violating the terms of the lease, in failing to properly support the surface of the ground and to properly conduct its mining operations, that the finding of the lower court should be reversed. The evidence, we think, not only permitted, but compelled, the conclusion reached by the circuit court, that the mining operations were carried on in disregard of the covenant in the lease that the land should be so supported that there would be no caving. Indeed, the evidence is strong that these mining operations were conducted in the most careless manner, and with a view to extracting the largest amount of ore with the least expense, in utter disregard of plaintiff's rights. In other words, if the defendant had been permitted to proceed with the work in the manner in which it was being done at the time the injunction issued, it would necessarily have resulted in great injury, if not in total destruction of the property as a mining property.

Upon the whole record, the conclusion reached is that the decree of the Circuit Court must be affirmed.

Hook, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

One effect of the decision is that, whenever a court of equity may issue an injunction in aid of a cause of action that is purely legal, it may for that reason also draw to itself cognizance of the entire controversy. I think that this is an inadmissible enlargement of equitable jurisdiction. Kellar v. Craig, 61 C. C. A. 366, 126 Fed. 630. A lessor who claims that his lessees in possession have forfeited the lease by breach of condition subsequent has an adequate and efficient remedy at law by notice and action for wrongful detention. But if there is fear that, before the remedy can be made effectual, the leased property will be materially damaged by the lessees, he may apply to a court of equity to restrain the threatened damage pending his proceedings in the court of law; and thus may the rights of the lessor be fully secured, consistently with the preservation by the courts of their respective spheres of jurisdiction.

Again, this was a suit in equity to enforce a forfeiture. Kellar v. Craig, supra. It will not do to say that its purpose was to restrain trespass after a forfeiture had occurred through the acts of the lessees and the notice to quit. This would seem to be reasoning in a circle. The real issue in the case was whether in fact there was a forfeiture,—whether the notice to quit amounted to anything. If the acts had not been committed, the lessees would have been entitled to remain in possession notwithstanding the notice. The case is not that of a trespass by a stranger to the title.

Nor can the suit be maintained as one to quiet title, the defendant being in actual possession. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. 188

U. S. 632, 47 L. ed. 626, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434; Cosmos Exploration Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Co. 61 L. R. A. 230, 50 C. C. A. 79, 112 Fed. 4.

Petition for writ of certiorari denied by Supreme Court of United States October 16, 1905.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Re PETITION OF MARION MULFORD for Leave to Administer the Estate of Harriet M. Richards, Deceased.

(217 Ill. 242.)

1. Executor—right to act as.

The right to act as executor is not a privilege or immunity within the protection of the Federal Constitution.

2. Same—nonresidents.

Nonresidents may be denied permission to act as executors of local estates.

3. Domicil—change of.

One's character as a nonresident is not changed by coming into the state for the purpose of administering upon an estate, with the intention of remaining there as long as his duties may require, if he retains his domicil in another state.

(October 24, 1905.)

Subject Note.—Right of nonresidents to act as executors or administrators.

I. Scope, 341.

II. Nonresidents as executors.

a. Eligibility for appointment.

1. Rule independent of statutes, 341.

2. Rule under statutes, 342.

b. Nonresidence after appointment.

1. Continued nonresidence, 343.

2. Change of residence, 344.

III. Nonresidents as administrators.

a. Eligibility.

1. Rule independent of statutes, 346.

2. Rule under statutes, 347.

b. Change of residence after appointment, 350.

IV. Résumé, 351.

I. Scope.

Ancillary administration constitutes such a distinct branch of the law relative to executors and administrators that cases involving that subject are not here considered,—the few exceptions being cases in which it is apparent that the fact that the administration was not the original one did not in any way control the decision.

Other questions excluded from the discussion are those which relate respectively to the right to attack collaterally the appointment of a nonresident as executor or administrator (L.R.A. (N.S.))

APPPEAL by petitioner from an order of the Probate Court of Will County denying him letters testamentary upon the estate of Harriet M. Richards, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John T. White and Morrill Sprague, for appellant:

There can be no denial to citizens of other states of any of the rights and privileges which are accorded to the citizens of the state enacting the law.

Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. ed. 382; Kimmish v. Ball, 129 U. S. 217, 32 L. ed. 695, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 407, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 47 L. ed. 108, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, 20 L. ed. 449; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347; Guy v. Baltimore, 100 U. S. 434, 25 L. ed. 743; Roby v. Smith, 131 Ind. 342, 15 L. R. A. 792, 31 Am. St. Rep. 439, 30 N. E. 1093; Shirk v. La Fayette, 52 Fed. 857.

All persons capable of making wills, and some others besides, are capable of being made executors, except such as are expressly forbidden by law.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 751.

Whom the testator will trust, so will the law.

Senior v. Ackerman, 2 Redf. 302.

istrator, and the eligibility of a foreign corporation for such a trust. See the note to Bolton v. Schriever, 18 L. R. A. 242, on "Collateral impeachment of findings as to jurisdictional facts on which administration of a decedent's estate is based;" also the note to Cone Export & Commission Co. v. Poole, 24 L. R. A. 289, on "Recognition or exclusion of foreign corporations."

For obvious reasons the question "What constitutes nonresidence?" is not considered.

The right of a resident appointee or nominee of a nonresident to letters of administration is manifestly not within the scope of the note as indicated by its title.

II. Nonresidents as executors.

a. Eligibility for appointment.

1. Rule independent of statutes.

At common law a nonresident may be an executor. Fulgham v. Fulgham, 119 Ala. 403, 24 So. 851; Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309.

Residence in another state creates no insuperable objection to the appointment of an executrix. Hammond v. Wood, 15 R. I. 566, 10 Atl. 623.

Additional support for this view is found in the practice at common law, when a nonresident was named as executor, to appoint a temporary administrator to take charge of the estate until the executor should come Nonresidence in the state where the will is admitted to probate is not a disqualification of the person named therein as executor.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 753, 5.

A man can have a residence in Illinois for a part of the year and in another state for the remainder of the year; and this, even though his domicil is continuously in the latter state.

Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. 11, 32 Am. Dec. 423; Tazewell County v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 197; Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 312; Keller v. Carr, 40 Minn. 428, 42 N. W. 292.

In statutory connections there is a distinction between "actual residence" and "legal residence."

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 125; Lawson v. Adlard, 46 Minn. 243, 48 N. W. 1010; into the state to qualify. Examples of cases recognizing this practice are—Slater v. May, 2 Ld. Raym. 1071, 1 Salk. 42; Taynton v. Hannay, 3 Bos. & P. 26; Ex parte Galluchat, 1 Hill, Eq. 148; Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch, 9, 3 L. ed. 471.

And the right of a nonresident to qualify as executor is recognized in Taylor's Goods, 61 L. J. Prob. N. S. 93 [1892] P. 90, where, upon a showing of urgent necessity, administration with the will annexed was granted under 20 & 21 Vict. chap. 77, § 73, to the partner of one of the executors, who was requested by the will to act for him in event of his absence, such administration to continue until one or the other of the executors, both of whom were nonresidents, should come in and take a grant of probate.

But the permanent removal of an executor from the state without having qualified puts it out of his power to act, and is equivalent to a renunciation of his executorship. Chanet v. Villeponteaux, 3 M'Cord, L. 29.

Independently of statute, a nonresident, even though an alien, may be named and appointed executor. BREEN v. KEHOE.

But nonresidence was thought, in Carthey v. Webb, 6 N. C. (2 Murph.) 268, to disqualify an alien enemy from acting as executor, though his character as an alien enemy would not alone affect his eligibility.

In refusing to sustain the probate court in making nonresidence a ground for removing from their trust the persons to whom ancillary letters testamentary had been issued, the court, in Wilev v. Brainerd, 11 Vt. 107, said that a nonresident ought not to be appointed executor except in particular cases, where there is a sufficient and apparent reason for the contrary course.

2. Rule under statutes.

Nonresidence is a statutory disqualification for executors in some states. Whitaker v. Wright, 35 Ark. 511; Holladay v. Holladay, 16 Or. 147, 19 Pac. 81.

A similar statute once existed in Alabama; 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hanson v. Graham, 82 Cal. 631, 7 L. R. A. 127, 23 Pac. 56; Long v. Ryan, 30 Gratt. 720.

Messrs. Knox & Akin, for appellees:

Statutes making discriminations between residents and nonresidents, and not between citizens, are valid.

Robinson v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 112 N. Y. 215, 2 L. R. A. 636, 19 N. E. 625; Lemmon v. Peopple, 20 N. Y. 562; Cummings v. Wingo, 31 S. C. 427, 10 S. E. 107; Duryea v. Muse, 117 Wis. 399, 94 N. W. 365; People ex rel. Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 585, 51 N. E. 785.

The right to inherit and the right to devise are purely statutory, and their exercise is subject to such restrictions and limitations as the legislature may impose.

Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122, 41 L. R. A. 446, 47 N. E. 321.

If a state may deny the privilege alto-but since its repeal nonresidence is not a disqualification. Fulgham v. Fulgham, 119 Ala. 403, 24 So. 851.

The same is probably true in Montana since the enactment of Mont. Code Civ. Proc. 1895, § 2401, which, in reciting the disqualifications of persons as executors, omits the provision of an earlier statute, excluding an applicant "who is absent from or resides out of the state," although the court, in Re Connor, 16 Mont. 465, 41 Pac. 271, expressly reserved its opinion as to the effect of the new statute.

The omission of nonresidents from the statutory enumeration of persons disqualified to serve as executors authorizes the appointment of nonresidents to act as executors. Hecht v. Carey (Wyo.) 78 Pac. 705; Rice v. Tilton (Wyo.) 80 Pac. 828.

A nonresident may be appointed executor where nonresidents are not mentioned in the statute declaring what persons are ineligible for that trust, although there is a further statutory provision that "where a person absent from the state. . . is named executor, if there is another executor who accepts the trust and qualifies, the latter may have letters testamentary and administer the estate until the return of the absentee, . . . who may then be admitted as joint executor. If there is no other executor, letters of administration with the will annexed must be granted, but the court may, in its discretion, revoke them on the return of the absent executor," since the words "a person absent from the state" mean a person who is out of the state, and has made no application for letters. Re Brown, 80 Cal. 381, 22 Pac. 233.

A statute providing that for nonresidence the court "may" remove an executor will not be construed absolutely to forbid the appointment of a nonresident, but makes such nonresidence ground for the exercise of discretion in appointment. BREEN v. KEHOE. See also infra, H. b. 1,—Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309. And see infra, III. a, 2,—Child v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 357; Re Neubert, gether, when it grants it, it may annex to the grant any conditions which it supposes to be required by its interests or policy.

Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 493, 12 L. ed. 1170.

The exclusion of nonresidents from the office of executor or administrator is essential to the due and proper administration of the estates of decedents.

Child v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 357.

Executors and administrators are public officers.

Wharton, Conf. L. § 552; Woerner, Am. Law of Administration, § 172; Child v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 357; O'Brien's Estate, 63 Iowa, 622, 19 N. W. 797.

A man's legal residence is not changed when he leaves it for a temporary and transient object, meaning to return when that object is attained.

58 S. C. 469, 36 S. E. 908; Re Ulhorn, 12 Ohio C. C. 765; Sarkie's Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 157; Sargent's Estate, 62 Wis. 130, 22 N. W. 131; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gould, 64 Iowa, 343, 20 N. W. 464.

In Georgia the executor must be not only a resident, but a citizen of the United States. Carnochan v. Abrahams, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 197; Walker v. Torrance, 12 Ga. 604.

But in New York both alienage and non-residence must exist in order to disqualify. McGregor v. McGregor, 1 Keyes, 133, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 92.

If objection is made, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2636, 2638, to the appointment of a nonresident as executor, he may, by the express provisions of the latter section, entitle himself to letters testamentary upon giving bond, provided he is a citizen of the United States. Demarest's Estate, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 302; Vernon's Estate, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 304, note; Re Magoun, 41 Misc. 352, 84 N. Y. Supp. 940.

In the absence of any such objection a nonresident may qualify as executor without giving bond. Demarest's Estate, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 302; Vernon's Estate, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 304, note.

If a nonresident named as executor has an office within the state for the regular transaction of business in person, and the will provides that he may act without giving security, he is entitled, by the express provisions of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2638, to receive letters even over objection, without giving security. Vernon's Estate, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 304, note.

Nonresident officers of a foreign corporation personally engaged from day to day in transaction of its business in its New York office have an office in the state for the regular transaction of business in person within the meaning of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2638, permitting nonresidents so situated to act as executors, even against objection, without giving bond if the will contains express provision that they may act without 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Cadwalader v. Howell, 18 N. J. L. 138; State ex rel. Daubmann v. Camden, 39 N. J. L. 50; Hayward v. Board of Review, 189 Ill. 234, 59 N. E. 601; Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 314; Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 181; Smith v. People, 44 Ill. 16; Wilkins v. Marshall, 80 Ill. 74; Johnson v. People, 94 Ill. 512.

Boggs, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Harriet M. Richards, a resident of the county of Will, in this state, while temporarily absent from her home, departed this life on the 26th day of April, 1904, at Palacios, Matagorda county, Texas. She left a will bearing date March 15, 1890, in which she nominated as executor Marion Mulford, the appellant. The will was presented to the probate court of Will county and duly admitted to probate. It was made known giving security. Re Sterling, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 448, 4 Dem. 492.

The Pennsylvania statute prohibits the granting of letters testamentary to a nonresident only when security is not given. Jones's Appeal, 10 W. N. C. 249. See also infra, III. a, 2,—Re Bullock, 28 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 252.

By statute in Louisiana whenever the testamentary executor shall be present in the state, but be domiciled out of it, letters shall be granted to him only on such security as is required of dative testamentary executors. This statute is applicable even to a case where there were other executors residing in the state, who duly qualified and received their letters. McDonogh's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 472.

Where the testamentary executor was absent and his address unknown at the opening of the succession, it was the duty of the court in Louisiana to appoint a dative testamentary executor; and where the latter has fully administered and has been discharged, the court will not order a new administration upon appearance and demand of the testamentary executor. Nicholson's Succession, 5 La. Ann. 358. See also infra, III. a, 2,—Sharpe's Appeal, 87 Pa. 163.

b. Nonresidence after appointment.

1. Continued nonresidence.

Where nonresidence is not a bar to qualifying as executor, statutory provisions for the removal of an executor or the revocation of his letters where "he has permanently removed from the state" or "has removed or is about to remove from the state" do not warrant such action for the mere continued nonresidence of one who was a nonresident when the letters were issued. Hecht v. Carey (Wyo.) 78 Pac. 705; Re Sterling, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 448, 4 Dem. 492.

If such a statute covers cases of nonresidence which existed at the time of the grant of letters, this result follows, said the court, to the probate court that said Marion Mulford, was a resident of the state of Ohio, and the court, on motion of certain legatees and distributees under the will, refused to grant letters testamentary to him, for the reason that he was a nonresident of this state. This record presents for decision the correctness of the action of the court in refusing to authorize the appellant, Mulford, to act as executor of said will.

The final proviso of § 18 of chapter 3, entitled "Administration" (4 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. Supp. 1902, p. 32), as amended by the act of 1897 (Acts 1897, p. 1), provides that "no nonresident shall be appointed or act as executor." But it is urged that this statutory provision is in conflict with § 2 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states," and is also in conflict with § 2 of article 2 of the Constitution of the state of Illinois, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." The right to be appointed and act as an executor is not a "privilege" or "immunity," the denial whereof is prohibited by the Federal Constitution. The disposition which shall be made of property after the death of the former owner is to be determined by the lawmaking body of the state. No one has a natural right to take as heir of another, nor has any person the natural right to direct the devolution of his property after in Sterling's Estate, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 448, 4 Dem. 492, viz.: "That though, in the absence of objection, a nonresident executor has an absolute right to letters even without giving a bond, and though he has that right, even in the face of objection, upon furnishing such bond, the letters must, as soon as granted, be taken away if any person interested in the estate demands it. An interpretation which involves such absurd consequences should certainly be avoided if the language to be interpreted is capable of some other sensible construction. For the foregoing reasons I hold that when letters have been issued to a nonresident executor they cannot be revoked merely because of his continued nonresidence, nor can any bond be for that cause required of him."

But such nonresident executor must come into the state within a reasonable time, personally submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and personally conduct the business of the estate. Re Brown, 80 Cal. 381, 22 Pac. 233; Re Kelley, 122 Cal. 379, 55 Pac. 136; Hecht v. Carey (Wyo.) 78 Pac. 705.

The reason for removing an executor who "has permanently removed from the state" within the meaning of Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1436, applies equally to a nonresident executor who comes into the state to receive his appointment and file his inventory and then permanently withdraws from the state and remains away. Re Kelley, 122 Cal. 379, 55 Pac. 136. "We do not wish to be understood as destroying by construction the right of the testator to name a nonresident as his executor," said the court in this case, "but we do say that the statute should be so construed as to give ground of removal of a nonresident executor when he fails to come to this state and personally conduct the business of the estate at such times and as frequently as the interests of the estate and of those concerned in its settlement may require."

The common-law right to name a nonresident as executor is not to be swept away by giving a mandatory construction to a statutory provision: that the court "may" remove an executor who shall reside out of the state, but such provision is to be construed as giving discretionary power of removal when the distance between the place of residence of the executor and the court where the business is to be transacted is so great as to render it inconvenient and impracticable for him to act. Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309.

In Ewing v. Ewing, 38 Ind. 390, letters testamentary were issued in Indiana to a resident of that state and to a resident of Ohio. The former resigned and the latter removed to Chicago for greater convenience in the discharge of the duties of the trust. On petition of one of the legatees it was held to be the duty of the court of common pleas to appoint a resident administrator to take the place of the resigned executor. Such action was held to be demanded by the Indiana statutes which in effect provide that if a resident executor or administrator ceases from any cause to be such, it is the duty of the clerk or court to appoint an administrator, resident in the county where the estate is to be administered, with the will annexed, de bonis non. But the court expressly refrained from deciding whether this would remove the nonresident executor, or deprive him of any of the powers conferred, or relieve him from any of the duties imposed on him by law or by the will as executor or trustee.

2. Change of residence.

An executor who, after having duly qualified, absents himself from the state, was said in Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch, 9, 3 L. ed. 471, to be still capable of performing, and bound to perform, all the duties of an executor.

So, in holding that a duly qualified executor cannot release himself from his liability to account for funds received by paying them over to his coexecutor and removing from the state, the court said, in Edmonds v. Crenshaw, 14 Pet. 166, 10 L. ed. 402, that such removal did not render him incapable of discharging his duties as executor.

It has been held that the removal of an executor from the state does not qualify or furnish ground for revoking his letters, he shall have died. The right to devise or bequeath property by will or to take by inheritance exists only because conferred by law. Evans v. Price, 118 Ill. 593, 8 N. E. 854; Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84, 33 N. E. 195; Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122, 41 L. R. A. 446, 47 N. E. 321. The legislature may change the course of descent or of the devolution of property by will, and the enactment will operate at once as to all estates not already passed by the death of the owner. Kochersperger v. Drake, supra. The state, acting in its sovereign capacity, by appropriate legislation regulates and controls the devolution of property after the death of an owner. Our statute in respect of these matters authorizes the owners of property to provide by will for the ownership thereof after they shall have died, and regulates and controls the manner in which such will shall be executed and authenticated, and provides that they be duly proven in the court given jurisdiction of such matters, and admitted to probate, and that the same, when so duly admitted to probate, shall be carried into execution by the person named therein as executor or executrix, provided such person shall possess the qualifications which the same statute has fixed and declared to be essential to the legal right to discharge such duty. The judicial procedure thus established to regulate and control the devolution of property by will is the exercise of governmental power and duty by the state, and executors acting by force even under a statute prohibiting an appointment to that office,—especially where other statutes in pari materia plainly infer the continuing capacity and qualification of the executor to hold and exercise his office in the state, notwithstanding his residence beyond the limits of the state. Walker v. Torrance, 12 Ga. 604.

But in most jurisdictions the permanent removal from the state of an executor who has duly qualified either operates as a disqualification for the further exercise of his duties, or furnishes ground for revoking his letters, or removing him from his trust.

Independent of any statutory provisions, the removal of an executor from the state without making settlement was ground in Alabama for removal from office. Harris v. Dillard, 31 Ala. 191.

And authority to remove from office on that ground is expressly conferred by statute: Ibid.; Crawford v. Tyson, 46 Ala. 299.

The removal of an executor from the state does not, in Arkansas, of itself vacate his letters so as to prevent the subsequent allowance by the probate court, on notice, of a claim against the estate. Haynes v. Semmes, 39 Ark. 399.

But such removal operates in that state as a disqualification further to maintain a suit on behalf of the estate, and such suit cannot be further prosecuted until an administrator cum testamento annexo is appointed. Whitaker v. Wright, 35 Ark. 511.

A vacancy is, by the express provisions of the Iowa statutes, caused by the removal of an executor from the state. O'Brien's Estate, 63 Iowa, 622, 19 N. W. 797.

Permanent removal from the state after appointment is ground for removing an executor from his office; and such removal cannot be prevented by giving the power of attorney contemplated by the Louisiana statutes in case of temporary absence from the state. Yerkes v. Broom, 10 La. Ann. 94.

The removal of an executrix from the state without giving a power of attorney, duly recorded, as required by law, to anyone to represent her, is a sufficient ground for removing her from office. Winn's Succession, 27 La. Ann. 687.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The departure of an executrix from the state, though coupled with failure to have such power of attorney duly recorded, did not have the effect ipso facto to deprive her of her office. It requires some action of the court appointing her to declare the office to be vacant. Coussy v. Vivant, 12 La. Ann. 44.

A duly qualified executor, by refusing to take the oath of allegiance to the United States, and by going beyond the jurisdiction of the proper authorities, became functus officio, and lost all right to control or administer the property any further, and all claims to commissions except on sums received or recovered by him prior to his abandonment of the trust. Vogel's Succession, 20 La. Ann. 81.

The court, by treating the remaining executor as the sole testamentary representative of the deceased after the coexecutor had removed from the state, in effect discharged the one who became disqualified by nonresidence. Vosler v. Brock, 84 Mo. 574. See also infra. III. b.—State ex rel. Rucker v. Rucker, 59 Mo. 17.

Removal of an executor from the state necessitates the revocation of the letters testamentary by reason of the express provisions of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2685, 2687, where a nonresident executor would not be entitled to letters without giving bond. Sohn's Estate, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 373. This evidently refers to the provision of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2638, permitting a nonresident to qualify as executor without giving bond, even when objected to on that ground, if he has an office within the state for the regular transaction of business in person, and the will provides that he may act without giving security. See supra, II. a. 2.—Vernon's Estate, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 304, note; Re Sterling, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 448, 4 Dem. 492.

Temporary nonresidence of executors on account of the ill health of certain members of the family is not removal from the state within the meaning of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2685, 2687, requiring revocation of letters testamentary in case of removal from the state. Re McKnight, 80 App. Div. 284, 80 N.

of such procedure exercise functions that are official in character. The position is denominated an "office" in §§ 31 and 36 of the administration act. 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 1896, chap. 3, pp. 283, 284.

The nomination of an executor by the testator in his will does not confer power and authority on the person so nominated to act as executor until he has been found "legally competent" so to act by the branch of the judicial department of the state in which has been vested jurisdiction and power to so determine, save that the statute has granted temporary authority to the person so named as executor to act, to a circumscribed and limited extent, before the probate of the will. But this limited power is possessed in virtue of the statute conferring the same on the person named as executor. An executor receives formal letters testamentary, which constitute his commission as an officer. Before such letters may issue he must take the oath of office prescribed by the statute, and must execute a bond to the people of the state of Illinois, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, unless the will shall direct that no bond be required; and even in the event of such direction in the will, the court may, for certain specified reasons, require the bond to be given. The estate is committed to the executor to be administered under the direction and supervision of the court, acting in pursuance of the general statutory enactments relating to the administration

Y. Supp. 251. Affirmed without opinion in 179 N. Y. 522, 71 N. E. 1134.

And residence with her relatives outside the state since her appointment did not require the removal of an executrix who was the sole beneficiary, where she denied any intent to become a nonresident. Re Magoun, 41 Misc. 352, 84 N. Y. Supp. 940. The court, however, granted privilege to renew the application upon the original papers and upon notice if, at the expiration of the statutory year and a few weeks of grace, her accounts should not be rendered and settled.

Where an executrix has left the jurisdiction more than a year, and taken up a residence in another state, it is within the discretion of the orphan's court in Pennsylvania, without regard to other circumstances, to say whether she shall be removed from the trust or retained on giving security. James's Estate, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 220.

The removal of an executor who has left the state is discretionary with the court. Re Grotz, 1 Northampton Co. Rep. 96, cited in Brightly's (Pa.) Digest, vol. 4, col. 6049.

By statute in South Carolina the change of domicile of an executor to a place beyond the limits of the state requires revocation of his letters. Re Neubert, 58 S. C. 469, 36 S. E. 908. In an earlier case in that state, where an executor permanently left the state after fully accounting for his management of the estate, he was discharged at his request and a receiver was appointed. Ex parte Galluchat, 1 Hill, Eq. 148.

It may reasonably be inferred from the decision in Humes v. Cox, 1 Pinney (Wis.) 551, reversing an order appointing an administrator de bonis non with the will annexed when the executor had removed from the state because the latter had not first been required to come into the state and settle his accounts, that removal, accompanied by failure to return and settle the accounts, would be ground for removal from his office. And see supra, II. a, 1,—Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309.

The special and temporary administration provided for in England by 38 Geo. III. chap. 87, in case the executor, after qualifying, goes abroad, was granted in Warburton v. Hill, 5 Sim. 532, where the surviving executor had absconded and was beyond the jurisdiction; and in Jenkins's Goods, 49 L. J. Prob. N. S. 30, 41 L. T. N. S. 736, where the executor, after proving the will, left England permanently for Japan.

III. Nonresidents as administrators.

a. Eligibility.

1. Rule independent of statutes.

In the absence of any controlling statute a nonresident is not ineligible for appointment as administrator. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gould, 64 Iowa, 343, 20 N. W. 464; Rice v. Houston, 13 Wall. 66, 20 L. ed. 484; Fulgham v. Fulgham, 119 Ala. 403, 24 So. 851; Smith v. Munroe, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 345; Ehlen v. Ehlen, 64 Md. 360, 1 Atl. 880; Smith v. Young, 5 Gill, 197; Crawell v. Littlefield, 2 Rich. L. 17; Jones v. Jones, 12 Rich. L. 623 (but see infra, III. a, 2,—Re Neubert, 58 S. C. 469, 36 S. E. 908); Ex parte Barker, 2 Leigh, 719; Bridgman v. Bridgman, 30 W. Va. 212, 3 S. E. 580; Leeson's Goods, 1 Swabey & T. 463.

The common-law right of a nonresident to qualify as administrator is also recognized in Barton's Goods [1898] P. 11, where, upon the death of an administrator, letters of administration de bonis non were granted to the attorney of a nonresident next of kin until the latter should come into the country, and herself apply for a grant of administration.

Even alien nonresidents were not disqualified under the common law to act as administrators. Caroon's Case, Cro. Car. 8.

But in Carthey v. Webb, 6 N. C. (2 Murph.) 268, the court said that although even an alien enemy might rightfully act as administrator if resident within the state, yet, if a nonresident, he was certainly disqualified.

Even where residence does not appear to be an absolute qualification a court may, and generally should, refuse to appoint a nonresident as the personal representative of a of estates. Power resides at all times in the court to control and direct the executor, and to revoke his authority to act for any statutory disqualification. His compensation is fixed by public law. He is required to report to the court at stated intervals, and it is essential to the preservation of the rights of widows and children, creditors, legatees, and devisees, and to the proper administration of the estate in compliance with the law, that the court shall have power at all times to compel his personal attendance before the court. An executor is a public officer. Wharton, Conf. Laws, § 552; Woerner, Am. Law of Administration, § 172.

The "privileges and immunities" which are protected by the constitutional inhibition concern the personal and private rights of the citizen, such as his right to acquire and possess property, to pursue ordinary callings, and secure happiness and safety, etc., and do not include within their meaning the right to hold office. People ex rel. Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 585, 51 N. E. 785. The state may decline to confer official power on residents of other states without depriving such nonresidents of any "privilege" or "immunity" protected by the Constitution of the general government, or of "liberty" or "property" within the meaning of those words as used in our state Constitution. A nonresident can have no property right in the fees provided by law to be paid as compensation for the performance of the duties of an office created by or existing by virtue person domiciled in the state at the time of his death. Radford v. Radford, 5 Dana, 156.

In reversing an order removing from their trust because of nonresidence the persons to whom ancillary letters testamentary had been issued, the court, in Wiley v. Brainerd, 11 Vt. 107, took occasion to say that administrators should not be appointed unless they reside in the state, except in particular cases where there is a sufficient and apparent reason for the contrary course.

While nonresidence does not amount to a disability, yet the courts, in the exercise of a sound discretion, will not appoint a nonresident distributee administrator so long as any other distributees competent to act and willing to assume the trust is within the jurisdiction. Bridgman v. Bridgman, 30 W. Va. 212, 3 S. E. 580.

The court said in Ex parte Barker, 2 Leigh, 719, that it might be indiscreet and improper to give administration to a nonresident if there were local creditors and the distributees lived in the state.

2. Rule under statutes.

Statutes forbidding the appointment of nonresidents to act as administrators exist in a number of jurisdictions. Whittaker v. Wright, 35 Ark. 511; Re Cotter, 54 Cal. 215; Re Beech, 63 Cal. 458; Re Stevenson, 72 Cal. 164, 13 Pac. 404; Re Muersing, 103 Cal. 587, 37 Pac. 520; Re Donovan, 104 Cal. 623, 38 Pac. 456; Re Weed, 120 Cal. 634, 53 Pac. 30; Re Kelley, 122 Cal. 379, 55 Pac. 136; Re Gordon, 142 Cal. 125, 75 Pac. 672; Strong v. Dignan, 207 Ill. 385, 99 Am. St. Rep. 225, 69 N. E. 909; Chouteau v. Burlando, 20 Mo. 482; Re Stewart, 18 Mont. 597, 46 Pac. 806; State ex rel. Lancaster v. Woody, 20 Mont. 413, 51 Pac. 975; Re Watson (Mont.) 78 Pac. 702; Holladay v. Holladay, 16 Or. 147, 19 Pac. 81; Hecht v. Carey (Wyo.) 78 Pac. 705; Rice v. Tilton (Wyo.) 80 Pac. 828.

By statute in Georgia none but citizens of the United States residing in the state are qualified to be administrators. Headman v. Rose, 63 Ga. 458; Walker v. Torrance, 12 Ga. 604; Carnochan v. Abrahams, T. U. P. Charit. (Ga.) 197. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The single exception which the Georgia statutes make to this rule is contained in Ga. Civ. Code, § 3366, which authorizes a citizen of another state, who has a given interest in the estate of a deceased citizen of Georgia, to act as administrator under specified conditions. Jones v. Smith, 120 Ga. 642, 48 S. E. 134.

Letters of administration, by the express provision of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2661, cannot be granted to a person not a citizen of the United States, unless he is a resident of the state. Re Ferrigan, 92 App. Div. 376, 87 N. Y. Supp. 16; Sutton v. Public Administrator, 4 Dem. 33.

The plain inference and obvious meaning of this statute is that a nonresident may serve as administrator if he is a citizen of the United States. Libbey v. Mason, 112 N. Y. 525, 2 L. R. A. 795, 20 N. E. 355; Re Williams, 44 Hun. 67, Affirmed without opinion in 111 N. Y. 680, 19 N. E. 284.

Nonresidents are not by implication excluded from acting as administrators by N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2663, providing that, upon application for letters of administration, every resident shall be cited, and the surrogate, in his discretion, may issue a citation to nonresidents. Re Williams, 44 Hun. 67, Affirmed without opinion in 111 N. Y. 680, 19 N. E. 284; Libbey v. Mason, 112 N. Y. 525, 2 L. R. A. 795, 20 N. E. 355.

A statutory provision that, when it is unnecessary to cite any person, a decree granting letters of administration to the petitioner may be made upon the presentation of the petition, does not, by implication, though coupled with a provision giving surrogates discretion to omit citation to nonresidents, whatever their priority of right, disqualify nonresidents from appointment as administrators; and where, although not cited, the nonresident appears before the issue of letters, and presents his claim, and stands upon his right, the surrogate may not deny it. Libbey v. Mason, 112 N. Y. 525, 2 L. R. A. 795, 20 N. E. 355.

Nonresidence, therefore, does not bar the right of a claimant to letters of administration in New York, provided he is otherwise by law entitled thereto. Re Page, 107 of the statutes of this state. "Liberty," as the term is used in the constitutional provision, includes freedom from servitude and unlawful restraint, the right to pursue any ordinary calling, trade, or employment, and acquire property, etc., thereby, but does not include any supposed right of a nonresident to receive an appointment to a position created by the general laws of the state for the purpose of carrying into effect legislation affecting the state and its people.

The power to control property of a deceased person, to the end that it shall be applied to the payment of the just debts of the decedent, for the protection of those who were peculiarly dependent upon him, and who may otherwise become burdens on the public, and the remainder be transmitted to the persons or to the purposes the testator desired it to go or be applied to, rests in the state in its sovereign capacity. In exercising this governmental function the state has the clear right to call to its aid and to invest with official power only such persons as are residents within its territorial limits. No nonresident enjoys the "privilege or immunity" to participate as an officer in the administration of the affairs of the state, nor has he any right of "liberty or property" in the fees or emoluments of any such office or public position. The petitioner, Marion Mulford, testified that he was seventy-one years old and had a wife and two daughters, with whom he resided in Dayton, Ohio, when the said Harriet M. Richards died; that he lived with his family on homestead property owned by himself and which he had not abandoned; that he had come to Illinois with the fixed purpose and intention of accepting the executorship of this estate, and of remaining within the jurisdiction of the court until the estate could be administered upon in accordance with the will; and that he still retained that fixed purpose, whatever time might be required therefor. Nevertheless, the appellant is a resident of the state of Ohio. Residence is lost by leaving the place where one has acquired a permanent home, and removing to another place, without a present intention of returning. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 697. "A temporary sojourn within a state for pleasure or business, accompanied by an intention to return to the state of one's former inhabitance, does not constitute residence." Pells v. Snell, 130 Ill. 379, 23 N. E. 117.

The court did not err in refusing to issue letters testamentary to the appellant.

Judgment affirmed.

N. Y. 266, 14 N. E. 193; Re Williams, 44 Hun, 67; Affirmed without opinion in 111 N. Y. 680, 19 N. E. 284; Libbey v. Mason, 112 N. Y. 525, 2 L. R. A. 795, 20 N. E. 355; Re Tyers, 41 Misc. 378, 84 N. Y. Supp. 934; Lus- sen v. Timmerman, 4 Dem. 250; Re Selling, 17 N. Y. S. R. 833, 2 N. Y. Supp. 634.

A nonresident married daughter of the intestate was appointed administratrix in that state in preference to a worthless and irresponsible son residing in the state. Re Selling, 17 N. Y. S. R. 833, 2 N. Y. Supp. 634.

Letters of administration issued to a creditor without notice to a nonresident brother of the deceased were revoked upon the application of such nonresident. in Re Tyers, 41 Misc. 378, 84 N. Y. Supp. 934, on the theory that the administrator had, by such application, become disqualified to act, within the meaning of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2685, making subsequent disqualification a ground for revocation.

A different result was reached in a Maryland case where it was held that letters of administration issued to the person next entitled will not be revoked on the subsequent application of a nonresident who, through relationship to the deceased, was first entitled to administer, where the statutes provide that it is unnecessary to give notice to a person entitled to administration, if he is out of the state. Ehlen v. Ehlen, 64 Md. 360, 1 Atl. 880.

Although not contrary to any express statutory prohibition, it is deemed against the policy of the law and the well-presumed intention of the Pennsylvania legislature 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

from correlative legislation that letters of administration be granted to nonresidents. McDevitt's Estate, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 474. See also infra, Sarkie's Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 157.

Although letters of administration may not be void in Pennsylvania if granted to a nonresident who gives the requisite bond, no nonresident has a right to the administration. Frick's Appeal, 114 Pa. 29, 6 Atl. 363.

And nonresidence of the applicant is, at least, a sufficient ground for refusing the grant of letters of administration. Re Bullock, 28 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 252; Colvin's Estate, 25 Pittsb. L. J. 101, as cited in Brightly's (Pa.) Digest, vol. 3, pt. 1, col. 3824.

The fact that nonresidence, under the Pennsylvania act of March 15, 1832, § 16, does not disqualify executors, does not entitle a nonresident to act as an administrator, although by statute the powers, duties, and liabilities of executors are extended to those to whom letters c. t. a. have already been granted. Re Bullock, 28 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 252.

By statute in New Hampshire a nonresident is not to be appointed administrator unless other circumstances than his relationship render his appointment proper. Under this statute the court, in Pickering v. Pendexter, 46 N. H. 69, held that a nonresident widow was properly appointed administratrix as against a resident brother whose interests were adverse to hers and to those of the creditors, where all the rest of the heirs united in requesting her appointment.

Under a statute which permits the court

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF JAMES BREEN, Deceased.

ANNIE BREEN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

J. J. KEHOE et al.

(.... Mich.)

1. Executor—competency of nonresident.

A nonresident alien is not an incompetent executor under a statute which provides that if any executor shall reside out of the state, the court may remove him.

2. Same—effect of indebtedness to estate.

Indebtedness to the estate does not disqualify one from acting as executor.

(November 21, 1905.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Chippewa County to review an order affirming an order of the Probate Court appointing executors of the will of James Breen, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Shine, for plaintiff in error:

Removal from the state being ground for revocation of letters of administration, it would seem that nonresidents otherwise qualified should not be appointed.

to grant administration to a stranger if no distributee has applied within a specified time, the court should, under ordinary circumstances, after that time has expired, prefer a resident who is not a distributee to a nonresident who is a distributee. Bridgman v. Bridgman, 30 W. Va. 212, 3 S. E. 580.

The beneficiary heir is entitled to the administration of a succession in Louisiana in preference to a creditor, though the former be not a resident of the state, in view of La. Civ. Code, art. 1035, providing that, in the choice of administrator, the preference shall be given to the beneficiary heir over every other person, if he be of age and present in the state, as this article does not require a residence in the state, but simply the presence of the party in the state for the purpose of qualifying. Penney's Succession, 10 La. Ann. 290.

A foreigner, being the heir of a person who died intestate in France, leaving an estate in Massachusetts, was entitled to administration thereon under Mass. Stat. 1817, chap. 190, § 16, providing that "any person interested" is entitled to letters of administration on an estate within the commonwealth of any person dying intestate outside the state. Re Piquet, 5 Pick. 65.

The court, in Weaver v. Chace, 5 R. I. 356, thought that there could be no stronger case for the appointment of a nonresident administrator within the discretion given to the court by R. I. Rev. Stat. chap. 156, § 6, than that of a husband entitled, by § 7 of that chapter, to administer on his wife's Gary, Probate Law, 2d ed. § 267; Burkheim v. Pinkhussahn, 58 S. C. 469, 36 S. E. 908; Re Bullock, 28 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 252; Re Ulhorn, 12 Ohio C. C. 785; Child v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 357; Sarkie's Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 157; Frick's Appeal, 114 Pa. 29, 6 Atl. 363; Sargent's Estate, 62 Wis. 130, 22 N. W. 131; 1 Woerner, Am. Law of Administration, 2d ed. p. 505.

It is against the policy of the law to appoint a debtor executor or administrator.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 781.

Messrs. Sharpe & Handy, for defendants in error:

Under the common law, any person may be an executor who is capable of making a will.

Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Mon. 191, 54 Am. Dec. 515.

An executor appointed by will cannot be rejected by the court, except where the law has specifically so provided.

Smith's Appeal, 61 Conn. 420, 16 L. R. A. 539, 24 Atl. 273; McGregor v. McGregor, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 95; 2 Wms. Exrs. & Adms. 5th Am. ed. 198; Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309; Kidd v. Bates, 120 Ala. 79, 41 L. R. A. 154, 74 Am. St. Rep. 17, 23 So. 735; White v. Spaulding, 50 Mich. 22, 14 N. W. 684; Berry v. Hamilton, supra.

The right of nonresidents to become executors or administrators is regulated by local estate in case of her intestacy, and without account.

An administrator is not a public officer within the meaning of Mo. Const. art. 8, § 12, making one year's residence in the state a qualification to election or appointment to "any office in this state." Stevens v. Larwill, 110 Mo. App. 140, 84 S. W. 113.

Upon the question whether a statute providing for the removal from office of an administrator who has removed from the state since his appointment prevents the appointment of a nonresident to that office, the decisions are squarely in conflict. Sustaining the affirmative of the proposition is Child v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 357, holding that a statutory provision making the removal of an administrator from the state ground for removal from office necessitates a decision that a nonresident cannot be appointed administrator of an estate lying within the state.

So, a statute providing that if an executor or administrator, since the grant of letters testamentary or of administration, shall change his domicile to a place beyond the limits of the state, his letters shall be revoked, has been held necessarily to imply that a grant of letters of administration to one who is a nonresident at the time would not be lawful. Re Neubert, 58 S. C. 469, 36 S. E. 908.

And a nonresident is held to be an unsuitable person within the meaning of Ohio Rev. Stat. § 6005, to be appointed administrator in view of § 6017, making removal from the state a ground for removal of an adminislegislation. The better policy favors such right provided adequate security is furnished.

Schouler, Exrs. § 32; Hammond v. Wood, 15 R. I. 566, 10 Atl. 623; Sarkie's Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 157; McGregor v. McGregor, 1 Keyes, 133; 1 Wms. Exrs. & Admrs. p. 278.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

James Breen died on July 26, 1904, a resident of Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, where he had lived from 1902. Previous to that time he had lived in Ontario. He left a large estate in both countries. A will made in Ontario some years before his death named his widow Annie Breen, John J. Kehoe, his solicitor, and David Lynn, a friend, as executors. A codicil made shortly before his death made no change in this regard. Mrs.

trator or executor. Re Ulhorn, 12 Ohio C. C. 765.

And in Sarkie's Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 157, the court said that among the causes of incompetency of an administrator appears to be nonresidence in the state, as might be inferred from the provision of the act of March 29, 1832, § 27, that when an administrator has removed from the state or ceased to have any known place of residence therein during the period of one year or more, the orphans' court may vacate the letters of administration, and the provision of the act of March 15, 1832, § 27, prohibiting letters testamentary from being granted to any person not being an inhabitant of the state. (A careful reading of the latter statute, however, reveals the fact that it prohibits the granting of letters testamentary to a nonresident only where security is not given. Jones's Appeal, 10 W. N. C. 249.)

The contrary view is represented by Sargent's Estate, 62 Wis. 130, 22 N. W. 131, holding that nonresidents are not absolutely disqualified to act as administrators, even under a statute authorizing removal for that reason.

And so in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gould, 64 Iowa, 343, 20 N. W. 464, we find a decision that the statutory provision that removal from the state creates a vacancy in the office does not prohibit the appointment of a nonresident to the office of administrator. The obvious reason for this enactment, said the court, is found in the fact that the nonresidence of the applicant is an important matter to be considered in issuing letters of administration, and when an administrator removes from the state there ought to occur a vacancy for the reason that his nonresidence was not considered in making his appointment. See also BREEN v. KEHOE.

Under such a statute the fact of nonresidence ought to be considered in connection with ability, character for integrity, etc., of an applicant for letters of administration, together with the magnitude and character

Breen petitioned for the probate of the will, and objected to the appointment of Kehoe and Lynn as executors, on the grounds (1) that they were nonresidents and aliens; (2) that Kehoe was indebted to the estate. This indebtedness was amply secured by real-estate mortgage upon property in Ontario. The probate court confirmed the appointment of the three executors, and on appeal to the circuit this order was affirmed. Mrs. Breen has brought the case to this court by writ of error.

The cause was tried at circuit before a jury, and a verdict was directed. No question is raised over the propriety of the trial by jury. The deceased left a widow and several children surviving him, all of whom reside in Michigan. Lynn has filed his refusal to act as executor. The will contains a provision authorizing the acting executor to reof the estate, and extent of the personal attention it will probably require. Foley v. Cudahy Packing Co. 119 Iowa, 246, 93 N. W. 284.

And even if a nonresident can be appointed an administrator when the statutes provide that a vacancy is caused in his office by his removal from the state, such appointment should not ordinarily be made. O'Brien's Estate, 63 Iowa, 622, 19 N. W. 797.

And where the statute makes nonresidence a ground for removal, such nonresidence affords sufficient ground for refusing an appointment as administrator if another suitable person is named for the trust. Sargent's Estate. 62 Wis. 130, 22 N. W. 131.

Where nonresidence is a disqualification, letters of administration issued to a competent person will not be revoked on the application of one who, when they were issued, was incompetent because of such nonresidence, but has subsequently come into the state. Sharpe's Appeal, 87 Pa. 163.

b. Change of residence after appointment.

An administrator who removes from the state of Tennessee, where he was appointed, and becomes a citizen of another state, may sue in the United States circuit court in Tennessee for the collection of debts due him as such administrator, there being no legislation in Tennessee requiring an administrator not to remove from the state. Rice v. Houston, 13 Wall. 66, 20 L. ed. 484.

The removal of an administrator from Georgia, where he was appointed, to Alabama, cannot, in the absence of any proof that the common law has been changed by statute in Georgia, be deemed by the Alabama courts to disqualify him for his office, much less absolutely to vacate the office. Bradley v. Harden, 73 Ala. 70.

In McLaurin v. Thompson, Dud. L. 335, the court, in holding that the grant of a new administration without objection on the part of the administrator, who had removed from move such other executors, as reside abroad or become incapable to act. Annie Breen filed her bond as executor, letters testamentary were issued to her, and she is administering the estate, which administration is now nearly completed, and the estate in shape to be carried on by her as sole executrix.

Counsel seem to agree that the question in the case is whether it was within the authority and discretion of the probate judge to appoint two nonresident aliens, one of whom was indebted to the estate, to the office of executor. We will therefore consider no other question. Comp. Laws 1897, § 9310, provides: "(9310) Sec. 1. When a will shall have been duly proved and allowed the probate court shall issue letters testamentary thereon, to the person named executor therein, if he is legally competent, and shall accept the trust, and give bond as required by law." This section appears to leave no discretion in the probate judge. If the person named is legally competent, and will accept and give the bond, he must be appointed. That a nonresident, and even an alien, might be named and appointed executor under the common law is clear. See Smith's Appeal, 61 Conn. 420, 16 L. R. A. 539, 24 Atl. 273; 18 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 77, and cases cited in note 30; McGregor v. McGregor, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 95; 2 Wms. Exrs. 5th Am. ed. 198; Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309; Berry v. Hamilton, 54 Am. Dec. 518, note (12 B. Mon. 191). If a nonresident alien is not eligible in Michigan, it must be by reason of Comp. Laws 1897, § 9317, which provides that: "(9317) Sec. 9. If an executor shall reside out of this state, or shall neglect, after due notice given by the judge of probate to render his account the state, was equivalent to a judgment of revocation, said that it was of the opinion that the removal of an administrator from the state did not, of itself, justify the ordinary in revoking his letters of administration.

Statutes in some states expressly provide for the removal from office of an administrator who has removed from the state. Child v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 357; Trumble v. Williams, 18 Neb. 144, 24 N. W. 716. And see cases cited in the preceding division of this note.

By statute in Texas an administrator may be removed when he absents himself from the state for three months without the permission of the court. Hall v. Monroe, 27 Tex. 700.

The removal of an administrator from the state without making settlement is, by statute, in Alabama, a sufficient cause for removing him from his office. Crawford v. Tyson, 46 Ala. 299.

A statutory declaration that the term "executor" includes "administrator" when the subject-matter applies to an administrator makes applicable to administrators the provision of Iowa Code, § 2347, that a vacancy is caused by the removal of an executor from the state. O'Brien's Estate, 63 Iowa. 662, 19 N. W. 797.

But such removal does not, in general, ipso facto work a revocation of the letters.

A removal from the state does not, in Arkansas, eo instante vacate the letters of an administrator. It requires the action of the court for that purpose, on motion. McCreary v. Taylor, 38 Ark. 393.

The removal of an administratrix from the state does not of itself work a revocation of the letters of administration. An order or judgment is necessary. State ex rel. Rucker v. Rucker, 59 Mo. 17.

Letters of administration do not abate by the removal of the administrator from the state. Brown v. Strickland, 28 Ga. 387.

The absence of an administrator from the state, in the military service of the Confederacy, even if cause for removal, did not work renunciation or revocation of his authority. Hooper v. Scarborough, 57 Ala. 510.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It was unsuccessfully contended in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. McWherter, 59 Kan. 345, 53 Pac. 135, that the removal of an administratrix from the state operated ipso facto as a revocation of the letters, based on the assumption that the statutes of the state expressly provide that when an administrator becomes a nonresident, the probate court shall revoke his letters.

Orders approving final settlement of an administrator after the removal of his co-administrator from the state and distributing the estate, which ignore her and exclude her from any further participation in the administration, have the effect of a revocation of her letters for such change of residence. State ex rel. Rucker v. Rucker, 59 Mo. 17. See also supra, II. b, 2,—Vosler v. Brock, 84 Mo. 574.

IV. Résumé.

In the absence of statute there can be no doubt of the right of a nonresident to qualify either as executor or administrator; but in the United States the question is largely regulated by statute, and such statutes, even when similar, are not always similarly interpreted by the courts. In some states the statutes have changed the common-law rule only so far as to prevent nonresidents from acting as administrators; and the courts, when construing legislation upon this subject, seem more tender of the testator's right to choose whom he will to administer his estate than of the right of a nonresident to be appointed administrator, if otherwise entitled to the appointment.

It should be borne in mind that controlling statutes which have not yet received the attention of the courts, and which would, therefore, not be referred to in this discussion, may, and probably do, exist in other states than those represented by the cases herein cited.
W. W. N.

and settle the estate according to law, or to perform any decree of the court, or shall abscond or become insane, or otherwise incapable or unsuitable to discharge the trust, the probate court may remove such executor." If we construe the word "may" in this section in accordance with the common understanding of the word (see Comp. Laws 1897, § 50, subd. 1), it should be said that this section was designed merely to permit removal, not to compel it, and perhaps refusal to appoint one not a resident of the state. It is suggested, however, that the word has acquired a peculiar meaning, appropriate to the purpose of its use, and should be held to mean "shall." To give force to this claim, counsel cite cases where, under similar statutes in relation to administrators, it has been held that the courts may refuse to appoint a nonresident administrator in the first instance. Thus in Gary Probate Law, § 267, it is said that, "removal from the state being ground for revocation of letters of administration, it would seem that a nonresident, otherwise entitled, should not [not cannot] be appointed." The authority cited in support of this statement is Radford v. Radford, 5 Dana, 156. In that case a woman abandoned her husband and went to another state two years before his death, at which time, and when she applied for letters at his domicile, she still resided there. Under these circumstances, the county court refused to appoint her. What kind of a statute, if any, was in force, does not appear; but it is probable that there was a statute authorizing her rejection, in view of the discussion in the later case of Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Mon. 191, 54 Am. Dec. 517, which seems to recognize the general features of the common-law rule. We must therefore conclude that she was disqualified by the statute. For such a case, see Re Uihorn, 12 Ohio C. C. 766; also, Sargent's Estate, 62 Wis. 130, 22 N. W. 131. Mr. Crosswell, a text writer, interprets our statute 9317 as follows: "In Michigan and Vermont no provisions of statute touch the point, except that if executors or administrators reside out of the state, they may be removed from office; from which it would seem that they are incompetent to be originally appointed." Crosswell, Exrs. & Admrs. 2d ed. p. 112. Mr. Woerner is more guarded. He contents himself with saying (somewhat inaccurately, perhaps) that "in Maine, Michigan, and Ohio nonresident executors [and those] who fail to account and settle in the probate court when required are to be removed." 1 Am. Law of Administration, p. 505. In Wiley v. Brainerd, 11 Vt. 112, revocation of letters testamentary was refused. What the statute was does not appear, but the result would indicate that there was a statute, and 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the quotation from Gary indicates that it may have been a statute similar to ours. In any event, the case goes no further than to hold that her rejection was within the discretion of the county court, and we should perhaps be disposed to follow the case to that extent in the construction of our statute. It is entirely consistent with the interpretation of the word "may" in accordance with common understanding, and falls short of holding that such an appointment was prohibited. There are cases which hold that where a statute provides that, "if an administrator moves out of the state, his letters shall be revoked," a nonresident cannot be appointed as an administrator, since such an appointment is forbidden by implication. See Burkhim v. Pinkhussahn, 58 S. C. 469, 36 S. E. 908. It is so in Illinois, where the statute makes it the duty of the court to remove an administrator who has removed from the state. See Child v. Gratiot, 41 Ill. 359. In Pennsylvania the statute prohibits the appointment of a nonresident. See Sarkie's Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 157, and Frick's Appeal, 114 Pa. 29, 6 Atl. 363.

The foregoing discussion of the authorities satisfies us that our statute was not intended to absolutely disqualify or prohibit the appointment of nonresidents to the office of executor, but to make the nonresidence ground for the exercise of a discretion both in appointment and revocation. There is a wide difference between an administrator and an executor. The latter's appointment must ordinarily be made in accordance with the will of the testator, unless he is ineligible, or a statutory discretion, express or by implication, to refuse it is lodged with the court. See note to Berry v. Hamilton, 54 Am. Dec. 518, and other cases hereinbefore cited. For a case closely in point, see Cutler v. Howard, 9 Wis. 309.

It is said that Kehoe's indebtedness to the estate disqualifies him. The authorities cited are in point upon this question. When the statute has not intervened, indebtedness to the testator does not disqualify. The exact point was decided in Kidd v. Bates, 120 Ala. 70, 41 L. R. A. 154, 74 Am. St. Rep. 17, 23 So. 735.

The order of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES S. WITHEY

v.

PERE MARQUETTE RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(.... Mich.)

1. Carrier—loss of infant's baggage.

A father may recover upon the carriage contract for loss of, or injury to, articles of his infant child, packed and carried with his baggage, where he has paid full fare for his transportation, and the infant is below the age at which fare is customarily exacted.

2. Same—woman's baggage—action by husband.

A man has such special interest in the property of his wife, which she had not obtained from him, but which is packed in trunks which he has contracted with a carrier to transport, as to entitle him to maintain an action for their value in case they are lost through breach of the contract.

3. Evidence—opinions of injury.

Parties who have examined clothing injured through another's negligence, and who are familiar with the values of such articles, may state their opinions as to the proportion of damage done by the injury.

4. Same—production of article in court—discretion.

An abuse of discretion in refusing to compel a production in court of articles alleged to have been injured by another's negligence is not shown, where defendant's witnesses have been permitted to examine them, and it is not clear that the jury would have been aided by personal examination of them.

(September 28, 1905.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Kent County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the value of baggage alleged to have been lost through defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles McPherson, with Mr. Frederick W. Stevens, for plaintiff in error:

Articles of merchandise are competent and Case Note.—The question involved in WITHEY v. PERE MARQUETTE R. CO. is whether or not a child traveling with its parent, or other person paying fare, without the child's fare having been paid, is a gratuitous passenger within the rule which makes the carrier of a gratuitous passenger a gratuitous bailee in respect to his baggage, or whether the personal effects of the infant, being the property of the parent with whom the child is traveling, and who has paid his fare, constitute part of the baggage of the parent, for which the company is liable.

Fetter on Carrier of Passengers, vol. 2, § 587, gives the following rule as to what constitutes baggage: "Baggage is such personal property of the passenger, delivered to the carrier for transportation, which the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or convenience of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities, or to the ultimate purpose, of the journey." Certainly the child's wearing apparel, which the father takes with him, comes within this definition. It is hard to imagine a father who would not be inconvenienced by the absence of such wearing apparel; in fact it is essential to the purpose of the journey which he is taking. This is especially true in view of the fact, as shown in Elliott on Railroads, § 2608, that the following articles, essential for the purpose of the particular journey, are considered baggage: Mechanics' tools, books for amusement, opera glasses, telescopes, fire arms, and fishing tackle.

The decision in Dexter v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 42 N. Y. 326, 1 Am. Rep. 527, is probably broad enough to permit the father to recover for the loss of his baggage containing his infant child's wearing apparel, as in that case the court permitted the plaintiff to recover for his lost baggage, including material for two dresses, and other articles, which he had purchased and was taking home to his wife and other members of the family. In this decision two of the judges dissented as to the cloth for dresses for members of his family, and a majority of the court were of the opinion that he could not recover for a dress which he was taking home to his landlady.

That an infant traveling with its father without a ticket, where the father has paid his fare, is not a gratuitous passenger, is shown by the following cases, where the infant so traveling was permitted to recover for personal injuries:

In Austin v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. 442, the question was whether the plaintiff, an infant three years and two months of age at the time of the accident, was entitled to recover for injuries received while traveling on defendant's train with its mother, who purchased a ticket for herself, but did not take a ticket for the plaintiff, although the statute entitled the defendant to half fare for children between three and twelve years of age, where the plaintiff's mother acted in good faith, and no questions were asked her as regards the child's age. The decision in this case upheld the liability of the railroad company, and was placed upon the ground that there was one entire contract to carry both mother and child, which operated in favor of each party.

Does not the principle in the above case justify the holding in the WITHEY CASE? If, in consideration of the full fare paid by the mother, the railroad company can be said to make a contract to carry the mother and infant child safely, which contract is entire and based upon the consideration paid by the mother, does not the same rule apply to the baggage of both parties? If the carriage of the infant is not gratuitous, but is based upon the consideration paid by the mother for her ticket in the one case, is it not the same where the claim is for lost baggage?

A similar decision was rendered in Rawlings v. Wabash R. Co. 97 Mo. App. 515, 71 S. W. 534, where it was held that a child under the age for requiring the payment of the most satisfactory evidence of their own condition.

National Cash Register Co. v. Blumenthal, 85 Mich. 464, 48 N. W. 622; Stevenson v. Michigan Log Towing Co. 103 Mich. 412, 61 N. W. 536.

The refusal to compel their production constitutes error.

Powers v. Russell, 26 Mich. 179; Hunton v. Hertz & H. Co. 118 Mich. 475, 76 N. W. 1041; Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641, 35 Am. St. Rep. 561, 54 N. W. 757; South Bend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 54 L. R. A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200, 60 N. E. 271; Stevenson v. Michigan Log Towing Co. supra; Hudson v. Roos, 76 Mich. 173, 42 N. W. 1099; Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473; Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. 9.

fare, and who pays no fare, is a passenger where he goes upon the train and travels with an older brother for whom fare is paid, and is entitled to recover for injuries incurred in being carried by his destination.

In the WITHEY CASE the court cited no direct authority on the question of the liability of a railroad company for the loss of an infant's baggage where it is traveling with an older person, who, while paying his own fare, pays no fare for the infant. The cases cited by the court, which will be reviewed, determine only the parent's title to the infant child's wearing apparel, and the right of such parent to maintain an action for its negligent injury. These authorities are of use in this case for the purpose of showing that the title to the infant's wearing apparel was in its father, but leave open for discussion the question whether, the title being in the father, the infant's wearing apparel constitutes baggage of the father, or merely merchandise which is not protected as baggage. To return to the cases cited by the court: Smith v. Abair, 87 Mich. 62, 49 N. W. 509, involved the sufficiency of the husband's title to the wife's wearing apparel for the purpose of enabling him to maintain replevin for the same; Wheeler v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co. 31 Kan. 640, 3 Pac. 297, involved the question as to whether a deceased infant left an estate, so as to justify the issuance of letters of administration. The court's opinion contains a dictum that "it is probably true that the child's clothing belongs to the father, and not to the child." In Burke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 7 Heisk. 451, 19 Am. Rep. 618, it was held that the title to a minor daughter's wearing apparel was in the parent, and that he could maintain an action for its negligent destruction.

Neither is Prentice v. Decker, 49 Barb. 21, the remaining case cited by the court, directly in point. There the plaintiff's infant daughter had the defendant transfer her baggage from the railroad station to her home, and the father sued to recover for the negligent loss of the baggage. The question of the defendant's liability to someone was 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

If it is found that there is any better evidence existing than is produced, the very nonproduction of it is presumption that, if produced, it would have detected some falsehood that at present is concealed.

3 Bl. Com. p. 368; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1258; Bigelow v. Paton, 4 Mich. 170; Page v. Stephens, 23 Mich. 357; Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 457; Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 81 Mich. 156, 45 N. W. 983; Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185, 35 Am. St. Rep. 554, 54 N. W. 712; Hay v. Peterson, 6 Wyo. 419, 34 L. R. A. 581, 45 Pac. 1073.

It is not permissible for witnesses to express opinions as to the amount of the damages which the jury should award.

Sutherland, Damages, § 444; Grand Rap-not involved, but merely the right of the father to maintain the action; and it was held that, the legal title to the goods being in the father, he could maintain the action. Of course the case is an authority on the proposition that the title to the infant's wardrobe is in the parent who furnished it.

In addition to the above cases involving the right of the father to recover for the lost baggage of his infant child, where it is lost under circumstances creating a liability, the following cases are in point:

In Richardson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 85 Ala. 559, 2 L. R. A. 716, 5 So. 308, the father was permitted to maintain an action for the loss of the baggage of his wife and infant child, who were traveling together. But the decision was upon the ground that the title to the wife's and child's wearing apparel was in the father. The age of the infant, or whether the infant's fare was paid, does not appear. Apparently the only question involved was as to who could maintain the action.

And in Baltimore Steam Packet Co. v. Smith, 23 Md. 402, 87 Am. Dec. 575, the right of a father to maintain an action for the loss of his own and his infant daughter's baggage while traveling together was sustained. But in this case the daughter was nineteen years of age, and paid her fare; so the only question involved was the sufficiency of the father's title in his daughter's wearing apparel to permit him to maintain the action.

In Curtis v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 74 N. Y. 116, 30 Am. Rep. 271, the father was permitted to recover for the loss of his baggage, including his own wearing apparel and that of his infant child. The age of the infant, or whether his fare was paid, does not appear from the report of the case. If the child was of tender years and his fare unpaid, so as to bring the facts within the decision in WITHEY v. PERE MARQUETTE R. Co., the effect of such facts was not discussed; the defendant railroad company contenting itself with challenging the right of the father, who was not with his family at the time, but had gone on ahead on a different train, to recover for the lost baggage.

ids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 58 Mich. 641, 26 N. W. 159; Roberts v. New York Elevated R. Co. 128 N. Y. 455, 13 L. R. A. 499, 28 N. E. 486; Zabel v. New State Teleph. Co. 127 Mich. 405, 86 N. W. 949.

A gift, either before or after marriage, becomes the separate property of the wife. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 350; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

Mere possession of his wife's property does not confer a right of action upon the husband.

Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104; Noble v. Milliken, 74 Me. 225, 43 Am. Rep. 581.

The defendant was a gratuitous bailee as to the baby, and the transportation as baggage of articles intended solely for its use was a mere incident to that gratuity.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 716; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111, 26 Am. Rep. 499.

Messrs. Crane & Norris, for defendant in error:

The power of the courts to compel the production of evidence is limited to cases where the party calling the witness has a right to use the document, and is confined to private writings.

Delaney v. Philadelphia, 1 Yeates, 403; Shippen v. Wells, 2 Yeates, 260; Re Shephard, 3 Fed. 12; 2 Tidd, Pr. p. 806.

The wearing apparel of every person or family is exempt by law from execution.

3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 10,322.

Certainly a party to the suit by a sub-pana duces tecum could not lay hold of it.

Union P. R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 35 L. ed. 734, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000.

The testimony of the plaintiff and his wife as to the damage to their clothing and household goods was admissible.

Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173; Seyfarth v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 52 Mo. 449; Printz v. People, 42 Mich. 144, 36 Am. Rep. 437, 3 N. W. 306; Tubbs v. Garrison, 68 Iowa, 44, 25 N. W. 921; Williamson v. New York. N. H. & H. R. Co. 24 Jones & S. 508, 4 N. Y. Supp. 834; Omaha Auction & Storage Co. v. Rogers, 35 Neb. 61, 52 N. W. 826; Erickson v. Drazkowski, 94 Mich. 551, 54 N. W. 283; Rademacher v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 75 Hun, 83, 27 N. Y. Supp. 155; Thomason v. Capital Ins. Co. 92 Iowa, 72, 61 N. W. 843; Mason v. Partrick, 100 Mich. 577, 59 N. W. 239; Meyerson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 16 Misc. 286, 38 N. Y. Supp. 112; Lewis Baillie & Co. v. Western Assur. Co. 49 La. Ann. 658, 21 So. 736; Fowler v. Fowler, 111 Mich. 676, 70 N. W. 336; Zabel v. New State Teleph. Co. 127 Mich. 402, 86 N. W. 949.

The wife's wearing apparel, though purchased by herself and with her husband's money, belongs to her husband.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hawkins v. Providence & W. R. Co. 119 Mass. 596, 20 Am. Rep. 353; Curtis v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 74 N. Y. 116, 30 Am. Rep. 271; Graham v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 393.

Plaintiff delivered the trunks to the defendant, and the defendant accepted them from the plaintiff, and gave him the checks, which stood in the place of a bill of lading, and thereby undertook to carry them safely for the plaintiff. It does not matter whether the plaintiff, as bailor, was owner or had possession.

Saville v. Tancred, 3 Swanst. 141; Davis v. James, 5 Burr. 2680; Moore v. Wilson, 1 T. R. 659; Joseph v. Knox, 3 Campb. 320; Freeman v. Birch, 1 Nev. & M. 420; Faulkner v. Brown, 13 Wend. 63; Nicolls v. Bastard, 2 Crompt. M. & R. 659; Dunlop v. Lambert, 6 Clark & F. 600; Goodwyn v. Douglas Cheves, L. 174; Mayall v. Boston & M. R. Co. 19 N. H. 122, 49 Am. Dec. 149; Moran v. Portland Steam Packet Co. 35 Me. 55; Dill v. South Carolina R. Co. 7 Rich. L. 158, 62 Am. Dec. 407; Baltimore Steam Packet Co. v. Smith, 23 Md. 402, 87 Am. Dec. 575; Woodman v. Nottingham, 49 N. H. 387, 6 Am. Rep. 526; Kellogg v. Sweeney, 1 Lans. 397, 46 N. Y. 291, 7 Am. Rep. 333; Casey v. Suter, 36 Md. 1; Rogers v. Long Island R. Co. 1 Thomp. & C. 396; Curtis v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. supra; Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Frame, 6 Colo. 382; Chamberlain v. West, 37 Minn. 54, 33 N. W. 114; American Dist. Teleg. Co. v. Walker, 72 Md. 454, 20 Am. St. Rep. 479, 20 Atl. 1; Jacksonville, St. A. & H. River R. Co. v. Mitchell, 32 Fla. 77, 21 L. R. A. 487, 13 So. 673; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Gavin, 93 Tenn. 53, 21 L. R. A. 298, 42 Am. St. Rep. 902, 23 S. W. 70; Andrews v. Keith, 168 Mass. 558, 47 N. E. 423.

A bailee is estopped to deny the bailor's title.

Betterley v. Reed, 4 Q. B. 511; Great Western R. Co. v. McComas, 33 Ill. 186; Biddle v. Bond, 6 Best & S. 225; Lain v. Gaither, 72 N. C. 234; Pulliam v. Burlingame, 81 Mo. 111, 51 Am. Rep. 229; Rogers v. Lambert, L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 573; Wetherly v. Straus, 93 Cal. 283, 28 Pac. 1045.

The plaintiff was the owner of the clothing of his minor child, and therefore could properly maintain an action for its loss or injury.

Dickinson v. Winchester, 4 Cush. 114, 50 Am. Dec. 760; Parmelee v. Smith, 21 Ill. 620; Prentice v. Decker, 49 Barb. 21; Burke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 7 Heisk. 451, 19 Am. Rep. 618; Wheeler v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co. 31 Kan. 640, 3 Pac. 297; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 349.

Ostrander, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On Saturday, December 26, 1903, plaintiff, his wife, and their twenty-one-months-old child were passengers on defendant's road from Monroe, where they had passed Christmas with relatives, to Grand Rapids, their home. As baggage they had on the same train two trunks. These trunks contained various articles of dress and of the toilet; some intended solely for the use of the infant. They contained, also, some articles of jewelry used by and intended for use by the wife, which had been given her by others than her husband, which she took to Monroe with her on her visit, and some gifts made to plaintiff and his wife and to the child at Monroe. Plaintiff purchased at Monroe two full-fare tickets to Grand Rapids, no ticket for the infant, checked the trunks, and received the checks issued for them. At East Paris, near Grand Rapids, the train in question was in collision with an eastbound passenger train. On the following Monday the baggage was delivered at the plaintiff's place of residence, and later at defendant's freight depot, plaintiff's wife picked out from a quantity of goods certain articles which had been in the trunks. As delivered, the trunks, which were broken, contained a portion only of their original contents, and also articles, some of them greasy, not belonging to plaintiff or his wife, coal, and pieces of earth or mud. The contents of the trunk were mussed, and some of them stained and greased and spotted with mud. In January, 1904, a claim, which reads: "I herewith present my claim for damages sustained by Mrs. Withey and myself in your wreck of December 26, amounting to $386.25,"—with a list of articles and figures, was presented to defendant, and later plaintiff began this suit. The action is assumpsit. Liability of defendant is predicated upon the contract of carriage, the nonperformance of the contract by the defendant, and the injury of the baggage. No contention was made in the court below respecting the negligence of the defendant and resulting liability to pay plaintiff the damages he sustained.

The case comes here upon twenty-five assignments of error, which may be grouped, and which counsel for defendant has grouped and discussed, under four propositions. Stating these propositions as they are understood, and in the order in which they will be discussed, they are: (1) That plaintiff was not entitled to recover (as he did) for destruction of and damages to articles intended for the sole use of the infant; (2) that he was not entitled to recover (as he did) for loss of and damages to the articles of jewelry belonging to his wife; (3) that the court improperly admitted opinion evidence as to the amount or sum of the damage to particular articles; and (4) that the court should have required, upon defendant's application, production of the damaged articles, so far as they could be produced, for exhibition to the jury.

1. It is contended that, because no fare was paid for the infant,—because it was carried free,—the defendant "was a gratuitous bailee as to the baby, and the transportation as baggage of articles intended solely for its use was a mere incident to that gratuity;" and the case of Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111, 26 Am. Rep. 499, is relied upon to sustain the contention. In that case the form of action was, as it is here, assumpsit. The plaintiff, on a passage from Saginaw to Detroit upon defendant's road, lost as he claimed, his trunk, containing personal effects. It appeared that both plaintiff and his trunk were being carried, not for hire, but gratuitously. It was held that, in the absence of a contract for carriage, damages for loss of the baggage could not be recovered in assumpsit. The rule in the case cited does not control the present case. Even if it can be said that the child was carried free, a point which we do not consider, it by no means follows that the articles in question, the child's wearing apparel, were carried free. The clothing of the infant was the property of the father, and was in the trunks of the father, with whom the defendant had made a contract of carriage, both of his person and his baggage. While it is asserted on the part of defendant that it had the right to charge for the carriage of the infant, it is not claimed that under its rules and practice it does charge anything for the carriage of infants of the age of plaintiff's child. Nor do we base our determination at all upon the fact, which appears in the record, that the infant occupied for hire a seat in the parlor car during the trip. What we hold, and what we think the correct rule of law, is that a father paying full fare for himself, traveling with an infant child of such tender years that by custom no fare is demanded for its carriage, may recover upon the contract for carriage for the loss or injury of articles bought and used for the child, which articles are a part of, and packed and carried with, his baggage, and upon the ground that such articles are the property of the parent, in his possession, and properly a part of his proper baggage. Prentice v. Decker, 49 Barb. 21; Burke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 7 Heisk. 451, 19 Am. Rep. 618; Wheeler v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co. 31 Kan. 640, 3 Pac. 297; Smith v. Abair, 87 Mich. 62, 63, 49 N. W. 509.

2. We have before us no question concerning the right of the husband (plaintiff to recover for injuries to the ordinary wearing apparel of the wife. The contention relates entirely to articles of jewelry, lost or injured, which were not given or furnished by her husband. It is defendant's position that, these being the separate and sole property of the wife, the husband, under the circumstances shown, could not recover for their loss or injury. In his charge the court said to the jury: "Some question has been raised by defendant's counsel to the effect that the articles contained in this trunk which had been previously given to the plaintiff's wife by others, and which were taken by her to Monroe on this trip as a part of her wardrobe, ought not to be included in your consideration. These articles are the cameo pin set in pearls, the silk liberty scarf, the set of gold beads, the emerald wreath set in pearls, and perhaps some other articles. But after some consideration (although not without considerable hesitation) I have concluded, under the circumstances admitted in this case, to submit that question to you in relation to these articles thus enumerated. I feel somewhat certain that the husband had such special property in these articles by reason of his possession that he would be entitled to recover their value, if lost, notwithstanding they were the special property of the wife. I therefore instruct you that . . . these articles, which were the wife's property, . . . and which you believe, under the evidence, were either lost or damaged, shall be taken into consideration by you in fixing the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff. . . ." Error is assigned upon this portion of the charge, and is also assigned upon the refusal of the court to give defendant's eleventh request to charge, which was: "The plaintiff is not entitled to recover for the loss of, or damage to, any article belonging to his wife which had not been purchased with funds furnished by the plaintiff." Of this request it is said by counsel for plaintiff that "the defendant contends that in no case can any recovery be had, unless the plaintiff establishes an absolute title to the articles, notwithstanding that the plaintiff was the bailor and the defendant was the bailee, and undertook with the plaintiff to carry the trunks safely."

We do not so understand the position of counsel for defendant. No one will contend that in all cases a bailor must show absolute title to the thing bailed in order to maintain an action against the bailee for injury to the subject of the bailment. The question in this case is whether, under the circumstances shown, plaintiff, with respect to the particular chattels, had the interest necessary to enable him to maintain this action. I have been of opinion that upon the facts 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) and the declaration, which avers a contract between the parties to transport plaintiff's baggage, of which baggage the articles in question are averred to have been a portion, it must be held that the plaintiff cannot recover the value of the particular property of the wife. My brethren who sat in the case are agreed, and there is reason and authority to sustain them, that the verdict and judgment are right, and that the recovery may be and should be sustained upon the ground that the contract to carry plaintiff and his wife and their common baggage was a contract with the plaintiff. Jacksonville, St. A. & H. River R. Co. v. Mitchell, 32 Fla. 77, 21 L. R. A. 487, 13 So. 673; Baltimore Steam Packet Co. v. Smith, 23 Md. 402, 87 Am. Dec. 575. Analogous decisions are those in Blanchard v. Page, 8 Gray, 281; Moran v. Portland Steam Packet Co. 35 Me. 55. See also Hutchinson on Carriers, § 724. It is not claimed that the articles in question were not proper baggage for the wife. In a sense, the question presented is one of general commercial law, in view of which I yield my own opinion to that of the majority.

3. It is necessary in considering this proposition, for a better understanding, to make further reference to the record. The plaintiff, his wife, and others were sworn as witnesses for the plaintiff. Each of them had made some examination of the articles about which they gave testimony. Excepting plaintiff's wife, each was permitted over objection to estimate in dollars the amount of the injury described by them, or to state the injury in fractions of the value before injury, as that the damage was one fourth or one half of the original value of the articles, or that for the purpose for which they were purchased they had no value. The witnesses Smith, Schwartz, Remington, and Berry, called by plaintiff, were treated by counsel as expert witnesses, and each gave answers to hypothetical questions. It is evident that whether included in the hypothetical question or not, and it usually was, the answer of each witness as to amount of damage was based in part upon a personal inspection of the injured article.

A witness with twenty-five years' experience in dry goods was asked by plaintiff's counsel:

Q. Assuming that that gown was made late in the fall of 1903 by Miss Remington, cost $85 when delivered, and was worn the second time, that it had been through a railroad collision, been to the cleaner's, and left after cleaning in the shape it is now, state what in your opinion would be the value of that gown in the present condition for Mrs. Withey's use and wear.

A. The gown having been injured, the purpose for which it was made is absolutely destroyed. A gown which is made for a dressy dress, to be worn as a dress for dress occasions, when it has become soiled or spotted or injured so that it shows, its value for that is lost entirely; and it is not a gown that is adapted for ordinary uses. She did not buy it for a house dress or street dress. Its value is gone. . . . I should not consider it had any money value for the purposes for which it was made. It has lost it by its damage.

Another witness, the dressmaker who made the gown, testified that in her opinion it was damaged one half, or $42.50. These examples acquaint us fairly with the grounds of the exceptions taken. As to two rather expensive dresses, an opera cloak, and the overcoat of the plaintiff, the injuries complained about were principally to the appearance of the garments, rather than injuries to the fabrics. Each witness had some knowledge, gained from observation, which the jury had not and could not have, except by seeing the injured property, although the witnesses attempted to describe conditions as they saw them.

Counsel for appellant contends that, whatever experience these witnesses may have had in their respective lines, and however competent they may have been to state cost and quality and to describe the injury, it was not competent to state to the jury an opinion of the amount of the damage expressed in dollars. It is a rule of the law of evidence that upon the question of the existence or nonexistence of a fact in issue, whether a main fact or an evidentiary fact, the opinion of witnesses is not admissible. What a witness has seen or heard or felt, he knows, and it is for him to put before the jury the facts as he has perceived them by his senses, and for the jury to form an opinion concerning the fact in proof of which the evidence is offered. But there are exceptions, apparent or real, to the rule which excludes opinion evidence. A real exception is that class of opinion evidence which is called expert evidence. The apparent exceptions are not easily classified. They are sometimes treated as opinions admitted under exceptions to the rule, sometimes as matters of fact. The practical test for receiving or rejecting opinions of lay witnesses seems to be that, when the jury can be put into a position of equal vantage with the witness for drawing them,—when by the mere words and gestures of the witness the data he has observed can be so represented that the jurors have those data as fully and exactly as the witness had them at the time he formed his opinion,—he may not as a rule give an opinion or estimate Wigmore, Ev. § 1924. It was said by Justice Campbell, in Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 27, 34: "Experience has shown that many cases exist in which it is impossible, by any description, however graphic, to explain things so as to enable anyone but the witness himself to see or comprehend them as they would have been seen or comprehended, could the jury have occupied his position of observation. In such cases the witness must give his own impressions and conclusions, or his narrative is useless; adding, however, as full explanations as the nature of the case will admit, so that his capacity and truthfulness may be tested as far as practicable." In this state, testimony concerning the amount of damage, largely matter of opinion, has been held properly received in cases not to be distinguished in principle from the one at bar. Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173; Printz v. People, 42 Mich. 144, 36 Am. Rep. 437, 3 N. W. 306; Enright v. Hartsig, 46 Mich. 469, 9 N. W. 496. In Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 58 Mich. 641, 28 N. W. 159, cited and relied upon by plaintiff in error, the evidence held to have been wrongly admitted was not opinion as to value of premises merely, but opinion or judgment as to compensation to be awarded for taking premises in condemnation proceedings.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The court carefully instructed the jury. He said in part: "Several witnesses have been permitted to testify as to their opinions as to value both before and after the alleged injuries to these articles. But I instruct you that you are to assess the plaintiff's damages according to your own best judgment of the evidence and as to the injury done to them; and the evidence that has been thus received may be followed or not, as you find that it is true or not, under the evidence as to the amount of damages the plaintiff has actually sustained. If you believe from the evidence in the case that the statements and estimates made by any witness are not warranted, you need not follow such statements. If you believe that they are warranted, you may, to the extent that you find they are warranted by the evidence. In other words, the whole question of the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff is for you to determine, and you alone, from the evidence, and you are not to be governed or concluded by the opinions of anyone else unless you believe such opinions to be well founded and based upon the evidence in the case."

A subpoena requiring in terms that plaintiff and his wife produce in court such of the damaged articles as were in their possession, was taken out on the part of defendant, and with a witness fee and an additional fee was served upon both the plaintiff and his wife. The record discloses that a considerable amount of the most expensive clothing could have been, without evident inconvenience, so produced, including plaintiff's overcoat, and the opera cloak and two dresses belonging to his wife, the value of which it was claimed had been diminished $127.50 by stains, marks, and other injuries to the appearance of the garments received in the collision. None of the clothing was produced, and, upon the motion of defendant's counsel to compel its production, counsel for plaintiff announced that it would not be produced. At different times during the trial the following, with other similar, language was used by the court: "At present I think it is a matter in the discretion of the court to require it, and, being a discretionary matter, I do not feel like exercising it against the wish of the party to bring personal chattels into court for exhibition to the jury." "I do not think it is within the province of the court, as I have already said, to compel the production of such evidence." "If the party does not care to produce these articles, but chooses rather to have oral testimony as to their condition received, instead of the articles themselves, I think it is a matter that rests with the party, and not with the court." And in the charge to the jury it was said: "Something has been said about the refusal of the plaintiff to produce before you the articles alleged to have been injured or damaged. I think, perhaps, I ought to say something about that to you in these instructions. I have already said in your presence that to produce the articles or not produce them was a privilege belonging to the plaintiff, and to him alone, concerning which the court under the circumstances had no right to interfere. Yet, if it should appear to you by the evidence that it would be practicable to produce those articles in court, the fact that there was a refusal to produce them is a matter you may consider as bearing upon the credibility of the witnesses." These rulings and this instruction are before us for review. We shall assume that the learned trial judge did not mean to be understood as denying the power of the court to order the production of the garments. Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641, 35 Am. St. Rep. 561, 54 N. W. 757. Treating the rulings made as an exercise of judicial discretion, we are not impressed that the discretion was abused. The witnesses for defendant were permitted before the trial inspection of the principal articles of apparel claimed to have been injured, and we do not think it is clear that the inspection which the jury might have made, if the garments had been produced in court, would have aided them.

Judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied November 6, 1905.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUIS LEVY, Appt.,

v.

LOUISVILLE GUNNING SYSTEM.

(.... Ky.)

1. Sign—lease of wall space—revocation.

The right to display a sign on the walls of a building, given in writing for a definite time for a valuable consideration, is not revocable at will.

2. Same—lease to another—effect.

Failure to mention in a lease of a building a right which has been given to a third person to display a sign on its wall does not amount to a revocation of the right.

(November 23, 1905.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the First Division of the Chancery Branch of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of defendant in a suit to enjoin interference with an advertising sign. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Caruth, Chatterson, & Blitz for appellant.

Mr. Jacob Solinger, for appellee:

The instrument was a lease.

O. J. Gude Co. v. Farley, 28 Misc. 184, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1036; Reynolds v. Van Beuren, 155 N. Y. 120, 42 L. R. A. 129, 49 N. E. 263; Willoughby v. Lawrence, 116 Ill. 11, 56 Am. Rep. 758, 4 N. E. 356; Van Ohlen v. Van Ohlen, 56 Ill. 528.

It is not revocable at the will of the lessor.

Jones v. Fowler Drug Co. 27 Ky. L. Rep.

Case Note.—The decision in the above case is not made entirely with reference to the doctrine of executed licenses, or the revocability of mere licenses which have been granted for a consideration, or under which expenses have been incurred. It will be noticed that the court is dealing with a written instrument, and does not admit that it is merely a license, but says it is "in the nature of an easement as well as a license." Nevertheless, the court proceeds to cite authorities on the question of the revocability of licenses for privileges in real property. The right to revoke, at pleasure of the licensor, a parol license from one lot owner to another for the maintenance of a drain, was upheld in Pifer v. Brown, 43 W. Va. 412, 49 L. R. A. 497, 27 N. E. 399, and 558, 85 S. W. 721; Pevey v. Skinner, 110 Mass. 129; Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 1, 1 Am. St. Rep. 422, 12 N. E. 401; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1144; Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 578, 73 Am. Dec. 439; Batchelder v. Hibbard, 58 N. H. 269; Risien v. Brown, 73 Tex. 135, 10 S. W. 661; McLeod v. Dial, 63 Ark. 10, 37 S. W. 306; Boone v. Stover, 66 Mo. 430; Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 203; Davis v. Townsend, 10 Barb. 333; Willoughby v. Lawrence, 116 Ill. 11, 56 Am. Rep. 758, 4 N. E. 356; Van Ohlen v. Van Ohlen, 56 Ill. 528; Hall v. Boyd, 14 Ga. 1; Morton Brewing Co. v. Morton, 47 N. J. Eq. 158, 20 Atl. 286.

The second lease did not amount to a revocation of the prior privilege.

Dillion v. Crook, 11 Bush, 321; O. J. Gude Co. v. Farley, 28 Misc. 184, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1036.

Settle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Heissman is the owner of a business house and lot, known as No. 929 West Broadway, in the city of Louisville. By the following writing she granted to the "2 Jakes Sign Company," for one year from June 20, 1903, with the option of four years in addition, the right to use the west wall of the building for advertising purposes:

The 2 Jakes Sign Co., Louisville, Ky.
Wall Space. June 20th, 1903.

In consideration of four ($4.00) cash dollars payable in advance, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I, the undersigned lessor, hereby rents to lessee the entire west wall of my building located at 929 West Broadway St. for advertising purposes from June 20th, 1903, to June 20th, 1904, and for the sum of one dollar additional, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I grant them the option of renewal of said lease for a period of four years at five dollars per annum after June 20th, 1904. In case said space should become obstructed to view by building, this contract shall, at the option of the lessee, become void, and lessor agrees to rebate rent pro rata for its unexpired term. M. Heissman, Owner.

W. Market Street.
Heissman, Lessor.

Accepted June 20th, 1903.

2 Jakes Sign Co.,
by A. L. Gribble.

Appellee, the Louisville Gunning System, as the successor of the "2 Jakes Sign Company" in the advertising business, became the assignee of its right to the use of the west wall of the Heissman building for advertising purposes and of the option as to the four additional years granted by the foregoing instrument of writing. Pursuant to this option, appellee, on the 11th of June, 1904, demanded and received of M. Heissman a writing granting to it the right to use for advertising purposes the west wall of her building for one year from June 20, 1904, with the option, for a like considera-the annotation to that case examines and analyzes the great number of cases on the question of the revocability of a license to maintain a burden on land after expense has been incurred in creating the burden. The weight of authority, as shown by the comparison of the numerous cases on the subject, is that a parol license can never impose an irrevocable burden on land, which would be, in effect, to create an easement or estate; and that can only be done by deed or writing conforming to the statute of frauds; also, that the license cannot become irrevocable on the doctrine of estoppel, because of the absence of any element of fraud, where a person has proceeded to expend his money on the faith of what he knows to be merely a license. The same doctrine is followed in Ewing v. Rhea, 37 Or. 583, 52 L. R. A. 140, 82 Am. St. Rep. 783, 62 Pac. 790, denying that the mere acquiescence in the expenditure of money for an irrigating ditch will estop one who purchased the land with knowledge of the ditch from revoking the license under which it had been constructed. Substantially the same is held in Hicks Bros. v. Swift Creek Mill Co. 133 Ala. 411, 57 L. R. A. 720, 91 Am. St. Rep. 38, 31 So. 947, where a licensor was held to have the right to revoke a parol license for a dam 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) and ditch, notwithstanding large expenditures had been made under the license.

The distinction between a mere license and a license which is in the nature of an easement is furnished in Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. v. Hall, 135 Ind. 91, 23 L. R. A. 231, 34 N. E. 704, where a license to enter upon land for railroad purposes, with an agreement to pay its value, was held to be irrevocable.

In Goddard on Easements, p. 90, it is said: "A mere license in the nature of an easement may be acquired in any way by which permission can be understood to have been given, and whether there is any writing in existence to prove the grant or not."

In LEVY v. LOUISVILLE GUNNING SYSTEM the instrument obviously was intended to create something more than a license. It was a written contract for a consideration, giving a right for a definite time to use the wall of a building for a certain purpose. If the writing was sufficient, under the statute of frauds, to create any interest in real estate, it was in the nature of a lease, since it was for a specified use of a portion of real estate for a definite period. As the court says nothing about the insufficiency of the instrument under the statute of frauds, it may be assumed that it was not defective in that respect.

tion, of continuing such use for the same purpose from year to year, for the four succeeding years. The writing last mentioned is as follows:

The Louisville Gunning System,

Louisville, Ky. June 11, 1904.

In consideration of five ($5.00) dollars in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and in repainting Beechman's sign as it is at present, M. Heissman, the undersigned lessor, having full right and authority in the premises, hereby leases to the Louisville Gunning System (Incorporated), lessee, its successors and assigns, the entire west wall of the building and premises known as 929 West Broadway street, for advertising purposes, from the 20th day of June, 1904, to the 20th day of June, 1905. The lessee is hereby granted the privilege of necessary access through and upon the premises, and shall have the option of continuing this lease for a like consideration from year to year for the four succeeding years. Should the view of said space become in any way obstructed, this lease may, at the option of the lessee, be terminated; and in such case the lessor shall refund pro rata the rent for the unexpired term. The lessor warrants the title to said leasehold for the term herein mentioned.

M. Heissman,

Owner, Tenant, Agent,

Address 1744 Broadway. by A. Marcus.
Accepted.

The Louisville Gunning System,

by B. G. Gribble.

At the time this instrument of writing was executed, the building therein mentioned was unoccupied, but on the 16th day of August, 1904, Mrs. Heissman, also in writing, leased the property to Hilmer Ehrman for a term of five years, to be used "as a wholesale and retail liquor house, and living rooms above." In September, 1904, Ehrman sublet the property to appellant, Louis Levy, for the same use. Appellant took possession of the property in September, 1904, and soon after doing so obliterated from the west wall appellee's sign, advertising "Edinger's flour," and on the same space placed his own sign, which appellee in turn destroyed by repainting over it the words "Edinger flour," whereupon appellant again painted his sign over the "Edinger flour" and immediately instituted this action in equity to enjoin appellee from interfering with his sign or further using the wall for advertising purposes.

The answer of appellee contained a general denial in one paragraph, and in another it was alleged that it had leased from the owner of the property, prior to appellant's 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) and his assignee's lease, the wall in controversy for advertising purposes, for which it paid a valuable consideration. The answer interposed the further defense that appellant and his assignor, at the time of leasing the property of Heissman, had notice of the right of appellee to the use of the west wall for advertising purposes. By an amended answer appellee set out with greater particularity the terms of the writing executed to it by M. Heissman June 11, 1904, filed same as a part of the answer, and averred that, after its execution by Heissman and delivery to appellee, it (appellee) took and retained possession of the wall in controversy, and went to considerable expense, in painting advertisements thereon; that appellee's right to the use of the wall was not revoked or affected by the leasing of the property to appellant's assignor, or the subletting of the same by the latter to appellant. The amended answer also relied on the knowledge on the part of appellant, when he leased the building, of appellee's right to the use of the wall, and of the expense it had incurred in painting advertisements thereon, as an estoppel and bar to the action.

The testimony used upon the trial of the case was, by the consent of the parties, presented in the form of affidavits. The chancellor, finding no merit in appellant's complaint, dissolved the temporary injunction and dismissed his petition. It is appellant's contention that the writing under which appellee asserts right to the use of the wall for advertising purposes is not a lease, but that it merely granted it a license to use the wall; that such a license may be revoked at the will of the licensor; and that it was revoked by the licensor when she leased the property to appellant's assignor and failed to mention in the lease the licensee's right to the use of the wall.

The form of the writing, the use therein of such words as "lease" and "rent," the fact that it is for a definite period and a recited consideration; that it provides for an abatement of rent in case of an obstruction of the wall by other buildings, also for "necessary access through and upon the premises" by appellee, and that "the lessor warrants the title to said leasehold for the term herein mentioned," demonstrate that the writing was intended as a lease. But, whether it be entitled a lease or license, it is not revocable at the will of the lessor. The right it confers is in the nature of an easement as well as a license, and a written contract for an easement in real property, founded upon a consideration and executed by the owner, gives a greater right than a mere revocable license. We do not think the fact that the privilege granted appellee

by this writing was not reserved or mentioned in the writing by which the property was subsequently leased by the owner to appellant's assignor, Ehrman, amounted to a revocation. Upon the other hand, that it was not mentioned in the lease to Ehrman furnishes some evidence that it was not the intention of the lessor to revoke it. In 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1144, it is said: "The general rule is that if there is a license simply, not coupled with an interest in the land, it may be revoked at any time, even though it is under seal, and, according to some cases, though founded upon a consideration; but the weight of authority is against this latter view." "Licenses are usually divided into executory and executed licenses, a distinction which is of importance as bearing on the right of the licensor to revoke the license. A license may, if executed in proper form, take effect as a grant as to some things and as a mere license as to others." 7 Wait, Act. & Def. 202. "It is not essential that the interest should be in the thing to which the right given relates, or on which it is to be exercised. All that is necessary is that the licensor should have conferred, or that the licensee should possess, some estate or interest which depends on the continuance of the license, and cannot be enjoyed if it is terminated. It is not necessary that it should be an absolute interest." 7 Wait, Act. & Def. 209; Jarvis v. Satterwhite, 2 Ky. L. Rep. 436; 3 Kent, Com. 452; O. J. Gude Co. v. Farley, 28 Misc. 184, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1036; Dillon v. Crook, 11 Bush, 321.

It appears from the record that appellant and his assignor, Ehrman, had notice of the right of appellee to the use of the wall for advertising purposes when they leased the property, and that appellee had gone to expense in placing its advertisements on the wall, so in this view of the matter appellant is not on solid ground for asking equity. Pevey v. Skinner, 116 Mass. 129. We think the great weight of authority is to the effect that, under most circumstances, a naked license may be revoked at the pleasure of the licensor, but an executed license for a term and for a consideration cannot be revoked; and the proof fails to show that even an attempt to revoke the license to appellee has been made by the licensor in this case. We do not find that the authorities relied on by counsel for appellant, which declare a mere license may be revoked at any time, hold such an instrument as that relied on by appellee revocable at the will of the licensor.

Regarding the conclusions expressed in the able opinion of the chancellor as sound and just, the judgment is affirmed.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

NANNIE SOPER, Appt.,

v.

IGO, WALKER, & CHENAULT.

(.... Ky.)

Enticing child—action by mother.

A woman residing with her husband cannot maintain an action for the enticement from home of her minor child.

(November 29, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Madison County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the enticement from home of her minor child. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Grant E. Lilly for appellant.

Mr. J. A. Sullivan, with Mr. J. Tevis Cobb, for appellees:

Since the father is required to maintain, educate, and support his children, he is entitled to the benefit of their labor.

1 Bl. Com. p. 453; 2 Kent, Com. 193; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Willis, 83 Ky. 57, 4 Am. St. Rep. 124; Jones v. Tevis, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 25, 14 Am. Dec. 98; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1040.

The right of action in such cases is not founded on the parental relation, but on the technical relation of master and servant; the recovery being on the theory of the loss of services.

Trimble v. Spiller, 7 T. B. Mon. 394, 18 Am. Dec. 189; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1044; Geraghty v. New, 7 Misc. 30, 27 N. Y. Supp. 403.

Case Note.—The parent's right of action for the enticement of a minor is based on the ground of loss of services; and, hence, the action must be maintained by the parent entitled to such services. Wood, Mast. & S. p. 23. See also Kenney v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. ante, 205.

The rule that, in the absence of peculiar circumstances not involved in SOPER v. IGO, WALKER, & CHENAULT, the father is entitled to the services of his minor children, and must maintain actions based on the loss of such services, is well settled.

Schouler on Domestic Relations, § 254, says: "At the common law, a mother has no implied right to the services and earnings of her minor child, not being bound as a father would be for the child's maintenance. Nor have her rights or liabilities in these respects been usually regarded as equivalent to those of a father, even where she is the only surviving parent." And in § 245 the same author says: "The topic of parental custody is one of absorbing importance in England and America, and its principles have re-

Nunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the lower court sustaining a demurrer to the petition of appellant. The petition is as follows: "The plaintiff says that she is a married woman, and her husband, Charles Soper, is now living with her; and they were married in the year 1880. By this marriage they have several children, one of whom is named Thomas Daniel Soper, hereinafter called 'Dan.' On the 2d day of June, 1903, this infant boy, then aged about eighteen years, was induced, persuaded, enticed, helped, aided, and assisted by certain designing persons to leave the home, bed, and board of this plaintiff, all of which was against the knowledge, will, and consent of herself and her husband, and the said Dan did, by reason of the said wrongful acts, leave the home, bed, and board of plaintiff, against her will, knowledge, and consent, and against the knowledge, will, or consent of her husband, by reason of which this plaintiff has lost the society and companionship of said infant, and has suffered much mental distress and pain therefrom. Her said son has been kept by these defendants since said day in June until the present time against their will and consent, and said defendants and each of them knew that the said Dan had been induced, enticed, persuaded, helped, aided, and assisted away from this plaintiff's home without their knowledge, and against the will and consent of herself and her husband, and, knowing this, the said defendants wrongfully kept and harbored said Dan in conjunction with C. H. Chenault, and gave him employment, all of which was against plaintiff's and her husband's will and consent, which wrongful harboring and keeping deprived and now deprives this plaintiff of his society and companionship, and from all of which she has suffered much mental distress and pain, and has expended money to recover the possession of her said son, in all to the sum of $5,000, for which she prays judgment, and for all proper relief."

The only question involved on this appeal is whether the mother can maintain an action like this when her husband and the father of her child is alive and resides with her. Ever since the marriage relation existed, the law has recognized the husband as the head of the family and enjoined upon him the duty of maintaining, educating, and protecting his children, and in return for these duties he is entitled to their services; and it has always been the law that, if anyone wrongfully abducts from the father one of his children, he can maintain an action against the wrongdoer for damages, based upon the principle that the father has the right to the services of his child, it matters not whether the child renders such services, and, having such a right upon which to base his action, he is not confined in a recovery to the loss of services alone, but may recover damages for injury to his feelings and the loss of the companionship of his child. We have been unable to find any case where a mother has been permitted to recover where her husband was alive and residing with her. It is true her suffering may be as great or greater than that of her husband in being separated from her child, but the law has never recognized her right to the services of the child as against the right of the husband so long as they are living together. It is contended that they both should be permitted to sue and recover,—the wife for her mental suffering, and the husband for loss of service and also for mental suffering. This appears plausible; but the rule against it has existed for so long that it should not be changed, except by legislative enactment. If this court should sustain appellant's contention, and change the rule, and permit the appellant to recover in this action, it would, in effect, permit not only the mother, but the brothers and sisceived the most ample discussion in the courts of both countries. The fundamental principle of the common law was that the father possessed the paramount right to the custody and control of his minor children, and to superintend their education and nurture."

Rodgers on Domestic Relations, § 531, in speaking of the right of a parent to recover for injury to a child, says: "The injury must be sued for generally by the father, as he is the natural guardian by law of his infant children; and while he lives, being such, the mother has no right of action in her own behalf for an injury to her infant."

In Geraghty v. New, 7 Misc. 30, 27 N. Y. Supp. 403, where it was held that a widow cannot recover for an injury to her child, which occurred prior to the death of the father, the court, in so holding, stated that, "at common law, the mother has not, like the father, a legal right to the services of a minor child; and there is consequently no ground for implying the relation of master and servant between them."

In Jones v. Buckley, 19 Ala. 604, Matthewson v. Perry, 37 Conn. 435, 9 Am. Rep. 339, and Simpson v. Buck, 5 Lans. 337, it was held that a mother cannot recover for the services of a minor child, without showing either that the father is dead, or that he has abandoned the child, or that she is entitled to his services as guardian.

In an action by a mother for damages for loss of services of an infant child, it must appear that, at the date of the accident, the child was in her service. Matthews v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 75.

ters, of the child each to recover damages for mental suffering and loss of companionship. In the case of Jones v. Tevis, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 25, 14 Am. Dec. 98, the court said: "The parent is bound to maintain, to protect, and to educate his children, and, in return, he is entitled to their obedience and service. It is upon this principle he has been allowed to maintain an action for a loss of service, occasioned by beating or imprisoning his child, . . . and upon the same principle he must have a right to recover for a loss of service occasioned by the abduction of his child. The right to maintain an action for injuries of this sort no doubt belongs exclusively to the father during his life; but after his death, the mother, being the only parent, is, in contemplation of law, guardian by nature to the children, in which relation she is bound to them by the same duties, and has in them the same rights, as the father during his life." See also Trimble v. Spiller, 7 T. B. Mon. 394, 18 Am. Dec. 189, and Union News Co. v. Morrow, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 302, 46 S. W. 6.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ROCHESTER GERMAN INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

PEASLEE-GAULBERT COMPANY.

NATIONAL FIRE INSURANCE COM-PANY, Appt.,

v.

SAME.

PACIFIC FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY et al., Appts.,

v.

LOUISVILLE LEAD & COLOR COMPANY.

(.... Ky.)

1. Contract—custom—"noon."

In determining the meaning of the word "noon" in a contract, evidence is admissible to prove the prevailing custom as to the Case Note.—The above case is of peculiar interest because of the fact that it recognizes the "standard" time of the railroad systems as the time which may govern in determining the legal rights of parties. It seems to be the first case to do this, though it is not at variance with the decisions in Jones v. German Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 75, 46 L. R. A. 860, 81 N. W. 188, in holding that it is for the jury to decide whether there is a known and established custom at a certain place, when speaking of noon or of a certain hour of the day, to mean standard time. That case, like that of ROCHESTER GERMAN INS. CO. v. PEASLEE-GAULBERT CO., was in respect to the time when an insurance policy expired under a provision that it should terminate at "noon." In both cases it appeared that standard time was in customary use; but that sun time was also used by some people. The two cases are, therefore, agreed in principle, though in one the jury found that standard time was meant by the policy, and in the other that it was not. In the light of these decisions the question depends entirely upon the existence of a custom sufficiently general and uniform to make it evident that the parties to the contract must have intended to be governed by it.

2. Insurance—termination of risk—noon.

The word "noon" used to denote the beginning and termination of the risk under an insurance policy will be interpreted by standard, and not by sun, time, where the use of the former system of reckoning time has been the prevailing custom in the community for a long period.

3. Contract—interpretation—jury.

The question whether or not a system for reckoning time in a particular locality has been adopted by such universal custom as to raise the presumption that a particular contract was made with reference to it is for the jury.

4. Insurance—property in peril at termination of risk.

The beginning of a fire in a building which contains insured property, before the policy expires, will, if it continues to burn until it destroys the property, render the insurer liable for the loss, although the property is not actually destroyed before such expiration; but the same rule does not apply in case the property is merely imperiled at the time of the expiration of the policy, by a fire in an adjoining building, although it eventually reaches and destroys the property.

(June 15, 1905.)

APPEALS by defendants from judgments of different divisions of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of plaintiffs in actions brought to recover the amounts alleged to be due on certain fire insurance policies. Affirmed in part. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gibson, Marshall, & Gibson, Bodley, Baskin, & Flexner, and A. S. Brandeis, for appellants:

The only standard of time recognized by the courts is the meridian of the sun, and an arbitrary standard set up by persons in business will not be recognized.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 10; Henderson v. Reynolds, 84 Ga. 162, 7 L. R. A. 327, 10 S. E. 734; Curtis v. Marsh, 3 Hurlst. &

minate at "noon." In both cases it appeared that standard time was in customary use; but that sun time was also used by some people. The two cases are, therefore, agreed in principle, though in one the jury found that standard time was meant by the policy, and in the other that it was not. In the light of these decisions the question depends entirely upon the existence of a custom sufficiently general and uniform to make it evident that the parties to the contract must have intended to be governed by it.

In harmony with these decisions, also, is the determination in Nebraska that the presumption is that common time is intended, where there is nothing to show that a different mode of measuring the time has been in

N. 866; Ex parte Parker, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 14, 29 S. W. 480, 790; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Mier, Sup. Ct. of Ohio; Walker v. Protection Ins. Co. 29 Me. 320; Gordon v. Cann, 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 434.

Words are to be understood in their plain and popular meaning.

Greenl. Ev. § 278; Eaton v. Smith, 20 Pick. 150; Brown v. Brown, 8 Met. 573; Paull v. Lewis, 4 Watts, 402; Willmering v. McGaughey, 30 Iowa, 205, 6 Am. Rep. 673.

Evidence cannot expressly or by implication contradict plain terms of the contract.

2 Jones, Ev. 472; Lombardo v. Case, 45 Barb. 96; Globe Mill Co. v. Minneapolis Elevator Co. 44 Minn. 153, 46 N. W. 306; Parkdale v. Brown, 1 Nott & M'C. 517, 9 Am. Dec. 720; Allen v. Dykers, 3 Hill, 593; Barlow v. Lambert, 28 Ala. 710, 65 Am. Dec. 374.

It is against the policy of law to permit local usage and custom to change the universal meaning of the word.

Stoeber v. Whitman, 6 Binn. 416; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 385, 19 L. ed. 987; The Reeside, 2 Sumn. 567, Fed. Cas. No. 11,657; Harper v. Pound, 10 Ind. 32; Bolton v. Colder, 1 Watts, 360; Strong v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 15 Mich. 206, 93 Am. Dec. 184; Paull v. Lewis, 4 Watts, 402; Noble v. Durell, 3 T. R. 271.

Where a policy insures against actual loss during a fixed period, there can be no recovery except for so much of the loss as was actually sustained during that time.

Lockyer v. Offley, 1 T. R. 252; Knight v. Faith, 15 Q. B. 649; Howell v. Protection Ins. Co. 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 284; Coit v. Smith, 3 Johns. Cas. 16; Bill v. Mason, 6 Mass. 313; Peters v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 3 Serg. & R. 25.

Messrs. Humphrey, Hines, & Humphrey, and Trabue, Doolan, & Cox, for appellees:

The courts will presume that parties use words in their "popular, rather than" their "technical, meaning."

general use; and that, therefore, when the return of a summons is to be made at an hour named, standard time, the summons should so state. Searles v. Averhoff, 28 Neb. 668, 44 N. W. 872.

In Georgia, however, the question has been determined as one of law, and the court held that the only standard of time in the computation of a day or the hours of a day, recognized by the law of Georgia, is the meridian of the sun; that the standard of time fixed by persons in a certain line of business cannot be substituted at will, by persons in a certain locality, for the standard recognized by the statutes of the state, as well as the general law and usage of the country. Henderson v. Reynolds, 84 Ga. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Finnie v. Clay, 2 Bibb, 351; Vance v. Marshall, 3 Bibb, 150.

Where a word used in a written contract has a popular and a technical meaning, parol evidence of usage and custom is admissible to show which meaning was intended.

2 Parsons, Contr. 660; Lawson, Contr. § 383; Greenl. Ev. §§ 292, 295; Browne, Usages & Customs, 32; Lawson, Usages & Customs, pp. 367, 401, 405; May, Ins. §§ 173, 179a; Joyce, Ins. § 246; Finnie v. Clay, 2 Bibb, 351; Vance v. Marshall, 3 Bibb, 150; Buckwalter v. Hutcherson, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2074, 66 S. W. 602; Smith v. Wilson, 3 Barn. & Ad. 728; Lowe v. Lehman, 15 Ohio St. 179; Brown v. Byrne, 3 El. & Bl. 702; Coit v. Commercial Ins. Co. 7 Johns. 385, 5 Am. Dec. 282; Myers v. Sarl, 30 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 9, 7 Jur. N. S. 97; Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464, 10 Am. Rep. 407; Newhall v. Appleton, 114 N. Y. 140, 3 L. R. A. 859, 21 N. E. 105; Rindskoff Bros. v. Barrett, 14 Iowa, 101; Robinson v. Fiske, 25 Me. 401; Hinton v. Locke, 5 Hill, 437; Astor v. Union Ins. Co. 7 Cow. 202; Dana v. Fiedler, 12 N. Y. 40, 62 Am. Dec. 130.

Parol testimony as to the meaning of the word "noon" as used in insurance policies was properly admitted.

Jones v. German Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 75, 46 L. R. A. 860, 81 N. W. 188.

Direct loss or damage by fire is any loss which, by an unbroken chain of causation, comes from a fire.

3 Joyce, Ins. §§ 2775, 2779; Ermentrout v. Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. 63 Minn. 305, 30 L. R. A. 346, 56 Am. St. Rep. 485, 65 N. W. 635; Lynn Gas & Electric Co. v. Meriden F. Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 570, 20 L. R. A. 297, 35 Am. St. Rep. 540, 33 N. E. 690.

A policy covers any loss which happens during its currency, or happens inevitably from a cause acting at the time of its expiration.

159, 7 L. R. A. 327, 10 S. E. 734. This was said in deciding when a legal day began and ended, in reply to the contention that, as the railroad or "standard" time was in use in all the cities and towns along the line of the railroads, that time should be observed by the courts instead of the meridian or sun time.

This decision was approved and followed in Ex parte Parker, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 12, 29 S. W. 480, 790, where the court said: "Certainly no reasonable objection can be urged against the recognition of true sun time as the correct time by which matters of this character, such as the meeting and adjournment of courts, should be regulated."

Lockyer v. Offley, 1 T. R. 252; Knight v. Faith, 15 Q. B. 666; Coit v. Smith, 3 Johns. Cas. 16; Howell v. Protection Ins. Co. 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 284; Peters v. Phenix Ins. Co. 3 Serg. & R. 25; Meretony v. Dunlop, 1 Park, Marine Ins. 51; 3 Joyce, Ins. §§ 2792, 2793 (note 309); 2 May, Ins. § 401.

O'Rear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Peaslee-Gaulbert Company and Louisville Lead & Color Company are distinct corporations, but operating together a plant for the manufacture and sale of paints, oils, and so forth. The plant consisted of three buildings, located at Fifteenth street and Portland avenue, in Louisville. The buildings were separated by alleys, occupied by railroad tracks, but were connected by overhead bridges, with doors at their ends. Two of the buildings, one owned by the Peaslee-Gaulbert Company, known as the "Fifteenth Street Warehouse," and another owned by the Louisville Lead & Color Company, known as the "factory" building, were also physically connected, in addition to the bridges mentioned, by a belt canopy extending from one building to the other, and formerly used to shelter a belt operated from the factory building, so as to run a pulley and elevators in the warehouse building. It had not been used, though, for some time, and was left so that it afforded an opening from one building to the other, the canopy or chute constituting a sort of flue or vent. All the properties, including the contents of the Fifteenth street warehouse building, were insured against loss or damages by fire under a number of policies issued by various companies, including the policies sued upon in these actions. The policies are identical in terms. Two of the cases (National F. Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co., and Pacific F. Ins. Co. v. Louisville Lead & Color Co.) present the same sole question for decision on this appeal. The other case, Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Company, presents the same question and one other. Hence the appeals are heard and decided together, though coming from different branches of the circuit court.

The question for decision that is common to all the cases is the construction of the term "noon" contained in the clauses of the policies, which reads, "does insure [the insured] from the 1st day of April, 1901, at noon, to the 1st day of April, 1902, at noon." A fire occurred in the insured premises on April, 1902, by which all the insured property was totally lost. Whether the loss occurred before "noon" of that day is the question. The fire originated in the "factory" building at about 11:45 A. M., standard time. The alarm was turned in at the fire department of the city at 11:59 A. M., standard time, according to the records of that department. The difference between central standard time, based upon the mean time of the 90th meridian west of Greenwich, and mean solar time at Louisville, is seventeen and a half minutes. So that at 11:45 A. M., standard time, it would be reckoned 12:02½ P. M., sun time at Louisville. In declaring upon the policies plaintiffs pleaded: "The plaintiff states that the word 'noon' contained in said policy, and at the time said policy was issued, had two meanings, largely dependent upon the community in which said word was used. One of these meanings was 12 o'clock midday by what is commonly called 'sun time,' and one was 12 o'clock midday by what is commonly called 'standard time.' Said fire occurred after 12 o'clock midday, sun time, and before 12 o'clock midday, standard time, as was in use in Louisville, Kentucky, where the property destroyed and damaged was situated. At the time said policy was executed and delivered the word 'noon,' as used in the city of Louisville, in business transactions, in making engagements, and in ordinary speech and writing, was understood to mean 12 o'clock midday, standard time, and such was the sense in which the parties to the policy sued on used said word in said policy." The contention of appellants is that the word "noon" has a fixed, certain, and universally understood meaning, having reference alone to the physical fact of the coincidence of the center of the sun's circle with a given meridian of the earth: that proof of custom cannot be admitted to alter or contradict plain, unequivocal words, when used in a written contract in their ordinary sense.

Authorities are abundant to the effect that words of well-understood meaning in their ordinary sense may, by the custom of a class, trade, or profession, have a peculiar and different meaning when used with reference to the custom or general dealing of such trade or profession, and evidence may be received to show such exceptional use and meaning. Tradesmen, artisans, and professionals of various callings give to certain ordinary words a meaning peculiar to their calling or trade, and in contracts may use such words altogether with reference to such terminology. It would be a miscarriage of justice not to construe such words as they were understood and used by the parties, as otherwise they would be held to have made a bargain which neither ever contemplated. But the proposition here is not to limit a word of common meaning to the use of a particular business sect, who, by its employment, have imparted to it a peculiar meaning, different from its general one, when employed by them to express an idea or fact in the course of their business. On the contrary, it is that a word of most common use has come to have a general meaning, common to everybody, differing from its original meaning and therefore presumably used by the parties to a contract in its most common and general sense. The construction of words in a written contract is for the court, generally. If ambiguous, the meaning intended may be gathered by the aid of parol or other extrinsic evidence. Or, if used in a sense peculiar to some special calling or trade, as has been seen, the custom may likewise be shown, by parol, which has given the word its extraordinary meaning in the case. The word now under consideration had for a great many years only one meaning, which was undoubtedly the one contended for in the case by appellants. But for the last ten or fifteen years, as the court will take notice, the custom has grown to be well-nigh general throughout the country to give the word "noon" a slightly different meaning. Both meanings refer to the same fact, that is, midday. The division of time into days of twenty-four hours each is itself conventional. Nor has it been uniform always to divide it so that the day began at midnight. While it may be possible to divide the calendar year into days of exact equal length for all practical purposes, no clock has as yet been made that records accurately the apparent movement of the sun, or, strictly, the movement of the earth with respect to the sun, so that the relative position of those bodies is shown exactly day after day. As the coincidence of the sun with any given meridian of the earth varies daily, a clock or other timepiece which is not made to vary correspondingly—and none does that we know of—will not accurately record the fact of such coincidence probably more than twice in each year. It would be impracticable to attempt to apply to the ordinary affairs of life a system of marking time that had to depend upon difficult mathematical and astronomical calculations to determine the exact time, when time was an element of the fact to be determined. Instead, a system of mean or average time has been adopted always. It represents approximately by averages the relative positions of the sun and the earth's meridian. The names given to the system and its variations have been adopted by an extending of their use until by custom they have become general; words constructed to represent such divisions of time have had given to them a general meaning in keeping with their uses. Terms in contracts in which time is of the essence are construed according to 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the common or general meaning of the words. As is well known, words change in their meaning. This is because they come to be so frequently employed in a different sense from that of their former meaning that the changed definition comes to be the common one. Of these changes the courts must take notice, as they do judicially of all matters of common knowledge. When, however, a word is undergoing the change, its use in a contract may have reference to its former or later meaning. So it may be said to be ambiguous, having more than one meaning. The object of all construction being to arrive at the true intent of the parties to the compact, and it being the province of the courts to construe the language of written contracts, words of one meaning will be construed conclusively by the courts according to that meaning. But it would be unsafe and unjust to follow an ironclad rule of construction—that of single meaning—where it was commonly employed in different senses, even concerning the same subject. To put the court in the light of the situation in which the parties were when they entered into the contract, in construing such terms parol evidence ought to be admitted to show that the custom of that community was such, so general, and of such long standing and notoriety, that the parties may be presumed to have been controlled by it in framing the terms of their agreement. Probably no better example for the application of this course of construction will be found than in the cases at bar. Perhaps nothing entered more commonly into the affairs of life, every phase of it, than time. To know the time, and to act upon the means of such knowledge as if it were a practical certainty, is of the first importance in most of the transactions of daily life. A general custom adopted with reference to noting the hour means that in all walks it is acted upon tacitly as an accepted fact. So, although there is not, and never has been, a legal establishment of any standard time in this state, it was formally accepted without question that the customary mode of reckoning time by the solar system of days divided into twenty-four hours of sixty minutes each, each day beginning at midnight, and divided again at midday at or near the time when the sun was in the meridian, was meant, when speaking of the hour or time of day. Conditions have arisen in the last several years by which the old custom of dividing and noting time has been abandoned in a very considerable portion of the United States, and there has been substituted for it another system, no less arbitrary, but more fully meeting all the needs of society. Allowing one hour for each 15 degrees of longitude west from Greenwich, the 75th meridian passing somewhere near Washington, the 90th near St. Louis, and so on, and, by establishing one uniform standard of time for all the territory within each of the sections named, a satisfactory, practical basis is attained. Business and social engagements naturally become adjusted to it. The custom originated, it is believed, with certain railroad lines in their endeavors to regulate the running of their trains which traverse wide sections of the country, so that unvarying and safe schedules might be adopted and enforced throughout a system where the average mean time was not widely different, yet was enough so to make danger in operating trains in different directions, on account of a minute or a few minutes' difference in the time of starting from the opposite extremes of the same line or section. Other business, including government and, finally, social affairs, adopted the same standards, until now it has become, in the more populous communities at least, almost exclusive. And this has been so for a number of years. Contracts to begin or end at an hour certain, without naming a standard for the reckoning of the hour, must be deemed to have intended the system in most common use. Or, if more than one standard was in use at the place where the contract was to be performed, and as both could not have been intended, it is admissible to prove the prevailing custom at the place of performance in the business of which the contract under consideration partook, that the court might determine which was probably in the minds of the parties. "Sun time," as it is called, has so fallen into disuse in some communities that it is known only by comparison with "standard time," or by computation. It could scarcely be maintained that parties to a contract meant to adopt an hour for the termination of important contracts which never otherwise entered into their business or social affairs.

In the early case of Finnie v. Clay, 2 Bibb, 351, the parties had agreed that certain lands might be surveyed in "squares to the cardinal points." The survey was made according to the magnetic needle, and not to the cardinal points, that is, the true meridian. The court decided that, as the parties had not declared whether the courses should be run according to the true meridian or magnetic needle (the former being strictly and technically the meaning of the term used), the popular, rather than the technical, meaning should be adopted; and proof was admitted showing that at that time the usual and almost universal mode of making surveys was according to the magnetic courses. Said the court: "Where a usage has prevailed so long and so generally, it is much more reasonable to suppose the parties had reference to it than to the mode of surveying according to the true meridian, so little known and seldom used in practice. That an agreement ought to be interpreted with reference to the usage of the country, although such an interpretation is contrary to the technical meaning of the language used by the parties, is fully warranted by the English authorities."

The question we are now considering came before the supreme court of Iowa in Jones v. German Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 75, 46 L. R. A. 860, 81 N. W. 188. The fire occurred after 12 o'clock by sun time, but before 12 o'clock M. standard time. The policy expired "at 12 o'clock at noon" that day. It was there said: "The court submitted to the jury whether, because of a known and established custom obtaining at Creston, the expression 'at 12 o'clock noon' was intended by the parties to the contract to mean 12 o'clock standard time. While it was admitted that central standard time was in general use there by the railroad company, the schools, and business men generally, it does not appear but that the sun time was also used by other people of the city. As common or sun time was presumed to have been intended, the burden was upon the defendant to show to the contrary, and that issue was rightly left for the determination of the jury. But is it noon at 12 o'clock standard time? If so, just before the change from central to mountain time at McCook, Nebraska, and other places on the same degree of longitude, the sun reaches the meridian at about half past 12 o'clock. We are of opinion it was not only necessary to show the customary use of standard time, but that by custom of the place 'at 12 o'clock at noon' meant at 12 o'clock standard time."

Appellants would distinguish the Iowa case from these, because the words "at 12 o'clock at noon," it is claimed, have a different meaning from the word "noon." We think the expressions amount to the same thing. Both refer to midday. Noon is midday; so is 12 o'clock in the daytime. "Noon" is merely a shorter expression than "12 o'clock in the daytime." Originally it represented the ninth hour of the day after sunrise, or about 3 o'clock P. M., and was the canonical hour of nones, at which was celebrated a religious rite. Webster's Dictionary, "Nones." It has ceased to denote the ninth hour of the day so long ago that it can scarcely be traced. It came by usage to represent midday, or 12 o'clock solar time, which was deemed midday for so many years. The word is undergoing a similar change, or has undergone one in this country, in recent years, so that it represents now midday, not necessarily as shown by "sun time," but by the standard in use, whatever it is. It does not, as counsel argue, represent a physical phenomenon, as does "sunrise" and "sunset," any more than "10 o'clock A. M.," represents a physical phenomenon. Both terms, "noon" and "10 o'clock A. M.," are used to express practical approximations, and neither refers necessarily to the actual fact. In time, doubtless, the old standard of solar time, or for that matter, the more recent standards, may fall so entirely into disuse as to become obsolete. The word "noon" may then have but one meaning. In that event recourse to extraneous evidences to determine what it meant in written contracts would not be allowed. The evidence is that in some business, particularly that of banking, in Louisville, "sun time" is still used. In the present state of the use of the term, it was proper in our opinion to have submitted to the jury, as was done, whether the word "noon" as used in the contracts meant "12 o'clock standard time," and that, in determining that fact, the following guide should be adopted by the jury, as given in instruction No. 3 (Judge Muir's): "If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time said policy of insurance was issued there existed in Louisville, Kentucky, a custom or usage with reference to the meaning of the word 'noon,' so well settled, uniformly acted upon, and of such continuance as to raise a presumption that plaintiffs and defendant knew of it and entered into the contract of insurance sued on herein with reference to it, such usage will govern the jury in arriving at their conclusions under the first instruction."

In the Rochester German Insurance Company Case the further question arises, When must the loss occur? This question is presented by the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that the policy of insurance sued on herein insured certain goods for plaintiffs in their warehouse at the northwest corner of Fifteenth and Portland avenue against fire from April 1, 1901, at noon, to April 1, 1902, noon. Now, if the jury believe from the evidence that the fire which destroyed said goods started in said warehouse before noon on April 1, 1902, or if they believe from the evidence that said fire did not reach said warehouse before noon, but at noon the destruction of said warehouse from such fire was inevitable, they should find for the plaintiffs; but if they believe from the evidence that the fire which destroyed said goods did not start in said warehouse before noon on April 1, 1902, and that at noon, April 1, 1902, the destruction of said warehouse, as the result of said fire, was not inevitable, they shall find for the defendant." The evidence was conflicting whether the fire caught in this building before 12 o'clock noon, standard time. But under the instruction quoted, the jury were not required to find that it did in order to make a verdict for the plaintiff. It was held to be enough if the destruction of the warehouse from the adjacent fire was inevitable at noon. We are of opinion that this view of the case was error. The risk assumed by the insurer was that of loss or damage by fire pending the term written in the contract. It did not insure against peril to the property without loss during the policy term. If the fire broke out in the insured building before the policy expired, and continued to burn thereafter until it was totally destroyed, the loss is one occurring within the insured period. It is all deemed one event, and not severable. A damage begun is damage done, where the culmination is the natural and unbroken sequence of the beginning. We have been cited to no case which holds that mere imminence of loss, or even certainty of loss, during the life of a contract of insurance, would justify a recovery, where there was in fact no loss or damage during the life of the contract. No case in either marine, fire, or life insurance so holds. To do so would be to extend the term of the policy, and all liability under it, including its beginning, for a period beyond the contract for which the consideration was paid. Doubtless it was known to be inevitable, as it proved to be, that certain blocks of the business houses in Baltimore would be destroyed by the great fire there recently, which burnt over a considerable part of the city, and raged for several days. Yet it is entirely possible that contracts of insurance expired upon the buildings last burned after the fire had begun elsewhere in their vicinity. It would be astonishing if the liability of the insurers was extended indefinitely beyond the term of their contract merely because a danger had occurred during the contract which would lead to loss thereafter. The physical connection between the insured buildings in these cases did not make them less certainly separate buildings. They were so treated by the parties in contracting the insurance, and were so in fact.

The judgments in the cases of National F. Ins. Co. v. Peaselee-Gaulbert Co. and Pacific F. Ins. Co. v. Louisville Lead & Color Co. are affirmed. The judgment in the case of Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. is reversed, and that cause is remanded for a new trial under proceedings consistent herewith.

All concur, except Cantrell, J., absent.

A petition for extension of opinion having been filed, O'Rear, J., handed down the following response on October 6, 1905:

Some of the policies were upon merchandise contained in the buildings that were discussed in the opinion, and not upon the buildings. The same principles announced in the original opinion will apply to the insured merchandise also. Where the fire had begun in the building containing the merchandise before the expiration of the policy term, and by reason of that fire it was impossible to remove or save the merchandise from loss or damage, it is to be deemed a loss occurring in the life of the policy, whether the fire was actually communicated to the specific articles of merchandise within such time, or not.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY et al., Appts.,

v.

MARY COLEY.

(... Ky. ...)

1. Railway crossings—watchmen.

A railroad company must maintain a watchman or use some other precaution commensurate with the danger at a street crossing in a city, which is much used by travelers on the highway and also by the railroad, and which, by reason of obstructed view, is especially dangerous.

Case Note.—The decision in ILLINOIS C. R. Co. v. COLEY, to the effect that a non-resident railroad company joined as defendant with its alleged negligent employee in an action to recover damages for such negligence cannot secure a removal of the cause to a Federal court on the ground of a separable controversy, is in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Prior to these decisions by the Federal Supreme Court, conflicting decisions on the question had been rendered in the circuit courts.

As will appear from an examination of the note to Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lumber Co. 28 L. R. A. 441, the authorities differ as to whether an action can be sustained against master and servant jointly, because of the responsibility of the master for the negligence of the servant. This difference of decisions is recognized by the Federal Supreme Court; but the existence of the right to sue the employer and negligent employee jointly is rendered immaterial on 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. Instruction—province of jury.

Mentioning in an instruction one precaution which a railroad company might take in backing a train over a street crossing, to warn travelers on the highway, does not interfere with the province of the jury to determine what precautions were required, where the instruction immediately continues, "or use some other reasonably safe means" to give warning.

3. Same—following request.

A party cannot complain of the giving of an instruction which is substantially similar to one requested by himself.

4. Removal of cause—nonresident defendant.

A nonresident joined as defendant in an action to recover damages for negligence cannot secure a removal of the case to a Federal court by putting in issue the fact of negligence on the part of his codefendant.

5. Engineer—liability for negligence.

A railroad engineer is personally liable for negligently running his engine against a traveler at a railroad crossing.

6. Master and servant—joint liability.

A servant whose negligent act while conducting his employer's business causes injury to another, and his principal, may be sued jointly to recover damages for the injury.

7. Removal of cause—fraudulent joinder of resident—dismissal of action.

If a resident of the state is joined as defendant in an action, to prevent its removal to a Federal court, the court should, as soon as it discovers that fact, dismiss the action as to him, with costs, and remove the case to the Federal court.

8. Same—determination of fact by state court.

The state court may determine whether or not a resident of the state has been joined in a suit to prevent its removal to a Federal court, and is not bound, at the instance of the nonresident defendant, to remove the

the question of removal, by the ground on which the Supreme Court rests its decision: that court holding, in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, infra, that it is for the plaintiff to say whether he will elect to sue them jointly, and if he elects so to do, the fact that he has misconceived his cause of action, and has no right to prosecute them jointly, will not create a separable controversy so as to make the cause removable, though it may afford ground for defeating the plaintiff in his suit in the state court.

The question was directly passed upon in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 179 U. S. 131, 45 L. ed. 122, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67, where the Supreme Court, in affirming the decision of the supreme court of Kentucky, held that an action against a railroad company and two of its employees, charging them with concurrent negligence in killing a person at a railroad crossing, is joint, and not several, and therefore cannot be removed into a Federal court by the railroad company, on the ground of diverse citizenship, when the case to the Federal court to permit it to determine that question.

(November 3, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for McCracken County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. M. Dickinson and Trabue, Doolan, & Cox, for appellants:

Where fraudulent joinder is alleged and facts affirmatively appear, prima facie right of removal exists and issue of fact only to be tried in the Federal court.

Dow v. Bradstreet Co. 46 Fed. 824; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Jones, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 31, 80 S. W. 484; Arrowsmith v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 57 Fed. 165; Diday v. New York, P. & O. R. Co. 107 Fed. 565; Boatner v. American Exp. Co. 122 Fed. 714; Weaver v. Northern P. R. Co. 125 Fed. 155; Woodson County v. Toronto Bank, 128 Fed. 157; Gustafson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 128 Fed. 85; Swann v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 116 Fed. 232; Union Terminal R. Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 119 Fed. 209; Rutherford v. Illinois C. R. Co. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 397, 85 S. W. 199; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 179 U. S. 131, 45 L. ed. 121, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67; Winston v. Illinois C. R. Co. 111 Ky. 954, 55 L. R. A. 603, 65 S. W. 13; Warax v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 72 Fed. 637.

An issue of fact involved in jurisdiction is triable in the Federal court.

Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dunn, 122 U. S. 513, 30 L. ed. 1159, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1262; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wangelin, 132 U. S. 599, 33 L. ed. 474, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Daughtry, 138 U. S. 298, 34 L. ed. 963, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Jones, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 31, 80 S. W. 484.

Messrs. Wheeler, Hughes, & Berry also for appellants.

Messrs. Hendrick, Miller, & Marble for appellee.

Hobson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On August 7, 1902, appellee, Mary Coley, then Mary Koerner, was being driven in a spring wagon across the Tennessee street crossing of the Illinois Central Railroad in Paducah. The wagon was struck by a backing engine on the railroad. Two of the occupants of the wagon were thrown out and killed, and Mary Coley sustained painful and serious injuries, to recover for which she filed this action against the railroad company and the engineer in charge of the engine. The railroad company filed its petition for a removal of the case to the circuit court of the United States. The court refused to remove the case. The defendants then filed answer, putting in issue the allegations of the petition, and pleading contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The case being heard, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $3,500; and the defendants appeal.

The evidence on the trial showed that the Tennessee street crossing was one of the most used crossings in the city of Paducah. The accident happened just after dark. The wagon in which the plaintiff was riding was driven upon the track, when one wagon was just leaving the track, and another was just employees are of the same state as the plaintiff. The court, in reviewing the authorities, based its decision upon the ground that the cause of action was entire as it appeared on the face of the complaint. This case was followed in Winston v. Illinois C. R. Co. 111 Ky. 954, 55 L. R. A. 603, 65 S. W. 13, where it was held that a nonresident railroad company sued jointly with its resident agent for injuries caused by the latter's negligence cannot remove the suit to a Federal court.

The question was again presented in Southern R. Co. v. Carson, 194 U. S. 136, 48 L. ed. 907, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609, which was an action by an injured employee against a railroad company and two negligent employees. On the trial the jury found against the railroad company only. On a writ of error to the Supreme Court it was contended by the railroad company that the plaintiff ought not to have been permitted to recover, since the jury found that the proof failed to show joint and concurrent negligence on the part of all of the defendants, for the reason that such a separate recovery against the railroad company amounted to a denial of the right of removal, which it would have had if sued alone; and it therefore constituted a taking of property without due process of law. The court, in holding against the railroad company's contention, based its decision upon the ground that on the face of the pleadings the company was not entitled to a removal, as a separate defense cannot deprive the plaintiff of his right to prosecute his suit to a final decision in his own way.

In two very recent cases the Supreme Court again considered the question, and reached the same conclusion. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, 200 U. S. 206, 50 L. ed. —, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161, and Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Bohon, 200 U. S. 221, 50 L. ed.—, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 166. The Thompson Case went to the Supreme Court on a certificate from the circuit court of appeals for the sixth cir-

le L.R.A. (N.S.)

coming up to it. The wagon in which she was riding was thrown against the other wagon. The engine which did the damage was running 6 or 8 miles an hour. It was backing with the tender in front, and with a lamp hanging on either side of the tender. It approached the crossing on a curve. There were side tracks on either side of the main track, on which cars were standing, so that this engine could not be seen until it got right to the crossing. The proof was conflicting as to whether the engine gave signals of its approach by bell or whistle. The weight of the evidence, however, would indicate that the signals were in fact given; but that, owing to the number of trains passing to and fro and the fact that bells and whistles were blown so often at that point, the signals were not noticed. The amount of travel on the crossing, and its obstructed condition by reason of the cars standing on the side track, required of the engineer, in backing his engine over it, that he should have it under control, especially when it was dark, and there was no adequate light on the tender to give notice of the approach of the locomotive. It was negligence on the part of the company not to have a watchman at such a crossing, or to use some other precaution commensurate with the danger, at least during the hours when people are passing and repassing in numbers; and when the engineer, knowing that there was no watchman there, undertook to back his engine in the dark over such a crossing, he should have exercised care in proportion to the danger attending the situation. We therefore conclude that there was evidence sufficient to warrant the submission of the case to the jury, and sustain the verdict of the jury. While the proof as to the extent of the plaintiff's injuries was conflicting, if the jury credited the proof for her that her health was wrecked and permanently impaired, the verdict was not excessive.

Appellant complains that the court gave caut. asking a decision on the following questions: "May a railroad corporation be jointly sued with two of its servants, one the conductor and the other the engineer of one of its trains, when it is sought to make the corporation liable only by reason of the negligent act of its said conductor and engineer in the operation of a train under their management and control, and solely upon the ground of the responsibility of a principal for the act of his servant, though not personally present or directing, and not charged with any concurrent act of negligence? Is such a suit removable by the corporation, as a separable controversy?" The court, in answer to the questions, said that, for the purposes of determining the right of removal, the cause of action must be deemed to be joint, and the 1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

instruction G, which is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of defendant railroad company, when backing its trains through the city at the place mentioned in the pleadings, where the injuries, if any, occurred, to have someone on the rear part thereof, in a position to see and warn travelers of the approach of trains, or to display lights or give signals in such place as would give reasonable warning of the approach of the train, or use some other reasonably safe means to give the public using the street reasonable warning of the approach of the train; and, if the defendant failed to provide such reasonably safe means to warn the public using said crossing of approaching trains, it was guilty of negligence." Counsel's criticism of this instruction is in these words: "The law only requires that appellant should have used such means to give notice of the approach of the train as, considering the character of the crossing, was reasonably sufficient to warn travelers of the approach of the train to the crossing, and it should be left to the jury to judge of the reasonable sufficiency of the means actually employed." We are unable to see any substantial difference between the statement of counsel and the instruction of the court; for, although the court does say that it was the duty of the railroad company, in backing its trains, to have someone on the lookout to give signals of its approach, it adds, "or use some other reasonably safe means to give the public using the street warning of the approach of the train," and then it concludes by saying that the railroad company was guilty of negligence if it failed to provide such reasonably safe means. The instruction in no way conflicts with the case of Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Gunter, 108 Ky. 362, 56 S. W. 527, and it could not have been prejudicial under the facts of this case; for to back an engine over such a crossing as this was shown to be without some such precautions as are set out in cause not removable. It based its decision upon the ground that the complaint showed a joint cause of action, and that it was not necessary to pass upon the question as to whether such a joinder is proper.

The Bohon Case was considered by the court at the same time with the Thompson Case, and a similar decision was rendered. It contained an additional feature arising out of the fact that under the state Constitution and statutes as interpreted by the state courts the plaintiff could proceed jointly or severally against the employer and negligent employee. The Supreme Court adhered to its previous holdings that the plaintiff need not sue the defendants severally, but could elect which way it would pursue them.

the instruction would manifestly be negligence on the part of the railroad company.

Appellant also complains that in instruction 1 the court used these words: "It was the duty of the employees of the defendant railroad company, in charge of the engine and train at the time plaintiff received the injuries complained of, to give the usual and customary signals of the approach of said engine and train to the Tennessee street crossing in Paducah, by blowing the whistle or continuously ringing the bell, and to keep a lookout for persons or vehicles using or about to use said crossing, and to exercise ordinary care to avoid striking or colliding with persons or vehicles using or about to use said crossing." But these words are in effect taken from instruction M, which was asked by the defendant, which begins as follows: "It was the duty of the employees of the defendant railroad company, who were in charge of the engine and train at the time of the accident complained of, to give the usual and customary signals of the approach of the engine and train to the street crossing, by blowing the whistle or ringing the bell, and to keep a lookout for persons and vehicles using or about to use the crossing. And if you believe from the evidence in this case that the said employees failed to give such notice of the approach of the engine and train to the street crossing, or failed to keep such lookout," etc. We fail to see any substantial difference between the words used by the court as to the signals of the approach of the train and the words asked by the defendant, and certainly under the facts of this case the instruction given by the circuit judge could not have been prejudicial; for, in view of the proof as to the character of the crossing, manifestly no less precautions than those set out in the instruction in backing the engine in the dark over the crossing could be tolerated.

It is not insisted that the negligence of the driver of the wagon is to be imputed to the appellee. The instruction on contributory negligence properly submitted to the jury the question whether there was negligence on her part.

It is earnestly maintained for appellant that the court should have removed the case to the Federal court, although Kothheimer, the engineer, who was a resident of the state, was sued jointly with the railroad company. The petition for removal, among other things, contains the following averments: "Your petitioner further states that it controverts all claims of any negligence of its codefendant Kothheimer, or of your petitioner, and avers that there is no pretense whatever for the claim or allegation made by plaintiff in her petition, and controverts the claim that said injuries, if any were sustained, were caused by the joint or concurrent negligence of your petitioner and the said Kothheimer, and charges that plaintiff in her said petition joined your petitioner and said Kothheimer as defendants for the sole and only purpose, and the fraudulent purpose, of preventing the removal of this action to the United States circuit court for the western district of Kentucky, well knowing at the time that there was no negligence, joint, concurrent, or otherwise, occurring at the time of the alleged accident, which caused or contributed to any injuries which she may have sustained; and all such allegations and claims were fraudulently made by the said plaintiff in her petition, for the fraudulent purpose of depriving the United States circuit court for the western district of Kentucky of its rightful jurisdiction in this cause, and of depriving your petitioner of its right, as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and by the acts of Congress thereunder, of having this cause tried in the said United States circuit court for the western district of Kentucky. That in said petition there is a separable controversy between your petitioner and the plaintiff; and that the matter in dispute in said separable controversy exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000, and the same can be fully determined without the presence in the case of the said Kothheimer. Your petitioner charges that at the time the accident happened in which said plaintiff claims to have suffered injuries, which said accident happened at a public street crossing in the city of Paducah, the said crossing was well protected and guarded, and this plaintiff and those in the vehicle with her were warned of the approach of the engine and notified of the danger in attempting to cross the track; and that said engine was supplied with lights and other signals; and that the notice of approach of said engine to the crossing at which the accident happened was given by the ringing of the bell thereon and sounding of the whistle; and that defendant Kothheimer, who was the engineer in charge of said engine at the time, was at his post of duty, keeping a lookout in the direction in which said engine was going, as was also the fireman on said engine; and that said engine was at the time being carefully and cautiously operated; and that there was at that time every reasonable and proper care exercised, both by the watchman at said crossing and the engineer and fireman upon said engine, to prevent any accident; and when it was discovered by those in charge of said engine that plaintiff had placed herself in a perilous position on the railroad track, every possible means was used by those in charge of said engine to stop it and prevent a collision; said engine was in good condition, equipped with the most approved appliances known to science, and in use; and that said appliances were in good working condition, and were applied and used as they should have been to stop said engine and prevent the collision; but that plaintiff went upon said track at said crossing at a time when said engine was so close thereto that it was beyond the power of those in charge of said engine, with the use of greatest care and of all said appliances, to stop said engine in time to prevent the collision."

By the act of Congress a case may only be removed to the Federal court where the defendant or defendants therein are nonresidents of the state. Where there is a joint controversy, and one of the defendants is a resident of the state, the other defendant cannot remove the case to the Federal court. It is earnestly argued that if all the plaintiff has to do is to join with the defendant a third person who is a resident of the state, and that this will in all cases defeat the right of removal, then no cases may be removed, and the purpose of the act may be defeated entirely. On the other hand, if a nonresident defendant may simply plead to the merits of the case in the petition for removal, and then take the case to the Federal court for the trial of the issue thus tendered, all cases may be removed to the Federal court, notwithstanding the provision of the act of Congress forbidding the removal of causes where there is a joint controversy and one of the defendants is a resident of the state. To illustrate: In this case it is earnestly maintained, although there has been a verdict and judgment against Kothneimer, and although the evidence in the record is sufficient to sustain the judgment, that the case should have been transferred to the Federal court. The effect of this would be to give the Federal courts jurisdiction of the merits of the case in actions of this sort, although such jurisdiction is expressly withheld by the act of Congress. The state court has jurisdiction to try the merits of the case if there is a joint controversy; and it will not do to say that the action must be transferred to the Federal court, for that court to determine whether the state court may try the case on the merits. When the plaintiff's petition states a joint cause of action against two defendants, there is a controversy, within the meaning of the act of Congress. It was not contemplated by the act, that the petition for removal should go into the merits of the controversy, and by putting in issue the allegations of the plaintiff's petition one of the defendants might remove the case from the state court. Plymouth Consol. Gold Min. Co. v. Amador & S. Canal Co. 118 U. S. 270, 271, 30 L. ed. 233, 234, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1034; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wangelin, 132 U. S. 601, 33 L. ed. 475, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203; Little v. Giles, 118 U. S. 596, 30 L. ed. 269, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Grayson, 119 U. S. 240, 30 L. ed. 382, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Bushnell v. Crooke Min. & Smelting Co. 148 U. S. 682, 37 L. ed. 610, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771; Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. ed. 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222.

If Kothneimer negligently ran the engine against the wagon in which appellee was riding, and hurt her, he is liable to her for her injuries. The fact that he did not own the engine, or that he was operating it in the service of the railroad company, makes him none the less liable for his personal wrong. If, in operating the engine, he was acting as the agent of the railroad company, and his act was its act, then it is also responsible to her upon the principle that he who does an act by another does it himself. If both he and it are liable for the wrong, they were both wrongdoers, and, being wrongdoers, may be sued jointly. A person injured in this state is not required to bring separate actions against the wrongdoers; but he may sue any or all of them at his election; the jury may find separate verdicts; and he may recover against some, and not against others. Under statutes such as ours we see no reason why the principal and the agent may not be sued jointly for the wrong done by the agent in the course of his agency. Any other rule would do injustice, as it would require the plaintiff to prosecute two actions, or force him to elect between wrongdoers as to which he would sue.

If the plaintiff trifles with the court, and joins a defendant who is a resident of the state, simply for the purpose of defeating the right of the other defendant to remove the case to the Federal court, the court should, as soon as this is made apparent on the trial, dismiss the action as to the defendant fraudulently joined, with costs, and remove the case to the Federal court. The court should not, at any stage of the proceeding, allow a party to trifle with its process or to defeat the act of Congress by a fraudulent joinder of a person as defendant. But when the petition discloses a cause of action which is not within the jurisdiction of the Federal court, the case may not be removed to the Federal court for that court to try a case over which it has no jurisdiction, or to pass on the jurisdiction of the state court over the case. It cannot be maintained that the circuit court of the United States is only to determine in cases of this sort whether the joinder is fraudulent, and made without reasonable expectation on the part of the plaintiff to prove the facts alleged, and that it is the exclusive forum to determine this question, for in not a few cases the state court would hold upon the evidence that the plaintiff had made out his case against both the defendants, while in the Federal court, upon the same evidence, it would be held that the plaintiff had failed to make out his case, and that therefore the joinder was fraudulent. The result would be that the state court would be prevented from proceeding in a case admittedly within its jurisdiction, by reason of the fact that the Federal court was of opinion that there was no merit in the case. It was not contemplated by the act of Congress that the circuit court of the United States should be given supervisory power over the state courts on the merits of joint controversies of this character.

Judgment affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

J. E. HOUCHINS.

(.... Ky.)

1. Negligence—joint action against master and servant.

A railroad company may be sued jointly with the servant whose negligence caused an injury, although it was not independently at fault.

2. Removal of cause—joint action against master and servant.

An action against a resident employee of Case Note.—Recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, which constitute the final authority on the question, fully sustain the decision in the above case against the right of removal to a Federal court of a joint action against a resident employee of a foreign railroad corporation and the corporation itself. To the same effect, it was held, in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, 200 U. S. 206, 50 L. ed. —, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161, and Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Bohon, 200 U. S. 221, 50 L. ed.—, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 166, that such joint actions by a resident against a foreign railroad company and a resident servant do not involve separable controversies.

The declaration of the state court in the above case, that, as the cause of action stated in the petition was not removable to the Federal court under the act of Congress, the latter court had no jurisdiction over the case, and that this question was therefore to be determined by the state court, and not by the Federal court, is fully in accord-a foreign railroad company and the company jointly is not removable by the latter to the Federal court, although a joint suit cannot be maintained in that court.
1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

3. Same—determination of jurisdiction.

The state, and not the Federal, court should determine the question of the right to remove to the latter an action begun in the former, against a nonresident railroad company and its resident employee jointly.

4. Negligent injury — damages—expectation of life.

The expectation of life of one injured by another's negligence may be shown as a basis for the estimation of damages.

5. Evidence—American Table of Mortality.

The American Table of Mortality is admissible in evidence upon the question of expectation of life.

6. Instruction—as to effect of evidence.

The court should, upon request, instruct the jury that a mortality table introduced in evidence upon the question of expectation of life shows merely the probable duration of life, and should be considered in connection with the other proof in the case for what it is worth.

7. Negligence—admission of, by servant.

An admission by a servant whose negligence caused injury to another, made long after the accident, is not admissible in evidence against the master, but is admissible against the servant himself.

8. Evidence—limitation of—instruction as to.

In admitting evidence which is competent against one party to a joint action, but not against the other, the court should caution the jury as to its proper limitation.

9. Same—admission—impeaching witness.

An admission by a servant whose negligent act caused an injury, made long after the accident, may, in case proper foundation is laid, be admitted in evidence in an action ance with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Stone v. South Carolina, 117 U. S. 430, 29 L. ed. 962, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799. That case decided that a state court is not bound to surrender its jurisdiction of a suit on a petition for removal until a case has been made which, on its face, shows that the petitioner has a right to the transfer; and further declared that, while all issues of fact, made upon the petition for removal, must be tried in the circuit court, the state court is at liberty to determine for itself whether, on the face of the record, a removal has been effected. And, if the state court should decide erroneously against the removal, and proceed with the cause, its ruling on that question could be reviewed, after final judgment, by the United States Supreme Court.

The same doctrine has been declared by the United States Supreme Court in later cases, among them Crehore v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 131 U. S. 240, 33 L. ed. 144, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692.

against his master to discredit him as a witness.

10. Instructions as to punitive damages.

When an instruction is given on punitive damages in an action for a personal injury, the court should clearly tell the jury that the allowance of such damages is a matter for their discretion.

11. Personal injuries—excessive damages.

Ten thousand five hundred dollars is an excessive amount to be awarded for personal injuries inflicted by another's negligence, where the evidence leaves the extent of the injuries uncertain, and also the question as to what the condition of the injured person will be permanently.

(November 28, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Muhlenberg County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. M. Dickinson and James S. Wortham, with Messrs. Trabue, Doolan, & Cox, for appellant:

Employer and employee are not liable jointly where the employer's liability is for the imputed negligence of the servant only.

Warax v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 72 Fed. 637; Hukill v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. 72 Fed. 749; Gustafson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 128 Fed. 85; Shaffer v. Union Brick Co. 128 Fed. 97; McIntyre v. Southern R. Co. 131 Fed. 985.

The case was removable because no cause of action was stated against the company's codefendant.

Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Robertson, 115 Ky. 858, 74 S. W. 1061; Davis v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 116 Ky. 144, 75 S. W. 275.

Messrs. B. F. Proctor, G. H. Herdman, Greene & Van Winkle, and S. D. Hines for appellee.

Hobson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

J. E. Houchins was a postal clerk on a mail train running between Paducah and Louisville on the Illinois Central Railroad. On November 7, 1902, at 11:36 A. M., the train on which Houchins was collided with an engine and tender in the yards at Central City. By reason of the collision, Houchins was thrown against the end of the car. At first it was not thought that he was very much hurt, as there was no apparent injury of a serious character. He was taken to his home at Leitchfield, and was confined to his bed about twenty days. After that he went about on crutches for a while, and then with a cane. Some time afterwards he undertook to go back to work on the road, and found that he could not stand the work on the train, and took a place in Louisville as transfer clerk, where he has since been employed, which pays him $900 a year. His salary as postal clerk was $1,000, and his living in Louisville is more expensive than at Leitchfield. There is a limp in his walk, but the proof is very conflicting as to the extent of his injuries. The trial occurred in January, 1904, or about fifteen months after he was hurt. A number of physicians testified on the trial for the railroad company that they had examined him carefully and with the aid of the X-rays, but could find nothing wrong; that he was a fine insurance risk and normal in every way. On the other hand, a number of physicians testified for him that his spine was injured and that a lump had formed in his hip joint, causing lameness and permanently disabling him from following his vocation as postal clerk. According to the evidence for him, he was to a large extent a nervous wreck, while, according to the evidence for the railroad company, he is a healthy man and in normal condition. The jury found a verdict in his behalf for $10,500 against the railroad company and the engineer in charge of the engine with which the train collided, and the defendant appeals.

Williams, who had charge of the engine with which the train collided, had taken his engine off the side track and was going down the main track to get to his train, which was due to leave shortly. As he was going out on the main track his attention was called to the fact that the passenger train was about due, and he said that it was not due yet, that he had just looked at his time card, that the passenger train was due at 11:55, and that it was then only 11:35. He went out on the track, and just after he got on the track the passenger train came around the curve and ran into him. The fact was the passenger train was due at 11:35, and he had made a mistake in reading his time card, and had taken the leaving time of the passenger train, which was 11:55, for its arriving time, which was 11:35. Those in charge of the passenger train were in no way in fault for the collision. The train was on time, and the trouble was wholly due to Williams' making the mistake in the reading of his time card. The engineer of the train was killed, and the fireman was badly hurt, and so were several other persons. The railroad company filed its petition for a removal of the case to the circuit court of the United States, aptly alleging that Williams was fraudulently joined as a defendant for the purpose of preventing a removal of the case to the United States circuit court, and that the allegations of the plaintiff's petition were known to him to be untrue, and that he did not expect to prove them when he made them, and that they were made solely for the purpose of preventing a removal of the case to the United States circuit court. The court overruled the motion to remove the case, and the railroad company then filed an answer, in which it admitted that the collision was by reason of the ordinary negligence of Williams, the engineer in charge of the switch engine, and confessed to liability to Houchins in the sum of $250.

1 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is insisted that the court erred in refusing to remove the case to the circuit court of the United States, on the idea that the company cannot be sued jointly with the servant whose negligence caused the injury where it was not independently at fault; that, under the allegations of the petition for removal, the railroad company had a right to remove the case, and that the circuit court of the United States must determine the questions arising on the allegations of the petition for removal. We cannot accede to this view. The plaintiff's petition stated a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the state court. The joint cause of action so stated by him in his petition was not removable to the Federal court under the act of Congress. That court had no jurisdiction over the case, and any order it made in a case of which it had no jurisdiction was void. Consent cannot confer jurisdiction, and, if the railroad company had been beaten in that court, it might, at the end of the litigation, have raised the question of jurisdiction. It was not contemplated by the act of Congress that every case, whether removable or not, should be subject to the control of the Federal courts. If the course urged in this case is to be approved, then every case to which a nonresident is a party, although liable jointly with the others, may be removed to the Federal court. The action was properly brought in the state court. That court admittedly had jurisdiction, and it certainly cannot be maintained that it should have surrendered jurisdiction over the case and sent it to a court for trial which, on the face of the papers, was without jurisdiction to make any order in it.

It is settled that, under the law of Kentucky, Williams and the railroad were jointly liable to Houchins for his injury, and might be sued jointly or severally. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 104 Ky. 608, 47 S. W. 615; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Cook, 113 Ky. 161, 67 S. W. 383; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Coley, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 336, 89 S. W. 234. Is this action, which confessedly lies in the state court under laws of the state, to be controlled by the Federal court, and may that court, if of opinion that a joint action does not lie, take jurisdiction of the case? Such a rule would deprive the litigant of his right to try his case under the laws of the state, and would compel him to get into the merits of his case before a tribunal without jurisdiction to sit in it. If the state court makes a mistake, an appeal may be taken to this court; and if the railroad company feels aggrieved by the decision of this court, it may in every case prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States on the question. So it is not without remedy, and there is no possibility of its rights not being properly protected.

Houchins proved on the trial that he was twenty-nine years of age at the time of the injury. He introduced on his behalf W. T. Morgan, who, over the objections of the defendants, was allowed to testify as follows:

Q. According to the American Tables of Mortality, what is the probable expectation of the life of a man twenty-nine years of age?

A. This is a book of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York. Take a man at the age of twenty-nine, the probable expectancy of life for him would be thirty-six and two-tenths years; a man in good health and twenty-nine years old, his expectation of life would be thirty-six and two-tenths years.

Q. That is the American Table of Mortality?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This book is gotten out by the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York?

